In the meantime Danson not getting any support from Bernards batteries, and Afantry was also forced back al along the line line and finally driven from the Mc-gollester plains entirely. General Kindernine knew that this meant that general Hindernines right was being overwhelmed and sent general Fredrickson with about two million men to aid Halsted two miles away to the right. Dansons retreating army had now been reinforced, ad Danson rallying his troops soon gave fiercer resistance, and though the glandelinian columns each a million strong and being six of them altogether made six successive charges and were decimated, theybonly made a seventh assault with tenfold fury. Dansons left recieving the heaviest portion of the attack, under general Jeromey the assailants carrying the Abyssinkilian position at the left, and forcing the main line at the same time, and crushing Henrique 5t glares whole division. The slaughter was fearful. Augustine and Belhorn came up at this moment with a strong force of galvarinians, and though again the glandelinians cut the main part of Dansons line to pieces Augustine and Belhorn prevented the survivors from being routed, capturing over five hundred thousand glandelinians, cutting down all the artillery men of the captured battery belonging to general Mc-paren, retaking all the cannon captured by the foe in the plains, despite the fury furious stand that the glandelinians made to the last moe moment, and also captured all the line of trenches . At the same time Angelinian forces one million nine hundred thousand s r strong which had come to repell Shoemanns headlong advance were met and completely annihilated by the chain of glandelinian field guns along the edge of the main plain.

C vered by a sy strong artillery fire new onslaughts were made on general Augustines glandelinians while the gunners on general pivians right was assailed by Mc-Hollestines the batteries being captured only to be retaken, and the whole christian column being put out of comission entirely.....

Hindernines main squares of infantry fared moh bett er checking the foe attack under general Whilelmington, but general Parisia forced back his right grand division, Mellosos right also being turned and destroyed as he came to the assistance of the christian squares. The struggle now raged along general Federals centeral line of artillery which desperately resisted every onslaught of the Anfe Angelininns and only their stubbornness enabled the gray lines to stand every terrific punishment inflicted. Though a part was carried, general pandons divisions of six million sent to engage the landelinians advancing across the Taknbrody Run had suffered a crushing defeat, and his whole army parcially decimated, while at the same time general Ambrose ruller retook the cannon, and general Hindernine began tosee that he was threatened with complete defeat once more. Shoemann still engaged the christian center while the left was assailed by another force. The resistance on the left center was so fierce in the extreme that the Angelinians almost succeeded in repulsing their assailants when general Cannonia coming up with his own columns and recieving heavy reinforcements rushed to the defense with general G odfreys d divisions driving the Angelinians back.

Dansons biggest squares now attacked at the same spot but met with exer uciating losses and retreated the glandelinians carrying all before them, attacking the remaining forces, the remnants of Dansons division cutting it up and throwing it into confusion, but soon their impetious advance was checked by general Hanker ouch untill that comm nder fell mortally wounded.....

The attack on Dansons crushed lines was resumed however by generalAdele-De-Carbe and Bicknell was also attacked by Shoemann and Germania vivian the carnage along these lines being unmistakably fierce both sides having a woeful losses of officers. Bicknells line was forced amid the heartrending carnage but Germania and Liebimann -were held at bay, the bloody carnage now being redoubled. The Angelinians repelling Germanis divisions could not hold however and withdrew, the glandelinians being equally successful alg general Meldons and Conscex consos line. General Hindernines extreme led left grand division was also engaged being under the commands of generals Patrick Johnson, Julo Cannis and general Henry Christinia . One of Shoemanns main columns wasorushed and the survivors fled, but nevertheless the situation was critical for the extreme main line of assault under Federal was advancing in full array, Jennings having already bing forced back. But general Maurice gonsellio still held, though Hindernines main left was overwhelmed a d fell back the landelinians pressing them hard untill the arival of general Purgatorian with fresh forces...

778

He fell wounded however and his divisions were cut to pieces and routed. Shoemann ad continued his desperate assault and Jennings who held gonsellios lines recoiled the assailans however contending with overwhelming numbers meeting with frightful slaughter general Purgatorian Federals whole line of assault being crushed to fragments and retiring. Federals repairing the landelinian center crushed Purgatorians assailants and again the whole purple line of general Hindernines left gave way Federal crushing his own assailants and made a terrific counter charge with over three million men and within another hour the whole left was cut to fragments, the main christian general James Donnraginia falling torn by minnies, and hundreds of other officers fell.

In the meantime during all the threatening disaster Violet and her poor sisters had again been persued several times by some of general Federals men without any provocation from the little girls at all. The weather was still terribly cold for a March onth, and the deep e snow covering the roads made travel on foot very difficult for the poor little girls who had only a few mon to protect them from the raging dogs. A swarm of graycoats were coming down a side hill, and the little girls were compelled to plough on as fast as they could, then to the surprise of all poor Violet suddenly disappeared as if she had sank into the earth. Violet had sunk into a pit of snow about thirteen feet deep which had drifted into a deep depression. One of the men had a long rope with him and while the others and the remaining little girls opened a withering fire at the approaching foe the man threw the roe rope over a high projecting branch near by tying the other end around his waist. Then he said to two of the men;

"When you see the rope jerking back and forth or up and down, that will mean to pull me up."

Then without the slightest fear he ji jumped into the snow bog and having jumped he sank with great speed. The soldier had docended very swiftly and how deep it was he never knew but in a moment more he landed on something hard beneath his feet and feeling something moving through and tward him as the little girl was trying to force herself out by finding the rise of ground he grasped her and holding firmly jerked on the rope and before long both were safe on the ground again, the others having held the foe at bay by their frantic shooting and as every shot had found a mark.

Taking poor violet in his arms the sl soldiers led the way around the snow bog and proceeded onward.

"We must hurry."He Said."For the foe is gaining onusun."

At this moment they came in contact with a large body ofretreating christians, and poor Violet was soon brought to and under the treatment was soon as well as ever. Suddenly loud cheering was heard and the little girls saw a smal stream of blue coats forsuth ath of Federals apparently victorious army. At first it looked harl harmless, and when they were astonished at the growth of that column. It seemed steadily to roll forward onward like a huge massive blue surge and though the roar of the distant battle could be distinctly heard, a new shattering uproar broke above the other sound, while they never heard before. The monsterous blue line rolled nearer and nearer, and now long fiery sheeted darts shot from it in the shape of fiery serpents while simultaneously a long white rolling cloud was seen to directly obscure the blue line.

"It's Hindernine who had sent a big army to strike general Federals force in the rear just as I thought."said an officer."That white line of cloud is the smoke of musketry."

Then the crashing reports of scores of ho heavy glandelinian batteries shook the echoing woods like hundreds of thousands of salvoed claps of loudest thunder, rolling all around the neighboring hills and valleys in countless echoes, and dying in a far away grumbling. Then came deafening detonations followed by thousands of detonations, and then without a second to prepare one for the immense shock were erupted an infernal, thudding, pounding, shattering roar from all throughout the Mc-Whirther and Mc-gollester plains and from across all the farm fields as if hell of volcanoes had been suddenly blowing to pieces. Nothing could describe those flapping banging of shells, mine explosions, crashing of millions of firearms, the sound of cannons in action, nothing that any one could imagine woulf would fit to square with it.

Then violet and her sisters saw several things happening so quickly that they all appeared to come about all at once. They saw a regular line of about a count ed number of trees half vanish in a wreath of smoke, distant houses bursted into flame, they saw also an awful tangled confusion of countless men and horses for the depth of miles miles, a plunging, and snorting, pounding whirl moving on forward, while the storm of shells and canister that were vomiting stabs of flame and thick smoke all amongthem, they saw countless masbers of litt,e little bursting puffs which were of cotton wool all here and there among the sparce scrubs, and slight grassy plantations, behind countless o numbers of men springing forward in long dense ranks, waves, and masses from the branch and brush wood, and start to run uphill, and the shells suddenly puff out among them, and as the smoke drifted, saw that there was only fiercely burning bracken and no men where the smoke had been, and the other waves of men running upward, split into monsterous gaps, the gaps filled, thousands of men stumble at one second and nver get up again, and heard it as one hears in a dream, the o neighing and s screaming of thousands of horses, countless [illegible] threats and blasphemies, and reverbrating of many thousands of terrible earsplitting explosions, and soon the whole scene became a wild, smoking fiery hecatomb the woods seemingly ablaze, the bare ground a reeking volcanic like caldron, up from which like ants that swarm from thousands of burning nests, the blue uniformed troops were pouring on, the shells spouting and flaming like countless fireworks. Violet and her sisters turned pale and kept their eyes on the scene. Once a shell burst behind violet and her sisters, and a tree towering high above them took unto itself smoke and a noise instead of a middle, and the top half of that tree fell with a rending crash that you could scarcely hear and bear, only just a few hundred feet behind poor violet and her sisters catching the little girls and a man and the whole of them the top of that tree, and all came down hill, rolling and spluttering together, an jamming into rows od ducking, dodging, half stunned partially blinded men in purple slashing all in a breath as forked lightning goes through the massive thundercoulds carrying all before it to the very base of thehill, its branches intermingled with scores of cursing, and shouted men in gray besides the Angelinians and violet andh her sisters and the first man to it caught.

Fortunately however the tree injured no one.

In another minute the main crash of the conflict came, the purple line plunging forward as though an ocean of snowying white smoke and never before did the little girls hear such a roar of firearms and cannon which stunned their very hearts as it were. The whole gray line being struck a terrible blow by general kindernines advancing flanking columns on its main rear was for a time in an uproarous panic, and fo was forced tward the storming christian lines under general kindernine. Placed between two long streams of infernoes of flame and smoke from musketry all along the line the glandelinians became still more panic stricken while every twice a second huge streams of shrapnell and even high explosives burst with the same earsplittering shattering roar among the glandelinians from the christian guns that were adding to the terrible carnage.

General Federal gave orders through his trumpet but his men did not, could not understand what he said at all on account of the uproar all around. minute after minute passed but the slaughter only increased. Brousdi broadside after broadside of shells poured among the confused masses of the foe in rapid succession and thousands more went down to their deaths the smoke getting so thick that nothing hardly could be seen any more and the mens eyes fairly smarted from it. Violet and her sisters also glared at the scene with smarting eyes and ringing ears, the Angelinians plunging on at a fearful speed, the awful waves of human beings moving swiftly forward, the very woods in front of the little girls seeming ablaze, and hidden in a sheet of white smoke, then suddenly there was a blinding glare that made them quickly place their hands tightly over their ears, a sic e sickoning sensation went through them as if they were about to vomit, while simultaneously there was a redoubled crash amid a withering flash, a murderous millionscannon like roar that stunned them and made their heads trop and ache, and made their teeth rattle, timbers creaked, trees fell by thousands, men seemed to go down in many tons of thousands all at once with the tearing away of underbrush, and the next moment the awful sea of purple coats seemed to surge forward, to melt away into emptiness, to appear again, to roll back melted, to come on again in surges, to dominate the ga gray lines, to melt away in brigades, then to appear again and engulf the nearest gray clo columns their fire sweeping them down from column to division in return with relentless fury carrying all before them untill the main line of assailants of the foe was reached then th ere came an awful blinding glare of bursting shells, sheets of musketry discharges, then there was a pandemonium of gray and purple coats mixed together, parts of the purple line seemed to dwindle away, and finally the gray surge rolled forward, broke into ragged lines, recel recoiled, rolled forward again, and then to Violet and her sisters they seemed to be alone in the midst If the roaring charnel storm, and the shrieking roaring musketry, and crashing of bayonets, sabres and clubbed muskets all around, and now everything became one vast pa pall of smoke, the little girls indeed believing that the Concentinians, Angelinians, and Abyssinkilians who were pressing forward no doubt amid the great uproar seemed to sweep everything away in their rage and fury their onslaught was so terrific, and indeed the gray and purple lines together were literally broken to pieces. For nearly half an hour the smoke refused to part, then when it finally did violet and her sisters gave a glad cry of joy and eagerness, mingled with excitement, and danced up and down, clapped their hands and even hugged and kissed each other. There was not a single glandelinian in sight and far off to their front the little girls saw long blue purple lines pressing forward the glandelinians far ahead of the blue line and retreating in the utmost xo confusion.

Indeed Violet and her sisters were happy over the outcome of the battle and made the air ring with their musical cheers, then sped down the slope s followed by several Angelinian soldiers who wished to see that no harm would come to them. The counter advance of the christians was a swift one, the wicked glandelinians retreating hastily, scores of thousands though seeming to stop now and then to dissolve their lines into smoke of musketry which showed that the firing was still at its worse for time and again the two fronts of the two main f hostile lines would stream clouds of wreathed smoke. Violet and her sisters were soon following far behind the Angelinians, and hundreds of Angelinians not bursted into a tavern expecting to find it full of Glandelinians but there was only dead men exposed in the rooms.

"Could these districts be flooded if the retreating glandelinians managed to burst a dam" Callahanans pam?" Asked Angeline as she and her sisters continued to follow the advancing christians.

"If any one undertakes to burst a dam to flood our territory it will be general Conley." Answered violet. "The Angelinians would not do it themselves without any serious reasons...."

Suddenly at this moment there was a noise at the door of the tavernthey just passed, and three or four glandelinian generals hastily entered. One indeed was general Cannonia, and another general Federal himself when he was supposed to be moving at the head of his retreating columns.

"I thought I saw those christian dogs go in here." Said Federal with a bullish voice.

Cannonia with a scowl ordered his men to search for the little girls and one of them sprang at violet to seize her while the other privates leaped tward her brave sisters. Violet picked up a spit-tune and threw it at one of the men but the missle missed him and struck general Federal on the chin and causing him to howl and swear. Then she fired two shots over the heads of the swarming glandelinians coming in and causing them to a halt, many of those in the rear falling over those in front. she quickly pointed to the nearest doorway and her sisters ran out, while violet leaped on a window sill, threw up the sash, and sprang out firing another shot as she reached the ground carrying Federals wig off from his head ,making him look very comical indeed.

Violet and Joice ran tward the horses the glandelinians left standing in the snow, Violet choosing federals, and Joice Cannonias.

Violet and Joice sprang upon these steeds, Angeline, and the other little girls choosing theirs, and off they dashed while the Glandelinians came swarming out of the house and mounting theirhorses instantly gave chase yelling to the little girls to stop in the "Name of glandelinia and Heaven(Though of course a mab maybe they do not believe in such a thing as heaven) ad Violet and her sisters only answered them with a volley from their pistols.

Several men stayed behind as well as the generals to follow their retreating army, but two lieutenants leaped on their own horses and went off taking the lead of the persuers . On came the merciless glandelinians with a rush over the snow hardened road, but violet and her sisters suddenly a dashed ahead, Angeline firing several shots one of which carried off one of the officers fantastic hat, then a second which took off his wig, and cut loose his sabre scabbard.

"Drat that little rat in petticoats." Shouted the glandelinian officer in a rage. "And she has got my horse. Halt you little guttersnip and Centepede or I'll shoot untill I bring you down."

The little girl did not pay any attention to his threat and now as another column of Angelinians appeared the glandelinians gave up the persuit, and general Cann-nia fuming with rage over the loss of his own horse was compelled to withdrew the men from the chase. Indeed violet and her sisters were spr suprised for they wondered how it could have happened that general Cannonia and Federal were at the tavern when their armies were being beaten, but they soon found out that the two glandelinian generals had been in the tavern on account of the dangerous rush of purple coats which had come so sudden that Cannonia and Federal had just time enough to dive into a cellar to escape from capture. As the christians continued to advance the little girls bodily went into another tavern.

"The Angelinians would be all right if they would keep a quiet tongue in their cheeks." Said one of the Glandelinian generals, Grogan by name who was hiding with a number of glandelinian officers from the persueing Angelinians. "But for those dastardly vivian girls who have just escaped Federal not only a few minutes ago, who do not know whether they are walking on their heads, or feet when walking they had better be somewhere else...."

This summoned up the general impression of Mc-Hollester grogans establishment. The glandelinian general had been an ex-prize fighter a light weight one, and had an authority upon all fistical matters. All of his best selected officers had been athelects athelatics, handy with their fists and no one could made k jokes of these with safty among the Glandelinians, but there were some children who did dare make j more than ko jokes of them-and who got away with it also. While th they were discussing about the vivian girls the very latter strode in with a vert very great air, and the first words that violet said literally took their breath away for a moment.....

"You men who have been insulting us don't sir si stir."

And grogan Mc-Hollester found himself gazing into the muzzle of two drawn pistols. Another general by the name of grogan H jointin peered from behind a brass boiler, and behold a card held up by one of the little girls which read

"A reward of $1,000,000,000 almost a small nations sum while be given to any citizen or soldier loyal to Glandelinia who wilo capture the vivian girls dead or alive.

General John Hanlet... ...!)("

"As plainly as words can make it." Said Violet. "We found this nailed on the slats of the house on the outside where the woodwork was torn off by a bursting shell. You are a fighting man are you not????" She inquired.....

"You would all know my name if you heard it." Said the general. "Its a wonder you girls don't recognize me. Never seen my photo anywhere eh."

"Never mind about that." Said violet. "Now if one of you men tries to make a move toward us, or even the door, or windows we will blow a shower of lead through every one of you. Now boys, as us little girls are here at your immediate pleasure, and right before you, which one of you is going to win the rew reward?"

One of the Glandelinians a private soldier instantly remarked that he couldn't wait any longer, he had come out for medicine for a wounded soldier and had promished to run back straight.

"Stir and you die like a dog." Said violet. "You are some of the Glandelinians whom we saw murder some children not long ago, and have got you now and mean to hold you."

The private soldier did not stir and a dread hush fell over the whole group.

"If any man tries to play a mean trick on us little girls." Violet continued after a pause "We will give him no mercy, as we would not recieve none ourselves. That little reptile over in the corner for instance(Indicating the private soldier in green uniform) would like to sell us children to Manley for some dirty blood money."

Mc-Hollester put in a an undertone

"I don't think he would try to do that because you little girls are too pretty."

Violet turned upon the speaker.

"Too pretty eh eh. Stand out here you big ugly baboon." She cried angrily still still holding the six shooter. "Would you like to share some of the spoil too? No my dear a man I know you wouldn't, unless you had the chance."

Mc-Hollester mentioned something about a wife and seventeen children, and a feeble mother and father to be taken care of, and many helpless relatives also, but Grogan Johnin having no excuse to offer reckoned discretion the better part, and kept his peace the others doing likewise. Nobody ventured a single suggestion.

Grogan overturned a be bucket of water from sheer confusion.

"None of you men will answer. Then hand over to my sisters your weapons. And turn out your pockets every one. You are the greatest packs of cowards I have even over met with among any Glandelinians at least, when such men are soldiers and are supposed to fear nothing, and yet they are scared stiff of us little girls. Ha you first Mc-Hollester. Hand me over the till."

"Me!" Repeated Mc-Hollester; as if he did not hear.

For reply violet threw up the door of the counter and s still holding aloft the pistol stepped inside. She drew out the drawer and helped herself to all the Glandelinian money that was there. Then sh came back inothe well of the establishment, and one after another was relieved of everything they had in line of weapons, and even their hats, shirts and uniforms, the little girls even taking the money to use for the Angelinian cause. Then as her sisters were slipping out the back door with the things, Violet said to the soldiers;

"Now stand in line for you are prisoners."

At this mokent the door flew open and twelve other Glandelinians strode into the room with drawn and leveled pistols.....

"Throw up your handsyou little Contepedo." Cried the leader who was a lieutenant. "If you attempt to resist, or usevyour pistol I will shoot you dead. Surrender."

"I will nqver throw up my arms or sure surrender." Answ red violet boldly.

The other Glandelinians gave cries of satisfaction, while the little girl was the calmest and coolest person in the room, and was not frightened or disconcerted. She looked into the muzzles of the pistols without winking and then surveying their owner keenly.

"Ha things are turning our own way now." Cried Mc-Hollester his face lighting up with savage joy.

"What is the trouble here any way general?" Asked the lieutenant glancing at general Mc-Hollester.

"I'll tell you lieutenant general Anchiuts." Was the reply. "We we were discussing about the Angelinians who were driving us back and this general and the little girls, when this young scoundrel(glaring fiercely at violet) came in with her sisters, and made us give up our weapons and even money, and uniforms and shirts. Theothers have escaped. This little snip is the most dangerous of them. They may have been the little; ——— look out she will get away....."

Violet taking advantage of the moment when the two were talking and had their attention turned on each other made a sudden attempt to escape, violet leaping forward, and striking the two pistol arms of the two nearest Glandelinians aside.. he would h have gotten through the doorway in safty, and might then have escaped, but one of the gra co graycoats tripped her and she fell on the floor with a crash, her pistols going off, one of the bullets hitting a graycoat in the thigh causing him to yell and sw ear and go hopping about the room. The other landelinians payed no attention to him however but leaped upon violet before she could make an atre attempt to rise speedily binding her arms together behind her back and then jerking her roughly to her feet.

"Ha now we have you good tight and fast, you scoundrelly christian dog." Cried Mc-Hollester. "now we will make you tell where your blasted sisters went....."

"I don't think you will." Said violet.

"And why not." Said the lieutenant genera, yo eyeing the little girl keenly and questi ully."

"Because I won't tell no there." Said violet in a quiet but determined tone and air.

The lieutenant general laughed and shook the pistol sin significantly.

"O I guess you will." He said.

"You will find that you are mistaken." Said violet in a tone so calmly and confident that the general gave her a searching look. Then assuming a fierce look on his handsome face he said sternly and sneeringly;

"Tell me where they went or die like a little yellow dog." He hiss ed.

"I will not." She said.

The graycoats all glared angirly and as one man they raised their pistols and covered the little girl but if they thought to intimidate her, they quickly found their mistake and general Mc-Hollester looked searchingly at violet a vidently hardly knowing what to do. His threat to kill the prisoner if she refused to tell was a threat simply, and he had not intended to do any shooting.

"Wo n't you tell to save your life!" He asked almost pleadingly.

"No I will not tell on those whom I love too dearly."

"You are a fool."

"Not at all and it is of no use to give any more more orders." Said violet.

"I will not tell where they wentand that is all there is to be said about the matter. You might stand there and keep on commanding all your life time and I would not obey. I utterly and absolutely refuse to tell whereth where they went so go ho ahead with the alternative as I'm ready for it."

"Then you'll hang for it."

"I don't care." Said violet. "You are cowards anyway to kill a little girl, or to massacre little children. But go ahead." And she gazed calmly and defiantly at Mc-Hollester.

Two of the Glandelinians seized violet but before they could do anything general Mc-Hollester said sternly;

"Wait untill I give orders for her to be seized. You can keep her a prisoner here, but if there is to be a any killing going on I'll do it myself if you murder her."

She was not arrested as a spy so let her alone. She is merely a prisoner."

The men sullenly obeyed but no sooner had the officers went out when again the rascally men seized violet but suddenly a large party of Angelinians came up, and Mc-Hollester and several officers dashed away just in time just as the Angelinians strode into the room room followed by every one of violets sisters. Several more of the graycoats escaped, but the others were surrounded, and the wicked Glandelinians realizing that they were outmustered and at a disadvantage surrendered, the Angelinians tying their hands and taking away their weapons. Joice freed violets arm and the little girls going out raised their hands in mock courtesy to the Glandelinians who had been made prisoners and bade them a very good evening evening. The Glandelinians however said nothing but glared angrily as they were marched out by their captors. The battle was still going on at on other points and the Glandelinian columns which had been defeated were retreating slowly toward the main line, Federal being in advance of his whole army and determined to hold his own positions at all costs. General Federal was in an ugly mood over the recapture of all the positions he had previously won and vowed to butcher every child in the city of Galverine and all in its surrounding vinicity if Federal would give him the permission to do so. However for several days general Mindernine refused to follow to the disappointment of general Federal and many of his generals as he brooded over his losses and wished that the christians christians had assaulted his main position and get crushed in the bargian. General Federal abandoned his positions the second day after the battle, and now was far ahead in his retreat, and learning that there was no christian force trying to capture Galverine, or to repell his advance, general Federal pushed on while all the non-combatants who were Galverinians and Angelinians made preparations to flee. The christians outside the city of Galverine which was in the hands of the foe destroyed everything that Federals army could subsist upon, and destroyed a hundred bridges aeros the Angeline run. On Unopposed Federals army pressed on the line extending from Poverty now, to Celonia from thence to Poun ce Ce-colia, and tward Galverine. The Galverinians mined the plains south of the pondonian lines making craters almost as big as those of Volcanoes, and general Feder l Federal fearing of this took precautions, and now general Mindernine following as quickly as possible tried to overlap Federal, but his three days delay m made him pay the penalty for federal reached Founce-Ce-colia here he formed a strong and almost impregn able position ! However general Mindernine formed positions of his own, and then advanced his armies close upon Federals army and prepared to force him out of his new position. Federals position was indeed declared impregnable but Kindernino was not daunted and so on the twoifth of march again again threw his forces upon Federal.

THE BATTLE OF POUNCE-CEN-WOOLLA.

All of Federals defenses were stormed and all day long the battle raged. Kindernino hurled upon the enemy fifteen onslaughts,, dented and broke the enemys line at the left and then carried the defenses at all points but not without great and unaccount able losses to both sides and soon Federals divisions were again on its retreat, with Kindernine and the other christian divisions hard on its rear trying to close in upon Federal from east and west in a desperate effort to cut off the retiring army. At the same time the great galverinian seaport called Blanketburg was blown to kingdom kongdom come by the Angelinian guns, the worse destruction to a city that could have ever occured, and how desperate the fighting was at Blanketburg no one really know or could describe, but the Blandelinians under general Hellongerburger Zimmermann had delivered a series upon series of violent counter charges against Kindernines solid line of battle.

Part II CHA[illegible] TWO.

THE BATTLE OF BLANKETBURG.

Within two hours the battle field was seen to be covered with two hundred and twenty thousand bodies of men on on one side alone. The battle was extremely fearful fourty four thousand eight hundred and sixty two Blandelinians having been captured in one quarter of an hour. Federal had made for the Anfelo -Calverinia railroad lile line but the advance was terribly slow the Angelinians making great progress on both their enveloping wings, and though a part of Federals line of defenses had become untenable on account of the christian artillery, it being b turned by an enveloping movement, Ambrose Fuller had managed to draw his own forces out of the way, and Danson pressing ahead with strong infantry forces supported by artillery also suffered terribly from storming attacks and though the Angelinians succeeded in driving the Blandelinians back Danson fell mortally wounded.

The Blandelinians were now forced to evacuate a par part of their strong position , and breaking through the Angelinians advanced onward, the Blandelinians of Federals right under general Kingston falling back across the neighborhood plain blowing up bridges behind them in the creeks and other streams to hinder the advance of the Angelinians. Even in front of Boa Blanketburg where for four hours more Blandelinian and Angelinian columns were in the most frightful and frantic infantry duels ever seen in the far, surging back and forth, the Blandelinian center had been forced back, but at the right general Stnta Anna Aronburg was trying with the fury of desperation to break through the christian advance, but it was agreat repulse, these Blandelinians being trapped and cut off from its left wing, while several Angelinian attacks on the southwestern defenses also proceeded with great success, but not without serious loss.

The vast movement of the Angelinians swept onward with the most dogged resistance faced by them and as general Kindernine threatened to encircle the town of Poverty Rowton the Blandelinians there capitulated under a terrific artillery fire from shells that blew holes in the ground as big as volcanic craters. The Blandelinians under general Cannonia was also driven back, then the Angelinians opened a vigorous offensive and with their great divisions of Calverinians supporting th em made detorained drives toward the Blandelinians defending a position on Iternal Creek, while simultaneously the christian armies in the west of the line of advance resumed their attack, pounding on, step by step, from south and east, while southwest of federals army more serious activities broke out, general Cannonias armies falling back. The Angelinians then forced their way across the foe works pushing over and across, and battered the fortifications of Colonia which brought on more heavy fighting. In the fa e of the most tremendous opposition ever seen the Angelinians succeeded in capturing Colonia and made desperate attempts to strengthen their front, but they were swept back with whole sections mowed down in half an hour. The Socoloninia sailent thus exposed from the south was additionally threatened by the most foe fierce onslaughts which for a time threatened to cut off the retreat of general federals armies.

After several more days of retreating general Federalreceiving reinforcements again prepared to make a stand. Kindernine had never seen a more desperate Blandelinian general in all his life.

ederal fought a desperate one days battle of the fifteenth of march at Iternal reek, and two days later after retreating fought another at Iternarl Plains in hich he was also beaten and then struck the christians a blow at Colonia Saunders and got defeated once more. Undaunted by his series of defeats Federal only rallied is army once again but his Blandelinians were again defeated in a great struggle long the Angeline Ram rivof which re raged like a regular warfare of hell itself. General Federals troops under general Failent broke through the forest on the ter and inner lines, and assailed the christians in ten desperate onslaughts, ile Federals army which was making the most tenacious resistance was hard pressed, e violent engagement making a din that shook the whole region like a severe earth ake. Federals resistance was without success however the Angelinians capturing fourty f our thousand eight hundred and fourty Blandelinians, and two hundred and seventy achine guns, and even two airships and three aroplaines. In another region a serious ombat took place at Callie town where the Blandelinians after capturing a long line f trenches under cover of a curtain of artillery fire were driven back by mediate counter charges of frightful violence, resulting in the capture of fortified renches ad dominating the Calverine crossroads near little Beppo with one housand common of heavy calibreSg Strong Blandelinian resistance inflicted a check n the operations of the Calverinians and Angelinians, but general Fembers Angelinians ade great progress on all sides of Callie resulting with the occupation of the town, with the capture of about nineteen thousand five hundred more Blandelinians as prisoners. he Blandelinians under general French being in danger of being outflanked withdrew but his main line still retained their hold on both banks of the Pandora brock epulsing a series of heavy attacks, capturing twelve officers, fifty five thousand six undred men, and twelve machine guns. Federal then cont inued his retreat for two ays more then again made a stand forming a new position on the Tarrell OPeninsula hich was attacked by the Angelinians. But these attacks had been broken down under the Blandelinian fire. Fargols army on the Peninsua peninsula and in the forest districts defeated terrifying Blandelinian assaults, and in persueing reached a line of fortifications which were blown up after being taken by storm. The Blandelinians ben fell back from their general position evacuating the fortifications atNannes positions under general Huntington. At the very same time very stubborn attacks were ade by the Angelinians Under general Wisel Wilson and all these attacks notwithstanding s superiority of the christian forces were repulsed with great somughter. General mo at the same time stopped an attempt of the Angelinians to resume an offensive the direction of Pessimistic's line of Turmerannians.

A day later after the recent battle along the postal district on andoes southern wing the Angelinian artillery silenced the Blandelinian batteries on e banks of the Sappo and Onion rivers, while o ater the Blandelinian infantry which d gained a foot hold on the heights of Shraodor hurriedly evacuated their their position before the christian artillery fire while along the banks of the ppo, the Angelinian infantry inflicted a c sanguinary repulse on two desperate landelinian attacks near gacremento, and three other bloody attacks which were arried closer to the purple lines were decimated beyond describing. Two days ater after retreating and then reforming their line once more a strong landelinian attack was made by the foe on Bernards heights which resulted in a laughter that must have been a horror between heaven and earth, and before the very ngels..

Simultaneously another christian army elsewhere bombarded the Blandelinian fortifications on the Deweys plain, the Blandelinian batteries replying effectually, and their infantry then two more days later made dreadful attacks on Colonys heights, hich became regular heights of hell, the Angelinians holding their position amid all this frightful carnage, and by using their heaviest ari artillery the Angelinians dvanced their positions hour by hour proving themselves absolutely irrestible. The series of conflicts having already progressed for two weeks the Angelinians were rapidly closing in on Calverine and further bloody successes had attained the efforts of the Angelinians to trap Dargins armies retiring on federals junction. The town of Ivreshad had been occupied and destroyed, while general Goodriches rapid advance consisted a mea menance to Dargins center which was retreating as rapidly as possible, being in the grave peril of being cut off as all the railways which would have permitted them to escape had been destroyed by the flesing non-combatants, and the Angelinians themselves. Between the town and one plain the Blandelinians made desperate efforts to hold back the Angelinian armies untill their comrades to the north could rake good th eir escape but every stand met with great loss and bitter thrashings and as they were now in the extreme borthern Calverinian country where winter is still colder even way into late April the soldiers of both sides were fihtfighting this new battle in a raging blizzard.The Angelinian advances were made through the wooded country where the trenches and hundreds of thousands of men were being swept thus as the Angelinians had made were soon lost on account of severe counter attacks which were made by the fiercest forces of the wickedest and fiercest of Blandelinians the Glandelininashaving lost not lessthan four hundred thousand men in four hours in the desperate driving onslaughts made by the Angel Angelinians. It also re sulted in the capture in the first main line of defenses the Angelinians artillery having been brought forward rapidly, bombarding the trenches for ten miles while the infantry maintained a steady pressure on general Colleges retreating Glandelinians. The number of officers aken prisoners was exceptionally higher than the men as the terrible effects of the christians artillery fire so demoralized the Glandelinians that they abandoned the officers and the latter completely help less because of the murderous fire fell into the hands of the Angelinian soldiery.

The Glandelinians showed the most stubborn resistance the advance of the Angelinians keeping the Glandelinians busi busily defending both the flanks of the Angeline Run river. At Cammilliathe Angelinians occupied a system of trenches and fortifications amid frightful carnage the Angelinians also crushing the rear of Sabote Glandelinians divisi ions to pieces with their artillery storms which had the Glandelinians at their mercy.

At Hearst plainsthe Angelinians made a resolute offensive movement against soldiers a against Solictors right wing but were repulsed with very severe losses however one hundred and seventy thousand dead and wounded being left at one place. General Thescorns Angelinians at the same time desperate made desperate efforts to encircle the tw town of Educationall making terrific attacks in which they flooded the plains wooded country and trenches of both sides with dead and wounded of both sides, but though for four hours violent fighting continued the Glandelinians struck their firstreal blow storming the Angelinian trenches and forcing them to give ground regaining much of their lost territory.

Two other main operations were made, an of ensi ve around around Sidney by the Angelinians and the other a Glandelinian drive on Surplus and Profits both of these offensives making gains but not without stun stupendous losses. In the struggle around Surplus and Profitsthe Glandelinians launched violent counter attacks against the christian lines gaining a foot hold and by a surprised bayonet charge captured several Angelinian fortifications, took by storm My Carmel, broke down the stubborn Angelinian resistance at several point captured thirteen officers , over a hundred thousand men, and crushed many an Angelinian divisions to fragments.

The Angelinians around Sidney progressed delivering bloody attacks which resulted in a series of combats and heavy losses but taking the positions and repl repusling strong counter attacks and delivering another attack stormed two hostile lines lying behind the others forcing them back after most heavy fighting. One of these positions hon however still offered serious resistance and fell backafter four hundred thousand had been slain. During these combats the Glandelinians had ben fuilty of the following acts!!

Hundreds of Gilivans prisoners including even hundreds of thousands of children and even scores of women were used as shield against the christian fire while wounded prisoners were put to death thewounded being pitched with bayonets into fires made in the forces, or burning buildings, while orders had ben given by Federal to take no more prisoners. Bullets also ha had ben reversedsplit and cut to cause more more serious wounds, bayonet with teeth like a saw were used, ambulances were bombarded, stretcher bearers of either side were fired on and sergeons taken pre prisoners and shot. Even Glandelinian wounded killed Angelinian red cross nurses goinf g goint to their relief. Federal had given these orders dro d directing his troops not to make any more prisoners and to kill every one falling into their hands even if already wounded and unable to bear arms.

The Glandelinians even set fire to the red cross hospitals and those who tried tito jump from the windows were shot dead, while among crowds of helpless children an indescribable scene of carnage took place, the Glandelinians cutting them to pieces, intestines and all, Angelinians soldiers were horribly mutilated by the Glandelinians. In one instance wounded children taken from damaged towns were piled upon haystacks and burned to death . Also at Surplus a body of Glandelinians advanced behind ten thousand children and one hundred women and girls, and many thousands of girls children from eight to ten years old. The Glandelinians fired from behind this human buck bue brickles pricking them forward wither with their bayonets, and indeed many hundreds of thousands of children were slain by the christian fire in this way the angelin Angelinians being terribly incensed when learning of this at and being bound to hem Federals whole army in from any escape whateverm give no quarter, and destroy them all and kill Federal like a dog.

Though it would have ben a justifications to have done this yet it did not happen for Federal had an army for facts ten times the size of the christians and finally won the batle as you will soon see.

The next day gen Summary broke thr through the freemason lines in the southeast forcing Federals entire line to fall back the Angelinians concentrating their efforts to push on though at a loss of three hundred thousand within half an hours terrible strug ggle indeed and a terrible loss for so short a time. That whole day was marked by extreme activity atmany points along the lines. Supported by artillery Angelinian troops carried a long line of trenches after after extremely heavy engagements these trenches remaining in the poss ession of the Glandelinians despite the repeated bitter efforts of the poor Angolinians to retake it.The Angelinians were not only striking to make Galverine untenable but to scop in the Glandelinians in the wide stretch of terrotory between the Mc-Hollaher Run and their second line of fortified works, where without any supplies or help from Federals , main wings they would be helpless while the christian armies would close in upon them on all sides. The town of Competence was already cut off from three sides while the armies of the christians under general Logan was making strides in their great efforts to complete the great investment. The Glandelinian forces under general Marshall was completely decimated while the fighting directly along the main line was murderous the Glandelinians battling desperately with large forces especially to hold general Francis Bargins purple coats back.

At the same time the assaulting lines in gray under general Gerard was subjected to a spasmodic bombardment, while all along the line at this point there was very hard fighting at close quarters hundreds of grenads and petards being used to support the attack, which however were completely broken up by Glandelinian artillery and a curtain of musketry fire which checked the christian advance.On the heights of Conference the Glandelinians made wo head, headlong attacks which were completely repulsed.

But the Glandelinians again resumed the offensive and delivered two more desperate attacks, one gradually extending from the western plains, the others directed against the christian positions in the part of the woods stretching eastward from the direction of Mc-Whirther Run. Both attempts broke down miserably under the combined artillery fire of the christians extremely heavy losses being inflicted upon the Glandelinians. At another point simultaneously the foe attempted to poe pierce the christian front with large forces, the attack succeeding in piercing the first line, but was completely repulsed with heavier losses in assaulting the second line.

In the meanwhile and also simultaneously as to the say the Glandelinians succeeded in exploding a long stream of mines which tore thousands of volcanic craters in the plains and fields, and then opened a most violent artillery and musketry fire at the scene of the explosions, but the Angelinian sappers blew up one hundred Glandelinian mine galleries with success provoking a fresh out burst of fire on the part of the enemy. In the direction of general Cornwaces divisions his Glandelinians after very stubborn fighting advanced on the front and took by storm the strongly fortified forests south of the town and after four hours of successful fighting reached the main goal seven divisions contesting desperately against the Glandelinians under general Hoyns. The result was a complete and bloody repulse.

Other arkies in the meantime were also active in the campagin in southern Galverinia. At the battle of Englewood the Angelinian, Conen Concentinian and Syssinkilian troops under general Forest drove the Glandelinians from navy positions on the first of March north of small Fox-x creek and advanced to Fabolia three days afterwards striking and driving another Glandelinian army back with heavy losses in a southerly direction. The Angelinians captured twenty nine officers, eight thousand men, sixteen cassions and sixty machine guns. Along general Jeromes line the battle raged with the greatest violence the attack of the christians against the southern works having been repulsed. further east the conflict had also continued with redoubled fury the whole Glandelinian main line being badly shattered, the Glandelinian losses in killed and wounded far exceeding any other number since the day of the battle of Jennie vivian. General federal Hanconia himself who commanded the main Glandelinian army at this battle was bending his most greatest energies to resist the incessant onslaughts using his best troops but in vain being unable for the present for lack of reinforcements to resist the christian onslaughts, while all the attempt of his Glandelinians to break through the christian front between the Barton and surrounders rivers had been frustrated the Glandelinians having suffered fearful losses, one division alone losing thirty three th ousand four hundred men out of their fourty thousand two hundred. Galverine was gradually being surrounded by the series of christian armies the series of Glandelinian armies after desperate fighting having been split into three sections, one being driven southeast, the two others northwest, and northeast. The Free Mason armies under generals Secretary, and Billy Johnston had also been hurled back at the battles of the Children School on Ten, after dreadful carnage, and that a part of johnstons army commanded by General Hank Shoemann had been pierced and then cut to pieces.

Other a Angelinian forces were hammering with infantry and heavy batteries artillery at Lymanns front whose retreat soon continued northward, though occasionally they gave their persuers a stiff fight at every backward step. The morning of the second day of the battle was indeed one of the fiercest scenes of the whole conflict. The Angelinian troops supported by Concentinians cavarly and artillery, having captured one of the Glandelinian positions under Aronburg, while along the rest of the line the Angelinians for hours delivered smashing blows with flesh and steel at the Free Mason Line but however their frensied onslaughts were re ulsed for a while hough the Angelinians captured a long line lf of trenches. The landelinians then swept forward on a twenty one mile front this time hurling superior forces upon the christians into the sledge hammer attacks. The tremendous onslaughts were proceeded by a vol violent bombardment that wrd wrecked a large portion of the Angelinian defenses and mas made them untenable in the face of one of the most determined infantry attacks ever seen. Through all that bloody day there had been heavy bombardments of the Angelinian positions, the battalions which held the positions suffering heavy losses, thousands of the Angelinians being buried alive in their breastworks. he landelinians attacked again and again and still again with ten battalions in each attack, the whole series of lines rushing across the plains, the glandelinians in the last attack making a clean sweep.

Two thousand three hundred and fifty prisoners were the sole survivors of the hundreds of thousands of Angelinian defenders, and these were massacred.....

The reinforcements which the Angelinians endeavored to bring up were mowed down in thousands, twenty thousand of the reinforcements being put out of commission.

The Glandelinians continued on past the first line of trenches but all at once the main column which was aheadof the main body of troops was seen to melt away, while many officers fell. The ass assaulting lines were crushed by new forces hidden in ambush, and the survivors fled. In the meantime the new Free Mason lineswas pierced at the battle of Remmer quntze to these glandelinian forces being put off their bass also at the battle of Hellen which was also taken, and its defenders driven north, and by an encircling attack, and the foremost christian line after stubborn fighting had reached the highway of Mandelis Ferro capturing three thousand prisoners and three hundred machine guns.

During the fourteenth of the month a christian army and the foe forces both heavily reinforced fought a desperate conflict between the Ammonia and Horns Run river the christians being undgr general Hander ganders and the foe under Leonia Heldon Picknell, the landelinian troops managing by a great charge to cut through the christian lines, while other armies of christians operating around the town of Logan and Possiania were now seperated and seemed to be in a dangerous stae and were in a hurried ret reat sit wither to connect with the Mc-Hollester and Pandora lines again or to join the armies operating against the town of Mc-gollester. Another christian army in the Mc-Whirther region were also placed in an unfavorable position as their right and left flank were exposed.

Ten of the divisional armies defending a stretch of the Pandoria Railroad lines had either been smashed to fragments during the battle of Thor, or dominated by the heavy fire of the landelinian artillery, the landelinian batteries battering away at the Pandora defenses with their heavy guns, then the glandelinians tried to carry them by storm but an ernormous number of men were sacrificed for such an undertaking on that March the fourteenth, though it was successful. Despite the strong rally on the part of the landelinians the christian progress was for a time unchecked, for east and west of the Pandora Run the forces under Thomas were compelled to withstand violent counter assaults as the foe was strongly reinforced in that direction recieving an ernorous number of men that were withdrawn from the right, the figrcesness of the fighting having resulted in most heavy losses on both sides. The landelinian losses had been staggering owing to the great number of wounded who had died from lack of medical attention. The main glandelinian center was the eye of all. Here the Glandelinian positions were like strong fortifications hastily thrown up during the night after the first day of the engagement and here the Angelinian forces made numerous attacks, and though as yet they met little success they continued to extend their operations, though some of the Angelinian forces had been driven back for over twenty miles. The main landelinian forces under general Petro had already been withdrawn, small forces being left to oppose the christians, and hold back the Angelinians as long as possible. Petros army however was not as yet surrounded, the Angelinians having only made successes against some of the outer works, the glandelinian armies being intact and free to maneuver as they pleased. Also considerable reinforcements appeared to have reached the glandelinians where the armies under general Carole were operating while now most of the christian armies had been retreating at principal points. The Angelinian failures now began along general Petros front, and formed an arch of disasters for nearly thirty miles inextent with the loss of nearly three hundred thousand men in slain alone, and he was forced to retreat, being closely followed by the glandelinians. The attempts to even besiege Calverine was failing. Still further to the east the Angelinian armies under unamed commanders were also retiring, the glandelinians having recaptured the towns lost during one of the battles already stated.

The aspects of affairs therefore at present was favorable for the enemy in this quarter, especially as desperate attempts to break through Petros line and this link up with Bernards northern wing had been frustrated. Before these armies however the Angelinians continued their attacks, and succeeded in capturing another portion near the eastern front, the central division also withdrawning without making any attempts to offer a stand, such quick progress by general Leonolds armies which had resulted in the capture of destruction of general Vincents christian division. This disaster however benefited the foe nothing for they were compelled to retreat from the Erminie along which they had held, the Angelinians having already p ocupied Harndon and now two other forces were advancing to meet each other, and close the last part of escape to general Zimmermanns glandelinians and Americans. The number of landelinian troops which faced the danger of being surrounded was varios variously estimated at from three hundred fifty thousand to one million men. Rival clans calimed regarding the fighting before and with petros forces which barred the christian advance on Calverine and gaurded the northern and southern wings of the main army of the Masonic Soldiers reported progress from Bernards operations against the main christian armies, but also that the Angelinians have abandoned either their desperate infantry attacks although a vio ent bombardment was continued within the length of fourty eight miles in a cannonading salvoes of hundreds of thousands of thunders heard within the distance of a hundred i miles. It was believed however that Petro could not hold out much longer. The attacks had cost the christians ernormous losses, but their armies were awaiting reinforcements before launching the final blows.

General Crackentine a new christian commander at the same time was meeting at the battle of Carro strong andcaerious resistance with his drive northward, and his progress was being measured in feet and inches so stubborn was the resistance with which he met. He was twelve miles from the Carro fortifications on a front extending for twenty miles, and violent and continuous counter attacks were costing the glandelinians heavy losses, but appeared to be effecting their object in delaying general Mackmarrow untill the main landelinian forces were withdrawn saftly behind the fortifications. Angeline progress between the Carro and Rosso fortifications was a steady breaking down by tens of many sections of the glandelinian defenses, and then other counter attacks were made by the Glandelinians which successfully allowed the forces further back to make good their retreat on prepared portions. On March the Twelveth the other Angelinian armies along the Erminie launched terrific attacks on all fronts of the enemy army under Carroso which though repulsed at one point by a the severe landelinian fire was continued at other points, with the most horrible viole violence both sides suffering intolerable losses. Along the center during a heavy bombardment the Angel Angelinians advanced against the main portions making a series of violent attacks but were repulsed again, and though the christians had tried to take the enemy by surprise with an attack against their intrenched works they were repulsed by the fire of the glandelinian artillery. At other points during a hurricane of cannon and musketry fire hostile attacks of horrible violence were unsuccessful the defenders remaining in possession of all their positions. But at other points after violent fighting the Angelinians succeeded in gaining a foothold upon the slopes of the Child slave heights, taking more than sixty thousand six hundred and fifty glandelinians prisongrs. They also captured a whole battery of rapid fire guns. The opposition of the glandelinians at this point literally broke down following real hard general onslaughts, and not being able to resist any longer the glandelinian army fell back porsued by the Angelinians.

At other pointes of western Calverinia new engagements known as the battles of Salvo Run had dev developed in front of Petros divisions the Angelinians despite having to face a hurricane of artillery and in a raging storm of musketry and machine guns fire after making thirteen onslaught had succeeded in capturing the fortified forests near the works where five thousand three hundred and eighty Glandelinians were made prisoners, while simultaneously a stronger position was captured by storm, where twenty general officers, eleven thousand eight hundred of the rank and file, and a score of machine guns fell into the hands of the christians. East of the line of battle the enemy attempted to check the christian advance by means of stubborn counter attacks but were all repulsed with woeful losess, the glandelinians being driven back beyond their line of positions overcoming their desperate counter resistance at Salvoe Run where again the christians made a ge new haul of general prisoners.

Indeed the fiercest contest ever seen for months was raging all along the battle line of petros the An elinians pushing a t the fighting, launching trip and sledge hammer assaults against the Free Mason Lines. Big bodies of Angelinians concentrated attacks of indescribable fury, general Bernards Angelinians having captured landelinian positions over a front a mile and a half deep and three miles and three quarters long long the Angelinians also storming and taking hill positions of the enemy with the loss of eighty thousand every hour. The landelinian positions along general Cannonries front was also captured by the christians, the christians capturing over twenty two thousand five hundred and eighty one wounded as prisoners as well as twelve cannons, three revolving field pieces, seventy machine guns, and any tools of variqus kinds. At Gunnary creek another christian army blew up with ches part of the landelinian trenches belonging to general Sanders army, and also redoubts but with the literal use of a terrific artillery fire, of grenades and ich explosives, the Glandelinians prevented the christians from occupying these sitions. General Hansons monster howitzers continued to pour their incessant ain of shells into the strong landelinian position, the fortifications along the landelinian center being the principal victims of the bombardment. Following this violent shelling of the trenches the Angelinians again launched heavy desperate infantry attacks in another effort to take these positins positions but after desperate fighting with bayonets, sabres, pistols and hand hand grenades the attack was repulsed. For hours the mamoth Angolinians howitzers hurled their tons of high explosives, gang-gang shells and other nlax missles into the great Clandelinian fortresses but with the general storming of the mighty Clandelinian stronghold among the most powerful in th e Galverinian history the great Angelinian triple drive had gradually slowed down. Everywhere the brave Clandelinians hea ily were smashed before Millerns army could get under its cover, an action that startled the whole Angolinian world, the entire Clandelinian army at this point being demolished. The slaughter had extended for many miles but the main line still kept up a a stiff resistance, and the Angelinians were checked with heavy losses.

At the same time general Bicknell attempted to swoop northward with his army of one million veterans in an effort to cut off Galverins and threaten the Clandelinian works at Poverty Row but was beaten back with the loss of more than three hundred thousand the Clandelinians capturing seventy two thousand four hundred prisoners, eighty machine guns, and also took the Bernen heights, occupied a portion of the Normas run and also gained positions east of Bicknells lines making a great junction with another Clandelinian army and raising his columns.

In the mdantime general Jennings made new on gains for himself capturing the little forest of St Anns which had been the scene of cruel fighting four for twenty four hours, the Angelinians capturing a long line of trenches. The Angelinian losses in killed and wounded was extremely heavy and the number of prisoners captured was sixty eight general officers, and one hundred thirteen thousand six hundred and eighty eight men. Nevertheless the christian offensive did not abate but growed in intensity, blow after blow being delivered at the Clandelinians preentaeally the entie entire line or length of the new battle field, the Clandelinians being in retreat at the western end of thisem immense fighting line to its eastern extremity. The rapidity and fierceness of the christian attacks had not slackened and the foe army withdrew tward Galverin e fighting a furious rearguard action. Since the carrying of the position along the front in the woods at St Anns the Clandelinians had not been given a moment in which to catch their breath, but had been continually forced backwards, the Angelinians intending to drive them if possible into the north of Galverinia where they would be bottled up. At other points in Galverinia the Angolinian armies renewed their activities which were brought to a sudden halt recently with the Clandelinians holding Rapid as a menance to general Carrolras's rear. At the same time the Clandelinian forces made further counter advances against the christian positions of general Phelansburger against the only remaining fortified town which still remained in possession of the Clandelinians of christians mean. At the same time elsewhere during a fierce engagement east of the Esterdan creek an additionall number of prisoners and ten cannon were captured. In the direction of Esterdan creek the town of Hendroe was taken by storm and the Clandelinians at that point forced to surrender.

In order to render possible the retreat of their rear guard divisions through marsh districts, the Clandelinians made a stand once more, but they were again defeated in another battle at Hendroe although they brought back and threw into the battle some divisions which previously had been falling back.

At other points in Galverinia the Clandelinian armies had tried to arrest the christian pursuit but was everywhere repulsed, while stubborn resistance had to be broken at the battle of The Owal banks, which while Swinty and other places stubbornly defended by the enemy were taken. Two of the Clandelinian armies succeeded in withdrawing to their sene second line of defenses having suffered at many points a crushing defeat. At the same time once more great christian forces adv were advancing upon the Costellico fortresses whose fate after three days bloody fighting laid open the way for the Angelinians tward the main defenses resulting in two days more desperate & struggles struggles and at the extreme western end of the Free Masonic lines, the christians succeeded in breaking through the gray lines under general Hansonia Nolan and aided by the storm of high explosives blew the Clandelinians out of the first line of trenches, whilecat other points of the battle line hand to hand fighting with the Clandelinian offensive and Angelinian counter attacks resulted in complete butchery, the issue being undecided. On the Eraidnie the Angolinian army crossed to the right bank where the Clandelinians had evacuated their strong positions on the whole of their line, maintaining their ground three days later at Owal, the Angelinians penetrating the Free Masonic Lines which retreated devastating every thing as they fell back. To the east another Angelinian army after more heavier fighting forced the Clandelinian army back also but at other points the christians under general Burnett withdrew their lines when counter attacked by superior number of Clandelinians. At the sametime a success successful attack was carried out against a nework network of trenches which began to threaten the safty of an outpost. The attack consisted of a bombardment of neighboring works, and the earsplitting explosions of ten thousand one hundred and thirty nine big T.N.T mines under a section of trenches which were occupied at once while another section was rushed with the bayonet. The Clandelinians tried to counter attack, but in vain. At the same time heavy fighting was in progress along the Clandelinian front near the center. The tremendous boom of the great cannons and mine explosions was quickly followed by a great and stupendous stream of wounded men from the vinicity of that region. Along the Angelinia Run ravines fighting continued throughout the day, the Clandelinians along this point attempting to delver several desperate attacks but were severely bom bombarded. Angthor point in Galverinia inthe southwest on the twenty fifth of March the Clandelinian army under general Calvanania Shoemannia delivered an attac against the christian positions under general Jack Evans and three general attacks against general Hanson ivians positions. These attacks were very violent and the battle raged for several days but however for the foe the fighting was unsuccessful. The battles duration was fourty eight hours and the bulk of the Free Mason armies gathered on the boundary of the state of Frander leaving only a few armies together with reserves on the south of Galverine to defend against any offensives movements made by general Hanson vivian. In the meantime the forces necessary to operate against Bicknell crossed a portion of the Mc-Hollester Run, and wedged themselves between the wide river and Angeline Run reaching other points and well then throwing the Concentinian plans of general Mc-Hollesters divisions into disorder and paved the way with the Concentinians returned from the Andrean Can battlefields. Unexpectedly rapid movements of the nearest Angelinian armies upset this plan completely. One army under general Sampson co operated from Pittsburg and forced one of the lines. General Cannonia now seperated from Federal, regathered all his available troops and defeated the christian general Sampson, but his army was reinforced by christians under Jennings who hurled back Cannonins army, pushed northward and forced his army to fall back to their covering points on the Mc-Whirthorn Run and Mc-Hollester Run banks. Just think all these battles occured from the middle to the end of the month of March.

In the extreme west the Angolinian armies also took the offensive against general Nicholes armies, entered Nicksonia Grove after fighting if of savage character, and Ohio clarke, and defeated the Clandelinians again at the battle of Accountania and attacking and defeating in quick succession the new Clandelinian armies at Detroit and Broughton. General Dearborn completed the routing of Cannonins forces, and hurled them back across the river, crossing the Angeline Run themselves, while his right wing rested on the Mc-Whirther, its left holding the Mc-Whirther plains, while general Hanson vivian assuming supreme command over all the armies anew, assemble assembled a powerful force on the plains before Galverins a hundred miles away, and the main onslaught on the fortified works around Galverine began.

Crossing crossed the Eraidnie after a desperate fight of four days driving the Clandelinians under general Packard across the Calumet plains, the Clandelinians falling back all along the line and soon assuming an almost impregnable position, and the general contest of the battle for the possession of the big Chicago of Galverinia was soon on.

Indeed general Hannon saw the first most cruel sanguinary fighting of the battle in which five hundred thousand fell on both sides, the Clandelinian force again giving way after being flanked by the Concentinian armies. While this was going on general Cannonins whole army was in full retreat.

The Free Mason Line under general Burnumhead held a little while longer, but also soon retreated. The eastern part of the christian line was soon in danger, but General Thomas Federal made the mistake of leaving his flank exposed, and uncovered, while general Holdon neglected his right, and the Angelinian commanders concentrat ed another numerous army by quickly rearranging their dispositions of the forces along the Mc-Hollesters line and these after more sanguinary fighting drove the Clandelinians before them and by dexteriously handling their forces the Clandelinian commanders managed to forestall all attempts of the christians to outflank them, thus forcing them to resort to desperate frontal attacks.

This task fell to general Luxury who drove furiously tward general Federals center, piercing the line, only to find himself surrounded by fresh divisions of Clandelinians, that had been rushed to this part of the line. Battling desperately for two w olw whole days amid heinous carnage he succeeded in making an opening in the iron circle which at one time seemed to prove fata lt to him. Then the Clandelinian chief saw no alterb alternative but to fall back and redispose their forces on their line but the strong Angelinian forces kept moving forward at both wings, forcing general Pron to surrender, taking 328,987 prisoners, and eight hundred heavy guns.

In the meantime on the same day the Angelinians under general Bloom rosan rolled up the line, their onslaughts progressing unchecked. The Clandelinian position on the Tomato Patch plain was taken by the Angelinians, and efforts on the parts of the Free Masons to check his offensive, to take the offensive though successful at some points failed as a whole, sanguinary fighting having been endulged in, the wicked Clandelinians giving way while the Free Mason line along Tontmont Cree k inflicted such heavy losses that they held them in check for a good long time.

[illegible] and the Angelinians to confine child slavery by main force within

By this time however the offensive movements of the christians began to gain momentum the Angelinians along the center capturing fourteen fortifications though subjected for two days to a severe fire from the enemys artillery. The foe armies under general Hochawwarsaw was held at bay the Angelinians ale making success elsewhere under general Throne and Thorne their determined attacks being very persistent, and incessant against forlorns heavy forces attacking the railroad linking the main Shoemann and Federal line, taking vantage points with the bayonet, capturing one hundred officers, two thousand men, twenty nine small guns and a large supply of war material. The Clandelinians then brought up the main body of these troops and tried with all their might to take the offensive with the result that in the ensueing fights both sides were attacking simultaneously. The Clandelinians succeeded in progressing forward however concentrating considerable forces which continued to deliver attacks in the direction of the Mc-Hollester and Pandora Railway the conflict becoming extremely desperate and sanguinary. The enemy strove with the most vigorous attacks to extend his front, but to little purpose except to result in tremendous slaughter.

The Clandelinians retreated, the Angelinians forcing a passage to cut off the retreat of the Clandelinians, while the mighty armies of Angelinia were slowly but surely forging around Calverine it being believed that the Clandelinians would be unable to extricate themselves from the military trap and that the operation of the Angelinians would result in the greatest victory inthe war so far as concerned the number of men and war munitions captured. A terrific bombardment of the fortifications caused the passage to be forced, and the Angelinians now resumed the desperate onslaughts against the gray lines agai on the Castellio river where the most ? hardest fighting of the month raged for three days.

THE FATAL RESULTS OF THE ENDING OF THE SEIGE OF CALVERINE.

Heavy artillery destroyed all the bridges while large forces continued the general attacks, attacks also being made on both sides of Poverty Row and though these were repulsed with the most heavy loss the Angelinians succeeded in advancing along the the left naks banks on capturing a new line of fortifications, and subsequently getting beyond to the right bank advancing tward the northeast.

Approaching the outskirts of the fortresses the Clandelinians retreating the Angelinians broke through the strong Clandelinian positions, capturing many thousands of prisoners fourteen maxims, thirty three machine guns, and three lines of trenches, and repulsing several extremely violent counter attacks of the enemy. Simultaneously the Angelinians began a bombardment of other Clandelinian trenches north and east of Calverine following this up by attacks with high explosives, and by these means succeeded in penetrating the first line of the main trenches, and all the attempts of the Clandelinians to regain their works were everywhere repulsed.

The Clandelinians expl ded exploded literally thousands of the most terrific mines, and other attacks made by the Angelininare met by infantry and artillery fire which however despite its severity failed to check them, and finally Federal fearing that Calverine and his whole army was endag endangered left his command with Cannonia who he placed at its head, and went south with a small force to collect more armies and commit utter devastation in southern Calverinia.

General Federal then confirmed his own retreat leaving a burned and desolat waste behind him and driving before him millions of homeless and starving refugees who he tried to overtake with the intention to massacreThe problem of the main Calverinian authorieties of caring for the panic stricken hordes which was fleeing for the most part with only such clothing and such supplies as it could carry was as serious as reforming the badly battered christian army under general Cannonia Johnston.

As the tide of the christian advance continued its relentless sweep to the south now this flesing army of peasants, child slaves, and other refugees was being constantly augmented conditions brought on Belgium and Russia by the Germann sweep through those two kingdoms were magnified a thousand fold in southern Calverinia.

It was a part of the Clandelinian strategy of retreat to make the southern part of Calverinia before the christian advance as near a w waste as possible, driving the population before the retreating armies.

The overcrowding of thousands of railways by th the to transport of hundreds of thousands of child and women refugees, for the field armies, and the remova removen removal of arms and ammunition, and munitions of war had left only the roads and open country an avenue of flight to the population of the threatened cities and towns and Gerrard , Parrol, Pandora, Donaldson, Smeldorf, Tripl, Tripolitan, Cornado, Zion, Sacramento, Poppo , Wall-e-lak, were the chief center of refuge, Not every town, Village and hamlet in sean southern Calverinia felt the burden of this tremendous influx of pupolation and child slave refugees escaped from for plantations already, affected by the first flight from northern Calverinia, when Analysin, Champaigne, Leon, Starr, and other towns and cities were taken by the Angelinians, the country back of the fighting lines having been undated & inundated by successive streams of refugees, constantly growing ever since the beginning of the war in Calverinia, the refugees fearing the approach of Federal, Cannonia, and the Manleys and other Clandelinian commanders.

The panic had spread to Pounce-Coe-woolia, Poverty Row, Grodinia, Lidia, and many other towns that had been captured by the Angelinians and they added their numbers to the flight. Overburdened by the exertions necessary to provide for the successful christian armies the Calverinian governments could do little to alleviate the conditions of the homeless millions. The Aurthorities of the cities and towns did what they could to care for the refugees, but the ever increasing flood had got beyond their limited facilities, and even then the near approach of the enemy, caused these to flee further onalso also. Breadlines were seen everywhere throughout the districts, the governments having estabis established food stations near the chief railway junctions where the food supplies were given out free as desperate was the situation as the vast numbers of the refugees were penniless, and even then the sudden approach of the enemy prevented half of them from being fed, as the Clandelinians seized all rational stations and all rations of stores, and drove the refugees further onward, though managing to capture many prisoners among the non-combatants who despite their helplessness tried to fight the wicked Clandelinian soldiers.

In the congested rush for safty from Federals army, families had become seperated, thou a thousands of mothers with babes in their arms, and breasts, and little ones clinging to their skirts, wandered the snowbound fields in the bitter March cold, their fathers being at the front or lost in the war. Many child stragglers were even seized by the Clandelinians and butchered, and even one section of the city of Calverine which the christian armies had failed to capture was in a seething volcano of flame and smoke.

The campaign of the christians in the southwest of Calverinia had failed indeed and all the christian armies were now driving themselves backwards abandoning the campaign which had been so nobly begun.

It was already between March and April still and as far as it goes there were many incedents already written concerning the war which had already raged a full year. Indeed during the fierce Clandine Angelinian war the Angelinians had just the same kind of trouble as the United States before the Civial War only that the Secession movements occured during the war with Angelinia and Clandelinia Clandelinia. It Would even be a mistake to suppose that even secession sentiment sentimates originated and exclusively maintained in any ofthe Angelinian Countries if the read reader thought so.On account of over one third of the people of Calverinia being Clandelinians by birth or Calverinians in favorof Clandelinia' s House Ideas of Calverinian State sovereignty and of the consequent right of any Calverinian state to withdraw from the Union of Abbisannia, Abyssinkile or Angelinia andto resist the acts and all the laws of Abbisannia on any occasion were held at first by as many staten statesmen in all parts of Calverinia as well as in Clandelinia.

Thus the "Essex Junto" of Calverinia which openly advocated a complete dissolution of the Union from Angelinia and her States and the formation of a Wes western Cond Confederacy were foremost in assembling a Convention of the Calverinian Clandelinian Congress on December fifthsenth 1912 at Calverine (Calverinia) at which allresolutions werepassed immediately recommending the State Legislatures to resist Angelinia and Abbisannia in conscripting soldiers for carrying on the bloody war of the Clandelinian Rebellion then being waged in Western southern and Eastern and Nort nern Calverinia and Angelinia. All through since the beginning of the war itself threats of disunion were first heard from the rebel governments in June 1912 at the capture of Vivian Wickey, butthis time it had been from southern Calverinia and also Western Calverinia in case Abbisannia should Deny Calverinia's admission to retain a child slavery and on acco nt of the unwillingness of Calverinians and Clandelinian subjects to surrender child slavery to christianity and abolish it as was a desired.

Once more during the month of November a great Western Calverinia Convention proceeded to declare the Aurthorities of Angelinia null and void within her own borders, and that the Angelinians were invaders of her own state, but owing at the time of the capture of Vivian Wickey by the enemy, and Hansons decisive action in making effortsto round up the cause of the capture of Vivian Wickey the State Aurthorities of disloyal Calverinia did not then dare to venture into an actual collission with Angelinia or Abbisannia.

But the main ag a agitation in favor of disunion reached complete culmination under the aggressive efforts by the disloyal Calverinians and Clandelinians duringthe war to extend child slavery not only in captured territory but elsewhere in Calverinia and the determination by the loyal Calverinians and the Angelinians to confine child slavery by main force within within the Calverinian states where it already existed. With the formation of so many Ani Anti-Child Slavery Societies thoughout the loyal Angelinian states the nomination of many Anti-Child slavery Candidates for the Calverinian and other Aurthorities of the states of Angelinia except Glandelinia from the beginning of the war up to March 1913 the passage of general Hansons degree of the enforced rescue of child slave and their enforcedadoption into families and people with cut children and other terrible accounts it became painfully evident indeed that the whole worlds prediction of an irrepressible conflict between Glandelinia and her loyal Calverinian subjects against Angelinia and her other states on the subject of Child slavery had already already become a terrible reality.

Before March 1913 fourteen to fifteen states in Calverinia out of her eighty seven states seceded and by a rebel Glandelinian Congress held at Calverine formed a new Confederacy with Glandelinia and her rebelling states and made general Mic-Allister Stack Stanck at Vivian Wickey a president or Governor and Mic-Hollester Johnston as his successor.

The fifteen rebel Calverinian states took from Loyal Calverinia nearly one third of its inhib inhabited area, and a population between fifty five million, or sixty five millions of Calverinians alone, and about fourty four millioi fourty four millions of real Glandelinians, and had in their power about four million child slaves of very young age. The remaining states of Calverinia which had remained fortunately loyal to Angelinia and God and had not fallen away had a population of about 20,000,000,000 and the army it gave to the support of Calverinia at the close of the first year of the rebellion or Child slave War was about twenty million, but as the majority of this were scattered on home guard duty over a vast region only 1,567,889 were at that early time in fighting activity. While the loyal portions of Calverinia was much more rich and powerful than the disloyal sections, it being more Christian and more Loyal to God than it Glandelinian inhabitants was nevertheless more inclined to peace though prepared for war as it was. The rebel section of Calverinia being Glandelinians was wicked in the extreme and always of a military spirit, accustic accustomed of weapons and altogether too eager for the bloodiest fray-ever written in my any books. The soldiers of both sides in the rebellion Glandelinians and Angelinians as I have already demonstrated were equally brave, resolute, heroic and devoted to what they deemed a good cause, but many g rebel armies and christian armies during batt les had showed such acts of extreme rashness as to occasion more frightful losses than they should have rocioced in battles of even greater violence.

It was during the latter part of the seige of Vivian Wickey in April 1913 when one of the most reckless undertakings over made was tried by g general Stevensons. He took an armed foc force of Woolers to a certain section of Mansions besiegeinblines of christians captured a strongarsenal and armory causing a frightful explosion that nearly shook down the city and christian armies and killing many christian soldiers and wounded thousands. He was then endeavoring to secure more arms in another raid for operating a general attack against Mansions centre. He however was captured later and executed by the Angelinians April 1th 1913 on the charge of murder. The expedition however though fair as it was in war time it was and is unecessary to say to the reader completely h foolhardy, rash, and insans insane, and wholly without any justification, and the rebel general paid for his or asy mu misguided zeal with his life. He was placed before the firing squad and shot down by two thousand soldiers. But nevertheless it must be said of this reckless raider that he was conscientious, and that by his complete and reckless daring, he helped to make it possible for the Angelinianst o keep on their guards more offensr and to prevent such destructive raids within their lines at night time.

I must confess also to say as probably the reader may have discovered when he read these first volumes that the Glandelinians had the advantage over the Angelinians in the outset, because the disloyal Calverinians had dispersed the rolgular armies of Calverinians from Vivian Wickey before June 1912 comprising 16,402,765 officers and men to distant parts of Calverinia and Angelinia without Governer Hanson Vivians knowledge where they were not avaialable when Vivian Wickey was invested by the Glandelinians, and had tried to sent off the vessels of the Angelinian navt navy to foreign stations when the plot had been discovered and frustrated and the disloyal members thrown into prison as traitors.

Many of the old Calverinian Glandelinian armie army officers had passed over to the Glandelinian service, and immense quantities of weaop weapons and ma ammunition and provisions and child slaves had been transferred from northern and southern Glandelinia) possessed Calverinia to Vivian Wickey, and Calverine and other important points now in possession of the Glandelinians or the seceded go Glandelinian or Calverinian states. A part of a loyal Calverinian army had been surrendered von February 18th 1913 by general Flanker to the Glandelinians not far from Vivian Wickey, and a other soldiers guarding the Angelinian Frointer in southeastern Calverinia were captured besides many national vessels and christian fortresses.

Though Angelinia expecting such a horrible war to break out at any time, was much better prepared for the great conflict, nevertheless during the first year the progress of success was much in the favor of the Glandelinians on account of the staggering blow struck to Angelinia with the fall of Vivian Wickey and Calverine and also Crowley, and the desperate atte p attempts of the enemy on Angelinia Agathia the main goal of the rebels.

though general Hauson and Williamsberger Zirrerman and their commanders had left their armies at Vivian Wickey and gone elsewhere taking up other armies for campaigns and though Mansion had now the immense armies at his hands to maintain this horrible seige now going on since July, the rebels which had lain quiet ever since the horror at Marischance and Marcocellic suddenly onApril 11th 1913 opened hostilities anew by bombarding the outer fortresses of the besieging Angelinian positions which was occuped by a general who refused to give his name for sufficient reasons reasons I do not want to mention here just now, and an army of eighty thousand men.

This fortified christian works was o pounded fiercely by a storm of cannon balls, shells, and high explosives and set on fire many times, but general Mansion deeming the approach of a new warstorm in front of Vivian Wickey sent in supplies and reinforcements which enabled the general to hold against the rebels gallently for two days when the rebel bombardiers were obliged to slacken fire. The surprise attack like this on the fortified works of the christian line created the wildest excitement throughout the entire army of seige, and it indeed opened the eyes of the beisge besieging Angelinian armies around the regions of Vivian Wickey to the an amazing fact that no signs of the rebels giving in was approaching. A great wave of Angelinian patriotism as mighty as itindeed was sudden swept over the entire nation as well as armies. Mansion fearing an assault at this section sometime later sent forward to that location about one hun dred nd seventy five thousand men and soon after another division of sixty four thousand man for the army there, and eighteen thousand reinforcementsfor the christian navy to serve during the coming battle. The need for these troops at this location was u urgent indeed. On April 20th the Glandelinians moving forward in the dark easily captured the great Angelinian Navy Yard with three or four thousand inactive Angelinian vessels and transports, n including a great Merrimac , twenty thousand cannon, besides, millions of small arms, great q quantities of ammunition, and stores of the most immense value indeed all of which that that point to the surprise of general Mansion were given up to the wicked Glandelininme without even on a shot in defense. simulta eously an Arsenal at Jennie Vivian junction with scores of millions of dollars worth of arms and ammunition was also in the possession of the Glandelinians, and before the end of April about thirty five million of the rebel soldiers seemed already in to the field near Andrean itself while 18,000,000 of these were rapidly marching forward to strike a blow and force a break in the seige if possible. With the withdrawel of Mic-Hollester Johnston the commander in chief of of the Glandeli Glandelinian armies from Vivian Wickey to be placed in command elsewhere general Furragatorian had been co appointed commander in chief of the besieged Glandelinian forces, and the sixty sixth division of Gargolinn Militia had been savagely mobbed in passing near the town of Garbondaler while going to the protection of a rebel regiment thus assau ssailed.

This was the outset of a long and stubborn engagement in front of Andrean and one of the most titanic battles probably of that section of the seige.

THE BATTLE OF GRETCHEL JUNCTION. A MONTHS DURATION.

A FURROE and bloody attack of great vicoence and savagery was made on the Glandelinians under Furragatiroan near the small newly erected fortified works called the Gretchel posit ions but it was repulsed though a portion of the Glandelinian forces were driven out of the eastern section of the works by general U.B. Andersonviller. Simultaneously on another part of the lines came a more fiercer engagement one of the first most significant battles of the seige. General Irvin Emery Pagerton acting under the instructions of general Mansion, marched th against the main Glandelinian columns under general Emery Galvast ion and in the outset met with the most encouraging success driving the entire rebel line clear out of their works and capturing many cannons and large quantities of ammunition and stores, but just as the unfortunate Angelinians imagined the victory theirs they were vigoriously pressed by counter charges made by Glandelinian reinforcements under general Johnston fowller which had come up from fortress Lucillie Nickson, and being exhausted from twelve hours of fierce fighting under a cold April sun and in a drivinf rainstorm followi ed occasionally by wet snow and hail and thunder and light i thunder and lightning combined they began a slow retreat.

The retreat was soon turned into a blind and wil d panic when the rebels troops under another general came down upon their rear and was soon att ended with the most wild disorder and complete demorilization.

Had the glandelinians among whom at the close of the battle of that day was general Mic-Allister stanck and Purrugntorian themselves, only known the main extent of their do complete tr triumph, they might have easily followed it, and possibly seized the main christian intrenchments and put general Mansions line at that quarter in danger of a most serious breakAbout thirty million men fought on each side. the glandelinians however lost in killed was about 30,378 , and about 67,489, were disabled or slg slightly wounded, and about II,198 mortally wounded or laid up, and about three hundred missio missing..The Angelinians lost themselves about 481,482, in wounded, and in killed 48,IOI, and II,460 in missing with about sixty cannon andlarge qln quanity of small arms and some ammunition.

From this moment after the dinnster it was understood by the christ ian commanderstha the new struggle near vivian wickey and of thexeige would be terrible, and that it migh be long, not to say doubtful.

Many of general Mansions officers had to be summoned that evening to reorganize the multitudes of defeated and confused soldiers suddenly thrown upon them and their ability and throughoutness were indeed of immense value in re-preparing them for their subsequent servi ces in further fighting, and general Mansion being made by Hanson vivian the main com ander in chief of the christian armies besieging Vivian wickey, labored with the most tremendous zeal and energy in the endeavor to prepare forcesfor the further resistance of the rebels should they attack again on the morrow. the battle had started on April Twenty first.

early in that horrible engagement on that bloody day the death of general Nathaniel turner murmeranna while attacking the glandelinians under general Mic-Goik Coink and the retrdeat and almost total destruction of his xdivision of Abyssinkilians almost threw all of that section of the christinn positions totally into the hands of the enemy.On the following mor ning general putterhad took fortress Clarker and Meldonia on the outskirts of the rebel lines with nearly seventy thousand prisoners, nearly a million muskets, and immense stores of food and army supplies. but victories were alternated that second day of the conflict. General Standards Mic-Fierces rebels managed to surround and capture the Angelinian general Milligan pinty Jiggs and his Abbisannian Bring Brigade of 22,876, and forced the retreat of general Lexingtonias division from their works.

Even worse however thanthis disaster was the near annihilation of a christian force of III,77 7 men under general F.C.Painder, and other generals by the glandelinians under general Ernest Ball. The noble general Bakertonia and thirty thousand of his men were slain and nearly three hundred thousand rebels surrounded a small section of another of his division and captured three thousand prisoners.

Two hours later Commodore D.J. Henryson aided by general W.T. Milton with nearly IO,000,000 Angelinians reduced a long line of glandelinian outer works near Gretchel on Norma Catherine Head, and St Phillipian and Mat Martinque Islands and after fierce and sanguinary fighting also seized the many adjacent islands. General Freeder Lindia of the rebels unable to repell successfully elsewhere that day a fis fierce christian assault was relieved of his command of thirty million men, but general J.S Franklin by almost capturing a whole christian encampment and a line of works under general Belmotnter checked the advance advance of the main line of christian asse laints. under general Jimmie Thompsonia. On the third day the twenty Third of April occured a memorable event which imperiled the seige of vivian wickey. general Wilkerson of the Angelinian swarship called the Bunin with compelled by mistake general Mansion who was out scouting in rebel uniform to spy on the enemy to surrender to him as a prisoner of war and glandelinian spy. the army would have been leaderless if the general on board the ship had not discovered the deception in time and promptly disavowed the act and allow ed his own superor to go free. On the same day elsewhere during the struggle general O.C.Otto commanding the Thirty Third Abbisannian ninth corps gained a victory on on the glandelinians under general Dranier who lo t 2,230 soldiers and again during the same day general Poperhead reported the capture of twenty two thousand five hundred prisoners (rebels) under general Lisso, with a christian loss of only one thousand men, but one thousand of the glande- linian prisoners were taken by general putt Jefferies by surprising the glandelinian camp near Gretchel. The third day of the battle was marked by a series of bloody encounters at Gretchel works. If It opened in a general conflict with a christian attack of four hundred and fifty thousand Angelinianssoldiers against a glandelinian army or division or series of divisions of five hundred and fifty thousand men.

The fierce fighting in general began on the right with an assault by the Angelinians under general Willes and Zollistor goffier acting under general Evanser. The attackers being flanked by a rebel cavarly force were routed by general Gc Gc George H. Jennin, two of the christian generals being killed and Evanser flying across the works and across the Sunbeam Creek leaving one hundred and ten guns and eleven thousand five hundred and sixty horses. This victory seemed about to stir the hearts of t he glandelinians and seemed to bring at once the brilliant pro inence the great glandelinian soldier and rebel whose greatness began to blaze out like a sun before the close of the seige.

Another blow was soon struck at half past ten that morning. Brigag Brnig Brigadier general Planter, with nearly fifteen million troops supported by Commodore Palmator with seven battleships, seventeen gunboats, and twenty five more merrimacs on the christian side reduced fortress Coleman on the gunbeam Creek, and took its commander general Liebermann prisoner, but on account of the resist ance of the main rebel line at other portions of the battle could not prevent the frontor part of the rebel garrison of the fortress from escaping to the main line of works which extended for twelve miles. This line of works and strongholds commanding the nav agation of the gunbeam river in Greek and containing fifteen million glandelinians under general Floyd quicker was regarded as impregnable.

It fell however at eleven o-clock under a combined attack of ten christian divisions surrendering one hundred and twelve thousand men, and four hundred and fifty five cannons Generals Floyd quicker and Riy Dugar with a few of their divisions managed with the help of a observing flge from fortress Lacillis Jackson to escape across the stream to the main line of glandelinian works by night, and general Forrester Stanaler with isight hundred thousand cavarly also managed to get away. This splendid achievement which retrieved the other christian disasters threw a good portion of the rebel positions outside of vivian jokeys fortifications and all of the whole stretch of the gunbeam Creek into possession of the Angelinian besiegers, and caused also the immediate ec evacuation of the rebel encampments under general green Bowler near Gretchel.

In other portion of this great battle line general Gurner and Commodore Auntchniss, with one hundred and eval eleven thou sand men, on thirty seven great christian transports and warships and steamers and gunboats, on captured with a loss of three thousand Angelinians, Gertrudde and Dorothy Gales Islands in the Norma gun River and twenty five thousand five hundred and twenty five glandelinians as prisoners n and their general..... At Noon this same division carried glandelinian works under general Berner Newsome by fierce assault, losing six thousand men in killed and wounded, but taking twenty-two rebel steamboats, one hundred and sixty nine cannons, and fifty five hundred glandelinians as prisoners, and next they seized fortress Gargoile, with its garrison of five thousand landelinians and all its stores..... But the Angelinian generals Rono Antonio, and Fuller Frimes were fiercely repulsed respectively, in attacking general Miller Southerlys works with the loss of general Goldsborough Henry Berger. At the same time one of the most notable naval engagements of this battle of Gretchel works took place early in the morning when ten glandelinian Ironclad ships formed like the "Confederate Merrimacs steamed out from vivian wickey to destroy the rest of the christian positions attacking Gretchel works. the rebel Ironclads managed in an encounter with an Angelinian fleet to ping their ram into number of Angelinian transports which alone they could sink causing them to sink and carry down part of their crews of sailors marines and soldiers, the merrimacs blew up a munition dump within the besieging christian lines, and two warships, destroying more than half of their crews, drove two Angelinian merr merrimacs under the very guns of the christian line of seige and bombarded untill dusk with great energy aided also by a rebel fleet of warships the rear of the christian positions without success, and tried to blow up three ships that got aground in the engagement..This dangerous glandelinian fleet indeed seemed destined on the next hour to work immeasurable and unimpeded havoc either on the christian fleet or rear of the christian works but during the engagement with the christian fleet the surprise of the rebels was great to see how gallantly the christian warships and other craft continued to gallo gallantly resist them. At this portion of the scene it was one of the most unwonted and dramatic naval duels of the war from which dward night fell the glandelinian fleet was badly crippled and compelled to retire, and ten of the ships were blown up by the rebels to prevent them from being captured by the persuing christian fleet. The smoke had not vanished from the river before other scenes on the fourth day occured which was increased in the violence of the battle when a fierce assault was made by one hundred and sixteen thousand glandelinians, One hundred and eighteen thousand ic-Hollandinians, including fifty five thousand Dealers under general Hanke Vaner porntorn on IO,000,000 Angelinians, Abyssinkilians and Abbisannians, under general Curtiser Abnerton, supported by generals Auster Torn, and gigamore Staley. After a whole day of fierce and terrible fighting in which over one hundred and thirty five thousand Angelinians fell in killed and wounded the red reckless glandelinians who att acked such vastly superior numbers were almost annihilated and the survivors fled with the up utmost precipitation leaving two generals killed, and one among their mortally wounded, and another one killed. General Mansion having brought his two hundred thousand Angelinian cavarly to the scene at the time had transferred considerably more than half of them to the rear of the attacking glandelinians for the purpose of advancing on the whole flank by way of a little river Peninsula between the Sunbeam Creek, and Sunbeam River. The cavarly general left general Herdrudes with seventy thousand dragoons to guard the Sunbeam Valley. This force at that time was under general Jones Jiggers because Herdrude had gone temporilary to general Mansion was fiercely assailted by a portion of the retreating glandelinians under general Gallagher and Kerns at the head of forty thousand men.

The glandelinians however at this point was repulsed though the christians lost one hundred killed and one thousand six hundred wo nded wounded simultaneously in advance on the rebel rear of the retreating army was checked for an hour by glandelinian batteries at Daisy Fern Greek, and again at Carnation Creek by general Budders gln delinian works.Here the Angelinians fought the glandelinians for the hours with heavy losses. But general Gruddr being outflanked by general Lockarler whose three brigades fought most desperately and bravely was obliged to retreat in another direction leaving seven hundred of his wounded. The Angelinians in the rear of the battle line lost about 22,238, while the glandelinians in the whole battle lost about one hundred and fif fty thousand.

in the meantime on the right general Minter Wilds with an division of about two hunx two hundred and fourty thousand was su rprised surprised on the right of Gretchel by nearly fi five hundred thousand Angolinians under general Johnsonia Henryson. General Wildes at the time instead of having been with his troops was in his headquarters seven miles beyonds whe glandelinian forces were completely surprised and attacked by a vastly superior Christian force which was supported by artillery fire gave great resistance but was thrown into confusions the rebels at this point had thrown up earthworks of intrenchments, and long lines of abatis, but the glandelinians being surprised and unable to cope with such uneven odds were rapidly driven back in wild confusion with heavy loss in guns, encampment tents, killed wounded and prisoners, from the long line of works to the very bluffs banks of Sunbeam Run under which hundreds of thousands of demoralized glandelinians panic stricken, took refuge. The main Angolinian general who led this attack though was killed in the midst of the battle and general Castellio Johnson who succeeded to the command was wounded and general Banter had to ta e his places. I And the main christian general beeen alive the result might have been more decisive, but the other christian commander who had pressed the first division of the enemy to the river and forced his surrender was wounded when attempting an assault upon a salient and the christian army for the time being was without a commander. Relief was at hand for the remainder of the defeated glandelinians and under a general and a leader who was one of the master generals on the battlefields.

At two-clock general Don Carlos arrived on the scene with a part of the army of Mungobosa moving general Nolbys divisions across the Sunbeam river on Pontoons, he had them in position at three o-clock ready for an immediate counter attack. Two more big divisions were pressed earlier in the afternoon elsewhere.

At seven oclock the counter attack began with great violence, general Carlos leading his own troops in person until he was shot from his horses and his troops thrown into confusions. But general Wildes advanced with the troops that had been overwhelmed by defeat only a few hours before, now hopeful and confidents who result was soon well known. General Wildes fresh troops and the rallied army handled in a very masterly manner became irresistible and by nine o-clock the Angolinians now overwhelmed themselves had lost all they had gained, and were soon in full retreat backto their main lines and own works, and the fourth day of the conflict was won by the glandelinians, general Wildes receiving all unstinted praise for his victory. The Angolinian loss here was 11,739, in killed, 77,888 were w ounded, and 33,987 wr were missing while slightly wounded mounted to about 19,577.

The glandelinian loss was only 11,723, in killed and mortally wounded, 88,021 were wounded, 1,987 were surrendered, and about 10,999 were missing. On the following morning before any more infantry or artillery actions took place general Popular and Commanders gole captured two other islands with six thousand nine hundred and eighty five glandelinians under general Makemail, and soon after that same day general Mo-pramps surrendered to the Angolinians after sustained a desperate assault on all sides without success, and at ten-oo-clock fortress a pitsanded wooden fort two miles in length after a fierce bombardment by christian batteries and ships fell, with the capture of general Gillermoror and 11,000 glandelinians. This same morning was also notable for other simultaneous naval victories of greater brilliancy. Admiral Stanck with a fleet of four hundred and fifty seven Abbiannian warships all dreadnaughts, and three thousand three hundred and eleven guns stormed a long line of rebels forts to the rear of the Gretchel works extending a mile , destroyed various numbers of rebel fire rafts, and gunboats and a fleet of rebel battleships and iron clads, and after a series of brilliant and very noisy actions which shook the earth like an earthquake compelled the glandelinian general Botwel Bowweiler with thirty three thousand defenders to withdraw from the positions leaving it to be occupied by fifteen thousand to fifty thousand Angolinians under general Castellio.

On that same morning of the fifth day of the struggle on the land side, general Mic-Gellers Angolinian army a part of which had been thrown across the two gunboats streams was savagely and most desperately attacked at Ten o-clock by the glandelinians under Joseph Bailey Comet commander in chief of these rebel forces. Although the glandelinian general was badly wounded, and his troops after a days of hard fighting were obliged to retire, yet the Angolinian loss was 58,788, including five generals killed, and seventeen generals wounded. ou during the engagement general Mic-Geller had been steadily reinforced untill he had had altogether one hundred and ninty six thousand eighty hundred and eighty eight men, of whom one hundred and two thousand, nine hundred and sixty two had been in the engagements. Nothing however had been accomplished that day untill general Fiser who had succeeded the disabled glandelinian commander led in the afternoon fearced the fighting and made six horrible charges in as many succession hours, led by generals such as known as Grover Vermal all of whom were wounded. In the last charge the rebels had been signally defeated and repulsed with a loss of 10,111 men in wounded, and about five thousand in killed and dying, during the other six or five charges however the total rebel loss was 15,449, in wounded, 1,582 in dying, 17,700 in disabled or desertion, and five thousand in missing or prisoners. The rebel loss could have been double but the glandelinians had fought most of the time under cover, though another of their generals Griff Smith and three others were killed. Nevertheless general Mic-Gellers intentions was not quite successful, the main rebel works was not taken, and by order of general Mansion he retreated back to his former works.

At another portion of the line during the same battle on the fifth day general Allock Pope was met by the Angolinians in severely and stubbornly fought actions, and a by the Abbiannians under generals Jacksonia Lee Gorbinain, and Wangiong and were badly routed with a loss of t wenty five thousand six hundred in killed and wounded and included with 19,000 pre prisoners while the Angolinian loss in killed and wounded was only fifteen thousand two hundred. In accordance with the defeat of this glandelinian division general Pope attempted and did fix the blame upon general Fritzpatrick , whose a very able and usually successful rebel commander, charging that in the main time of need he had failed to support him in the assault s upon the christian line and later after the battle a great glandelinian court marshall convened and in the heat of the discussion cashiered the glandelinian general terribly.

On the sixty sixth day of the battle general Lesser maki ng a movement upon another portion of the same christian line which had been reinforced by Mansion tried to carry a position but was worsted by Mic-Geller who lost heavily in his own men but twoo one thousand fi ve hundred and sixty six prisoners.

At the same time during the action s works near Jennie's ford with 17,866 glandelinians, i one hundred and seventy three guns, and immense quantities of rebel war munitions was surrendered to general Jansenin Commander s Mic-Geller in that dreadful sixth day had repulsed a fierce rebel charge and in the determined contest which ended in the rebel retreat caused a loss of nearly seventy thousand Angolinians for Mic-Geller alone which general purse of his right grand division reported a total loss of twelve thousand, six hundred and ninty nine in killed , one thousand eight hundred and fourty six in dying, nine thousand three hundred and ninty six in severly losses,, two thousand two hundred and ninty two among artillery men, and nearly thirteen thousand five hundred and fifty three in wounded. There was little doubt that general Mic-Geller could have followed up his ma gnificent victory and captured the rebel works in acounter charge had he not suffered such loss that general Man Mansion forbid him to make forward that bloody day, his great victory even intit led him to the further command but he had refused to accept a higher generalships.

On the se seventh day general Le purse receiving reinforcements and Mic-Geller also assaulted othe glandelinians themselves attacking the glandelinians under general James Fredricksburg, but Mic-Geller was wounded and his troops disasterviously beaten with a great loss in four hours, his loss was one thousand one hundred and fifty two in killed, 19,101, in wounded mortally, three thousand five three four or three thousand five hundred and thirty four in wounded, a nid thirteen thousand, seven hundred and seventy seven in missing or prisoners. The glandelinian loss was about fifteen thousand in which five thousand were killed or wounded. General Burns had caused the disaster by not supporting general Mic-Geller and so was relieved of command by Mansion at Hammons request, and general Mainsfield took took his stead and receiving reinforcements untill his division amounted to three hundred thousand men in infantry, one hundred and thirteen thousand in cavalry, and one hundred thousand in artillery men, assumed the offensive in the fol owing afternoon of the seventh day, but was wounded himself, and his division terribly defeated. He lost over seventeen thousand men in killed and wounded and dying. His defeat was due to his fall, and also by a brilliant and most daring flank movement exec executed by ten glandelinian generals and their divisions which demolished the entire christian rear of the attacking lines. But every one of these rebel generals were themselves slain and their deaths were regarded as an irreparable disaster to the glandelinian cause.

Toward mid midnight after the seventh day of the battle general Bumble bee with nearly o e n one hundred thousand glandelinians,, gain again moved against the c ristian lines surprising and taking fourty four t hou n thousand Angolinians to prisoners, under general Henry winchester. Duri ng his movement and raids however w tward morning on the eight day his rear was overlooking by a flanking force of christian troops numbering nine one hundred to one hundred and fifty thousand men under general George Clocks, the christian force separated into ten divisions made bloodies srate attacks upon the flank of the glandelinians where a gallant and most bloody action was fought, lasting all da day long. One of the greatest fe tures of this action was a most gallant charge of or oneknight of general Picketers Abbiannian brigade when they found a glandelinian battery of nearly two hundred and fifty guns and were nearly annihilated. The glandelinians thusmel ves lost 8,984 in ki lled, 22,777 in wounded, 9,878 missing, and 23,101 in slightly wounded or dying, the total Ange linian loss was about 86,500. Had the Angolinian generals known the extent of his great triumph he could have easily followed and destroyed this retreating glandelinian column. Another rebel division whose force had dwindled from one hundred thousand to fourtythousand in the battle elsewhere held its ground with evident success. This division suffered the loss of sixty thousand men.

On this same memorial memorable day general Vicksburger wisard after having waited rains and most determined casualts and after finding his columns on the left surprised and beaten in de t detail by Grantlers army of Abyssinkillians aided by surprised and beaten in detail by Grantlers army of Abyssinkillians aided by Commodore Featherburg's navy, naval operations surrendered s surrendered closing a day of carnage in which general Grantler, ad made succeeded in taking abo ut one hundred and t i thirty seven thousand glandelinians as prisoners, with arms and ammition for o e one million six shundred thousand muskets own losses was 10,954, in killed, 89,709 in wounded and 15,567, missing, while he lost about 6,988 in dying or by desertion.....

These two notable victories on that eighth day seemed to have been for the christians themselves the turning point of the battle. Meantime elsewhere the battle on the ninth day have been pursued with varying fortunes indeed. The glandelinian general Malcolm Forrester had captured fifteen hundred Angelinians under general Murfreas, general Francis Smith had captured nearly five thou and christians under general Richmond, general Braggard, had captured four thousand Angelinians as prisoners under general Munforder, generals Jo-Gantler Johnsonin and Rouser having attacked the glandelinian wheelers without orders of general Mansion, and thinking that general Mansion had said to win a victory without his assistance, were also defeated by general Braggard wi with great loss and with the death of general Ferry the christian loss in killed and wiu wounded being 23,345 while the glandelinian loss was only I4,456. General ross Anna with a loss of one thousand seven hundred and eighty two men in killed and wounded and missing, whipped the vGlandelinian general Golermannda Iluka whose loss was ove eleventhousand men. General ross Anna two hours later repulsed again the glandelinians under general Goeinthia inflicting a los loss of IY,456, killed, and taking 22,348 prisoners. In own loss for the christian side, was two thouan 2,589.

A brigade of Angelinian and Abysinkilians under general Unionisher was captured by general Forder Forh Morgannia. Imultaneously an onset of fourty si six thousand Angelinians under general ross Anna culminated in a fierce action ne r near the centre of the rebel position against general Braggard who was disaster iously beaten and forced to retreat. The h christian loss was onlyI,987, killed II,845 wounded two thousand eight hundred dying or disabled for life and II,567 in missing or slightly wounded. The loss of general Braggards army or division was I9,000 killed and wounded, and over I0,000 prisoners or missing issing.

On the tenth day of the battle a new glandelinian general by the name of porner porner surprised and took prisoners twenty two thousand Angelinians, under general Holly and at the same time too k took $44,000,000, wor the of ammunition and military stores. At ten o-clock genol general Knicker was repulsed in his assault on the glandelinians with the death of general Rayou with a loss of twenty two thousand men, but simultaneously at another point general Mic-leaner reduced the rebels f works u der general Hinderman capturing five thousand glandelinians as prisoners, and one hundred and seventeen guns, while his loss was only one thousand nine hundred and seventy seven. General Grierton simultaneously made a famious raid with eleven thousand six hundred and seventy seven cavarly to the rear of Gretchel cutting off the communications of these glandelinians with Lucillis ni kopicksen and tai taking five hundred and sixty six prisoners and routing a division of I0,000 rebels. Under the orders and advice of general Milikenton the Angelinian general Denjis Jiggers with eleven thousand men repelled and then counter attacked a glandelinian force under general Mic-goik Goink the loss on d either side being five thousand five hundred.

In the afternoon general DeV. Melena with fourty four thousand Angelinians repulsed general Holms Sherlockers glandelinians with a loss of 3,665, killed, 9I,686 in wounded.

At the same time the glandelinian raider Morgananna with a mounted force of fourty two thousand attempted to make a daring dash into the christian lines but was caught by a christian cavarly force and by Angelinian warships and gunboats and obliged to surrender with I0,000 men the remainder having gotten away.

On the eleventh day general Sideup Gudeup captured general Frensers Abysinkilians with fourteen hundred guns and twen twenty five thousand two hundred ammons of machine guns and nearly ten thousand men. It was an arsenal. Th n Then came in the afternoon a great action of mighty titanic violence between general Possanna once more and Thomas Hender with one hundred and fifty five thousand men on-one side, and general Braggard and Henderstreeter with about the same number of glandelinians on the other side. General Streeter annihilated a portion of ross Annas army but general Hender by his firmness and skill saved the day. All afternoon the battle had raged and when the struggled finished with the close of day the glandelinians had lost eighteen thousand in killed and dying andnearly thirty thousand in wounded and three thousand in prisoners. While the Anglinian loss was IIy666 killed, I9,626 dying or mortally wounded, five thousand nine hundred and fourty five slightly wounded, and fifteen thousand eight hundred and fifty one in missing or prisoners.

The Angelinian army which had been repulsed nevertheless fell back to their own and main positions. late that evening general Streeter of the rebels made a fier e fierce and most desperate attempt to dislodge general Sherburns frok general Knoxvilles right wing which resulted in a loss of eight t housand and his repulse and retreat.....the Anlel Angelinians only lost one thousand.

On the twelve Twelvt h day the forces of christians under general Thompson Swinnerton reinforced by general Jo Jensin Horner, under the command of general Planter assaulted or reassaulted general Braggards army on t he position near Ger Gretchel called Gertrudesor Mayas ridge or heights facing Ge Gretchel. General Herman Kagler crossed the gunbeam Creek or river to attempt a flank mo vement on the main glandelinian position bt but was fiercely and successfully repulsed by the glandelinians who which protected the rear of Gretchel positions. At the same time general Hooner moved up the slopes of Hill Number Three and after heavy and desperate fighting with mutual losses dreadful drove the rebels from a portion of their position and before them, capturing a heavy am ammount of men and guns if you pleaun to mention.....

At another point general Swinnerton Th m Thompson or Thompson Swinngerton in accordance wi withhis own plans moved his armies by the front directly up the heigh heights of the Gertrudes ridge assailing the glandelinian enemy in the very teeth of his batt eries. The fight here was more desperate and wild , but after six hours of fighting and making six hours general Swinnt Swinnertons forces of christians finally won driving the enemy from the almost impregnable position making many prisoners prisoners and capturing hundreds of guns. The christian losses was I,77 killed killed, I4,552 wounded and 5,946 missing. There were 6I, I 6I,I42 prisoners of the rebels taken. On day number thirteen the main works of Gretchel pluckily resisted all desperate attempts to take it. At nine o-clock in the morning her glandelinian defenders beat back sixty thousand christians with a loss of II,573 in killed and wounded and with the death of general Secoer. Again at nine thirty they disabled twenty two christian warships, again an hour later they forced ninty bombard ing iron clad merrimacs and warships and gunboats and even submarines under Commodore Slater to retire, again half an hour l ater they repulsed a fierce storming party under general Cilla inflicting a loss of fifteen thousand, while their loss was only one hundred men, again while obliged to completely evacuate a portion of the works on the left leaving one hundred and eighteen guns there in the hands of the christians and seventeen other guns they repulsed the Attempt of the Angelinians to scale the other portion of the works and slew two hundred Angelinians and wounded three thousand. Nor did the christians fare any better on the right. They lost under general Seymcure Stanoklen 22,000 out of their 49,000 troops under general Cluster where the glandelinians lost but only 345 men. Elsewhere on the right the glandelinian in an afternoon assault again lost II,600 out of 23,000 men under general Weezel and Plymcuther when the glandelinian general himself only lost three hundred men. This showed how impregnable the glandelinian works were. In the centre howeverthe gl Angelinian assaults had gained considerable advn advantages under general Manker who had a division of abut about thirty-five thou thousand men maybe. Aided by Commodore Lowson and Captian Ana Lexandrai he drove general Franklin Dargin from his outer works and captured nearly two thousand five hundred glandelinians, seventeen rebel gunboats, two steamboats or ships, and one hundredcand twenty two guns. His proceeding assault however on general Floriss works was repelled with a loss of two thousand in five minutes in killed and wounded while ag i again the glandelinians only lost three hundred men...but general Florias works as it was about to be fiercely commanded by the gunboats and christian warships set free by the fall of the left wing of river positions was surrenderedin the evening by the glandelinian Saleran general GerdenerGunter with his garrison of 66,408 men. General Granker rebel force had been fro from twenty thousand been reduced to ten thousand. General Bankers total captures that evening was about two ten thousand five hundred andeighty six six men, two hundred and seventy seventy three guns guns and six million small arms.. put on the fourteenth day general Brashears division of glandelinians had early in the morning been surprised and captured by general Manner with a rebel loss of of the whole division and at the sm ll cost of ne t housand christ ian soldiers in killed and wounded. The next day the Angelinian general Donaldson Dudlier lost three hundred and fourty prisoners, and simultaneously the christian general with a fleet and fourty thousand men was repelled with a loss of two t twenty ships, one hundred and fifteen guns, two and twenty twothousand five hundred men, by leasthat number within the fortress of Saberine and at Tecker Run a christian regiment of fourteen hundred men was captured by the rebels entire.. On the sixteenth day an attack of general Banners Abyssinkilian division with a force of fourty five thousand men and twelve thousand cavarly met two disasterious failures.. The former beaten badly in its assault and to retreat with a , loss of about five thousand six hundred and the latter was also beaten with a loss of twenty five hundred, but at Jennie's Ferry managed to repulse the glandelinians in an attack led by general Gaithers rebels with a christian loss of twenty three hundred in killedsand wounded.

On the seventeenth day Commodore Frarer executed one of the most forecast and most heroic naval comb ats o probable of the seige. Having taken the care to lash himself to the mast of a big warship he advanced with a large fleet of twenty thi thousand gunboats, ships and merrmacs and monitors against the rear of the rebe, rebel possession and encountering a rebel fleet daringly ran the bows of his ships full speed against the rebel craft, gained a notic ble victory on land and bombarded the rear of the works untill t he heavy fire from the fortresses Lucil/is Dickson damaged every one of his ships badly and compelled them to retire with Heavy los. On the eighteenth it appeared as if the battle was growing fury oncemore. General Mansion having sent Herman to conduct a general assault on the left wing of the rebel position at Gretchel, he himself sent other troops troops for a direct westerly advance to the centre. A fierce conflict of incessant fury and fourty three hours followed in which more than one million men were engaged on either side. The advance of Herman was met by general Corbin whose whore after two days of terrible incessant fighting day and night combined struggle came to another pause at the second night or third night without decided advantage for either side. Among the christians general James Serris Schilling was killed and seventeen generals were wounded, the entire loss in private amounting to two hundred thousand five hundred andsixty six men. The glandelinians eighty five thousand, with general Streeter badly wounded.

Finding general Meldons p position at Gretchel Line completely impregnable general Herman advanced by a fierce flank movement on the twenty first day to a place called Gretchels junction. Here on the afternoon of the twenty first day general Handcoker by a most desperate assault captured general Johnstonia Herdrude and St ward Meltinia with thriy thirty thousand men, and thirty six guns, while the main glandelinian general himself barely escaped. But no fighting no matter how desperate or fierce and on obstinate could carry general Sterns Sterns Gretchel works. At that same day general Sumsert on had made a dashing cavarly raid tward Richmonders rear fighting a strong glandelinian cavarly of We Wheeler glandelinians killed their main general and returned without much damage to general Horner. General Butler Hansonia with three hundred and sixty five thousand men steamed u up the gunbeam river from the north with the intention to try and seize a portion of the glandelinianworl works but he however was too slow, and in a desperate fight with the glandelinians under general Finhead lost fourteen thousand men, while the glandelinians lost only four thousand men. General Mantler also a christian commander reached the North Anna Maria works where he h gained some advantage, but as general Sterner again proved himself to be strongly intrehoned the Angelinians under the christian general moved again to Harborton. Here an assault of savage fury on the glandelinians under Sterner ended with a christi n loss of 21,987, killed, 99,876, wounded, and 22,456 in missing or prisoners.

On this time general Shermer raided the rear ofthe rebel position of Gretchel tearing up some railroadsin a few hours by explodin explosions of mile lines and burning stores and rebel encampments of barrac s and tents, and after having lost one thousand seven hundred and thirty five men he returned to general rantlin with three hundred and seventy five prisoners. General Grantlin now pressed on tward thesouth portion of unbeam river making assaults of desperate persistence on the extreme right of the Works but suffering a repulse with the loss of ten thousand killed and fifty five thousand in killed and wounded and prisoners.

. At the same time general Andrew wilsonia with eighty eight thousand cavarly, while attempting to tear up the Sendon railroad lost 10,00 0 in prisoners.

On the following day anctye another fierce attempt to take the Gretchel works by a series of fierce mine explosions resulted in a christian repulse and loss of fourty four thousand in killed and wounded, and a gl nielinian loss of one thousand six hundred. Elsewhere on the twenty third day a series of gallent attacks numbering about thirteen in all by the Angelinians was gallently repulsed with the loss of thirteen thousand. On the twenty fourth dau general Handcocker assai assailed general Sterns left wing belong gneral ick ichmonders works suffering a repulse, and losing five thousand men...Again on the twenty fifth day general Warren Jensin attempted to seize the Pandora railroad at the expense of four thousand five hundred and fifty six in killed and wounded among his christian troops while the glandelinians lost but only twelve hundred sixty.. Again on the twenty sixth general Handcockers attempt to seize Bristletonia Station ended in his being driven back and losing twenty four thousand men. BtBut general Warren Jensin managed to grasphe tne grasp the Squrriel Run at the cost of over two thousand five hundred and sixty men.. utler Tonia with his christian troops however took general Harrisons glandelinian position of rifle pits with two hundred and fifteen guns, but failed to take the works under general Gilmoreia after a loss of three hundred and fifty six.. The glandelinians counter charging with great bravery, however failed to retakethe rifle pits they had lost and were beaten back with he vy loss and with the wounding of general Harrison. At the same tine the Angelinian cavarly under general Cautzer advanced within half a mile of Lucillie Ricksen Fortifications to defy the enemy in his face but was driven backwith a loss of 9,000 killed, and fifty thousand wounded. General Handcokcer then tried to turn the left flank of the glandelinian position and though capturing ten thousand prisoners hadto retire with a loss of five thousand killed and fifteen thousand wounded. another assault resulted with a christian loss of 87,387, in killed and wounded to the rebel loss only 10,000.

On the twenty seventh day general Sigel Cooper Hanson was routed by the glandelinian counter attache attack under general Brecker I Intheridge with the loss of sixty guns, and seven thousand men and the wounding of general Cooper Hanson. General Candlin Hunterton having succeeded Cooper Hanson re rallied the confused Angelinians and counter charged and having succeedec in batinf the rebels, and killing their general Daniel onesbour and taking fifteen hundred prisoners, was himself beaten with the loss of twenty thousand men when the enemy frecovering crashed forward again in another charge and forced to a disasterious retreat over the main positions for the distance of a mile.

This almost opened the way for the rebels through the s besieging lines. and general Early hilliamson attempted to break through and with a loss of six thousand men defeated general Wallace uben Gump with the death of the christian general Fredrick and killing and capturing twenty th two thousand Angelinians.

After threatening general Baltimoria Handons line hewas counter charged and compelled to retreat with twenty five thousand captured horses from the Angelinians and nearly fifty five thousand cattle. He then tried to g retain the works he hadalready captured but the chistian general Win h Winchester defeated general Early hilliamson with a loss of twenty one thousand. Shortly after the Angelinian general Aver Crooker defeated general Johnson Henrysons glandelinian Gargolian cavarly after a fierce fight and took five thousand prisoners but suffered a loss of twenty thousand in killed and wounded to that of the enemys only three hundred in killed and wounded.....

LOn thevtwenty eight day eneral Whilliams glandelinians made another brilliant sec attack but was counter attacked by h general Heridan and routed with the loss of sixteen thousand men while the christians lost one thousand less. The rebels then being hard pressed retreated to fisherman Hill and stood his ground fiercely once mof more two hours after but the Angelinians under the same christian commander again routed him taking sixty guns, and ev eleventhousand prisoners, but in the lower section three hours later again Early Whilliamson made a sudden and more determined counter assault with his whole combon combined force throwing the Angelinians into a terrible panic stricken bom mob of soldiers, capturing two hundred and twenty four christian guns, and nearly two hundred thousand christians as prisoners. General Heridaner brought up his other force just in time met his beaten divisions reorganized it, inspired it to help to make a general and magnificent attack and won a greatvictory by a combined assault of the two divisions, recapturing his two hundred and twenty four guns and capturing two hundred and thirty six more and three hundred and fifteen thousand prisoners. The loss on either side combined in killed and wounded alone was about three hundred and sixty thousand men. In another section of the battle line on the same day general Sterns of the christians with one hundred and t welve thousand men routed general orestie and general untones division of landelinians killing and capturing four thousa d men. At the same time in the same point the glandelinian general organ Anderson capturi captured sixt een thousand Angelinians by making a flank attack but was himself soon chased away with a loss of over half his force of 10,000 men.

puring these operations general Shermaner advanced with one hundred thousand men and though stubbornly resisted by general Stonsman with an army of fifty four thousand lost three thousand men while the landeligians lost ten thousand. He however kept flanking and fighting the land li landelininns untill he reached general At lanta's Works during which in all days fighting of fierce fury the enemy lost fourteen thousand two hundred more men, but reinforcements from Lucillie icksen kept their numbers up to five hundred and fifty one thousand. uring these movements the glandelinian general Fl Folker Dot was killed by a grapeshot while risking his life rashly to reconnoitre on arnation ountian a few miles west of Gretchel Works. At the same time general Hoodwink who succeeded general ohnson who was killed on the same day aimed a heavy blow a at general Thomas Swinnerton losing 14,000 wounded and four thousand killed or dying, and inflicting a loss to the christians of only one thousand five hundred.. Three hours later occured another great action that day in which general Hansonia a very superior christian general was killed and fourty four thousand Angelininns were killed or wounded and four thousand taken prisoners. The landelininn loss however was not less than eighty eight thousand in killed and wounded. General Stonsman while raiding general Hoodwinkeds rear was captured with 10,000 of his cavarly during the same time making an extra loss..General Hoodwinked after suffering a heavy repulse by general Richard ogan, and another y general Jonesborough and oward Ander in both of which he lost twenty two thousand in killed and wounded and still another by general J.C. Davidson when many guns and 0,00 prisoners ten thousand prisoners were taken from him retreated westward, leaving his own works to the Angelinian victors.. ReBeing reinforced however so as to have about five hundred and fiftyfive t housandsoldiers he returned to make another assault on the following d y day the twenty ninth.General Franklin two George met a desperate onset i with the loss of general Schofielder but the els was baffled at an expense of five thousand five hundred men to themselves and 22,320 to the Angelininns.

.General Nashville was simultaneously struck by general Thomas Swinnerton Angelinianswith great skill and determination and he broke the glandelinian divisions ll t1 to pieces but lost thirteen thousand men in killed and wounded and two Places of artillery to that of the rebel loss thirty six thousand. Another rebel olumn lost 10,000 men on the same day. Again two hours afterwards general erman at the head of sixty five thousand seven hundred men including 10,000 avarly under general Kilpatrick lauss executed a fami famious march around the ar of the main Gretchel glandelinian position and the glandelinian general ardleeter who had already beencompelled to abandon his own works with the loss of general Savannah who was wounded was obliged by a new advance of general erman to evacuate a new line of works without bloodshed with his army of elve thousand sixchundred men. At the same time one of the fiercest cavarly ngagements of t he battle took place betweg general Kilpatrick and general Meters glandelinians, and general Meldons lapdelinian cavarly Gargolians, in which he former were surprised but finally beat the landelinians with t e loss of general ayetter. whe rebel Gargolian cavarly an hour after however again resumed the avarly conflict without success, and with the loss of general Hardeleer and osephiner atonia who were wounded and a loss of fourty thousand men, while the christians st general Benton in killed. The Angelinians only lost one thousand six hundred d fourty three in killed, 11,625 in wounded and two hundred and sicty seven missing. . At the same time ortress Th Tissue that protected a river blockade ear was bombarded by Commodore Porterhluse and then carried by assault y general H.A turnertonia this victory purchasing a cost of 1,410 in killed, 7,536 in wounded but threw into the possession of the Angel Angelinians two ded and sixty nine guns and 20,283 prisoners. General Willington was killed on glandelinian side and Schoefiled a nother rebel officer was wounded.....

General Woodrotrow Williamson with over fifteen thousand cavarly from the armies under general Grantlin of the christians,, routed general Herdrude and Se manna capturing two hundred and twenty two guns,,,, 22,700 prisoners of rebels if you please, and burned one million, one hundred and twenty six hthousands bales of cotton on the Glandelinians.On the next day the same general Tylers Glandelinians b by fierce take a small stockade fort held by general general Maconnias Glandelinian trenches assault but cased operations against general Maconnias Glandelinian trenches because by that time the main rebel line had been crushed.....

On the thirty foist day and last day of the battle if you please to kon knew it, general Grantlin resumed operations,, when he repulsed general Hatchers Glandelinian counter assault at the cost of 12,000 troops the Glandelinians who lost only one thousand men and 10,000 cavarly managed to rout general Early with one hundred thousand men and 10,000 cavarly managed to rout general Early Williamsonia with the death of general Wanes, taking one hundred and eleven guns, and six sixteen thousand prisoners. and joined general Grantlin at the assault upon general Petersbrgers Glandelinian works. after having passed entirely around around the Glandelinian position at Gretchel. A fierce attack bygeneral Sterner against the fortified christian positions under general Frank Steadmann was repelled with a loss of twenty five thousand to the Angelinian loss of only one thousand two hundred and sixty five in killed and wounded, and fourty five hundred in wounded and prisoners in a s second fray.

General Grantlin fearing that the Glandelinians under general Sterner might attempt to evacuatethe Gretchel works, threw general Warren Jensins corps and Herdinians cavarly and infantry to the southwest of the rebel position and Warren Jensin after having had his divisions broken by fierce assaults of general Sterns Glandelinian troops had them reinforced and reformed by the aid of general Griffinia who united with Herdinia and who had foiled the rebels the day before. Warren Jensin and Heridan now charged the Glandelinian works aided by the tropps under general Grantlin which w were taken after fiercer fighting, along with fifty five thousand Glandelinians as prisoners. A general ass ult at the same time was made by the Angelinian army at daybreak of the thirty foist when the leftwing of the Glandelinian position was carried promptly by storm. General Hill Fill a brilliant Glandelinian general was killed or shot dead whon he made fierce attempts to rally the beaten Glandelinian divisions. That night general Sterner was compellad to evacuate the Gretchel works burning his warehouses filled with stores, blowing up all the ammunition he could not take wa away, and mining some of the positions. General Wheezel at two o-clock eb entered the works and was soon followed by general Hension himself who came to inspect this stubborn action. General Peters burger also at the samt time abandoned his own positions. General Sterner managed to halt a portion of his army when heavily reinforced by the troops now sent hastily from Lucillis Ricksen which was now increased to an army of 10,000,000 men. Grantlin who still rwpin rapidly persued met fierce opposition now but general Lovewell who was severed from general Sterns rear was captured along with 60,000 men. General Leot onia himself another rebel general heroically pushed on to the rear with the intention of joining the main body of Sterners division but his flight was intercepted by general Shernam a marched marching around from the west.

He therefore was inclined to renew the fighting against general Shernam but his weary and famished division stood no chance now against the fearful ofd odds around them and therefore general Leotonia to prevent further useless bloodshed was compelled to surrender his division to general Grantlin surrendering q division of thirty six thousand men. Simultaneously general johnstonia Stanck was compelled to surrender his division to Shernam and Tayloer his a force combined of 10,000 Glandelinians.

Thus after thirty one days of hard fighting the Angelinians had captured a seemingly inpregnable rebel works right under the nose of The fortresses of Lucillis Ricksen. In the total months battle the christian losses in full in killed wounded and prisoners were;;;' 3,236,603. The Glandelinian losses in killed and wounded rag ranged as 12,855,328.//..

This one had indeed been a great battle that had raged.One immense column after another ta miles long had been precipitated for eight hours upon the christian lines posted at their trenchs.The sun had been sinking in the west , reinforcements for the obstinechristian defenders were alreedy in sight and the generals of the rebels saw it was absolutely necessary to carry the christian position at one last desperate headlong charge or everything would surely would be lost.A powerful corps had been summoned fromthe main rebel line and if it came up to join in the attack all would be well.The great Glandelinian generals confident in its arival formed his reserves into an immense attacking column and ordered them to charge the christian gnemy. The whole world soon knew the result of this great battle.The Glandelinian reinforcements failed to appear, the Glandelinian army therefore was beaten back with disaster and the battle was lost..And because one of the Glandelinian generals had been behind time.

At the same time that this great battle was raging a cusdemn d condemned Glandelinian prisoner was led out to be executed for assaulting one of the Vivian Girls in ambush..He had really assaulted them, but under circumstances of the greatest provocations, and though he was really cruel the very Vivian Girls he had assaulted had sympathy in his behallf.

They had even got thousands upon thousands of the best soldiers to sign petitions for a final reprive, and at any moment they had expected a favorable answer from Imperor Vivian the very day before, and though it had not yet come even the exkutioner felt confident that it would come.The following morning passed without any appearance of a messongor.Soon the last moment was up.The prisoner was forced to take his place, the hood was drawn over his head, the rope was p, place placed and drawn tight, and a lifeless body soon swung revolving in the wind.Just at that moment a swift horseman came into sight galloping down a lonk long hill his st eed covered with foam.He carried a larke package in his right hand which he waved frantically to the crowds of soldiers.He was the express rider with the reprive for the soldier who was to be condemned but through the rascally efforts of rebel persuers who drove him out of his course he came too late.A comparatively innocent soldier of the rebellion had died anignominous death because a column of rebel soldiers on horse back had pepersued the bearer and drove him far out of his path, thus causing him to arive fifteen minutes behind the proper time.

It was continually so throughout the war so far.The best laid plans of christian generals, the most important affairs of many officers, the fortunes of all individuals, the woals of armies, honor, safty, happiness itself, scouting parties and the like were daily sacrificed because some one always was through some reason or other behind time.Through this there were many soldiers of the best kind who failed in everything they unterd undertook, simply because something caused them to be far behind time.

General Woodrotrow Williamson with over fifteen thousand assault from the [illegible]

I507. 804

CHAPTER FIFTY FOUR.

THE EXPERIENCES OF VIOLET AND HER SISTERS DURING THE FRIGHTFUL BLIZZARD.....
VIOLET AND HER SISTERS TAKES GENERAL FEDERAL VERY ANGRY.
THE VIVIAN GIRLS ALSO HAVE AN EXPERIENCE WITH THE ENEMY AND PREVENT A 'MASSACRE', OR AT LEAST REVENGE ONE/THE BATTLES OF BENTON, AND BARCLAY/

CHAPTER [illegible]

While the second day of the battle of Calverine was raging in full sway far out in the western part of Calverinia violet and her sisters had stayed with Kindernines army which had at Hansons orderes had stopped advancing and was moving back toward the east as commanded. When Kindernines army had halted the little girls had went out scouting and during that morning the dull murky sky on that March the 24th had become very dark and threatening as if a thunderstorm was approaching, the wind having already veered to the northeast, and blowing like a manic hurricane. As the morning advanced it grew darker and darker and then as the little girls had wandered far off and were beginning to return toward the christian lines the wind had veered to the west and then northwest, and it was becoming very cold and snowing like a heavy flurry flurry the heavy canopy of clouds settling over in a frosty fog which gradually obscured the distant hills and landscapes many miles away with the approaching wall of snow.

Violet and her sisters had early in the morning noticed the lowering banks of clouds, felt toward noon the already sharp st-i sting of snow pellets and noticed that the air was gradually but slowly getting full of whiteness/ a fierce gust of wind hurling the flying snow flakes against them.

A blizzard was beginning. In another hour they were in the very heart of the storm and were almost hurled forward by the force of the wind and blinded by the icy deluge. The pelting of the hail now mixing with the snow and falling like rain in a tropical thunderstorm startled their horses and in spite of every effort of their little riders they drifted to the left, tails to the storm. The swift ena change back to snow was magical. The sharp particles of icy rain changed to icy snow which seemed to whirl upon them from every direction, sucking in their very breath, bewildering them, robbing them of all sense of direction and within an hour the poor little girls found it impossible to penetrate the snow shrow shroud except for a few hundred feet ahead of them and the trees of the obscuring forests howled and roared in the force of the wind, which was threatening to arise to a full grown hurricane.

The little girls indeed knew what it meant for they had had experiences of those great Calverinian snowstorms which are usually worse in March than any other winter month. Violet passed the lariat to her sisters, each one getting a grip on it, grasping it desperately, Violet shading her eyes half smothered in the blast, and even now she could hardly see objects at the distance of two hundred feet, while the flakes which were small as dust at first were now as large as silver dollars and flew through the air in clouds, and thr trees already were having their branches orn off by the score. Violet then drove her horse forward head bent low with one arm flung up across her mouth to prevent inhaling the icy air. She felt the tug of the line, heard the labored breathing of the next horse behind, but saw nothing now but that wall of swirling snow pellets hurled against her body, a pitiless wind fairly lacerating the flesh. It was about two below zero already, and Violet though she could even take baths in icy cold water without effects or feeling the cold, already felt numb, exhausted and heavy eyed. The air seemed to penetrate her winter clothing and blankets which were wrapped around her, and prick the skin as if with a thousand needles.

The thought came to her that if she remained in the saddle she would freeze stiff, and getting off her horse, she helped her sisters down, then the rop was tied around their pomsels. Then blinded by the sleet, staggering by the fierce pummelling of the eighty mile an hour gale of wind, yet clinging desperately to her horses bit, violet struggled forward in the swirl of the storm. In the storm there was no cessation nor any abatement. Across a thousand mile of wooded plain the ice laden wind swept down upon the little girls with the relentless fury of a great hurricane driving the storm of snowy crystals into their faces, buffeting them mercilessly, numbing their little bodies, and blinding their eyes.

In that awful grip they looked upon death, but still struggled on as real men, must untill they fall. Breathing was agony at every step, every step through deep fresh snow became a torture, fingers grasping the horses bit grew stiff dep despite thick mittens, and deadened by frost, they reeled like if drunk, sightless in the mad whirl, deafened by the poupounding of the blast against their ears, all consco consciousness left them, only dumb instinct kept them battling for life, staggering forward foot by foot, phantasies of imagination beginning to beckon. In their weakness, delirum gripped their half mad brains, yeilding new strength to fight the snow fiend.

Aching in every joint, trembling from fatigue, they dared not rest an instant. The wind veered more to the north, and lashed their faces like a whip. The little girls crouched behind their horses to keep out the sting of the wind, crouching, the snow now in deep drifts under their half frozen feet. Jennie not overly strong, felt twice. They placed her in the centre with Joice and Je Angeline bringing up the rear. Again she went down, face buried in the snow crying like a babe. Desperately the others lashed her into her saddle, binding a good number of blankets about and around her andwent grimly staggering on her limp figure rocking above them.

Hour succeeded hour in the ceaseless struggle, no one knew where they were, only Violet who staggered on, her eyes upon the compass. The little girls realized that the only hope was to reach the Mc-Whirther woods and bluffs. Out in the open there was no shelter to either man or beast, the sole choice was to struggle on or lie down and die. The last was likely to be the end of it, but while a drop of blood ran red and warm in their veins they would keep their feet and fight.

Joices horse stumbled and rolled catching the numb child under his weight. The jerk on the lariate flung Jennie out of the saddle dangling head downward. With stiffened fingers, scarcely comprehending what they were about, Violet and her sisters came to the rescue, and helpled the frightened horse struggle to itd its feet, and totally blinded by the fury of the storm which now beat fairly into their little faces, grasped the dangling body, swaying back and forth as the startled animal plunged in terror. Joice bruised and limping came to their help, and greaning with pain, and the six little girls together managed to lift Jennie to the horses back, and to bind her saftly with the turn of a rope. Then breathless from exhaustion, crushing behind the animals, bunched helplessly together, the howl of the wind through the trees like the scream of lost souls, the little girls looked into each others faces.

"Are you hury much!" Asked violet of joice.

"Cruc Crunched my leg mighty bad, cannot bear any weith weight on it." She answered. "It was frozen near stiff before, that is why I could not get out of the way quick enough.88"

"Well you will have to ride then." Said violet "I an and my sisters sisters can tramp it awhile. Eh Angeline!"

Angeline lifted her head from the shelter of her horses main.

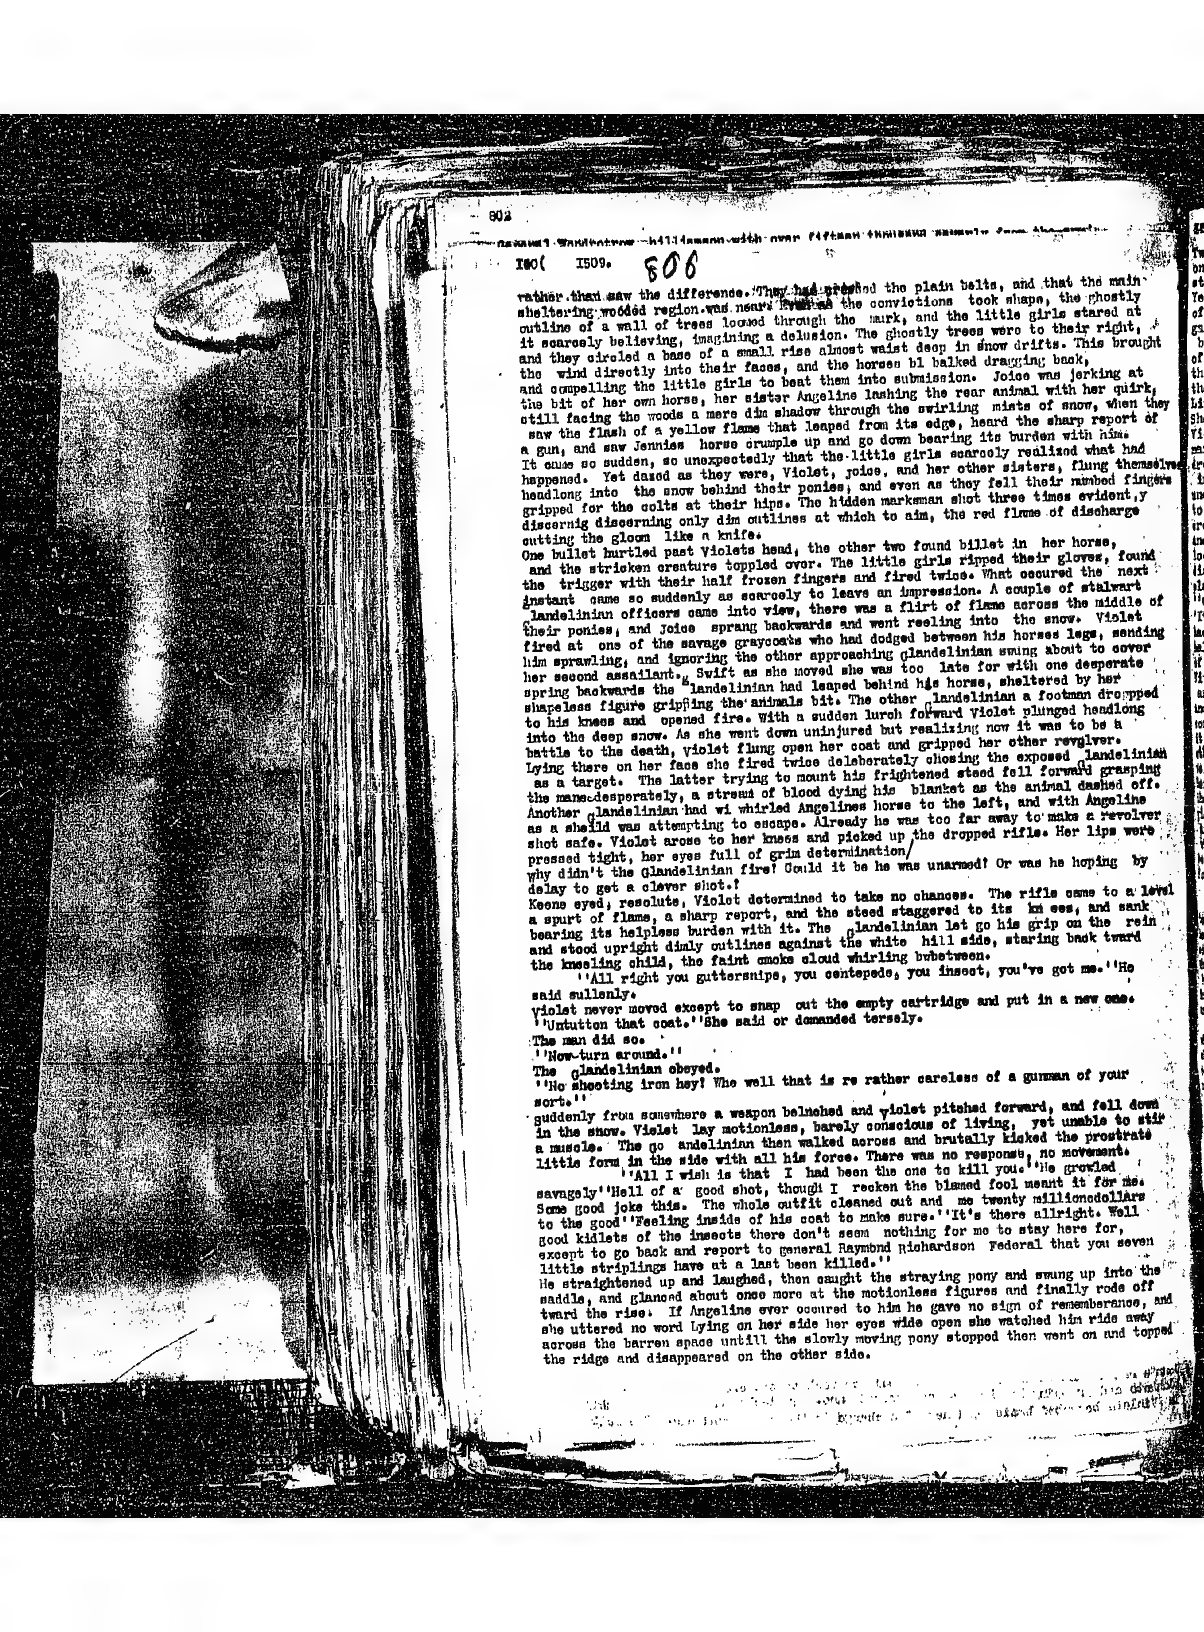
"I believe I can make my feet move." She asserted doubtfully. "But they do not feel as if there was any life left in them."

She stamped in the snow.

"How long do these Calverinian blizzards last anyway!" Asked Catherine.

"They blow themselves out in three days." Said joice.

"Three days. Good God. We can never live it out here." Said Violet herveyes ranging over the dim outline of her sister Jennie stretched across the saddle, powdered with snow, resting in an instant upon joice, who had sunk back upon the ground nursing her limb, and thn then sought Angelines face.



"What can we do!"

"Go on, that's all, till we drop." Said joice "We are not the kind to lie down. We have been in worse conditions than this and pul led out. Its up to us to make good or the whole seven of us will freeze stiff."

The little girls drew in closer together, and munched a hard cracker apiece, exchanging a muttered word or two, thrashing their limbs about to keep up circulation, and dampen ing their lips with snow. They were but dim spectral little shapes in the falling falling darkness, the air filled with clouds of crystal pellets swept about by a merciless windstorm, the horses standing tails to the storm, and heads drop drooping! In spite of the light reflection of the snow the eyes could scarcely see fifty feet away through the smother. About, above, the ceaseless wind howled its icy breath, chilling to the bone. Joice finding that she could walk after all refused to ride, so on they plunged again, ploughing a way through the drifts, the reluctant horses dragging back at first, and drifting before the fierce sweep of the wind which was growing wilder, in spite of every effort at guidance. It was an awful journey every step torture but the little girls bent to it, violet clinging grimly to the bit of her animal, her other arm protecting her eyes from the sting of the wind. Behind Joice weilded aquert careless whether its lash struck the horses flank or Jennie! "How keep kicking and thraking around K Jennie." Said joice. "For God's sake don't go to sleep, or you will get the snowsleep and die. We will have you out of this."

Across a hundred miles of snow covered landscapes the storm howled down upon them in redoubled fury blinding their eyes, making them stagger, helplessly before its blasts. They were still moving like snails, when it grew lighter again, the pl gale brightness revealing inch by inch the dread desolation, stretching white and ghastly in a slowly widening circle. The exhausted struggling children more dead than alive from their ceaseless toil had to break the film of ice from their eyes, to perceive their surroundings. Even then they saw nothing but the bare snow draped wooded plain, the air full of swirling flakes.

There was nothing to guide them no marks of identification merely wooded barreness in the midst of which they wandered struggling their bald frozen horses. Jennie had fallen across her saddle pommel too weak to sit erect, but held by the taunt blankets and gripping her horses ice covered mane. Z suddenly some awakened instinct in Violets benumbed brain told her of a change in their surroundings. She felt rather than saw the difference. They had pitched the plain belts, and that the main sheltering wooded region was nearly behind the convictions took shape, the ghostly outline of a wall of trees loomed through the mark, and the little girls stared at it scarcely believing, imagining a delusion. The ghostly trees were to their right, and they circled a base of a small rise almost waist deep in snow drifts. This brought the wind directly into their faces, and the horses bl balked dragging back, and compelling the little girls to beat them into submission. Joice was jerking at the bit of her own horse, her sister Angeline lashing the rear animal with her quirk, still facing the woods a mere dim shadow through the swirling mists of snow, when they saw the flash of a yellow flame that leaped from its edge, heard the sharp report of a gun, and saw Jennies horse crumple up and go down bearing its burden with him. It came so sudden, so unexpectedly that the little girls scarcely realized what had happened. Yet dazed as they were, Violet, joice, and her other sisters, flung themselves headlong into the snow behind their ponies, and even as they fell their numbed fingers gripped for the colts at their hips. The hidden marksman shot three times evidently discernig discerning only dim outlines at which to aim, the red flame of discharge cutting the gloom like a knife.

1910(1509. 806

One bullet hurtled past Violets head, the other two found billet in her horse, and the stricken creature toppled over. The little girls ripped their gloves, found the trigger with their half frozen fingers and fired twice. What occured the next instant came so suddenly as scarcely to leave an impression. A couple of stalwart Glandelinian officers came into view, there was a flirt of flame across the middle of their ponies, and Joice sprang backwards and went reeling into the snow. Violet fired at one of the savage grayccats who had dodged between his horses legs, sending him sprawling, and ignoring the other approaching Glandelinian swung about to cover her second assailant. Swift as she moved she was too late for with one desperate spring backwards the Glandelinian had leaped behind his horse, sheltered by her shapeless figure gripping the animals bit. The other Glandelinian a footman dropped to his knees and opened fire. With a sudden lurch forward Violet plunged headlong into the deep snow. As she went down uninjured but realizing now it was to be a battle to the death, violet flung open her coat and gripped her other revolver. Lying there on her face she fired twice deleberately choosing the exposed Glandelinian as a target. The latter trying to mount his frightened steed fell forward grasping the mane desperately, a stream of blood dying his blanket as the animal dashed off. Another Glandelinian had wi whirled Angelines horse to the left, and with Angeline as a shield was attempting to escape. Already he was too far away to make a revolver shot safe. Violet arose to her knees and picked up the dropped rifle. Her lips were pressed tight, her eyes full of grim determination/why didn't the Glandelinian fire? Could it be he was unarmed? Or was he hoping by delay to get a clever shot.?

Keene eyed, resolute, Violet determined to take no chances. The rifle came to a level a spurt of flame, a sharp report, and the steed staggered to its knees, and sank bearing its helpless burden with it. The Glandelinian let go his grip on the rein and stood upright dimly outlines against the white hill side, staring back tward the kneeling child, the faint smoke cloud whirling bwbetween.

"All right you guttersnips, you centepede, you insect, you've got me." He said sullenly.

Violet never moved except to snap out the empty cartridge and put in a new one.

"Untutton that coat." She said or demanded tersely.

The man did so.

"Now turn around."

The Glandelinian obeyed.

"No shooting iron hey? Who well that is re rather careless of a gunman of your sort."

guddenly from somewhere a weapon belnched and Violet pitched forward, and fell down in the snow. Violet lay motionless, barely conscious of living, yet unable to stir a muscle. The Glandelinian then walked across and brutally kicked the prostrate little form in the side with all his force. There was no response, no movement.

"All I wish is that I had been the one to kill you." He growled savagely "Hell of a good shot, though I reckon the blamed fool meant it for me. Some good joke this. The whole outfit cleaned out and me twenty millionedollars to the good "Feeling inside of his coat to make sure." It's there allright. Well good kidlets of the insects there don't seem nothing for me to stay here for, except to go back and report to general Raymond Richardson Federal that you seven little striplings have at a last been killed."

He straightened up and laughed, then caught the straying pony and swung up into the saddle, and glanced about once more at the motionless figures and finally rode off tward the rise. If Angeline ever occured to him he gave no sign of remembrance, and she uttered no word Lying on her side her eyes wide open she watched him ride away across the barren space untill the slowly moving pony stopped then went on and topped the ridge and disappeared on the other side.

1910.

Twice the man turned and glanced back but saw nothing but the dark thickets on the show. Angeline made no motion, no outcry. Scarcely conscious, feeling no strength in her limbs, no hope pulsing at her heart, she closed her eyes and laid still! Yet wrapped about as she was, her little body remained warm, and the very disappearance of the Glandelinian yeilded a sense of safty. Her eyes opened again despairingly, and gazed across the barren exposse of snow fields still hidden at a very short distance by the falling snow pall. She could see violet lying face downward, the yellow lining of her cape over her head. She struggled to move her feet, the left was free, but the right was caught firmly beneath the pony. She struggled desperately, forgetful of the pain in the faith that she might save violet, as she actually saw her move. Little by little she worked the imprisoned limb free only to find it numb and helpless. She laid there, breathless, conscious that she ached from head to foot. Behind her Violet moaned and turned partially over on her side. Tugging at the blanket Angeline managed to free herself, or free one arm, gripped the mane of the dead pony, and drew herself into a sitting posture. Now the blood seemed to surge through her veins in new volume and she labored feverishly to free the other hand. At last she undid a knot with her teeth and slipped the blanket from her, beating her hands together to restore circulation. Her right leg was still too numb to stand upon, but she crept forward dragging it helplessly behind her over the snow, where poor violet and her sisters lay. The poor little girls heart seemed to stop beating as she looked at her sister, at the white colorless face, the closed eyes, the discolea discoloration of blood staining the temple. Yet she lived as her faint breathing was plainly visible in the frosty snowy air.

"Oh dear god." She sobbed. "What can I do?"

It was an unrestrained cry of anguish. Yet there was no hesitation in action. She had forgotten everything except the helpless form lying before her on the snow, already half uncovered, her own danger, the surrounding desolation, the dead forms in gray of that wilderness tragedy..

With bare hands she bathed violets face in snow rubbing the flesh untill it rubbed and flushed red pressing her own warm body against hers, speaking her name again and again almost hysterically as though she hoped this to bring back the child to consciousness, and to restore her other sisters. Her exploring fingers told her that it was no serious wound which crossed the side of violets head, and if there was no others she would surely survive, and her discovery sent her blood trobbing through her veins. She lifted violets head to her lap chaffing her cold wrists frantically, her eyes staring again out across the barren snow fields with the fresh realization of their intense loneliness. She choked back a sob of despair, and glanced down into violets face. She did not stir. Cold as it was, Angeline had taken off her own blanket and placed it over violet, and again she bent over her to see if she was stirring when suddenly two mighty hands grasped her by the throat just in p, playfulness, and before she could turn to see who had her she was lifted gently from the ground, and found herself facing a rough uncouth soldier in a brilliant gleaming scarlet uniform like that of a prince, and with him was a whole troop in red. They were Abbissannians.

These soldiers by their rough handling of her sisters soon brought them to their senses, while the general hugging Angeline again, and again, and even drawing her close to him placed her chest against his and held her fast and embraced her so lovingly that she almost fell asleep in his arms.

Then he got her to the camp out of the raging storm as well as her sisters He soon discoverec o discovered how they were found in that ci condition, and immediately immediately forwarded the little girls to general Hanson Avian, h who had missed them and who was overjoyed to see them again.....

The very day after their terrible experience in the terrible snowstorm, and which was raging yet, violet and her sisters were sent to go to one of the other Christian generals but were captured by Glandelinians in ambush, but through their own clever heads and clever means managed to break jail though the hail seemed utterly impossible for any one to break out of. In order to make good their escape for they would surely be pursued like chickens this time, the little girls secured a number of large spri g springs from an old spring bed they found lying in the snow, and managed to attatch them to the hoofs of general Federals horse and to the bottom of a sledge racers seat cutting the planters loose that held the wheels on. Just as they got through their escape was discovered, and the little girls by general Federal and a swarm of Glandelinians come rushing tward them.

"Hurry for the nearest horses." Gasped violet as she ran on. "The Glandelinians are coming fast."

The sisters were just as fast, and in a moment they were on the horses, and dashing away at a full gallop. Federal at once leaped upon his horse not noticing the springs and urging it on at a full gallop. The fun now started. In his hurry general Federal did not notice the springs on the horses hoofs, and the moment the poor horse started forward it began to spring from side to side, up into the air ten feet, down again, and so on to the amazement and fury of its rider, who was flabbergasted.

XXII.

"Damnation." He yelled. "What in the nurse of hell is the matter with this pesky donkey anyway! Is it drunk, or has it lost its senses! When I say, you crazy thing. Help!"

But despite all his swearing, threats and pleads the horse kept right on dancing and leaping about untill general Federal was thrown, the general landing in a heap on the hard snow crust, while his men roared with laughter.

"What the damnuntion are you fil fellows laughing at." Roared Federal in a blinding rage. "You fellows must be in league with this old prett y copetomop cend centeppedes. Go after them or ill blow the brains out of every one of you." And he leveled two big revolvers at them. The men obeyed, and as he could not catch his horse, Federal decided to try the racer sleigh two of the men hitching a horse to it. The fool of a man as he was Federal overlooked these springs also and got the most excitement of his life. As soon as the horses started off the back part having been sawed by violet and her sisters broke loose, and the seat was precipitated to the ground with terrible violence, and the springs coming in contact with the hard crust on the city road, or caused the seat to fly clean over the horses head in red rebounding, and down in front of the horse, precipitatin Federal headefirst to the ground with such force as to make him see a million stars, and not only that but everything in his pants and coat pockets fell out, and ev en his wig was thrown several yards. The horse of course halted and was eyeing Federal timidly as he got up, his face pale with rage and swearing in round volumes. Indeed what Federal said would have shocked Satan himself. But at this time the little girls were far ahead, and though any hopes of catching them seemed utterly out of the question, Federal nevertheless was bound to have them captured if he died for it. And what enraged general Federal all the more was because the men laughed at him, and of the cleverness of the trick.

"I'll get revenge for this dasterdy trick all right." He hissed between his teeth. "And by tarnation I'll make th ose white rabbits wish they had never been born and if I lay my hands on them I'll rend them in pieces untill their en intestines fly all over the ground. This is the worse that has been done to me yet, and I will not forget and forgive it, confound them little guttersnipes. Revenge is min e h just wait, and I'll get them if I have to set my whole army after them."

In a short time general Federal had sent scores of parties in many directions with orders to head the little girls off from escape at any cost. In the meantime the little girls continued on and through the snow murk suddenly discovered a party of Clandelinians halted in the middle of the road, their officers in low conversations. The little girls immediately wheeled their horses, and went flying down another road sending a number of shots flying about the ears of the grayscoats as they dashed away.

"Hellow you fellows were under fire eh!" Exclaimed one of the main leaders coming up. "Jove, you did not expect this did you guster!"

"No I did not. They wr were those damn vivian girls, Federal sent us after, I'll be bound. They may have seen us and dashed away."

"We have given them a pretty good fright, general Mc-Whirther," Said one of the privates. "We can hear them yet although we cannot see anything of them now."

"They lost no time in getting away at all events." Said the general. "But never theless we are under orders to catch them at all costs. Forward."

The little girls continueing on caught sight of apor approaching grayscoats through the snow murk amg among the trees, and a haf half dozen Clandelinians on the same road.

"Goodness there are Clandelinians all about." Said Violet as she saw another party of grayscoats coming. "We will have to hide quick."

The little girls dove into the woods and started up a hill unseen by these wicked Clandelinian soldiers, as the thick pall of the falling snow hid them rapidly from view. On top of the hill was an old manison and into this they went just as a large force of Clandelinians came up the lane having seen the little girls. Violet and Joice hastened to the front windows, while Jennie, and Angeline and her other sisters took up their positions behind the doors ready to open fire when the dragoons put in an appearance. The Clandelinian troopers approached in a slow and cautious manner, and dismounting and leaving their horses in the charge of a dozen of their men moved to the right and to the left, advancing closer and closer. They watched the manison closely it being evident they were expecting to find the little girls in the building. Violet told her sisters to wait untill they were sure the Clandelinians were within range before firing. The windows were raised far enough to permait the muzzles of the pistols to stick out and the little girls now opened fire.

The pistol volley rang out loudly, and sounds of groans, cries of pain, and yells of anger followed it. The Clandelinians returned the fire, but the bullets rattled against the side of the building and did notdo any damage. Then there came several interchanges of volleys but there was not a great deal of damage done on either side though the Clandelinians got the worse of it, two being killed and four wounded.

Suddenly violet got word that another party of Clandelinians had taken up their position a so as to guard against the escape of h herself and her sisters in that direction.

XXII.

Soon after the arival of the additional force of the Clandelinians they again opened fire, the little girls returning the fire promptly and briskly, and Jennie who was changing her position leap bumped her arm against a button in the wall, and a secret paniel opened wide or slid back revealing a dark passage.

"Oh here's means of escape." Cried Jennie lighting a candle and entering the passage. "Come sisters."

Her sisters followed. It started from the first floor, but a series of steps led down into the cellar and then a passage appeared which led along under the ground. The little girls made their way along very slowly, the passage veing woryn narrow and the top so low that they had to walk in a stooping position. The little girls continued to make their way along very slowly, but soon they d found that the passage way as was entirely closed up as the result of a cave in. however they managed to dig their way out by the roof and escape the passage. Violet and her sisters knew that general Federal had issued an order for the butchery of all the children they could find, and now as the- little girls had come upon quite a force of Angelinians, they decided to give the Clandelinians a surprise.

They knew that there was real danger of Federal ordering his troops to fall upon the unsuspecting christian families in the towns all around the Mc-Hollester Run region, and massacre them all, these rumors having already reached the christian commander in chiefs stationed far away with their main armies at Mc-Whirther Run. It was terrible enough indeed for whole multitudes of christian families, consisting of helpless women and children were exposed to the danger, as the Clandelinians would come and kill the women and children and burn their houses to satif satisfy their generals revenge for the trick played on him the other day. An hour later the forces of boyscouts under violet and her sisters had advanced to see if general Federal was going to keep his threat, and had reached the northern end of the Mc-Whirthian Run, and they were just about to ride into the timber when a large column of Clandelinians came into sight advancing swiftly.

"The enemy." Cried Violet. "Fire boys. All of you that can, fire."

Five hundred of the boyscouts opened a withering fire dropping many scores of the yelling Clandelinians, even though the distance was great. The Clandelinians returned the fire but none of the christians were hit as yet. Having fired off their muskets and pistols four times the Angelinians retired to a distance of a quarter of a mile reloading their weapons as they went. Then the whole force stopped and formed a whole line two deep and waited for the enemy to come within range again. While doing this Violet turned to one of the boyscouts a captian and said;

"Mr Darger you ride at the top of your horses speed to the christian lines and give the alarm. Tell any general you see that a large force of the enemy under general Phelan is coming and that his men had better come forth and help us hold the wicked Clandelinians in check."

"All right Violet." Said the captian. And he saluted and rode away at a gallop.

The swarm of Clandelinians were now within range again, and again the Angelinians fired a rolling volley and dashed away, and again the brave Clandelinians fired in return, the bullets rattling around like hail, a hundred of the boys being wounded, but fortunately not one of them was killed yet. Violet continued the retreat for half a mile then halted the Angelinian boyscouts who reloaded their weapons while going at full speed. Then she dctatched a score of the best riders and told them to ride on, one of the squads to go to the left hand, and get the others to go to the right hand to warn the non-combatants of the coming of general Federals child butchers.

"Tell them to hasten out of the valleys and tward the christian armies." She instructed. "I do not think it will be safe to go to the mountians, for I do not believe it will be possible to hold the enemy at bay, unless general Hanson comes to our aid...."

The two squads dashed away to attend to the work, then the others stormed with fire at the enemy for several minutes over two thousand of the enemy going down in that short time, and then again they retreated, with their own losses in killed and wounded known ammounting to one thousand two hundred, quickly reloading and firing steadily as they went back the enemy now astonished at the incessant firing of their enemies and even proud of their bravery, and of the gallentry of violet and her sisters, and vowed that even if their errand is to b butcher children, they would see that no harm comes to the vivian Girls if they did get captured. Of Of course the Clandelinians themselves kept up an incessant fussilade, and now fifty more of the Angelinian boyscouts were killed, and two hundred and twenty injured, twenty fatally. The Angelinians fought desperately after that, contesting every inch, fighting desperately as men only can, for they realised that the lives of scores of thousands of innocent women and children depended upon whether they could hold the blood thirsty grayscoated demons in check. The squads of Angelinian boyscouts who had been sent to warn the threatened regions to flee for their lives, did their work well, but despite the warning they could not get away in time, for other Clandelinian columns swarmed into view, and soon a chan charnell hell began, the Clandelinians torturing the victims, in all the horrible ways they could think of. Slowly but surely the brave christian boyscout defenders suffering heavy losses were forced back, standing against a force that was too a strong for them, and they had to go back, they could not help it though they fought as men never fought before.

The boyscouts killed and wounded the Glandelinians by the hundred, but there were others to take the places of those who fell, and it did not seem to stay their advance in the least. On the other hand when hundreds of Angelinian boyscouts went down, there was no hundreds to take their places, and th us the line of christian defenders were gradually thinned out. The Angelininn boyscouts had already reached the Mc-Whirther Rumbanks while the glandelinians were or had scattered out and were rushing in various directions in squads from two hundred to a thousand two hundred and fifty.

Each of these squads headed for the Calverinian villiages. The Angelinian boyscouts were riding hither and thiter firing at the glandelinians and making it hot for them but of course nine thousand and eighty men could not stay the work of about thirty thousand human fiends.

There soon became a terrible scene indeed. The glandelininn demons surrounded the houses, dragged the women and children forth and murdered them in the most sho shocking manners, and then set fire to the houses. Soon hundreds of buildings were blazing everywhere, while hundreds of women and children were ive overtaken as they attempted to flee to the timber and the mountians, and were cut to pieces or shot down in cold blood. The Angelinian boyscouts made every effort to prevent such horrible work but could not cover all the ground, and so were in many instances utterly helpless to prevent it, though they did all they possibly could, to keep the infuriated grayscoted fiends from massar massacring all the women and children. The Angelininn boyscouts did not a stay together all the time, but divided up in large parties from a hundred, to a hundred and ninty, and always went hither and thiter and harassed the furious Glandelinians all they possibly could, they being able to do a great deal on this line, owing to the fact that they were on horseback, and could get around rapidly.

Slowly but surely the landelinians worked their way to the little town of guard. The Angelinian boyscouts of course fighting as stubbornly as they knew how were forced h that way also but so far as it concerned t a that it concerned they wanted to go that way anyway, as that was where their s services were needed by the threatened noncombatants. Presently Captian Richard and Estrabrook with half a hundred Angelinian boyscouts came to where a squad of perhaps two hundred of the glandelinians were attacking a large convent. At the grayscoated demons burst the front doors down the back doors opened and a number of nuns and scores of children ran forth and darted tward the timber which was a mile away. They suddenly saw Violet following them-out of the house with a score of men, but was headed off by colonel Bernard Dunns glandelinians who had discovered what had been taking place at the rear rear and rushed around there. Violet had a pistol in one hand and a small sabre in another, and she d sabred one, and shot another but only wounded them both.

The glandelinians rushed forward and would have cut her down but Captian Richard Slater who leaped off his horse knocked them right andl left with with his sabre. Estrabrook and the other boys followed Richards oxap example and after hard fighting succeeded in beating the glandel n-glandelinians back. They fired a couple of volleys from their muskets as soon as the glandelinians fell back a few paces, and this completed the demorilization of this part of glandelinians and they fled in disorder. O ther parties were coming that way however and the Angelinian boyscouts knew they must not delay in instant, they must hasten if they were to save the lives of the children and also violet and her sisters.

"Leap into the saddle." Said Richard taking the little girls hand and leading her to where his horse stood. "I will get up behind you and then we will make our escape. We have done all that we can do I'm sure..."

Richard assisted the little girl into the saddle and then leaped up behind. The other Angelininns sprang into the saddle and rode onward at a swift pace leaving the yelling demons behind. Violet made a signal with her handkerchief, and the other Angelinian boyscouts seeing it followed the littleparty. There was no more houses that yad been reached by the landelinians so there was no need of staying longer. To do so would be to render themselves liable to be killed or captured. It was a horrible scene they were leaving bun h behind them, a scene of blood and massacre, and what was worse of all was that it was mainly the blood of little innocent children. A Soon all the Angelinian boyscouts were together, and it was seen that over hree three thousand were missing.

"Three thousand of the boy are gone Violet." Said Richard in a sorrowful tone of voice. "Three thousand of the bravest boyscouts that ever lived, and they die in vain for they could not save the poor women and children."

"You are right, Richard but it cannot be helped though. But I' ll make these scoundrells suffer for the massacre never fear, that is if I get the chance, and if I don't get the chance I'll make one. It is terrible to think of what had occured. Thousands of o innocent children have been cruelly murdered."

"Yes it is a terrible massacre." Said Richard. "And I fear the end is not yet. I'm afraid that many prisoners have also been taken, and that the poor children living will be tortured."

"Oh that will be awful. Let's return to the scene, or to the edge of the woods at least." Said violet. "We may be able to do some good and save a few lives at least."

A few minutes later the large company of Angelinian boyscouts was riding southward at a lively rate, and when they were within a quarter of a mile of the edge of the woods, violet called a halt and told the foremost of the boys boyscouts to dismount. The Angelinian boyscouts obeyed, and tryi tying their horses stole forward with four of the little girls tward the timber and through it soon reached the margin where they could look out upon the scene. All about were to be seen burning towns and the glandelinians were moving about in parties from fifty to sixties, looking for plunder, and more victims wh m whom they might put to death in cold blood. Scatt ered about within the view of of the Angelinian boyscouts were thousands of the bodies of the women and children horribly mulitulated, and with some of their intestines exposed, and it made to the blood of the boyscouts run cold with horror and then boil with rage.

"I'll tell what to do." Said violet shading her eyes from the horrible sight. "We will go back, mount our steeds, and then come here, and watch and wait, and when we see a party of the white demons come close enough so that we think we can do it with safty, we will dash out and surround them, and kill every one of them."

This plan was not with the approval of all the boys, and they hastened back to where they had left their steeds, untied the animals, and mounting rode back with the whole force to the timber taking up their position where they could watch the wicked glandelinians, and yet not be seen by them. They remained there watching, and motionless for about half an hour, and then a bandof grayscoats to the number of two hundred and twenty was seen coming across, tward where the Angelinian boyscouts were concealed.

This party examing the bodies of women and children and cutting them open and cloaing their bodies out to make sure they were dead. The men in the rear of this column had fourty children all girls, all stark naked, and ready for the torture the Glandelinians bringing them to y this spot, where they could do the work without disturbance.

"I think we shall be able to get this blood thirsty gang and save some of those poor children." Said Violet her eyes dilated with horror at what she saw. "Be ready for th the signal boys. Wait untill they start to do their work then at them and show that we are gi going to protect the children."

The Angelinian boys nodded keeping their eyes on the party of glandelinians, who came closer and closer, then the rear division halted and in a few minutes a sight began that froze the blood of all with horror. The glandelinians had taken se e several children among the bunch of prisoners, and while one of them took them down from the horses to which the prisoners were tied, others held their legs and arms, hold ing them front downwards opening their bodies and letting the intestines fall on a cross for a bitter insult. However v vengeance was coming, and who ever would say that violet and her sisters had no right, without the obligation of a sin, to slay the murderers then let him step forward and prove it. The glandelinians when this happened were within about one hundred yards of the edge of the timber, where all those who had the remaining prisoners halted, while the rest started slowly forward in a direction which would take them further away. Simultaneously violet and her sisters saw through their field glasses the cruelty of the Glandelinian soldiery. Knives were literally forced down the throats of little girls which were cut open inside, children tied to trees were opened alive, children were being chocked so hard that their tongues protruded full length, and even scouraging, burning, and suffocating, was added to the tortures untill only twenty children had been left still alive.

Violet and her sisters realizing that they themselves were to infernally slow in acting, gave the signal, and instnatly the Angelinian boyscouts urged their horses from t among the trees and the entire force dashed straight tward the enemy. The glandelinians interested in the butchery they were committing, and chocking the children, did not see the Angelinians until ll they were almost opn upon them, and then they gave utterance to startled yells, and started to fire as they ran. This was the worse thing they could have done, and had they stood their ground back to back, and fired with their muskets and pistols at the Angelinians, they would have made a very good, and even successful fifh fight of it at that, but instead they had to escape by running, the leader dropping one of the little girlw girls he had been trying to rip open and dashing away like mad.

The Glandelinians saw that they were outnu outnumbered greatly, and this frightened them so that all they could think of was to get away, but this they were not permitted to do however, for the Angelinian boyscouts quickly surrounded them, and as they did so, they fired a series of volleys from their muskets, and two or three from their pistols, with the result that every one of the Glandelinians went down dead and wounded.

Just as they succeeded in freeing the remaining children, and just as they dashed back to the timber, and disappeared from sight, another party of glandelinians appeared, it being a much larger force than the one they had just wiped out, these being near seven thousand.

Violet at first sit like charging, and surrounding them also but she saw that there was too many of them, and that it would prove too costly. She decided to remain in the edge of the timber protected by the trees and the high snow banks and then if the glandelinians attempted to make an att empttto attack she would have the advantage on her side, as it would be too dangerous for her to go out in the open against double her number. The Angelinian boyscouts sat motionless in her their saddles and as they watched the aproach of the force they could easily a see as it drew nearer that it numbered seventeen hundred to their nineteen hundred after all. However they were not alarmed as they felt that so long as they had the advantage and the shelter of the trees they need no fear of defeat. The glandelinian force paused when the foremost number came to where their comrades lay dead and dying, and then suddenly rushed toward the timber yelling and swearing, and brandishing their weapons. Doubtless they thought they would intimidate the christians by making a lot of noise but they were to be fooled.

"Steady now boys." Said Violet pleadingly. "Wait untill they are well within range, and then when I and my sisters give the word/ let them screeeching fiends have it. But each man take his victim as a small loss won't disconcert them."

The Angelinian boyscouts nodded, leveled their muskets, took careful aim, each soldier carefully picking his man; and waited for the word. Closer and closer came the glandelinians brandishing their weapons and yelling like legions, the Glandelinians looking more like fiends from the lower regions than human beings.

Suddenly Violet raised her hand as a signal, the Angelinian boyscouts obeying immediately. There came a withering roar upon the air, the woods seemed ablaze, and at least four thousand glandelinians went down dead oy d or dying, the Angelinian boyscouts having delivered a terrib terrible, a wonderfully destructive volley, which brought the surviving glandelinians to a sudden stop. Though they had really expected to be fired upon, they had not expected to see over two quarters of their number go down as had been the case. The survivors paused and stared fearfully in the direction of the timber, and then the leader recovering his nerve called out;

"Charge them christian devils, charge, while their weapons are empty."

The glandelinians again leaped forward furi firing a furious fusaalade as they came. The bullets rattled agin against the trees, and bushes; andtwo of the little girls were wounded but not seriously, they being so well protected by the trees, that the bullets could not do much damage. But there was another surprise in store for the Glandelinians; for they had not advanced more than a few yards, when they were treated by another deadly volley from the timber, this one being from the pistols of the Angelinian boyscouts. Two volleys had been fired in quick succession, the Angelinian boyscouts being good with good with the pistols, and nearly two thousand more of the glandelinians went down this completing the demorilization of the foe.

They had come to a stop when the second volley had been fired by the Angelinians, but when the third volley was fired, the glandelinians skurried away like frightened sheep or rabbits, the few thousand survivors running for their lives.

"Charge them now boys." Cried violet. "Let's make a clean sweep of it!....."

this met with the wishes of the Angelinian boys and they urged their horses out into the open open, and dashed after the enemy giving utterance to their thrilling battle cry of;;;;;;;

"Down with child slaughter. Liberty for the children....."

And it struck terror to the hearts of the fugitives. They ran the top of their speed, but it wz was of no use, they could not get away from the troops on horseback; and the result was that they were one after the other shot or cut down, not one having escaped escaped, the Angelinian boyscouts having made a clean sweep of it. The glandelinian columns were soon drawning away from this region and assembled in ornormous force near the town of Ne-Whirther eighty six miles southeast of Galverinia near the Ne-Whirther Rum, which they completely surrounded intending not to let the soldiers, and women and children to escape, and many of the houses were already ablaze. There was already ha heavy firing back and forth between the glandelinians, and the soldiers defending the town, and the little girls could see as they watched the scene from the timb er, that heavy numbers were falling on both sides. They could also see that the glandelinians were getting ready to burn many of their prisoners at the stake, and so decided to strike the enemy a sudden hard blow , and before the rascals could tie the children at the t stake, the little girls gave the signal for her their boys boyscouts to charge, and the boys dashed ahead at the full speed of their horses, the thunder of the horses hoofs sounding like muffled booming. It came to the hearing of the glandelinians as a great surprise but they opened a withering fire, to which the Angelinians responded, with crash and roar; and at lanst ten glandelinians to one of the Angelinian squads fell to the ground dead and dying, while on the air rose wild shrieks, yells, and screams, mingled with the wo moans of the wounded and dying.

e muskets of the Angelinians were fastened to their bodies by straps, so that the instant they fired the weapons, they let them drop at their sides, anddrew pistols, ushing right in the midst of the glandelinians at the top of their horses speed ring at close range, sabres were dr ossed and there was the liveliest sin confusion. utterly demorilized were the glandelinians at this sudden and unexpected attack that they were unable to do anything, and the Angelinians had dashed dashed through their nks and were away with the rescue prisoners before any damage could be inflicted on them. This affair caused great e excitement in the encampment of the landelinians, the daring of the Angelinian boyscouts appalling the glandelinians who d not believed that a small force of boyscouts consisting of fewer than nine housand would dare dash into the midst of a multitude of their worse enemies. A great force had gathered however and were advancing to pursue the Angelinians, but they escaped.

he town of Ne-Whirther was captured and just how many thousands were massacred no one ould tell, but in addition to those who had been burned at the stake, others were placed over fires and held there with pitchforks untill burned slowly to death, while others still were hacked to death with knives, sabres, and opened alive. A few minutes after getting away from the horrible scene the little vian girls and their boyscouts were pursued by heavy numbers of graycoats who were bound to retake the little children that the Angelinian boyscouts under the leader of the daring vivina girls had rescued. ad taking refuge in an old Galverinian mansion they kept up a stern and ste sevore resistance against the foe for a long time u; t until it was forced by the enemy. the glandelinians then swarmed into the building, and to their great surprise and stification found no one there at all. Were where the little girls and their boyscouts who had been in the mansion only a hot time before, and firing upon them with such destructive effect. The soldiers scattered and looked through the building from cellar to attic but not a soul was found, the Glandelinians staring at one another in wonder and amazement. The glandelinians knew however it was an old mansion and that there may be secret rooms in it. They knew that they had the mansion completely surrounded, and also knew that the little girls and the many Angelinian boyscouts with their child refugees did not emerge from the building, ad get through their lines, and the only thing that could have been done then, was that they may have concealed themselvesin some secret rooms. So the officers and the men went along the halls, striking the walls and wait ainscoting wainscoting with the butts of their muskets, knowing that if they head ard a hollow sound reverbrating, the chances would be that there were some secret rooms beyond the walls a at that point, but nowhere did it sound hollow. The landelinians were baffled in the main halls so they scattered throughout the building and tested the walls everywhere, but with the same result, for no spots were found where there was a hollow sound that would indicate the presence of a secret panel. This baffled the glandelinians again assembled at the lower hall staring at one another, in question, in wonder.

The Angelinian boyscouts had disappeared, an and were not to be found, now the question was, what should be done.

"I tell you what we will do." said the leading officer who was a colonel. "We'll set fire to the old manision and roast these christian devils out."

This suggestion was hailed with delight. The majority were disgusted by their failure to find the secret rooms that they felt sure was in the building, and hailed with delight t with the thought that after all they would be able to bring the christians out.

"Let's set fire to the manison." Was the cry. "And if the christian dogs come out, and attempt to escape, we can shoot them down."

The others signified that they thought the same.

"Out of the building then everybody." Ore Ordered the colonel, and the soldiers poured out of the front, and rear yards, and when they were all out, a a member gathered material to start a fire with, and soon w one was blazing and it did not take long for the building to get to burning freely, and the flames were soon roaring at a great rate. In twenty minutes the old manison was blazing fiercely from roof to its foundation, and it was evident that it could soon fall.

"If those foolish christians do not intend to permit themselves to be burned they will come forth so soon." Said the colonel.

All the officers and soldiers watched eagerly but no Angelinian boyscouts or any of the vian girls appeared.

"I guess they are going to stay there and be burned to death death." said the colonel at last. The whole building will collapse in a very few minutes."

He had scarcely stopped speaking, when with a great crash the entire wooden building went down, flames leaping at least two hundred feet into the air, while sparks and embers went higher and floated away, and then dense columns of smoke went up.

"That's good bye christians." Said the colonel. "But I don't admire their taste in choosing death by roasing, to being shot. They were the bib biggest kind of fools, they would not even hav had been shot, had they come forth and gave themselves up."

8/14

In the meantime the little girls had escaped by means of a tunnel passage way leading from the cellar. Part of it in the center had caved in however, and the soldiers had been digging at it steadily for more than an hour, and yet had not made very good progress, when they began sniffing the air, having smelt smoke.

"Boys "said violet "I fear we are in a trap."

"Yes and we cannot dig through this dirty dirt very soon judging by the progress we have made so far, and we are likely to be smothered, or strangled by the smoke." said Jennie.

"Where does the sakesmoke come from?" Asked jessy.

"The glandelinians have set the old mansion on fire." Replied violet.

"They may know we escaped by some secret manner, or by some secret passage, and they are trying to smoke or roast us to death."

The little girls fully turned their attention to their own situation: what were they to do and how t were they to escape, or were they to be smoked to death , in the chocked up passage like rats in a trap. These were the questions and they were very difficult ones to answer. The smoke was now becoming thicker, and although the boyscouts in front actually worked like beavers, they did not seem to make much headway in clearing the dirt away. And making the tunnel passable. The smoke became thicker and thicker, and it became difficult for the boyscouts and the little girls to breathe breathe at all, their situation becoming desperate as their way of advance was cut off by the dirt and debris; and to go back was out of the question, for they knew that the old mansion was on fire. The Angelinians continued the work with desperate energy, coughing, sputtering, and choking. They fairly worked like beavers clawing the dirty back with their hands, and trampling it underfoot, but it was slow work, and they began to believe that they were doomed to a terrible death. Scores of other boys however had turned their attention attention to the top if of the passage working with a will, and using their h nyonets. A few minutes later to the surprise of the latter they broke through and caught sight of the trees above them. They now worked with feverish haste, and soon had the opening enlarged sufficiently so that they could crawl through it.

This was all that was needed, and one after another the boys made their way up through the opening afterall the child refugees and violet and her sisters had gone up first. Violet an and her sisters were careful enough to count all the boys for they feared that one or more might have been chocked into senselessness by the smoke. They were all there however, and they made their way through the timber. They were seen by the glandelinians however and the little girls discovering this decided it would be best to stand their ground and fight the enemy to the last bitter end, and soon the eight thousand five hundred boyscouts were behind a strong position and a awaited the coming of the glandelinians. They did not have long to wait as the foe was now close at hand advancing very slowly, and carefully. Then the firing began heavily, and was kept up for two or three hours, and then the wicked glandelinians made a sudden dash forward. They hoped to be able to overcome the boyscouts and put them to flight, by charging suddenly, and fiercely. But they made a sad mistake, for the boyscouts were ready for this move and met the glandelinians with volley after volley, which at close range was very effective. The Result was that the ranks of the foe were quickly in thned out, and the survivors were turned forces to turn and flee The hail of bullets was too much for them.

After this repulse one of the boys who had been scouting came back and reported that there was a strong brigade of glandelinians coming up the roads. At this instant another scout came up with the information that general federals main force was behind them at the distance of three quarters of a mile, and were advancing very quick.

"We are between two fires." Said violets

"We must enter the timber on either side of the roads." Said jessy. "I think we will be able to fool them. They wont know where to look for us."

The boyscouts at once rode into the timber and made their way far back so they would not be seen. The little girls stole back and hid behind some trees and watched, and had the satisfaction of seeing two glandelinian forces meet. The glandelinian commander held a conversation; and presently those who had been going north turned around and headed in the other direction; then the entire force moved away toward the south. Violet and her sisters had been unable to hear anything that was said so they did not know what this move portended, though they felt confident that the glandelinians were up to some trick, and they decided to follow the glandelinian soldiers and see. They hastened down the road, and saw no signs of the enemy; an as the wicked glandelinians had evidently disappeared down the road, and were almost to the bend when they heard the swift thudding of horses feet and the sound of voices, just around the bend.

"They are coming back." Said Jennie.

"What shall we do?" Asked Catherine.

"Follow me." Said violet and as she ran down the side of the embankment on which they were standing at the time. Her brave sisters followed, and soon were at the bottom of the embankment where there was a frouth stream of moderate wise rippling through a large stone culvert, which reached across beneath the road.

8/15

"This is a good place to hide." Said violet. "In under the arch, sisters quick."

The little girls hastened to wade in under the stone bridge, and as they did so the advanced force of the glandelinians came riding around the band Federal in the road, and behind the cavarly came a long stream of infantry.

"Had they been seen!"

The little girls asked to them themselves the question in some anxiety, for if such was the case th they would certainly be killed or captured. The little girls stood waist deep in the snow beneath the stone arch, and waited anxiously while the glandelinians went across the bridge. It was indeed the main army however, and here the little girls were held the rest of the day and all the night as the glandelinians kept on coming. Even immense columns of cavarly rode down the embankment and across, but did not see the little girls in the dark.

In the evening of the next day the glandelinians were still passing over and even across the embankments on all sides. The little girls were literally in the shadow of death, from both exposure to the cold air and the snow, and from the enemy, but the little girls were brave hearted and stood ready to sell their lives dearly if discovered. It turned out that the glandelinians had not seen the little girls, the last of the force moving across and not suspecting that they had been so near the little girls whom general Manley had offered a sum for. The little girls despite their feet half frozen waited untill it was safe to do so, then they emerged from the culvert and after bringing the circulation to their feet hastened back in the direction of the pain where their boyscouts were awaiting their return, and found that the main body of boys had returned to the camp but others he had been scourging the whole neighborhood for them, and so they told the 2d leading boys of the hunters that it would be necessary for them to keep quiet and be cautious as the wicked glandelinians were now out in such force as to make it extremely dangerous for any attempts to engage them in a battle. The little girls knew the meaning of th is advantage.....

The towns of Benton and Barclay are situated on the Mo-pollester run river which runs into the Mo-Whirlwhian sea only about ten miles south of Pounce-Cee-Woolia, and here the glandelinian army under Federal had consentrated a upon general Hanson who had brought up his army to stem Federals retreat northward. General Federal was in desperate condition, and to escape the trap into which he had fallen he had been compelled to make the march which led up violet and her sisters under the bridge for fully three days, and now bound to get away as he wished to join Manley Federal struck suddenly and wildly against general Hansons lines. He fought Hanson left wing fiercely on the 29th of March and won the desperate battle which lasted two days, and then in another two days battle swi swept back general Hansons center from the town of Benton, and was able to advance across the big Mo-Pollester the river by pontoon bridges, and general Hanson was forced to give up his attempt Benton and Barclay having lost nine hundred thousand in both conflicts singly.

General Hanson naturally was not beaten in the battles, only compelled to let Federal out of the trap. But on March 30th general Hanson withdrawing his armies from Benton and Barclay allowed Federals whole army to cross the river unmolested; and then threw himself in the way of Federal on the opposite side before general Federal knew what was up.

Again the glandelinian army was placed in a hazardious situation, and driven to desperation general Federal struck another blow and a fiercer conflict was soon raging. General Had th rown his way upon Federal at Pounce Cee Woolia.

THE BATTLE OF POUNCE-CEE-WOOLIA.

Federals whole army fought with vigor and great determination determination, and he forcing general Hansons right wing back, when general Hendrine came up with his own army and went there to the assistance of the christians warding general Hansons the same time. Even then amid the dreadful carnage the christian armies succeeded in holding their own, but notwithstanding the arrival of more reinforcements estimated to hold their own, but notwithstanding the arrival of more reinforcements the which came to the aid of the christians the few positions just now could not be captured untill the Calverinian forces came upon the scene, and then the whole christian line moved forward and the battle beg became general.

It was a desperate battle, and every advantage seemed to go against Federal, as he was contending against too heavy numbers, but Federal was bound to win at least to get his way out of the region so he would retreat in safe safty and also to show Hanley that the christian general Hanson could not lick him even if he had sent his whole army of angels to help.

At the highest fury of the battle that day, while all the glandelinian generals were in the thick of the bloody fray, general Federal was seriously wounded, notwithstanding all this the glandelinians forced the christians back again with great slaughter slaughter but general Mo-pollester Stanek, and general Henry Berger on the glandelinian side was killed, and generals Shoemaker, Mailberry Franklin and general Nickson Stanek mortally wounded, while ten generals were dis abled and crippled for life.

It is probable that the Glandelinians in spite of all this would have gotten the battl better of the battle had no more reinforcements came to the aid of the christians but general Dicknell held in reserve on Hansons rear fin ll finally appeared on the scene, and attacked Federals right and left wings. This of course was likelyto turn the tide of the battle against Federal with disaster, but thr through driven to their second line of works the glandelinians rallied and resumed the struggle with redoubled fury, fighting more furiously, and the Angelinians could not drive them b back. It was now a terrible scene of carnage indeed, and general Kindermine on the christian side fell severely wounded, and Dicknell was disabled.

The withering crash of musketry nas roared like a volcano in eruption, and the horrible thunder of artil lery fairly convulsed the air and ground, while the yells/ groans and shrieks of the wounded, and the demon yell of the foe and christians alike was sufficient to make up a Hellish bedlam that was fearful to listen to. From morning till two thirty o-clock the glandelinians launched fourty onslaughts against the christian lines without results excepting disastorous repulses, and then at last Hansons whole army advanced with the intention to turn general Federals left flank. The fury of the conflict when this advance was discovered could not be described. General Richner Shoemanns giant guns and his big forces cut Hansons line of advance to pieces, and meeting general Kindermines furious advance quickly hurled them back, and forcing them to retreat in an almost demorilized condition. Shoemann, Ledonia Weldon Dicknell and Federals main line under general Accountants now advanced with irresistible force, driving the christians before them.

General Henrig Henrique Johnston one of Hansons most ablest christian generals was killed, and this added to the demorilis demorilised condition Federals forces next attacked the Angelinian auxiliries and after hard fighting put them on the road to slow retreat, and then threw themselves upon general Aronburgs forcesThe christian general Aronburg was wounded to death at the heart of the conflict but his assailants met annihilation, and the other columns of the foe making a second attack had their main line torn to fragments, and the survivors scatted, and compeled to flee. Just as general Raymond Richardson Federal the main commander was waving his sword and calling to his men to follow him-for another dash at the christians a wounded Abbisannian, a savage hater of the glandelinian flag and all that went at w went with it took deliberate aim and fired at the general and fired twice. The first bullet killed the horse, and the second went through Federals leg, breaking it slightly just above the n knee. One of the Glandelinians then rushed to bayonet the Abbisannian soldier, but the Abbisannian was too quick and the glandelinian soldier fell himself. The Glandelinians won the victory, but the victory was incomplete. Only a portion of general Hansons force had been crushed and routed for a short distance, defeated, and beaten on every side, but the main line was impossible to force and the glandelinians withdrew. There was now only one h thing for general Federal to do to save his forces while he had now the chance, and that was to retreat tward Angeline(Calverinia) as rapidly as possible before Hanson could reform his main army, the retreat commencing amid a t storm of g terrific explosions on every side the glandelinians retiring tward Pounne-Jes-Woolia . They would have crossed the river b t but the bridges of boats were gone, and besides there was many christian armies on either shore of the river nowe other parties of the christian armies had arrived from the south and hundreds of thousands even millions of Angelinians had flocked to the spot. The persuit was fiercely but for a time Federal took the lead.

General Kindermine who had recieved his own thrashing during the battle and whose division of Hansons was the only one defeated recieved also terribly overwhelmingly reinforcements, and seeing that general Hansons army was in great force also, called a short council of war and the affair of the persuit was talked over at length.

To get away quick enough the enemy had to abandon all their broken cannon, and spi spoiled luggage and push southward through the timber and recrossing the river where at points the river was forbidible and it had seemed the only chance that had remained to Federal. If Federal had failed he would surely have to surrender before very long for Federal was completely overwhelmed. While the christian army had been halted after a two days forced march in the rear of the fleeing enemy, wh and why while the christian generals were deliberately laying out their plans of how to catch up with the fleeing army violet and her sisters were shown into the tent of general Stancks and they ret reported that while the main foe force was retreating large parties had been left to guard the fords to the southward, and northward of the river, while stronger forces of the enemy had been stationed between the town of Francis Mc-Whirther and Nellis Calverinia to cover Federals retreat.

The great christian generals looked at each other in dismay. They wr were outwitted for Federal had made sure his escape. For themthere was every chance of safty, and even defeating Federal on any ground, but Federal had escaped.

"Nevertheless if we continue to press on despite the foe covering parties, it will look as if general Federals army is dicomed nevertheless." Said general Kindermine who was about but had his left arm in a sling. "We almost have him comp,letely surrounded anyway."

forever violet and her sisters had been a way and revealing it to general Kindermine the general decided to try his chances at the luck within two hours after three dmys days the christian army had crossed over to the other side near the town od of Heginin and soon monsterous forces were thrown headlong upon general Federal once more, the glandelinians in the fords opejn opening with all their gigantic guns and the terrific explosions which threw dirt and gravel for the height of five hundred hundred feet or tore cavities in the ground as big as volcanic craters, pierced the air by hundreds, and with terrible detonations heard many miles away. This was kept up for six hours with a continuous salvoes, by which time general Federal who had halted his army found his left wing cut up and rolled from the field, his center shatt ered and Hansons forces again victorious and yet the whole of Hansons army had pushed forward and once again Federals whole army was on the retreat leaving hundreds of thousands of their dead and wounded strewn on the fields for many miles. Federal became alarmed but before he could do anything other heavy forces attacked his rear, and all the fierce dashed made by the wicked glandelinians met with frightful slaughter.

All day t long the conflict had raged with outpendous fury and soon toward the trentg evening the glandelinians had been victorious once more cruelly crushing a part of Hansons forse and Kindermines divisions, but soon general Hansons and Indermines main forces came up and cut up the whole of Federals line, and threw the survivors into a panic, the foremost hundreds of thousands of assailants in gray being simply overrun and trampled under foot by a dashing charge of Concentinian cavarly, and by the Angelinian and Abyssinkilian dragoons. Federal was again caught in a trap, but he managed to withdraw out of it by striking another blow despite the odds, and then finally his badly smitten armies, exhausted by their losses and exertions withdrew out of the bloody battle altogether.

The christian losses in the whole battle was over nine hundred and fifty thousand, while the glandelinians lost 3,456,666 in killed wounded and prisoners the fallen amounting up to 1,789,000 and most were wounded. General Hanson then continued to persue Federal.

In the meantime reports were coming in that general vivian, to begin the second year, of the war had intentions to make another invasion into glandelinia, as now armies enough for this move had been mobolised during all the first year of the war. On the twenty ninth of march nintoen twelve or thirteen, the Glandelinian force under a new commander which was three hundred thousand strong advanced on Convents and orphan asylums setting them on fire, and causing the deaths of their inmates. Those who escaped were lined up or shot down. The Blessed Sacrament was abused, and insulted and children were continually massacred in all the brutal ways any one can think of. Hospitals were sacked or burned down, the sick inmates, and the women and children were fairly cut to pieces, railroad tracks were torrup up, and trains wrecked as fast as they came. All those inside the trains were massacred in short order, and their heads, intestines, hearts legs, arms or the whole opened body, carried or paraded on pikes. It was a raid of butchery. Nuns were insulted and often put to death, pre priests were massacred and any house in their path or towns and villiages were razed to the ground. Thousands fled before the raiders, deciding to rather die in the forest fires still burning, than fall into the hands of the butchers. The raiders were soon found to be a part of Manleys armies and they thought by the means of the raids and forest fires they could check general Vivians advance southward. Many barrels of salt, lime and flour, were carried out cattle, hogs, and sheep were driven off, eggs were seized or destroyed, and wood and big lumber piles were set ablaze. Barley, wheat, flaxseed, apples corn, potatoes oats bran, and butter worth five hundred thousand dollars fell into the hands of the raiders. Out in the country surrounding the town of Aurandicallio were many strong cowboy ranches, and they fearing the ruin of their cattle debated about it, and soon formed quite a force. The cowboys set fire to the dry grass in the locat ion where the snow had melted away, and set the fire in the direction were the raiders were supposed to be advancing, and the one who took the lead send out the proclamantion for all the other ranches to take part. In a few days there were over ninty five thousand cowboys armed to the teeth, and many more were coming to the aid to save their cattle, homes and the like from destruction. The little children could not be quieted and many were kept indoors. They knew that if the little ones caught by the raiders would probably be opened up, for there was no telling what the glandelinians in their frenzy would do. General vivian himself heard of the collection and laughed.

"Little do the Glandelinians know the cowboys." He said with a smile. "Every cowboy is a marksman and many as they are they will regret it if they raid the ranches on them"

In the meantime general Manley was retreating southward. One of the cowboys whose name was Hondon podger recieved a number of cannon from the government and their main leader Richard Bandekeye secured twenty five battle flags. Thus the tremendous raid was causing the cowboys to form an army with every sheriff and every foreman elected as a leader.

Bandekeyes their chief leader put on a uniform of a general, and this collection seemed to be amicable by their dress, but it was nevertheless no play. The enemy miles away had already caused considerable destruction, but Manley was retreating on account of christian armies and raging forest fires which having changed its course was traveling toward his armies, and between general viviane. Violet and her sisters who were advancing from kindernines command elsewhere with a considerable force of boyscouts came upon them while they were drilling. They were not really within reach of the cowboys but they saw them from a high rise of ground. It seemed a laughable sight to see the peculiar way they drilled, but nevertheless a thrill ran through the little girls when they saw the formation. They found quite an army over one hundred thousand strong all on horseback, all in uniforms of different colors, but still with the samebig hats. Violet and her sisters realised that the raiders were advancing in a very dangerous location and had already spread two days past to the Angelinians under Manley, and the glandelinian general Manley having succeeded in outdistancing the conflargration had changed his course, deciding to beat the cowboys at their own game, who were really five hundred thousand strong now, instead of one hundred thousand as seen by violet and her sisters. For several days the raids moved forward in another direction and more horrible slaughter and depredations ensued. Many more orphan asylums were burned, convents and churches were sacked and burned, farms were laid in waste, and the children carried off only to be butchered. They carried off herds of cattle, laid villiages in waste, and destroyed every farm in their path of advance.

The cowboys now five hundred and twenty five thousand three hundred and thirty three strong made a general formation at Swanoinoondia tward where general Manley was advancing. General Vivian himself was advancing tward the city, and indeed a battle was threatening between the opposing forces. Violet was closest to the city with her force of boyscouts and eluding another forest fire, came upon a force of raiders under general Edwin Snyder. Violet's boyscouts in the sanguinary conflict was outnumbered, but had the br best ground and held them at bay for three hours, untill the boyscouts had used up their ammi ammunition. then up came general Scanlon with a force of Abyss inki, Abyssinkilians and the enemy were repulsed with the loss of two thousand seven hundred killed and ten thousand wounded, the losses of Scanlons army being over eleven thousand in killed and wounded, and that of the Boyscouts five hundred. This was known as the battle of" SANKAHARIANIA RUN!"
The next day Violet's forces of boyscouts came within sight of the large army of cowboys it being a warm afternoon for that part of March the way the sudden warmer weather starts in the spring of Calverinia. Their cattle had been driven into the barns at the approach of the Angelinians and violet advanced to talk with Bandekeyes.

"Hulle lookst de angel cheeld." He exclaimed extending a welcome hand to the little girl. "Are ye commander of the so called Angelinian boyscouts, or the so called big divisions?"

"We comm command two regiments of boyscouts only." Answered Violet with a salute. "You need fear no danger of being overwhel med overwhelmed as the whole christian army is racing for this city to cut off Manleys escape twardthe south. General Vivian is going to punish general Manley good and proper."

"And will we?" queried Bandekyes. "We'll show the skunks how to raid us all right, and butcher the poor children."

Her sisters came riding up just then with the van of the boyscouts and sounded a halt within twenty yards of the cowboys.

"Order arms." Commanded Bandekeyes, and the guns touching the ground simultaneously made a tremendious roar, the cowboys being well drilled, and having been dismounted at this time. Two of Violet's sisters dismounted, tied their horses to the nearest trees, and then with Violet and several of the boys started scouting. Angeline who with her other sisters remained behind formed the boyscouts in long lines, and then rode back and forth giving sweep commands to the officers of the boyscouts. Violet, Jennie, and joice, with thirty of the boys went off on foot and after traveling three hours reached the summit of a hill of moderate height, and from there saw the raiders approaching in full force.

"Quick Jennie warn the men and have them come and take up positions on this hill." Said Violet. "We must give them a surprise." I'

"Yes and I'll send two of the boyscouts with you" Said joice.

Jennie with two of the best boys was off like a flashe Reaching an apparently abandonded barn she forced her way in, secured three mounted horses, and then dashed off in full gallop just as the farmer who owned the horses came dashing up.

"Say you little simpletons bring back those horses or I'll tan your hides."

He shouted in a rage.

The two boyscouts were back in a moment.

"See here sir." One of them said indignantly. "How dare you to talk to one of general Vivians daughters like that.? We have to have the horses to get the troops and you cannot hinder us. Here jump on my horse in front. You are my prisoner." And as he drew his revolver and leveled it at him, the farmer obeyed.

"But this is an our outrage sir." He protested. "You stole my horses, and now you make me a prisoner."

"No such a thing." Answered the boyscout rather i with emotion now. "We need to loan loan your horses to reach the christian lines as the enemy is coming, and we could not waste time to ask you for the lone of them when you was no where in sight, and as you insulted one of general vivian daughters, and abused us, I will have to arrest you as it is my f duty. As to an outrage, we'll see what general Vivian has to say."

"But you broke into my barn." Said the farmer as they dashed on. "I call that downright stealing."

"Oh you do!" Said the boyscouts. "Well what ever it may be it was not I who broke into your barn, and who it was is none of your buisness. And besides I do not want to hear another word out of you. You are arrested for refusing aid to the cause, and that's all there is to it."

The farmer did not say anything more as they were going a at too terrific pace for further ta talking. But the boyscout did not lower his pistol once, and soon they came within sight of the line of b cowboys.

"Form into line boys for the raiders are coming." He shouted.

They were ready in a few minutes then their general shouted;

"Shoulder arms."

The men obeyed.

"Mount horses double quick."

This was done.

"Forward to the charge double quick."

Then with the prisoner guarded by ten soldiers, Jennie and the boyscouts ji joined them in the advance with her sisters. Ten minutes passed, then violet and Joice came up on foot with the other boys.

"Then so you have a prisoner!" Cried one of the boys while Violet and Joice looked at the men q uestionly. "And he is dressed like like a farmer." Added Violet.

"Is he a spy!" asked Angeline.

"No" Answered one of the boys with a laugh. "I and he had a quirrael quirral and I thought I would satisfy my feelings by taking him prisoner."

"What was it about?" Asked Violet.

The boy told of the insult and what caused it. At first Violet was indignant and gave the farmer a scolding th at he never forgot. And indeed this farmer she suspected of something else besides a man taking care of fields and stocks, and decided to have the boys find out for sure by a cross examination.

"Two of you boys search him. I believe he is a spy and no farmer." She said.

The farmer was searched throughoutly but nothing was found on him except two photographs of children, one of a woman, and several rolls of money.

"What is your name?" One of the boys asked sternly.

"Samuel Perkins."

"There are you from. What city or town did you reside at before being on this farm?"

"I only lived on the farm."

"I don't believe you. Tell me the truth or I will have you shot as a spy."

"I'm telling the truth."

"That is no way to answer me Samuel Perkins. Either talk decently or pay dearly for it. Why did you call the two boys, and Captian Jennie vivian a simpleton?!?!!"

"Because she stole my hoss. She broke into my barn and took my hosses without permission."

"Well you could have granted a permit anyhow as it was urgent. Do you know that men who refuse to do anything for the cause are considered as traitors."?

The division of cowboys already coming back the leader reported that the foe had disappeared. The farmer had not given an answer to the boyscouts last question.

"Well they are." He went on. "You caused the raiders to get away from us. I believe you are a spy though you have no papers to prove it. Some spies you know usually lose their papers or other evidences either by carelessness, or throw them away on purpose to hide identifications."

"Indeed he must surely have dropped it or threw it away." Said Joice "for on the ground I found these plans written to general Manley dropped by somebody. No Angelinian, or Calverinian would talk like he did unless he was a grouch, or too stingy to led a person anything."

"You said you would tan my hide." Said Jennie laughing pleasantly. "Well I'm here now. If you think you are able ,come and do it. I myself would have arrested you, but the boy was too quick. Don't you know many glandelinians paid their lives dearly for interfering with me and my sisters?!?!"

"I was only fooling."Said the farmer.

"Only fooling!"Exclaimed the boyscout.

"Yes."

"It is because you are afraid."Corrected Jennie with a look of scorn."Man though you are I suppose you are now realizing that us Angelinians are over you, whether we be men or children."

"Where is your farm?"Asked one of the other boys. I don't even believe you have a farm. If you have any farm I can bet any money you stole it, by killing the owner, or buying it out of stolen money."

"No I'm telling the truth."Said the farmer."I'll show it to you."

"Oh we believe you have it alrea all right, as we cannot doubt it."Said Violet."But we don't believe you obtained it honsely, only to set as a spy.And never mind we don' t care to walk down there again. And as you have insulted my sister, you shall have to atone for it or go before general Hanson vivian."

"But she and severalof the boys stole my hoss es."Protested the farmer."She has no right to keep it anyhow."

"That is the atonement."Said violet sharply."Either give to the Angelinian boyscouts one of your horses or go to general Hanson vivian this very night, and also we'll devastate your whole farm and burn down everything on you."

"But I need the whole three of the hosses."Pleaded the farmer."They are the only ones I have.I'll give you my farm if necessary but I want the three hosses."

"The old farm is no good to us."Laughed Joice."We have to dash too much here and there, and cannot stay in one place at all."But if you don't want to give up th e horse you shall remain a prisoner, and your farm shall be devastated. I will give you untill seven thirty for your decision and if you still refuse to atone you will face the great general. He will make it hot for the un insult for we are his maides. We o f ou course have no malice against you ,and are wishing to save you if possible, but if you don' t help us to save you by giving up your horse or on of them at least then it is not our fault. We are over the boyscouts as we are their leaders but two of them had been witnesses of your insult to Jennie, and if we wanted to we could not save you as they would cause it to be talked over the whole camp while you remain a prisoner under us and then god help you if Hanson hears the gossip. It is not us who wants the horse, but the boy who arrested you. Come do not be a fol fool. We are now sure you are not a spy and can save you if you only r listen to reason. We are asking you for our sakes as well."

"I won't decide d untill seven thirty."Was the surly answer.

The prisoner was led away by his captors and the boyscouts encamped, Jennie bringing the horse up to her sisters.

"It's a beauty ."Said Angeline."It puts me in mind of black Beauty."

"Yes he is black al over."Said violet."Except at the top of the head."

"I can't believe it is his o horse."Said joice."I believe the horses themselves are stolen."

"What makes you think so?"Asked violet.

"It's my suspicions."Answered Joice"

"Jennie"Said Violet"Go find from the man the name of this horse.If the horse answers to that name then my suspicions are wrong."

Jennie soon went off and came back again.

"The farmer says the horses name is bull."

"But I don't believe it.He must be telling you a lie. Have him brought here."

"In a few moments the farmer was again before violet.

"I don't believe that this horse really belongs to you.Tell me his right name."Said Violet.

"It's bull."

"I don't believe believe you.Tell me the truth or I will have it taken away from you anyway."

"Well then its Nellie!"

"Before you said it was Bull. Are you sure it's Nellie."

"Her name is Nellie Bull and what is more I'm not fooling and you can get no other name for it."Said the Farmer.

"I believe you are still lying. Call the horse by its right name and if it goes to you I'll believe it is yours."

"But can I have it back. ? I'm so sorry I insulted your sister. It was only bad temper."

"Ask that boyscout whether you can have it back!"She answered."We can do nothing for you."

"All right."Said the boy. You can have it back, but you will have to go before general Hanson vivian. The insult has to be atoned even if you die for it."

"But when I'm sorry that is atoning for it ain't it."

"don't money do? I have plenty of——"

"ho wants your old money? Money won't atone for the insult to the little girl with her sisters went through a lot of suffering on account of you Glandelinian ...ers. But then you did not prove to violet that the horse is yours yet."

"a man called Nellie Bull."And the horse went toh him.

"Well I believe you."Said Joice.

"Boys bring him back to his prison, but bring here again at seven thirty or ...eller."Said the boyscout.

"e man was led away and the horse was put into one of the horses ranches stalls.

"Hay I've seen many a pretty child, but you children who are fairer than faries I suppose do not know that a little girl Darling of the Nation called Anna Arcmburg had been murdered by the Glandelinians not long ago? Your father general vivian has learned of it, and he with his army is coming to reinforce Hanson. He is only ...e away now."

"Oh how can we thank you."said Violet."You are very kind. And we know about that Arcmburg murder, which some say has the fate of the nation upon her blood. But I do not believe it."

"Well I have taken a lki liking to ye angels anyway for your loyalty to God the Almighty."He said not being able to speak good english as he was an Abbissinian.

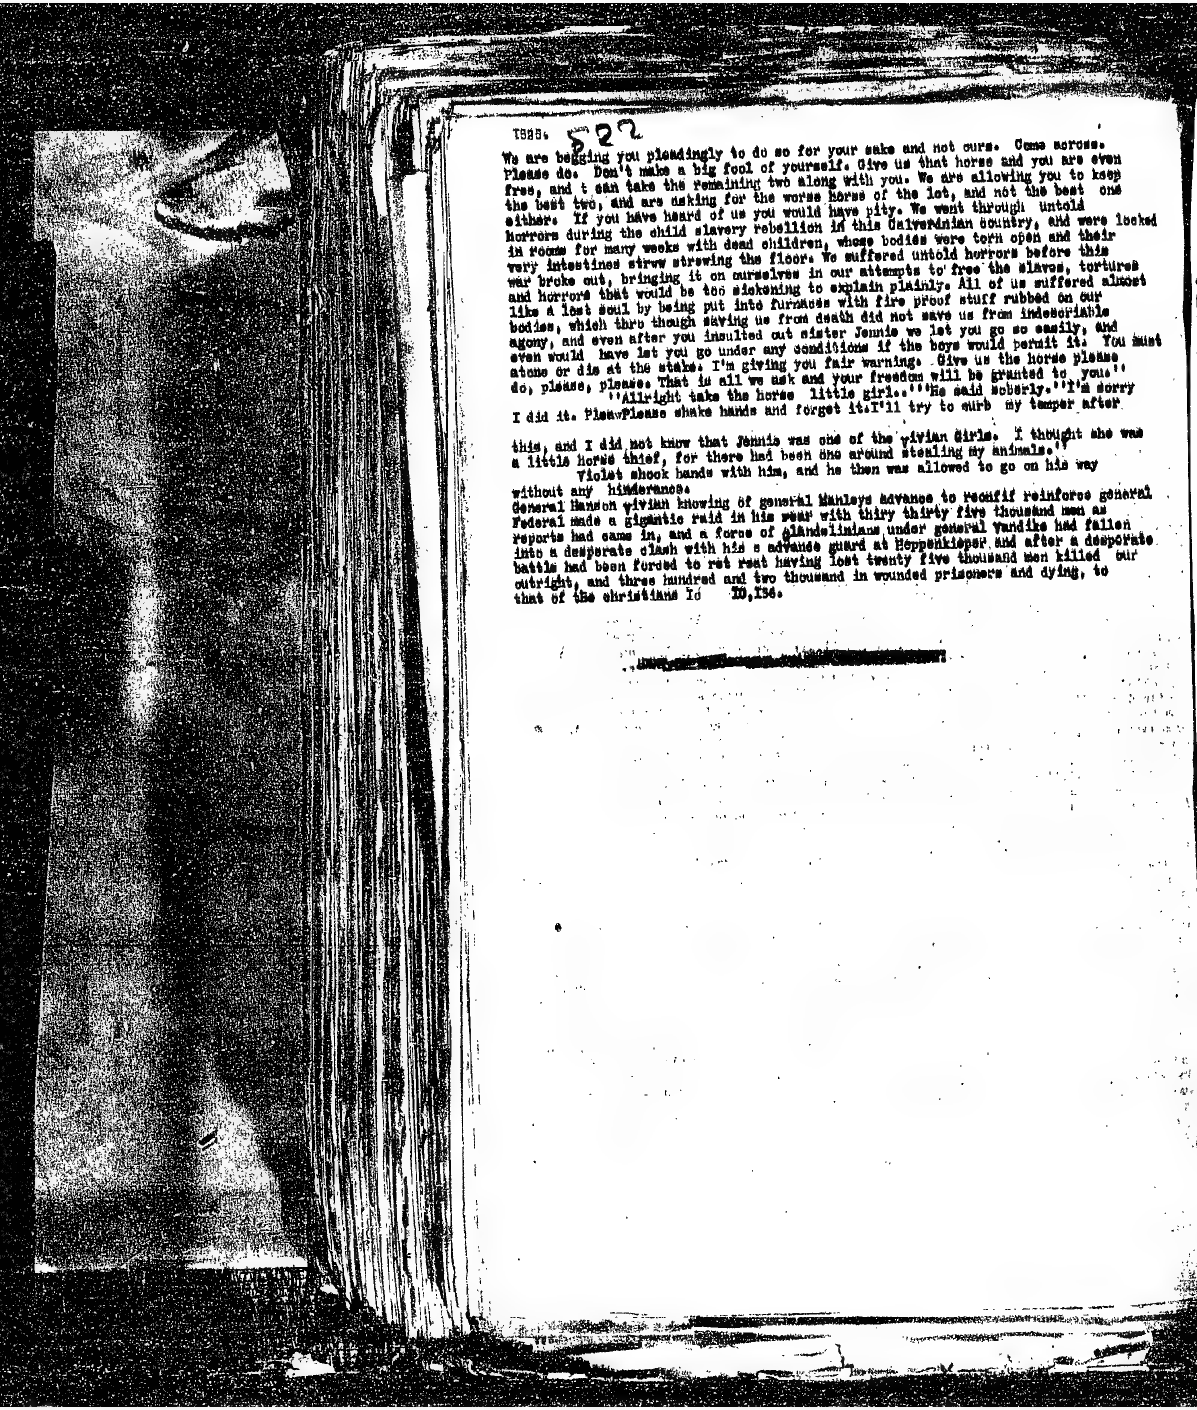
"I'm proud hoff you little goils and do wish you were my haughters. Come and review my harmy od cowpunchers, hand see how you like them."

Violet and her sisters were only too glad to do so. They were brought to the second leader whose name was Whilliam John Hubbard. He was like a prize fighter in build but had a kind face.

"These har the brave chield ercmies."Said Handekyce. Athey har the haughters of the great geninerall Ho vivian."

"Pleased to meet you."Said general Hubbard, and he , lifted Violet and pressed her closely to him and embrasced her fondly as she nestled against his broad breast Rough man as they were they treated the little girls more nicely than any man could have done. The little girls had never been embraced so fondly before. It was like them like being in the aras of ag angels. Even when passing among the men they were pelted with all kinds of flowers, cannons were fired, muskets and pistols were fired and flags were waved fra ... frantically. One of the men the little girls thought they had seen before. They soon found out he was their old time school boy companion, for he resembled that boy a good deal and had seemed to be in earlier days a bitter enemy of the little girls because he had seemed to hate the Catholic Religion. And he really was the boy as he confessed.

"I am he"He said."And would do all I can to atone it. The teacher loved you and my meaness was only through jealiously. I beg you pardon a thousand times."



After seven o-clock came the happy little girls took their departure and were soon in their own camp again once more. At seven thirty five the farmer was again brought before the leading boyscout.

"What is your decision?"He asked."Death as a spy, or the horse?"

The man did not answer.

"Now Mr Perkins "Said Violet reproachfully/"You called my poor Sister Jennie a simpleton and threatened to give her a thrashing for borrowing one of your horses. All Jennie did not v even know that you were there, or that it was your horse in the first place. You insulted her unjustly, and yet the boys are making it easier for you than general hanson vivian ever would. We told you before that he is our uncle, and there is no joking about it t either, and neither are we playing at war with you. What is being done here is more sencre e sincere than even our words can make it and we can prove it easily if you do not listen to reason. You are indeed foolish to refuse us the horse.

"I wanted it to save your life as that is the only means to prevent the boyscout from having you brought before general hanson vivian. We are over him by nine dr degrees in leadership, but as you have insulted Jennie my sister we are powerless to aid her in any other way. She does not feel the insult at all, and neither do I and my other sisters, by but the boys feel it keenly and are thirsting for revenge. General Hanson is indeed our uncle but either he or my father swore to put any one to death for insulting us, atonement or not, and here we are keeping it quiet, and making it easier by asking you to make a sacrifice. You have thirteen horses besides the three w you have here and ought to be willing to at least part withone if you wish to save your lifelife. We see no other way to save you ourselves, but by having the atonement come from that horse because you was stingy with two of them. We ought to by rights take them all away and devastate your farm as you are a real glandelinian, and yet we would not take even one horse if there was a better way to save you. Now decide, for if you refuse and something serious happens do not blame us little girls.

We are begging you pleadingly to do so for your sake and not ours. Come across. Please do. Don't make a big fool of yourself. Give us that horse and you are even free, and t can take the remaining two along with you. We are allowing you to keep the best two, and are asking for the worse horse of the lot, and not the best one either. If you have heard of us you would have pity. We went through untold horrors during the child slavery rebellion in this Galvestonian country, and were locked in rooms for many weeks with dead children, whose bodies were torn open and their very intestines strew strewing the floor. We suffered untold horrors before this war broke out, bringing it on ourselves in our attempts to free the slaves, tortures and horrors that would be too sickening to explain plainly. All of us suffered almost like a lost soul by being put into furnaces with fire proof stuff rubbed on our bodies, which thro though saving us from death did not save us from indescribable agony, and even after you insulted out sister Jennie we let you go so easily, and even would have let you go under any conditions if the boys would permit it. You must atone or die at the stake. I'm giving you fair warning. Give us the horse please do, please, please. That is all we ask and your freedom will be granted to you."

"Allright take the horse little girl.""He said soberly."I'm sorry I did it. PleasPlease shake hands and forget it.I'll try to curb my temper after this, and I did not know that Jennie was one of the vivian Girls. I thought she was a little horse thief, for there had been one around stealing my animals."

Violet shook hands with him, and he then was allowed to go on his way without any hinderance.

General Hanson vivian knowing of general Manleys advance to reenfif reinforce general Federal made a gigantic raid in his rear with thirty thirty five thousand men as reports had came in, and a force of Glandelinians under general Vandike had fallen into a desperate clash with his s advance guard at Hoppenkieper and after a desperate battle had been forced to ret reat having lost twenty five thousand men killed our outright, and three hundred and two thousand in wounded prisoners and dying, to that of the christians Id 10,136.

[redacted]

THE DEFENSE OF THE FUGITIVES, THE EXPERIENCES OF GENERAL MYLETZA AND HIS OPINIONS F SOME MATTERS. MYLETZA ARGUES WITH HIS GENERALS.

There was a gentle bustle at the christian camp in the woods near the edge of the bog land as a stormy afternoon drew to a close. General Constantinian Aronburg moved quietly to and fro while His army was breaking a portion of the camp for further marching as could be arranged in the compass, for the whole army was to go forth that night northeastward to head for the protection of Angelinia Gathia in case the other armies would fail in protecting the city! The afternoon shadows stretched eastward, and the round red sun was just sinking Nearvthe h r horizon and his beams shown yellow and calm int into the tent where Angelinia Aronburg and Jennie urner were sitting with the little boy between them. Both looked thoughtful and merious and traces of tear k tears were on their cheeks.

"Yes Angelina" said Jennie "urner Turner" I know all you say is perfectly true. You are a good steady brave girl like myself, and Violet, and her sisters...A great deal better than I, or they, and I will try to do exactly as you say. I'll try to act worthy as a girl scout sure now in the emergency. I'll do all I can to help you free the..."

to find the christian lines d under Emperor vivian. God Almi hty Almighty knows we all mean to do well---try hard to do well in our cause, even when everything is hard against us, and now we'll for get forget all perils for the presence, and such as Constantinian Aronburgs give us the right compass as to direction we'll go to Emperor Vivians army under a large and powerful escort."

" And when we get to Emperor Vivians army" said Gertrude Angeline" I can help you more with your own scout work. I can do scouting and spying good and proper, and I under stand more than others, and between us we can find a lot to do for our country yet."

" Yes Angelinia so long as we have each other and this little boy whom you say is general Oswells son. Oh Angelinia is the Glandelinians were good and knew what a blessing it would be for children to be all free from bondage. I've often wondered to see men that should make children their own instead of slaves. Why I feel rich and strong and hearty though we have nothing but ourselves and our weapons and a country to fight for. I feel as if I could scarcely ask God for more, Yes though I've worked hard every day for the cause and have not a cent of money, nor a camp to cover me, not a spot of land to call my own yet we will some day for I'm satisfied, thankful, I will cluse with the enemy and help fight them till all children are free."

" But we are not quite out of danger yet" Said Angelinia Aron Angelinia.

" We are far away from Emperor vivians army."

" " orm" said Jennie" urner" but it seems as if I feel like we'll be there and it makes me strong and happy."

At this moment voices were heard outside the tent in earnest conversation, and very soon an officer entered the tent, Angelinia having opened it for him as he rapped.

General Callahan was there, and withhis another officer whom he introduced as Gen.. Vivian-Anna.This general vivian-Anna was tall and stout, black haired, with an expression of great acuteness and shrewdness in his face. He had not the placid, quiet air of general Callahan on the contrary a particularly wide awake and au fait appearance, like a man who rather prides himself on knowing what he is about and he is going to do, and keeping a bright outlook ahead., peculiarities which sorted luther oddly with his other companion...

" Our friend general Maru Francis vivianuh Vivianuuna" has discovered something of great importance to the storest of you and your little girl companion Jennie," said general Callahan" and I think it would be very best for you to hear it on time."

" That I have" said general Vivianuuna" and therefore it shows the use of a gene als generals who usually go out on scouting tours at any hour of the day and night, and I always sleeping with one ear open. Last evening I and a party of my officers stopped at a little lone house to get some refreshments thinking the civilians patronage back a little about twenty miles from the ye Yellow Bluff road. I believe you remember the place general Callahan where we encountered a body of Glandelinian cavalry and had a tough fight with them and worsted them. I all I and my officers an about ten in number were hungry and thirsty and there fore we entered the little tavern and ordered something to eat and drink.

Not far from us but not seen b or noticed by them were two men sitting in the same room disguised as National officers sitting around a small table, drinking whiskey and talking and I thought before I finished my supper I'd h just see what they were up to especially as I heard them mention the words " Christian Dogs"

" go' says one' those two girl spies are up in general Constantinian Aronburgs army no doubt." Then I listened more carefully while a eating at the same time and found that they were talking about you girls and the little boy you have with you. so I listened and heard them make all their plans. The girl Jennie Turner if captured was to be sent to Manley to be sold into slavery, and manley would make an example of her to keep all other child spies from entering hi his camps, and Angelinia Aronburg two of them were going to sent down to Glandelinia city to sell on their own account, and they calculated to get one thousand ri ght hundred dollars for her; and thevlittle boy they said was going back to the master from whom he was taken. They said they had with them a thousand and hundred secret disguised agents within our lines already, who when they either one of this number say their chance would capture the two girls and the boy, and you two girls were to be taken before a judge, and any officer of the army who choosed to does was to swear to the judges as to you two girls being his runaway slaves, and got you delivered to him to take south. They've got a right option of the very truck you are going to take for the night and they are within the camp in disguise six thousand or eight thous and strong. As they cannot be recognized, being disguised as Angelinian soldiers or officers generals even so now what's to be done?"

The group group that stood in various attitudes, after this communicationwas surely worthy of a moving picture. Jennie turner had a face of the deepest concern and stood with clenched fists and glowing eyes and looking as any girl might whose very mother was to be sold at auction, and her sister and brother sent to a trader, all even under the shelter of a christian army because the Nationals do not know who the secret enemies were. General Calahan looked profoundly thoughtful, Angelinia Aronburg had thrown her arm tightly around the boy she was looking p at her in surprise. Gertrude , suspected this was the truth for she had discovered she was shadowed all that day by men she did not like.

" What shall we do Jennie?" said Gertrude faintly looking at her pistols holsters.

" I know what we shall do" said Jennie as she stepped into her little room and began examining her pistols.

" Ay,ay" said Vivianamna nodding his head to Calahan" You see general how it will come to."

" I see indeed" said the general, sighing" But , pray, it won't come to that within the christian lines. A queer war. Enemies within the very camp by thousands and no one can tell who they are."

" I don't want to involve any one with us or for us" said Angelinia Aronburg herself herself" If you lend or give me two of the swiftest horses in the army and direct us we will ride alone to the next town. We both are good at our pistols, and brave as death and despai despair."

" Ah yes Angelinia" said Vivianamna" But you'll need a strong escort for all that. And its unusual but nevertheless you are quite quite welcome to do all the fighting as you may know but some of us generals know a thing about the road, and the approaches to the town of San Pedro that you do not. Mylatzas army has that town by now. It's worsted a big National army there not long ago."

" but I don't want to involve you general" said Jennie herself.

" Involve me" said the general with a curious and keen expression of face. " Well when you involve me or my officers, just let us know."

" General Vivianamna is a wise and skillful man" said general Callahan" Therefore you two brave girls will do well to abide by his judgement and " he added laying his hand kindly on Jennie's shoulder and pointing to the pistolsss....." Be not over hasty with these unless you are outside the christian lines------as your young blood is hot and in your excitement you might hit friends, instead of enemies....."

" I will attack no man unless he attacks me" said Jennie turner" All we girls ask of the glandelinians is to be let alone, and we will go peacifully back to the emperors camp but---"" she paused and her brow darkened and her face worked," I've seen how it turns out when many little children have been sold to gatera general hunleys army officers. I know what and why they are sold for, and it is like selling them to the infernal regions, and therefore do you think we two girls, who rescued him this little boy from the Glandelinian camp am going to stand by and see them take the little boy and sell him,"when God has given us the good tarkent with pistols and sabres and good horses to make a safe flight or defend him. ? No God help me, I and gertrude are the kind who'll fight to the last breath before they dh shall ever take him again. As to making us slaves let them just try it. Can you blame us???"

" Mortal man cannot blame you or gertrude either. Flesh and blood could not do other wise. Woe under the glandelinians because of their offenses but woe unto them through whom the offenses comes."

" Would not even you sir do the same if you were in our place.?"

" Well,---yes but I pray that I be not be forced to shoot friends by mistake." said Calahain" We must be careful."

" I think we could as easily detect them if we try in such a case" said general Vivianamna drawing his long sabre and looking it over carefully. " I am not sure girls if we would do wrong to shoot down any person caught shadowing thee."

" Is Glandelinians cannot war without fighting children too, said Callahan" then the children should feel free to fight also, but the leaders of ur Abbiesnnian pe l people have taught a more excellent way, for the way the glandelinians do wort work not in the righteousness of God, and theard therefore let us pray the Lord our God that we Nationals do not be tempted t, committ a big massacure of glandelinian soldiers. But it'll go sur surely against glandelinians making war on children, and therefore they do not receive quarter, and none can recieve it unless they leave the children alone."

" I hope I don't to tempted either" said general Vivianamna" but if we are tempted too much" why let the glandelinians look out(the windos) that's all."

" It's quite plain that you too was born in Abyssinkila" I said general Calahan smiling." Th. old Abyssinkilian nature has its way also on in you pretty strong."

To tell the truth, general Vivianamna had been before his entering the army a heavy two fisted backwoodsman, a vigorious hunter, and a dead shot at any kind he went for, but having entered the army and wooed the Abbiesnnian cause had been moved by the power of its righteouse to join the best of the Abbiesnnian armies ever organized, and though he was an honest sober and efficient soldier and nothing particular could be brought against him yet all other nationals could see in him the qual al quality of a man that gives a glandelinian enemy no quarter if he has his own way about thevmatter.

" General Vivianamna will ever have ways of his own" said Jennie turner smiling" but we all think that I his heart is in the right place. after all and he means right."."....."

" Well " said Angelinia Aronburg" is it not b best that we hasten our flight?"

" I got up - at three oclock this morning and came on with all speed full tow or two or three hours of the main plotters if they started fot our camp the time they had planned. Therefore it is not safe to start until dark at any rate, for there are some evil columns of glandelinian cavarly patrolling around our own camps that might be disposed to meddle with us, if they saw your column and us in the daylight, and the fighting would delay us more than waiting, but as its seven ole oclock now we may venture within two hours. You two must see that all the coast is clear and then go into some tent and disguise yourselves and the little boy so no one will recognize either of you. I will go over to my own command and engageca squadron of my Pinkie Abyssinkillian and concentinian dragoons to come behind on their swiftest horses and with their best of weapons, and to keep a bright look out on all roads, and any one of these men could even shoot ahead and let us know if there were any danger. I'm going out now to select a troop of the best crackshots I have in my army and to have them be in ready readiness and to see about other matters. We will have a pretty fair start and stand a good chance to get to another town further northward b f. before any of the persuers can come up with us. Go have good courage and keep calm girls; this is not the first ugly scrap that've been in for the behalf of fugitives and child slaves." said general Vivianamna as he closed the door.....

" General Vivianamna is pretty shrewd" said Calahan" He will do the best that can be done for you girls, for you are to go under the escort of his whole army with the cavarly watching every road."

" All I am sorry for just now" said Angelinia Aronburg " is the risk your army will take for only two little girls."

" You will oblige us to say no more about it" said general Calahain." What we do it is our duty to do, and therefore we can do no other. And now" orderly" said he turning to his aide camp" hurry the preparations for these two good brave girls for we must not not send them away fasting."

And while the orderly were bus busy preparing mess Gertrude and Jennie sat in their little tent with their arms folded about each other in such talk as the best of frien friends have when they fear that a few hours may part them forever...

" Angelinia said Jennie" All people that have the best of friends relatives and the like, and have houses and lands and money, and all those things, can't love as we do the fighting as girl scouts for a righteous hav cause have nothing but each other and the friendship of the Vivian Girls and their Nation. Till I knew you and them, no creature of any other side ever cared anything about me, but my poor heart broken mother and sister and brother. I saw my poor fat sr when he was killed in his first fight with the foe, and my younger sister killed because she resisted so stoutly; when soldiers tried to carry her off. My poor mother wounded and bleeding was almost dead and when I came into the room when the foe was beaten off, she said to me, ' poor Jen nie your last and best friend is going. what will become of you poor girl?' and I got up and threw my arms around her, and cried and sobbed, and she cried too, and those were the last kind words I ever recieved except from the Nationals whom I joined and my heart all slithered up and feeling as dry as ashes, till I met you and the beautiful Vivian Girl and Angelinia Aronburg I'll give my last drop of blood but they shall not take the little boy from you or me or you from me, whoever get's you and the little boy must walk over my dead body....."

" Oh Lord have Mercy please" if said Gertrude" if He will only let us find our way back to emperor Vivians lines together, that is all we ask... We have a thousand miles miles probably to go."

" Sometimes I cannot help doubting whether God is on our side or not" said jennie speaking less to Gertrude than pouring out her own bitter thoughts. " does he see all these horrors the glandelinians commit, and all they do to the child slaves, and the way they carry on this horrible war. If so why does he let such things happen and not put down with a interfering Hand. And they tell us that the national cause will never end that there are too many enemies even within our own government houses in secret disguises. The..."

Landelinians are rich and happy, healthy, and strong in numbers of men, they are members of powerful ruthless societies, and they get along so easy in the world, and have it all their own way, and poor honest faithful christians, and God only knows how many little children stolen from their homes in various christian nations, yes stolen, christian children probably as good and as the same as ours-----are lying in the very dust under their wicked feet. They buy them and sell them, seperate brother and sister, and make trade of their hearts blood, and groans and tears, and kill them and work them to death even when they are too sick and too weak to stand up---and God lets them, and let's those who are fighting in His cause lose out in the conflict so often."

" "Oh girls" said general Calahan from outside and then he entered" He sat down opened a book that appeared to be a bible, and then he said" Listen to this psa psalem" it may do you good Jennie. "

"The two girls drew their seat near to the general in and Gertrude wiping their eyes or her eyes rather sat still while the general rad read as follows;

" "But as for me my f feet were almost gone, my steps had well nigh slipped. For I was envious of the foolish, when I saw the prop prosperity of the wicked. They are not in trouble like other men, neither are they plagued like other men. Therefore pride compasseth them as a chain, violence covered them as a garment. Their eyes stand out with fatness, they have more than heart could wish. They are corrupt and speak wickedly concerning oppression, they speak loftily. Therefore His people return and the waters of a full cup are wrung out to them, and they say, how doth God know? and is there knowledge in the Most H High.!"

" I bet you feel the same way Jennie." said the general.

" it is so indeed" said Jennie" as well as if I wrote those very words. But yet it does not comfort me one bit."

" Then hear" said the general" when I thought to know this it was too painful for me until I went into the sanctuary of the Lord God. Then understood I their end. Surely thou thou didst set them in slippery places, though casted'st them down to complete destruction. As a dream when one awaketh so oh Lord when thou awakest, though thou shalt c despise their image. Nevertheless I am continually with Thee, Thou hasth holden me by my right hand. Thou shalt guide me by Thou council and afterwards recieve me to glory. It is good for me to draw near unto God. I have put my trust in the Lord my God."

These words of holy trust read by the friendly old Lebleannian general stole like sacred strains like sacred music over the harassed and chafed spirit of Jennie, and after he ceased, she sat with a gentle and subdued expression on her fine features.

" If this were all in this world of strife and sorrow, Jennie said the general " You might indeed ask, where is the Lord ? But it surely is often that those who have the least of this life whom he ch chooseth for the Heavenly kingdom. In all you do for the cause put your trust in Him and no matter what befalls you in your adventures or no matter how discouraging the cause seems no matter how discouraging the cause seems to be he He will make everything come out alright in the long run. He never in the long run allows a failure in a righteous cause. Look at the great American rival war. That cause is just as holy as ours and did not the Northern armies win in the long run when early in the war no Nation in other countries could boast of worse defeats and disasters? Look at waterloo. The disaster to the French army there was nothing as compared to every defeat of the Union armies in the American rival war civil war. So don't lose heart as to the outcome of our own cause. we'll win don't fear about that."

If these words had been spoken by some easy self indulgent exhorter from whose mouth they might have come merely as a pious and rhetorical flourish proper to be used in all all kinds of kinds of people in distress, perhaps they might not have very much effect, but coming from a christian general who even was one of the Catholic chaplains and who had daily and calmly risk risked all the dangers of war for the cause of God and child slaves, they had a weight that could not but be felt keenly, and both the poor desolate but brave fugitive girl spies found calmness and strength breathing into them from it.

And now the call for mess was heard, and Gertrude took the little boys hand kindly and led the way to the generals headquarters tent were the supper was to be hand had. As they were sitting down, a light tap sounded at the door, and angeline or Joice vivien herself still in her own disguise as a boyscout entered.

" I just run in she said with these little stockings for the little boy----three pair nice woollen cotton ones. It will be so cold you know when you go further northward. But Im coming along with you too as a guardian and therefore I know you'll keep up your co courage won't you girls!" she added, tripping around to their side of the table and sitting between and placing an arm around each, and then slipping a little piece of cake into the little boys hand. I "I brought two good extra quick firing fourty five calibre weapons so we can surely resist persuers." she added showing two good guns.

" Children let's hurry so we don't be delayed." S id the officer in charge of the mess. " Help your self to whatever you like the best."

" Oh thank you, you too are so kind." said Angelinia.

" Yeh with us and sit down to supper too said Jennie.

" I could not now as I ate ate two hours ago as I have to make pre preparations of my own for for the the trip. I left a force of goodly trusted boy scouts with general Aronburg army and I can't stay a moment, else they will be getting impatient or will fear I too am in danger, and and also Penrod is so particular" said the Princess laughing. " If I don't return as soon as he expects and he thinks I'm in danger he'll start a commiotion in the camp. So good bye for several hours Angelinia; good bye Jennie, the Good Lord grant us all a safe journey, and with a few tripping majestic steps, Joice was out of the mess tent. A little while after the supper was over, a large covered wagon drew up before the entrance, the night was clear and bright with lots of stars in th the sky and general Viviananna ju came down from his horse to attange the passengers of the wagon.

Jennie walked at of the door, with the little boy by the hand and Angelinia by the other. The steps of both girls was firm, their faces settled, and resolute. A big column of cavarly loomed like black ghosts near and general Calahan came at after them;

" You drivers get down for a moment" said general Viviananna" and let me fix the back of the wagon and front so it'll be like a sort of moving fort so the girls can also defend themselves in case we are attacked."

" Here is the small machine gun and the ammunition for it you ordered" said the orderly The general placed it inside the wagon, and the interior of the wagon was made as comfortable as possible for it was to be hard riding. Then come up two boys scouts to the surprise of the girls, and they were Joice and Penrod.

" Penrod are your pistols all in good order" Said the girl in a low firm voice.

" They are as good as machine guns." said the boy.

" And you have no doubt what youwill do if the persuers come?"

" I have a slight doubt of what they won't wish to do." said Penrod throwing open his broad uniform coat and taking a deep breath as he displayed four pistols and two cartridge belts. Do " Do you think I'll let them get the little boy again. Never!"

During this brief colloquy Angelinia Aronburg had handed the little boy into the wagon and then sat down among the buffel buffalo skins besides a few cartridge boxes. Jennie then was lifted in and the boy and girl placed on a rough board seat in front of them, and then the general remounted his horse.

" Farewell dear Neice" said general Concentinian Aronburg as he kissed her.

" God bless you and help you successfully defend Angelinia Agathia" answered all from within. And the wagon drove off with a long line of others rattling and n jolting over the mushy ground. There was no opportunity for conversation on account of the roughness of the way and the noise of the wheels and the sound of marching men and beating horses hufs. The vehicle therefore rumbled on, through long dark stretches of wood land, over wide dreary plains, up hills I hill down valley, and on and on they jogged hour after hour with the whole of Vivianannas army marching close by in long immense armies.

The little boy soon fell fast asleep and lay heavily on Jennie's lap, the latter overcoming her anxieties and yet did not allow herself to go to sleep. Penrod seemed on the whole the briskiest of the company and beguiled the long drive with whistling certain french hymns and songs he knew and american ones too as he rode on to the interest of the girls. But about four oclock in the morning the ears of the general caught the hasty and decided click of a horses hoof coming at a tearing gallop but behind them at some distance, and hearing it also Penrod jogged Joice vivian by the elbow. The army moved on alongside the road but the general himself and the r drivers of the wagon halted and listened.

" That must be one of the Geminis" he said" I think it is Burgar or some one by the sound of his gallop" and he rose and stretched in the saddle and observed a man riding as fast as his horse could go and was was dimly observed at the top of a distant hill.

" There he is I do believe" said the general. The three girls and Penrod sprung out out of the wagon before they knew what they were doing. All stood intensely silent with their faces turned silently upward at toward t the expected messenger. On he came. H But he went down a valley where they could not see him, but they heard the sharp hasty galloping roar coming nearer and nearer, at last they saw him emerge on the top of a rise of ground within hailing distance.

" Yes that's whilliam Sch, louder the head member of the Geminis" said the general and raising his voice" Hallow, there general Schlueder, the Geminis."

" General Viviananna is that you?"

" Yes ,what news---are the persuers coming."

" I do not know anything about persuers sir, but general Mylatses army is right close upon your heels an enormous army. He is trying to in intercept you and force you to fight I thought I'd let you know."

And just as he spoke a breeze brought the faint sound of countless legions of tramping feet tow t ward them mingled with the subdued sound of countless horsemen and rolling artillery wagons and gun caissons.

" In with you children in." said general Viviananna. " I might have to fight this rebel general to morrow morning." And with the wor ds the childfuchildren jumped in, and the drivers lashed the horses to a run, orders came to the army for a forced march and there was a sound that r proved that the cavarly was racing to the rear of the army. The wagons of the whole train rattled, jumped almost flew over the ground, but plainer and still plainer came the noise of at least the big forces of Landelinian cavarly divisions far behind. The children heard it, and looked anxiously out and saw far in the roar on the brow of distant hills outlined against the sky of a break of dawn an enormous seemingly endless surge of horsemen with standards all looming up like some strangely formed shredded wall against the red streaked sky of early dawn. It was the cavalry advance of Mylet ses army. Another hill and a portion of the cavalry had caught sight of the wagon train of M general Vivianannus army whose white cloth covered top ,ade the made them very conspicious at some distance and a loud yell of trum triumph came forward on the wind as the cavalry desired to seize the wagons for supply for the army. The girls sickened and Gertrude strained the little boy closer to her bosom, others prayed, and Jennie and Penrod clutched their pistols with the grasp of despair. Myl general Viviananna without his knowing it had in leaving Aronburgs army moved directly into the path of Mylet ses advancing army army. The persueing cavarly was gaining on them fast, the wagon they rode in made a sudden turn, and brought them near a ledge of a steep overhaving rock, that rose up an isolated ridge or clump in a large lot which was all around it quite clear and smooth smooth. This isolated pile or range of rocks rose up black and heavy against the brighten ing sky, and seemed to promish shelter and concealment for it was positive a portion of the wagon train could not be saved as the cavarly were too many. It was a place well known to the general in his boy hood days, having been familiar with the spot, and it was to gain this spot he had been racing the wagon with the children leaving the others stand standing with a force of infantry to defend them if posible.

" Now for it every one in the wagon said the general riding up as the driver sudde nly suddenly checked his horses and spring from his seat to the ground." Out with you in a twinkling every one, and up into those rocks with a party of soldiers, while I go to deploy my army into a line of battle. orderly thy the horse of the wagon to a tree, and ride ahead to Hansonius and get him and his army to prepare for battle also."

In an instant they they were all out of the window.

" There said gertrude, catching up the little boy " the rest of you take to your own defense, and run now also if you ever did any running before."

Indeed they needed to n have no advice for quicker than you can think it, the whole party were over a ledge of rocks, a and making with all speed for the hill, while the Abbieannian cavarly squadron covered their retreat.

Gertrude who now seemed as leader said " come ahead an" and as they reached the rocks they saw in the tangled traces of the dawn the appearance of the rude but plainly marked foot path leading up among them.

" This is a good position to defend ourselves at a good advantage," said Jolce herself. Jolce went before, springing p the rockly ledge like a goat, with the little boy in her arms. Penrod came second, and gertrude and jennie "urmer brought up the rear. The main force of Glandelinian cavarly had already made a fier e attack pon the soldiers and cavarly guarding the wagon train as could be observed, and as party of the cavarly came up to the stone ledge and with mingled snouts and blasphemies were dismou t dismounting to prepare to follow the fugitives. A few minutes of hastily scrambling brought the latter to the top of the ridge, the path then passed between a narrow defile of some sort, where only one could walk at a time, till suddenly they came to a rift in the or chasm more than a hundred feet in width and beyond which towered a higher hill still seperate from the rest of the ledge standing fully a thousand and ee hundred feet high with its sides facing them steep and very perpend icular. There was a sort of bridge across the chasm over which they all crossed, and then while jolce set the lad down on a smooth platform of crisp green moss that covered the slope of the hill on the better side the others destroyed the bridge.

" up to the top" jole called" spring now once for your lives up the slopes."" said she said as one another sprang up to the summit or half way across. Many fragments of loose rocjs formed a kind of breastworks which sheltered their position from the observation of the Glandelinians down below.

" Well here we all are" said jolce peeing peeping over the stone breastwork to watch the assailants who were coming tumultiously up under the rocks. " Let the glande linians get us if they can for she ever comes p here has to walk single file between these two rocks in fair range of our pistols, and besides cannot cross the chasm do you see."

" I see" said penrod" and now as this matter is a concern of ours let us take all the risk and do all the fighting."

You are quite welcome to do all the fighting Penrod" said jolce chewing on a piece of cheese sh she took from her knuc knapsack as she spoke" But it won't do for me to just look on I suppose. But see those glandelinians are kind of debating down there and looking up like hens when they are going to fly on up to the roost. Had not you penrod better give them a word of advice before they come p just to tell them who we really are and that we can shoot them down all easily if we so desire."

The party of Glandelinian soldiers beneath now more apparent in the light of the April dawn consisted of about thirty men with colonel golden in command

" Well colonel, your fig fugitives who ever they are are fairly treed" said one of the lieutenants.

" Yes I have observed them go right up there" said Colonel golden" and here a pathway. I'm going right up. They can't jump down in a hurry and it won't take long to capture them soldiers and who ever the rest are who are with them. Probably some runaway child slaves."

" But colonel they might fire at us from behind the works, and you k.uld get killed you know" said the lieutenant." That would be very bad you know.

" Ugh " said the colonel with a sneer. " I am not the kind who always is for saving their skin. No danger because we can advance up with out exposing ourselves. And a few fugitives like them are too badly scared."

" I don't know why you should not be careful" said the lieutenant. " It's the best I've got and you have two and fugitives fight more fiercely than any others."

" At this mment Penrod appeared on the top of a rock flying for the momentary time a small flag of truce and gaining the attention of the insur e insurgents and speaking in a calm clear voice said;

" Soldiers of Gland-linia, whose command are you from down there, and what do you want with us?"

" We are from general Mylet ses army and we want a girl who ran away with a boy slave" said the colonel. We have the hill surrounded here, and a warrent to take the girl prisoner she stole the boy and we are going to take him too. do you hear. Ain't you the boy that belongs to a general called Greatheart."

" I am nurse Sh Schulfied Penrod Penrod but I'm to tell you I never was a slave and never will be. But you'll never take the little boy for now he is a free child, standing on God's free soil, and these soldiers and others will prove it to t you. We all have arms and plenty of ammunition to defend ourselves and we sure mean to do it. You can come up if you like but the first one of you that comes within the range of our pistols are to be shot and the next and the next, and so on till the last."

" Oh come come" said the colonel stepping forward and blowing his nose as he did so.

" Young kid this ain't no kind of talk at all for you. you see we are soldiers and officers of Mylet ses command and though we have the law on our side in this location and the pow r power, and no forth, we do not really wish to war on young boys and girls, but we will if we have to, and therefore to avoid the argument you'd better give up the boy peaceably, for You'll all have to certainly give up at last."

" I know very well according to the rules of Glandelinia, you've got the law on your side and maybe the pow r power too" said Penrod bitterly. " You mean to take the girl who rescued the boy to sell to James Golden the worse slave trader and owndser and owner in the world, and get the little boy like a calf in a traders den. And you'll send the little boy back to be whipped and tortured, and ground down under the heels of them that you call Masters of children, and because you are of the same side your laws will hear you out on it, more shame for you and them. But you haven't got him. We Christian people don't own your wicked and insane laws, we stand here with the little boy as free as you are, and by the Great God that made us we'll fight for his liberty till we all die. And remember colonel, we have with us up here fifty of these well known Winkie Abyssinkillans and so if you attack us let me tell you one thing" We'll give no quarter and ask for none."

Penrod stood out in fair sight, on the slope of the mountain as he made his declaration of independence for the little boy, the glow of dawn gave a flush to his swarthy cheek and bitter indignation h gave fire to his dark eye, and as if appealing from man to the justice of God, he raised his hand to heaven as he spoke . If it had been some other fugitive now bravely defending in some mountain fastness the retreat of fugitives escaping from Glandelinia into Abbieannia, this would have been sublime heroism, but as it was a young Boy of Canadian born defending the retreat of a fugitive through the region of the Anglinia state of course we then are too well instructed and patriotic to see any h roism in it just now, and if any of our readers do they must do it on their own private responsibility. When other despairing fugitives made their way against all search warrants and authorities of the wicked Glandelinian governme government to Abbieannia or a christian army, press and political cabinet rang with applause and welcome.

When one despairing girl fugitive with a little boy is defending by soldiers, three dangerous little girl maions and one big boy it is---what is it? Be it as it may it is certain that attitude, eye, voice, and manner of the speaker,,, for a moment struck the party below to silence. Not that there was something in boldness and determination that for a time hushes any nature no matter how rude it is but because these soldiers were of Mylet ses command and were very unwilling to make an attack upon brave christian girl and boy scouts especially those whom they believed to be the Vivian Girls in disguise.

But colonel golden was the only one who remained wholly untouched. He was deliberately cocking his pistol and in the momentary silence that followed Penrods speec , he speech he fired at the lad.

" You see you just get as much for a christian girl or boy scout dead as alive in this war" he said coolly as he wiped his pistol on his overcoat sleeve. Penrod sprang backward, Gertrude uttered a shriek---the ball had passed close to his hair, had nearly grazed the cheek of the girl, and struck in the tree above.

" It's nothing gertrude" said Penrod ,quickly"

" but you had better keep out of sight now" said Jennie "urmer Even though the others may not be bad he is a man rascal."

" Now jolce" said Penrod" Look that your pistols are all right, and watch that pass with me. The first man that shows himself I will fire at, you take the second and the others will take who'll follow. It won't do you know to waste two shots on one and as they fired on me when I was still displaying the truce flag we'll give them no quarter."

" But what if you get hit Penrod!"

" I won't get hit."

" And what if you don't hit!"

" I shall hit" said Penrod coolly I' " I'll wager a big bet there's not one among you all as good a crack shot as I am and you know it from experience."

" Good now, that's the way to talk" said Joice" there's stuff in that boy scout."

The party halos after the colonel had fired stood for a moment rather undecided because they did not like the idea of fighting the girls.

" I think you must have hit that boy" said one of the officers. " I heard a squeal. if you did and myleize knows it you'll get it hot. you know it's against the rules for men of his army to fire on children. He's not against it."

" I don't care a snap for myleize and you can tell him so for me" said the colonel " And for one I'm going on right a - I never was afraid of soldiers or kids and I ain't going to be now. who goes after me!" he said dashing on a.

Penrod heard the words very distinctly. He drew up his pistol examined it pointed it toward that defile where the first man would appear. About sixteen of the partyfollowed the colonel and the way being thus made, the whole party began quickly racing up the hill the hindermost pushing the front ones faster than they would themselves themselves have gone. on they came, and in a moment the burly form of the colonel appeared in sight almost at the verge of the chasm. He saw it was impossible to get across, and those who followed saw the same and believed the fugitives had tricked him. Penrod fired However and the shot entered the officers side, but though wounded he would not retreat.

A sort of bridge was quickly made despite the fire of those above and then with a yell like that of mad bulls they were rushing right across and the colonel was on almost into the party, but one of the National soldiers struck him on the jaw with his pistol butt, and down he fell into the chasm crackling down among trees, bushes, logs, loose stones till he lay bruised and groaning fourty feet below. He might have been easily killed by the fall but it had been broken and goodly moderated by his clothing catching in the brac branches of a large tree, but he came down with great force nevertheless, nevertheless.

" Lord help us these christians are perfect fiends in uniform uniform" said the captian heading the retreat across the bridge whi with much more of a will than he had joined in the advance, while all the party came tumbling precipitately after him.

" I say boys" said the captian2." some of you just go round under a white flag and pick up the colonel there while I run with the rest to get around the rear of the defenders and take them by surprise that's you" and without minding the protests of his company the captian was as good as his word, and was soon seen galloping away with about twenty more of the men.

" - was ever such a desperate rascal of a christian" said one of the men. " and ain't the captian a nut to clear out to leave us this here way while he moves around upon their rear. He's making a more dangerous move than the colonel was."

" Well we must pick up the colonel" said another. " Curse me if I don't find him more dead than alive."

The remainder of the party of soldiers led by the groans of their colonel scrambled and crackled through stumps, logs, and bushes, to where that Glandelinian hero lay groaning and blaspheming with alternate vehemence.

" you keep blaspheming pretty loud colonel" said one" are you much hurt."!

" don't know. Get me up quickly can't you blast that crazy christian dog. If it hand hand,t been for him 18d of had those girls as my slaves by now and captured all the soldiers above."

With much labor and groaning mingled with swearing that seemed to take up a volumne the fallen Glandelinian hero was assisted to rise, and with one holding him up under each arm they got him as far as the horses.

" If you could only get me about a mile to that small farm house. give me a roll of bandages now or something to stuff into this bullet hole to stop this infernal bleeding."

All of the fugitives looked over the rocky position and saw them lift the burly form of the colonel into the saddle but as the battle was raging wildly some where near a shrapnell burst in the air killing all of the soldiers helping him including the horse and the colonel too reeled and fell h-heavily to the ground.

" Oh I hop he is not killed" said Gertrude, who with all the party of fugitives who with all the party of fugitives had watched the proceeding.

" Why not?" said penrod" it would serve the fool right."

" Because after death you know comes the judgement" said Gertrude.

" Yes " said joice" It would be an awful case for the poor mans soul."

" on my word the remaining soldiers are scared and are leaving him I do believe." said jennie.

It was true for after some appearance of irresolution and consultation the few remaining men got pon their horses and rode away. When they were quite out of sight, the party began to bestir itself.

" Well,me we must go down the other way before the flanking party comes upon us." said Penrod. " I know the general told the orderly to go ab and bring us help and be along back here with a cavarly squadron, but we shall have to walk some distance along the road to meet them. The Good lord grant they may be along very soon. It's early in the day, there won't be much travel afoot for some time and we ain't much than two miles from our stopping place. If the roadway had not been so rough last night we could have outrun the whole Glandelinian army entirely."

As the party neared a long fence they discovered in the distance along the road their army can wagon coming back, accompanied by a force of cavarly for the attackers had been repulsed.

" Well there's our expected reinforcement" exclaimed Penrod joyfully. " now we are safe as if we were in -mperor Vivians army.."

" Well do let's stop them" said joice" and do something for that poor colonel" As he is groaning dreadfully."

" It would be more like a christian" said penrod" Let the soldiers take him up and place him in our wagon."

" and doctor him up among us rinkle Abyssinkilians" said an officer.

" Yes you must, as I command you to- said joice vehemently.

" Very well then I don,t care if we do. Here boys lets have a look at him" and the officer who was really a surgeon knealed down by the wounded man, and began a careful examination of his condition.

" Oh captian, said the colonel feebly" Is that you captian!"

" No it is not it is an abyssinkilian friend colonel" said the officer. but is is very much the captian thinks of these ifhis own skin is safe. He and his party was off on the retreat long ago."

" I believe I'm done for" said the Glandelinian officer. " The cursed sneaking dogs to leave me to die alone. My poor old mother always told me , was wrong to join this war. Now I find its true."

" Goodness gracious just hear the poor man. He's got his mother too" said one of the soldiers. " I can't help pitying him a little at that."

" softly softly, don't snap and snarl nes friend colonel" said the officer as the colonel winced and pushed his hand away. " You have no chance for your life unless I stop the bleeding." and the Abyssinkilian officer busied himself with making some surgical arrangements with his own pocket handkerchief and such as could be mastered in the company.

" one of your men struck me and caused me to fall down there." said the colonel faintly.

" Well if he did not, you and your men would have probably made us all prisoners said the officer as t he stooped to apply his bandage. " There, there let me fix this bandage. A man will to you and bear no malice. But you'll be taken nevertheless as a prisoner to a limes where they will nurse you first rate, as well as yu your own mother could."

The colonel groaned at this and shut his eyes. In man of his class vigor and resol dion are merely a physicial matter and ebb ocea out with the flowing of blood, and the gigantic fellow really looked looked piteous in his helplessness. The other soldiers he came up. Two of them but with great difficulty lifted the heavy form of the colonel into its And before he was placed in he fainted entirely. Joice Julian in the abundance of her compassion sat down on the bottom and placing some blankets over her thighs took his head in her lap. Jennie, and Gertrude and Penrod bestowed themselves as well as they could in the remaining s ace space, and the whole party set forward to find a portion of Glandelinian army that would not probably be engaged in the fierce battle that was raging.

" what do you think of him" said Gertrude who sat by Joice in front!

" well it's only a pretty deep flesh wound-- but then the way he went down the abyss did not help him much. It has bled pretty freely--pretty well drained him out, courage and all----but he will get over it, and maybe he learn a thing or two for it."

" I'm surely glad to hear you say so" said Gertrude.

" Yes and it would be an awful bad feeling for me if I had caused him to be dead much though the cause is just." Added Penrod.

" Yes" said jennie-" Killing a man or any one even in a just cause is an ugly thing, any way they even mic it man or beast. Ive been a fugitive very often and I tell you all I've seen either a fellow fugitive or a rebel that was shot down and dying with that look in his eye that it really makes any one feel wicked for killing even even justly and men of creatures are a greater consideration yet being as is said that " judgement comes after death." So I don,t know what can be done when it has to be."

" what shall you do with this poor fellow" said joice.

" oh we,ll carry him to the camp- said the dirv driver. " There a nun there and she is a most amazing nurse. She had taken to nursing real natural and we can turn him over to her as soon as we reach the camp. a ride of about an hour or so will bring us there."

about an hour more brought the party to a portion of the christian army not active in the battle where the weary party recieved an abundant b breakfast. The Glandelinian colonel was soon carefully placed in a much cleaner and softerbedthat ever he had been occupying since he entered the rebel army. His wound was carefully dressed and bandaged and he lay languidly opening an and shutting his eyes on the white interior of the tent and the gently gliding figures of his sick room like a weary child. and here for the present we shall take leave again of our fair party.

Our little friend Jennie in her own simple musings often compared her more fortunat and fortunate lot in the bondage into which she was cast with that of all other slaves and in fact as time went on, and she developed more and more in the eyes of her master the strength of her own confidence increased. General Myletse was indolent andcareless was indolent and carr careless of how he fought battles with national armies. "Itwerto the conc ntrating of armies, had been principally done by general Dargin who was to the full as dangerous to the nationals as was his superior and between them both they carried on the dispersing process of christian armies with great alacrity asc you know about the defeat of the nationals at San Pedro. Accustomed for many years to regard the conditions conditions of Myletzes army as his own care, general Dargin sometimes observed with an uneasiness he could not repress tha the dreadful losses he would suffer in conflict and in the quiet milu way which his class often acquire would some times make his own suggestions.

General Myletse was struck with his soundness of mind and good military capacity and therefore confided in him more and more till gradually all the necessary commands for battle were intrusted to him.

"No, no Black Brooks" he said one day as this general was deprecating the passing power out of his own hands" let general Dargin alone. You might only understand what you want, Dargin understands cost and come to, and there may be some end of my army some day if we don'thlet some one do that right."

Trusted to an unlimited extent by a yet careful general in chief who handed him a message without even looking at it, Dargin had every facility and temptation to do otherwise than the message commanded and nothing but an irresponsible simplicity of nature strengthened by xsome time Christian faith could have kept him from it. But to that nature the very unbounded trust exposed in him was bond and seal for the most scrupulous exer accuracy.

With general Black Brooks the case had been somewhat different. He instead of being cautious and careful he was thoughtless about his own losses and terribly reckless, and when excited by battle he would be absolutely unrestrained, and therefore he had fallen into an absolute confusion of rashness which often troubled general Myletse to a great extent.. His own good sense taught him that such a way of his best generals was an just and dangerous to the glandelinian cause and therefore a sort of cronic remourse went with him everywhere, although not strong enough to make any decided change in his course and this very remourse reacted again into indulgence as he did not believe it wise either to 'boss' his generals too much. He even passed lightly over the most serious blunders as faults because he told himself that if he had done his part his dependents had not fallen into them.

Jannie regarded her gay, airy, handsome young general and master with an odd mixture of fealty, reverence and childish solicitude. That the general or his whole staff never read the bible, never went to church, that none of the soldiers ever went to church either, and refused to allow the child slaves to have religious meetings of their own, as that the generals jeered and made free with any and everything that came in the way of the their wit, that they spent the s unday from morning till night in destructive and bloody raids, that they held big wine parties, and sicked clubs and suppers oftener than was expediment were all thethings that Jannie could see as plainly as every one, and on which she based a conviction that " None of the glandelinians of this army were good eithe and which she feared might turn out to be like Manleys by and by a conviction however which she would have been very slow to express to any one else even her fellow slaves but on which she did say as many prayers for them as she had time and was able,,, in her own simple fashion, then she was in the tent with the rest of the slaves, who warned her several times not to allow any of the generals to catch her with the Bible or it would be taken from her and she'd get a flogging. Not that Jannie had her own say of speaking her mind occasionally, or that it would seem it was her own business with something of the tact often observable in her class as for example the day after the first Sunday she had been a slave in Myletses army general Myletse and a large force of well mounted men sent out on a daring and desperate raid, and returned with three wagon loads of unusually choice spirits as we might again call " Happy water" and that afterwards about 50 odd soldiers and officers including the general and some of his staff were in a condition when the phy physicial had decidedly attained the upper hand of the intellectual and where he also thought every child slave he saw pass him was an escaping christian soldier disguised as a child. General Dargin and Black Brooks were t assisted to get his composed for the night,, the latter in the highest spirits singing songs loud enough to be heard down three company camps evidently regarding the whole matter as a good joke and defying every creature living including heaven and all Hell to prevent him from lik liking the " Pussy cats" as he calles the Nationals while the two other generals laughed heartily at the rusticity of Jannie's horror who really was simple enough to lie awake most of the rest of the night, praying for the general.

" Well Jannie what in the world are you waiting for now?" said general Myletse the next day, as he sat in his headquarters tent, still half drunk, and instead of his uniform being in his undervear and bare feet eating a small breakfast and trying to drow his face in ice cold water. " General Myletse had just been intrusting the little slave girl withsome dispatches which no hop e she would bring to general Dargin and other variou commissions. I" is it not all right there Jannie, or did I make a mistake of some kind?"

H ge stood as Jannie stood waiting.

" No sir it is all wrong." said Jannie with a very grave face.

The general was surprised and he laid down his paper, and replaced his coffee cup and then looked closely at Jannie.

" Why Jannie what in the world is the matter with you? What are you going to cry about. 'and you look as solemn as a dead girl."

" I do feel very bad general. I always believed and thought that you would be good to every one in the place and yourself."

" well Jannie, but I sure have been. Come now kid speak up and tell me what you want. There's something you want that I did not do, and this is the prefuce. You want your free papers made out to you?"

" " No sir. You have always been good to me, and I have nothing to complain of. Butthere is one that you are not good to."

" why Jannie, what in the world is muting you? speak out ,what do you mean?" Angri

" last Sunday all day and all night I've seen it. You b have not been good to yourself. You are ruining your soul."

Poor jannie said this with her back to her master and her hand on her heart. The general felt his face flush crimson but he laughed.

"Oh is that all is it ?" he said gaily. " why do you expect to find a holy man among us Glandelinians when we are fighting a righteous nation."

" Yes" said poor jannie turning suddenly round and falling on her knees right by his chair and grabbing his hand imploringly. " Oh general Myletse, I'm afraid it sure will ki the ass of all body and soul. The Good Book says " it bisthe and stingeth like an adder Your excellency. Please do stop it for His sake if not for mine."

The little girl felt so much like shocking that the words came only in gasps and the tears ran down her cheeks.

" You poor little silly fool said the general with tears in his own eyes. " Get up Janie a man like me is not worth crying over. Get up."

But Jannie would not rise, and looked at him pleadingly.

" well I won't do it any more, and I'll even stop the cursed nonsence Janie" said the general" on my honor cross my heart to'die, I won't. I don't know why I did it in the first place. Infact I've always displised it, and myself for it.....so now jannie wipe up your eyes and go about your errands. Come come" he added" no blessings. I'm not so wonderfully good wonderfully good now" he said as he lifted her to her feet and gently pushed her tward the exit of the tent. " There'll pleage my hono r to you Jannie you don't see me so again" he said and poor Jannie went off wiping her eyes with her sleeve though still chocking down the sobs

" I'll keep my faith with her too d must" said the general as he closed the door...

And general Myletse did so for gross sensual sensualism in any form was not the peculiar temptation of his nature.....

At the time the big battle of San Pedro was raging who however shall detail the tribulations manifold of our friend general Inner Myletse who kept his commands in order as the labors of a southern housekeeper herself. There is all the complete differences in the world in the generals and their staffs of many other glandelinian armies, according to the chief character and capacity of the other generals and military schools which have brought them up. Manleys armies as well as Myletses or in those at least, there are generally officers and other officers of every rank you can think of who have an extraordinary talent for commandingof armies divisions and whatever the columns of an army is, and tact in diversion movements, demonstrations and all military movements during battles and the like in the list,such are unabled therefore with apparent ease and without blunder to make the best national generals afraid of them, and also without severity to subject to their will and bring into harmonious and systematic order the various members of the staff, to regular their every action peculiarities and so balance and compensate the defeciencies of one by the excess of another as to produce a harmonious and orderly system.

Such a general in one class is general John Manley the chief head of them all in the western drama of the great war whom I have so often already described, and such as our readers I believe would not care to meet with. His featur features give him the appearance of a profound sissy and he wears the Harold Lloydd fashi fashion of pompadour and where he also thought every child slave he saw pass him was an escaping christian but those who know him say he is a " sissy with a devil of combined." There are too many like him and they are to be found in other ar armies as well as those of the Manleys and such existing find in their wicked state of society a brilliant opportunity to exhibit their military talent nevertheless so that I at least for the west John Manley Myletse. But just a general is Myletse also he was still more systematic clever and provident, and it was expected that all his generals should do likewise if they were to remain with him, and he had very justly described to general Black Brooks that state of confusion he had found during battle when Dargin was not allowed to do the right and perfect perfect thing though he had not ascribed it to the proper cause,, The morning of the starting of the bad battle of San Pedro general Myletse was up at four oclock in the morning and having attented to all the formations of his lines when the Nationals were thundering forth their attack; to the great amusement of some of his best generals he prepared for a vigorious counter onslaught on the left of the army of nationals, and to try and carry a battery which general Black Brooks deemed impossible.

The fields of battle, which surged through vine yards, corn fields wheat fields, through furse and orchard and over creek and brook, all went under an awful review, and dangers which no one else even had the slightest idea of were brought to light to an xtt extent that alarmed all the principalities and pot powers of National officers, and to the delight of the Glandelinian forces, and caused many wonderings and murmurings about " General Mylotasy Myletze is the man that can cut a cave out of a mountain with his little finger and yet not loose the nail.

" General Cannonia, one of his head generals, and prici principal of all military rule and battle deployment and authority of many divisions was at first fill ed with wrath at the way the nationals were attacking him which he considered an unfair way of fighting, and no feudal baron in Magna Charta times could have mre thoroughly resented some insecurd insursion of the crown as general Cannonia resented this attack and he gave a resistance which might have surprised the angels angels and demons to witness from below or above.

General Cannonia thoughe girlish faced man was a character in his own way, and it would be injustice to his memory not to give the reader a little idea of him,

He was a native of Omaria state, and an essential general as much in some respect as even general Myletze himself, a military career being an indeginous turlent of the Glandelinian race but Cannonia was a trained and methodical one who moved in an orderly domestic harness, and like geniuses in generals was positive, opinionated and erratic to the last degree and very severe.

Like a certain class of modern philosophers General Cannonia perfectly scorned shiftlessness and blundering manners and other such things in every shape, and always excused no one, and in his way of holding a line of works against an attack he was perfect perfectly impregnable and a " stone Wall Jackson" of the Glandelinian army.

No possible amount of turlent, or authoritity or explanation could ever make him believe that any other way was ty better than the advices and commonds of his own or Myletzes or that the course he had persued through Myletze's council could be in the least changed unless a grave necessity made it so. This had been a a conseded point with other generals and even Myletze found it easier to submit than content, and so general Cannonia had ruled supreme. This was the easier in that he was perfect king of his own part of the army which unites the utmost subservience manner with the utmost inflexibility as to any measure.

General Cannonia therefore was commander of the whole army so far under Myletze, and when a blunder occurs pardoned no excuse making in all its branches. Indeed it was an axiom that either he or Myletze can do no wrong, and if any portion of the battle was threatening through some unknown cause to be a failure there were fifty or a hundred indisputably good reasons for it to be corrected at any loss, and it was the fault undeniably of fifty other generals when Cannonia berated with unsparing zeal.

So far as he served as a general in the army, whether he was with supply federal or others there had never been any failure seen in him. Though his modes of doing everything was peculiarly meandering and circuitous and without any sort of calculating as to time and place, and though his retreating columns during a disaster generally looked as if they were fleeing before an advancing hurricane, and he had about as many places to retreat for shelter with his command as there are cooking ut utensils in a big hospital kitchen or as there was were days in the year--yet if one has patience to wait his own good time his army would re reformed in perfect good order, and in a style of rally and preparation with h which no military genius could find fault fault and which would strike absolute terror into the biggest force of attackers.

It was now the day when a big battle of one of these kinds was on, the battle of San Pedro. General Cannonia who required short intervals of reflections and repose and was studious of ease in all his arrangements, was seated on his black steed, smoking short stumpy cigar and watching the course of the long wave of Nationals that were slowly advancing around him also seated on horses were the various members of his staff, indeed various members of that Glandelinian military staff which a rebel army abounds whose commands already were either engaged in shelling the attackers at long distance, moving forward to repell the attack, and other preparatory arrangements of battle, general Cannonia every once in a while interrupting, his mediations to give an order to one of them who would ride off at once with a gre t speed. Infact general Cannonia ruled over every member of his staff staff with a rod of iron, and seemed to consider them born for no tarth, earthly purpose but to save him his command" as he phrased it. It was the spirit of the system under which he had grown up and he carried it ut to its full extent.

General Mylet s after passing on horseback on his military " Battle tour" through all the various and other parts of his immense camp to see if the soldiers were, all lines up for the march now entered the region where general Cannonia was on horseback. Cannonia had heard from various sources what was going on, what the nationlas planned to do and resolved to stand on the defensive and conservative ground, mentally and bull bodily determined to oppose not only the christians but all the Heaben regions if need be combined even it if cost an unusuall bloody contest.

The general was seated on his horse in front of a large brick floored country house of wood with a great old fashion spanish style of roof above, and here at one point he had made with Mylestze advise an arrangement of his lines, indeed an arrangement which Myletze had vainly before tried to persuade black Brooks to make for the convienence of the main battle line. But mark Brooks one reason why it is known black Brooks got his resounding smash up at the battle of ester Starring.

General black brooks blunder at Delight's junction also. Before coming to see Cannonia he had ordered the latter being impressed with the system and order of his military arrangement to form a position of a long row of works with a long formidable array of cupboards to hide small cannons, and other various military appra apparatus to induce a systematic regulation of the defensive line of battle, under the sanguine illusion Illusion that it would be of any possible assistance to Cannonia in his arrangements too. He was surprised however at what he saw. Cannonia had placed his army almost di different, according to the way he found the nature of the ground, and the more cuts and undulations there were in the ground or woods, and fields the more hiding holes could Cannonia poke for the accomodation of small field pieces, machine guns, long lines of hidden rifle pits and other formations of the line of battle wherein he felt sure of success in repulsing the assault so that Mylestze said;

" He sure formed a trap for the nationals."

When he entered one of these fields, Cannonia did not move but smoked on in sublime tranquility regarding the movements of the nationals out of the corner of his eye as if he was only apparently intent only on the operations around h r him.

General Mylestze commenced looking through his field glasses.

" Tward whose command are they going for?" he said.

" It is handy for Dargin to handle them as they are headed his way tour excellency" said Cannonia. " But a portion of my command with a good park of artillery is hidden in a roll of ground somewhere in the rear of Dargin so that if he is forced the Nationals will run into a hornets nest in the pursuit."

So it appeared to be. Mylestze sent a courier over tward Dargins lines who telegraphed the facts.

" But what in the world are you doing this way, Cannonia ? You don't mean to say you are going to fight most of the battle yourself on this ground? Impossible."

" Oh yes there is no such thing as cont se I'll just hold here or blow up the whole country. I laid out my commands in these positions, and that's why I put them here, so the christians will be raiding and moving into a hornets nest."

" Unusual" said Mylestze to himself proceeding to ride forward a little , where on going up on a high rise of ground, he found in concealed places he had never seen before gun batteries, rifle pits lined double with men, pit falls for the attackers to tumble tumble into, a couple of low rows of long range artillery hidden in dark works and woods in the rear, some unusually formed and impregnable abatis, and eve ything else too much to str describe here.

" Which way do you think the Nationals are adv nc advancing?" said general Mylstze as he rode cback to him with the air of one who felt more concern for the nationals just at this moment.

" Might hit Dargins army first your excellency there's one long line also coming my way, and there's a column l moving over the low crest of that ridge there."

" and there's a battery pl playing on some one over yonder" said Mylstze indicating the direction with his finger.

" Yes that's one of my batteries which I put there last night---I likes to keep one in a handy place " said Cannonia. " You general take Coder be over to your command now and ave into the trenches. General Tainter has sent are you hesitating for. You'll catch it and your whole command if you don't hurry into action. The christians are coming like a mill race now he added as he waived him to be off.

" What's this?" said general Mylstze p pointing in another direction.

" Good Lord they are moving on my right also---but never mind placed a battery of mach machine guns to be handy to repell a flank attack."

" Do you use only machine guns for that?"

" No I've got another battery handy which hurles shell and grape moving placed them there in a hurry--- was going to change it this very day and then saw it was better to leave it as it is. Listen to the firing now somewhere along my right. They have struck there. god help the attackers and not the defenders I'll say. I've placed that right in a fine position."

" Here in front are two long lines of machine guns also!"

" Those batteries I put there to wash out the a attackers as if with a hose hose when they come within range in front."

" Don't you think the Nationals might come in such numbers as to carry everything."

" will not hardly but like to mix up things and then they won't come forward too close."

" why don't you place a big battery in the rear of your line say about half a mile as I don't see any."

" Good Lord Your excellency you surely can't see on, anything the way I placed them, why the ground and woods in the rear is so full of big cannons and one thing and nother they are almost as thick as the trees in a forest."

" but you should place a long concealed rifle pit in that big glen over there."

" You don't say said general Cannonia in a high key what do you generals in chiefs know about placing of positions I want to know. why if those nations if ever near that ine about placing of positions I want to know. why if those nations if ever near that line they'll think they have run into hell. If you go over there you'd be surprised. All hell cannot carry that Glen. "

" well here's another place for a good rifle pit also" indicating.

" and there is one there supported by guns that will grape and canister" said general Cannonia" that's where it put a position of high bobwired fences also. That is a particular position I was planning all the time."

" General Myletze rode forward tward those places and rapidly came back back.

" Well I wouldn't miss what's coming for all the world" said general Myletze to himself as he rode up to the side of Cannonia. " I like to know how he keeps up making positions like these and you can't catch him in any fault either. " Then to Cannonia" what's those big holes for in the Glen'"

" They are handy for shifting out prisoners when they fall in" said Cannonia.

" But you see you forgot one thing."

" Forgot one thing. Lord if those Nationals will go tumbling in I don,t thunk so. If you would only have the time to go and scout p out my positions till the attack is in high or order, and then bring back proof of what I have forgot I'll have everything right. go tell me what I forgot?"

" You forgot to bring out your main command to this spot."

" There was a crafty smile on Cannonia's face.

" I'm going through this in a way and am going to keep the Nationals in a way that you will marvel at your excellency, and then I'll expect my army right here to keep it so. ever every spot you see that is perfectly devoid of soldiers are hidden rifle pits . My main army, not command exactly is at this spot. "

" Good night you wise" said Myletze riding to the left and then up rode some other officers whose men now arrived with fresh men and batteries which were being placed in a new position with a speed and alacerity which perfectly amazed Yletze.

" Well if that ain't the way those Omarian generals do, they ain't military officers at all but magicians" Myletze said in a whisper to one of his own generalswhen at a safe hearing distance. " I have my army as straight as any body, when m my battle formatic formation is to be made, but he takes the pr e prize."

To do general Cannonia justice, he had at all periods paroxysms of reformation and arrangement during battles and marches, which could be called " Busty Times" when he and his officers would begin with great zeal, and move every division on the double quick, place every battery out in the field, and make such arrangements that where an hour before to an advancing army there had been an opposing column in sight, was now a great array of men and parks of artillery and cavalry squadrons. Then he would light his cigar upon them, making all his staff ride hither and hither with messages and keeping up for several hours a most energitic state of work and confusion confusion of arranging of artillery which he would explain to the satisfaction of all inquis inquirers by the remark" he was going to repull an attack. " He cu could not allow a force of Nationals to surprise his line line and he was going to keep them back at all cost. hen all the positions were thus arrayed and the artillery placed as he ordered, and long lines of troops hidden out of sight in deep rifle pits pits Cannonia would await the attack, and when it came the Nationals would met meet a fire that would sweep every one to their deaths at once within range and so appall the survivors that they would flee like sheep.

Indeed these periodic seasons were often an inconvienciences to all the generals but general Cannonia had his foot down on every one for he would contract such an immoderate attatchment to his army as to insist upon it that it should obey no other order but what he or Myletze gives out------especially during battle times.

General Myletze during this battle thoroughly reformed every line that was broken to a systamitic pattern, and the labors of the Nationals to win the conflict were of no avail and the assault upon Cannonia was so successful that an enormous number of prisoners fell into his hands and his men mowed them down so dreadfully that the survivors stricken with horror were glad to fe flee. after the battle Cannonia said to Myletze.

" There is no bad idea in getting anything like system in this army."

" To be sure there isn't" said Myletze.

" such an attack, and such a destruction of assailing columns and such confusion after the repulse of the attack I never saw in battle yet."

" I dare say you did,nd didn't. It was great. You won the battle entirely."

" I dare say you would not take it so coolly though General if you had been in my place during the battle yesterday...."

" You would not take it so coolly though General if you had been in my place during the battle yesterday...."

" My dear general Cannonia, you may as well understand nce once and for all that we are divided in two different commands and we are masters also and we masters are dividing ourselves into two differ nt classes, oppressors and oppressed. And we who are so good natured and hate to be severe on any condition make up our minds to allow those whom we buy to go and do as they please. If we will keep a shambling loose, untaught set of coll child slaves within our armies for our own convenience why we must take the consequence.

There are some re rare cases that I have seen very often however in one place of persons and generals who by a peculiar tact can produce order and system without severity, but I'm not one of them----and so I have made up my mind long ago to let things go just as they do. I will not have the poor children slaves thrashed and cut to pieces like the Monleys do it, and they know it, andof course they know the stick in I is in their own hands..

" ut to have no order,----all going on in all this shiftless and bad way."

" By dear general Cannonia I do not allow any of my slaves to be shiftless and if you do not believe it you may go into their tents any unexpected time you like. As to order and system I do not even allow a slave to lay on a lounge and read during working hours, and they know the penalty of being even ten minu minutes late for breakfast supper or

" Now there is Annie Tran only our child slave chief cookk who can get you a capitol meal three times a day, soup- ragout, roast fowl, desserts, ice creams and allm and she divides it all out of her own mind and sometimes works all night on extras down there in the kitchenh or in her mess tent. I think it is really sublime the way she manages. Fat heaven bless us, if we are to go down there and ve view all the work we should die if so thought dinner was an hour away. So general Cannonia absolve yourself from that. It is more like the penance the Nationals impose up u o upon their followers and does no sore good. Do not bother with the slaves, for you'll only lose your temper and literly utterly incite rebellion in them. Let them go their own way."

" But general Myletze you do know how much I find out that they slp slip news to christian spies and prisoners news that we don't want to go to the Nationals."

" Don't I? don't I know that one of them slippde slipped to a prisoner a rolling pin which one of my officers observed him hiding nder his prison bed, and that when examined and words on them pr betraying a plan of m very own, and that one spy was handed a nutmeg grater with a small code on it, that they secretly communicate to every prisoner everything they hear, that they would pretend to wash a prisoners uniform one day and slip something in his pocket, and pretend to make a mistake and hand him an old gray coat offuniform the next o next one he would have a chance to make a get away.

Annie is one of these but the upshot is she can get up the most glorious meals three times a day, makes superb coffee and therefore you should judge her by her success.

" But most of these slaves are a peril to the cause in that way. Think of the expense they will be if they keep this up."

" Oh well watch them every time you can but never inquire for odds and ends as it is not best to do so."

" But that troubles me generallyMyletze . I can't help feeling as if these small servants were not strictly honest. Are you sure all of them can be relied upon?"

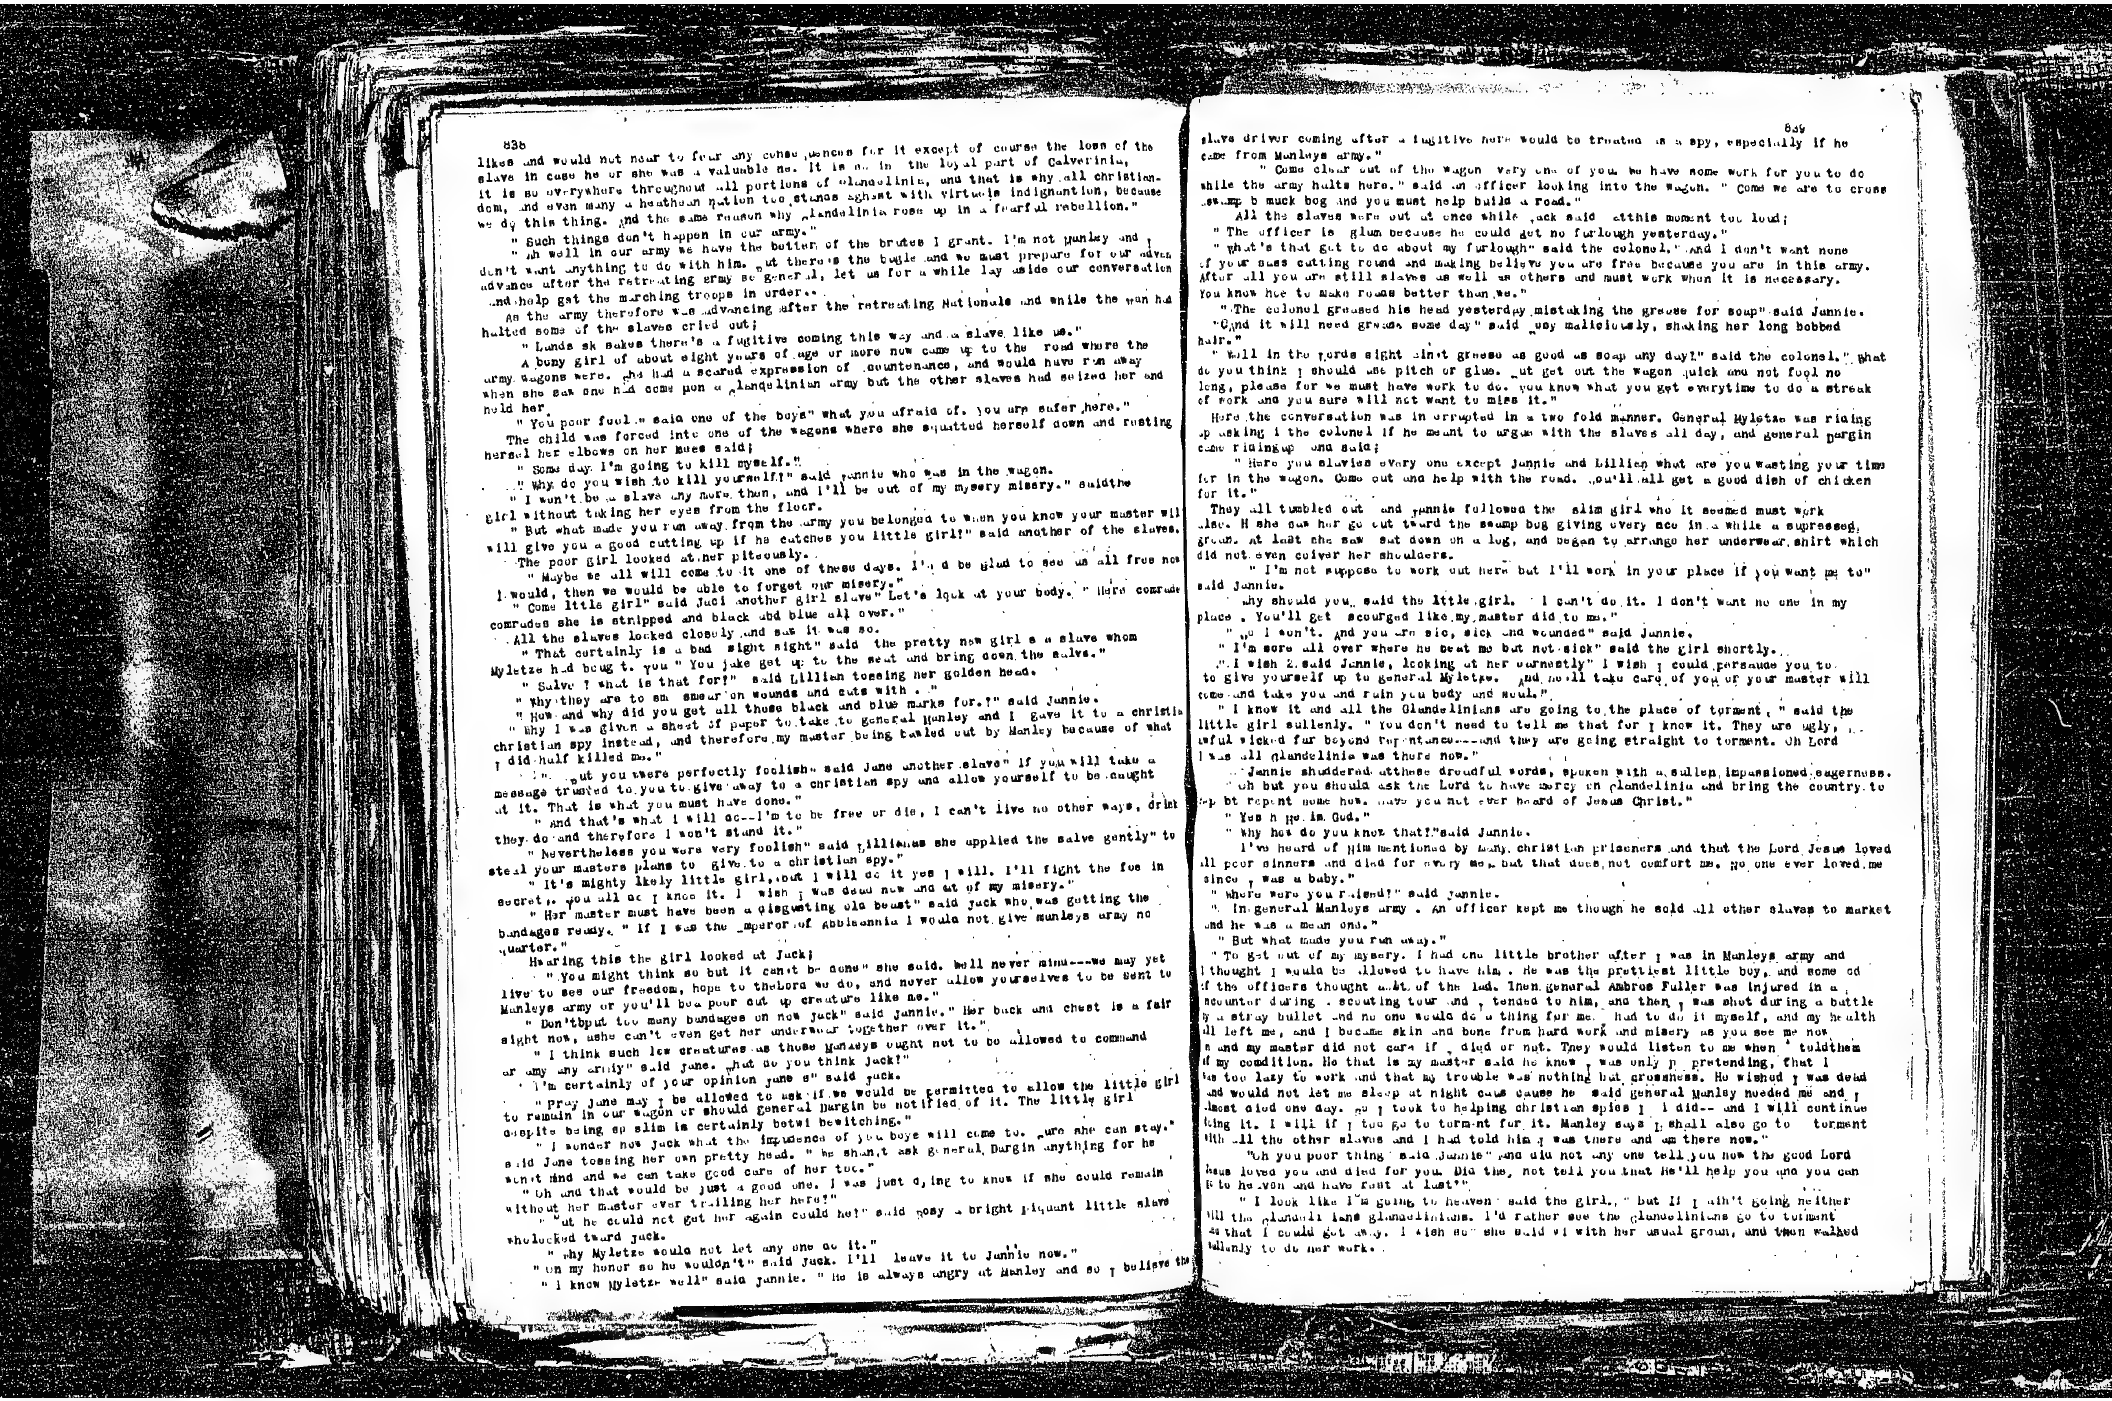
General Myletze laughed immoderately at the grave and anxious face with which general Cannonia asked the question.

" Oh general Cannonia, that's too good,----honest------as if that were a thing to be expected. Honest sh, of course they are not. Why should they be. What upon earth is to make them so when they'll do anything to gain their freedom and help the Nationals who are fighting for them."

" Why don't you instruct them to go over to your own side?"

" What, instruct them to our side. Oh fiddlesticks. I'd like to see who could do that. What instructing do you think I should do when secretly the child slaves are worse enemies than the christian soldiers are and they would be dreadful lones little as they are if they ever got the upper hand. I look like I should instruct them to our side.when they are heart and soul for the christians. As to Beppo Evans he had spirit enough enough to be sure to kill off the whole country full of child slaves if I'd let him to it, but he would not get the cheatery out of them. They'd tell the christian spies everything just the same."

" Are there no honest ones. ?



" Well now and then whom Nature makes so impracticably simple, truthful, and faithful that the worse possible severity and influence could not change or destroy it. but you see most of them fools and some that they need need not only their freedom but the satisfaction of their desire to be back home with their parents in far away countries, and therefore knowing the purpose of the christians in this great war they can get along no other way with thier masters, and overseers or others over them, and therefore with the purpose to secretly help the christians cue cunning and deception becomes necessary inevitable habits. as we Glandelinians are fully responsible it is not fair to expect anything else of the poor kids, and therefore they ought not to be punished for it but just watched and hindered at the proper time. They might be honest, but not to us, for wishing their freedom there is no making him realize the rights of the glandelinian cause or to even feel that their masters good to his own if he can get them. For my part as they wish to be fr I do see how they can be honest to us, being also our enemies. such a little slave girl like Annie---is,---is a moral miracle."

" And what's to become of their souls?" said general Cannonia.

" That is no affair of mine or others either" said general Myletze" We Glandelinians are only dealers in facts of the present life. The fax fact is that the whole race of slaves, especially in other armies are prettily understood to be turned over to the devil for our benifit inthis world , however it may turn out in another. And another thing. According what is said and heard cor concerning other Glandelinian armies, like the Malays for instance the slaves never live long enough to grow up. They either die from sickness, ill feeding, from ill treatment, or being kill out right and the like. I've seen a slave punished by having his whole body opened while alive."

" such things is perfectly horrible," said general Cannonia. " You and yankey and every one of us ought to be perfectly ashamed of our selves."

" I don't know as I am. we are in pretty good company for all that." said general Myletze" as all the Glandelinian soldiers and their officers generally are. Look at the high and the low, all the Glandelinia country over and it is the same storyppppppp Here the child slaves are used up, body and soul and spirit, for the good of the wicked at the upper. The masters according to the law can even kill his slaves as brutally as he likes and would not hear to fear any consequences for it except of course the loss of the slave in case he or she was a valuable one. It is so in the loyal part of Calverinia, it is so everywhere throughout all portions of Glandelinia, and that is why all christiandom, and even many a heathen nation too, stands aghast with virtuous indignantion, because we do this thing. And the same reason why Glandelinia rose up in a fearful rebellion."

"Such things don't happen in our army."

"Oh well in our army we have the better of the brutes I grant. I'm not Manley and I don't want anything to do with him. But there's the bugle and we must prepare for our advance after the retreating army so general, let us for a while lay aside our conversation and help get the marching troops in order."

As the army therefore was advancing after the retreating Nationals and while the wan had halted some of the slaves cried out;

"Lands sk sakes there's a fugitive coming this way and a slave like me."

A bony girl of about eight years of age or more now came up to the road where the army wagons were. She had a scared expression of countenance, and would have run away when she saw one had come pon a Glandelinian army but the other slaves had seized her and held her.

"You poor fool," said one of the boys" what you afraid of, you are safer here."

The child was forced into one of the wagons where she squatted herself down and resting herself her elbows on her nees said;

"Some day I'm going to kill myself."

"Why do you wish to kill yourself?" said Jennie who was in the wagon.

"I won't be a slave any more than, and I'll be out of my mysery misery." saidthe girl without taking her eyes from the floor.

"But what made you run away from the army you belonged to when you know your master will give you a good cutting up if he catches you little girl?" said another of the slaves.

The poor girl looked at her piteously.

"Maybe we all will come to it one of these days. I'd be glad to see us all free now I would, then we would be able to forget our misery."

"Come little girl" said Jud another girl slave" Let's look at your body." Here comrade comrades she is stripped and black and blue all over."

All the slaves looked closely and saw it was so.

"That certainly is a bad sight sight" said the pretty new girl a a slave whom Mylletze had bough t. you "You jake get up to the seat and bring down the salve."

"Salve ? what is that for?" said Lillian tossing her golden head.

"Why they are to em smear on wounds and cuts with ."

"How and why did you get all those black and blue marks for.?" said Jennie.

"Why I was given a sheet of paper to take to general Manley and I gave it to a christia christian spy instead, and therefore my master being tasked out by Manley because of what I did half killed me."

"But you were perfectly foolish" said June another slave" If you will take a message trusted to you to give away to a christian spy and allow yourself to be caught at it. That is what you must have done."

"And that's what I will do--I'm to be free or die, I can't live no other ways, drist they do and therefore I won't stand it."

"Nevertheless you were very foolish" said Lillian as she applied the salve gently" to steal your masters plans to give to a christian spy."

"It's mighty likely little girl, but I will do it yes I will. I'll fight the foe in secret. you all do I know it. I wish I was dead now and out of my misery."

"Her master must have been a disgusting old beast" said Jack who was getting the bandages ready. " If I was the Emperor of Abbiannia I would not give Manleys army no quarter."

Hearing this the girl looked at Jack;

"You might think so but it can't be done" she said. Well never mind--we may yet live to see our freedom, hope to thebora we do, and never allow yourselves to be sent to Manleys army or you'll be a poor cut up creature like me."

"Don't put too many bandages on now Jack" said Jannie." Her back and chest is a fair sight now, she can't even get her underwear together over it."

"I think such low creatures as those Manleys ought not to be allowed to command or any any army" said June. What do you think Jack?"

"I'm certainly of your opinion June s" said Jack.

"Pray June may I be allowed to ask if we would be permitted to allow the little girl to remain in our wagon or should general Burgin be notified of it. The little girl despite being so slim is certainly betwi bewitching."

"I wonder now Jack what the impudence of you boys will come to. Sure she can stay." said June tossing her own pretty head. " he shan't ask general Burgin anything for he won't mind and we can take good care of her too."

"Oh and that would be just a good one. I was just dying to know if she could remain without her master ever trailing her here?"

"But he could not get her again could he?" said rosy a bright piquant little slave who looked toard Jack.

"Why Mylletze would not let any one do it."

"On my honor so he wouldn't" said Jack. I'll leave it to Jannie now."

"I know Mylletze well" said Jannie. " He is always angry at Manley and so I believe the slave driver coming after a fugitive here would be treated as a spy, especially if he came from Manleys army."

"Come clear out of the wagon very one of you we have some work for you to do while the army halts here." said an officer looking into the wagon. " Come we are to cross a swamp b muck bog and you must help build a road."

All the slaves were out at once while Jack said atthis moment too loud;

"The officer is glum because he could get no furlough yesterday."

"what's that got to do about my furlough" said the colonel," and I don't want none of your sass cutting round and making believe you are free because you are in this army. After all you are still slaves as well as others and must work when it is necessary. You know how to make rooms better than we."

"The colonel greased his head yesterday mistaking the grease for soap" said Jannie. "And it will need grease some day" said Joy maliciously, shaking her long bobbed hair."

"Well in the lords sight ain't grease as good as soap any day!" said the colonel." What do you think I should use pitch or glue. Get out the wagon quick and not fool no long, please for we must have work to do. you know what you get everytime to do a streak of work and you sure will not want to miss it."

Here the conversation was in errupted in a two fold manner. General Mylette was riding up asking i the colonel if he meant to argue with the slaves all day, and general Burgin came ridingup and said;

"Here you slavies every one except Jannie and Lillian what are you wasting your time for in the wagon. Come out and help with the road. You'll all get a good dish of chicken for it."

They all tumbled out and Jannie followed the slim girl who it seemed must work also. H she saw her go out toard the swamp bog giving every nce in a while a supressed, groan. At last she saw her down on a log, and began to arrange her underwear shirt which did not even colver her shoulders.

"I'm not suppose to work out here but I'll work in your place if you want me to" said Jannie.

"Why should you, said the little girl. " I can't do it. I don't want no one in my place . You'll get scourged like my master did to me."

"No I won't. And you are sic, sick and wounded" said Jannie.

"I'm sore all over where he beat me but not sick" said the girl shortly.

"I wish I said Jannie, looking at her earnestly" I wish I could persuade you to to give yourself up to general Mylette. And he'll take care of you of your master will come and take you and ruin you body and soul."

"I know it and all the Glandelinians are going to the place of torment, " said the little girl sullenly. " You don't need to tell me that for I know it. They are ugly, awful wicked far beyond repentance----and they are going straight to torment. Oh Lord I was all glandelinia was there now."

Jannie shuddered atthese dreadful words, spoken with a sullen impassioned eagerness. "Oh but you should ask the Lord to have mercy on glandelinia and bring the country to hp bt repent some how. Have you not ever heard of Jesus Christ."

"Yes h he is God."

"Why how do you know that?"said Jannie.

"I've heard of him mentioned by many christian prisoners and that the Lord Jesus loved all poor sinners and died for every one, but that does not comfort me. no one ever loved me since I was a baby."

"Where were you raised?" said Jannie.

"In general Manleys army . An officer kept me though he sold all other slaves to market and he was a mean one."

"But what made you run away."

"To get out of my mysery. I had one little brother after I was in Manleys army and I thought I would be allowed to have him . He was the prettiest little boy, and some of the officers thought alot of the lad. Then general Ambros Fuller was injured in a encounter during a scouting tour and I tended to him, and then I was shot during a battle by a stray bullet and no one would do a thing for me. had to do it myself, and my health all left me, and I became skin and bone from hard work and misery as you see me now and my master did not care if I died or not. They would listen to me when I told them of my condition. He that is my master said he knew I was only pretending, that I was too lazy to work and that my trouble was nothing but crossness. He wished I was dead and would not let me sleep at night cause he said general Manley needed me and I most died one day. so I took to helping christian spies I did-- and I will continue doing it. I will if I too go to torment for it. Manley says I shall also go to torment with all the other slaves and I had told him I was there and am there now."

"Oh you poor thing" said Jannie" and did not any one tell you how the good Lord Jesus loved you and died for you. Did the, not tell you that He'll help you and you can go to heaven and have rest at last?"

"I look like I'm going to heaven" said the girl," but if I ain't going neither will the glandelinians glandelinians. I'd rather see the glandelinians go to torment so that I could get away. I wish so" she said si with her usual groan, and then walked sullenly to do her work.

Jannie turned and walked sorrowfully back to her tent or wagon I mean. In the back of the wagon he met little Lillian a crook of doctor on her head and her eyes radiant with delight."

" Oh Jannie here you are. I've glad you have come back. General Myletze says you may do with me to the van of the army" she said catching his hand. But what in the matter? Jannie ? You look like you were going to cry. "

" But do tell me please please Lillian what is the matter. I saw you talking to the runaway slave."

Jannie in her simple way told Lillian the poor girls history. Her cheeks grew pale, and a deep earnest shadow passed over her eyes, but she did not weep as other children do but only laid both her hands on her bosom and sighed piteously.

" Jannie we need not go to day. I don't want to go, tell I'll stay stay here" she said.

" Why not Lillian?"

" These awful things affect my heart Jannie" said Lillian---they sink deep into my heart." she repeated wearily. " I don't want to go" and she climbed into the wagon: A few hours after came another officer riding up to a companion and he looked excited.

" Lord" he said. " That new slave down by the bog. Some one got her."

" what happened to her?" the other asked.

" I do not know but she is not with us any more." said the officer mysteriously.

" Why not." said a soldier saluting" The new slave is not dead is she?"

" We do not exactly know. There was the sound of a shot, and she fell into the bog" said the officer glancing at his companion.

" Well what in the world happened to that refugee slave anyway!" he said.

The other officer seemed desirous but reluctant to speak and answered in a low mysterious tone;

" well please don't tell any one. well t she was working with the men when a few shots from a far rang out and we saw her fall face downward into the bog and before we could do anything she went down out of sight; and so she's either beenkilled outright by the bullets or suffocated to death in the bog."

The officer wheeled his horse and turning sat close by the side of his horse the spirit like form of the little girl slave l her large mystic eyes dilated with horror, and every drop of blood driven from her lips and cheeks.

" Lord bless the cause the slave Lillian is going to faint dead away. what made us allow her to surprise us and hear such talk! Mylstze will be so mad he'll cross and quarter us."

" I will not faint sir" said the child firmly" and why should I not hear it? it ain't so much for me to be able to hear it as for the poor little girl to suffer it."

" But for the Lord's sake it is not for sweep delicate young ladies like you---these stores aren't for it is enough to kill them for what you you too might have gone through before you was sold to Mylstze."

Lillian sighed again and returned to her wagon slowly and melancholly.

Later general Cannonia hearing of the occurance inquired into the story of the tragedy. Jannie gave a good version of it to which Jack added the particulars and also others which they had drawn from her that morning.

" It is a terrible business, abominable ------perfectly horrible" he exclaimed vehemently as he entered the tent where general Mylstze was staying over a piece of paper.

" pray sir what inquiry has turned up now that you come in to me at this hour?" said he.

" What now? why a child slave came into our lines this morning a fugitive and now some bushwacking crackshots at some distance shot her to death as she was working with the rest near the bog no one" said general Cannonia going on with great strength of detail into the story and enlarging on its most shocking particulars and of course exaggerating a good deal too in his excitement.

" I always expect such things of that nature at least to occur." said general Mylstze going on with his work on the paper.

" You say you thought y so General? Ain't you going to do anything about it?" said General Cannonia. " Haven't you got a body of swift cavalry men or any force of dragoons to go out and capture the sniper."

" It is commonly supposed that the property interest is a sufficient guard in all cases whether the slave belongs to me or someone else. If such people from other glandelinian armies choose to des destroy and slay their own possessions, I don't know what is to be done. it seems the poor kid I was a fugitive from general Manleys camp, and so there won't be much hope of punishing her assassin without getting into a conflict with general Manley., even though we should get up sympathy for her."

" It's perfectly outrageous---it is horrid a curse to our country general Mylstze. It will certainly bring down God's terrible vengeance upon you."

" Now listen to me general Cannonia and don't jump at such conclusions before you look into the matter. Let me tell you I have nothing to do with what the other has, and I can't help it, and I would if I could. If low minded brutal Glandelinian soldiers from distant armies, I will act like savages what am I to do. Is it not against the law, and is it not acting like a traitor to interfere with the doings of other glandelinian armies, just because I do not allow mine to do the same. Manley and his generals, and the generals of all other various wicked glandelinian armies, have absolute control, they are irresponsible despots. There would be no use in interfereing for there is no law that amounts to anything practically in such a case; and another thing if any one my slaves would be seized by Manleys agents and carried away to his own army I cannot do anything then. The best we can do is to shut our eyes and ears and let it alone. It is the only resourse left to us."

" Cannot you at least shut your eyes to such things and not listen to the sad things? And cannot you let such things go without some kind of protest? Why in the later part of this war the Nationals won't give us no quarter at all, and just because of what the others do to the child slaves."

" Why general Cannonia, what do you expect. Here is a whole class of children, debased, uneducated, insolent, provoking, put without any terms or any sort of terms and conditions,,, entirely into the hands of such people, and such army officers and men as the majority of our glandelinian nation is, people who have neither consideration or even a idea for who have not even an enlightened regard to their own interest, for that is the case with nearly all of us Glandelinians. Of course in a nation like ours which is so organized to hold slaves what can a decent man and a man of honorable and humane feeling do when he has no power over others, but shut his eyes all he can, and pretend to harden his heart. ? I can't but buy or ransom every poor little wretched child slave person. I can't turn knight-errand and undertake to redress every individual case of wrong in such a wicked nation as this! The most I can do is to try and keep out of the way of it, and try to set the example to others by my treatment of my own slaves."

General Mylstzes fine countenance was for a moment overcast, and he looked looked embarassed and annoyed, but suddenly assuming a gay smile,, he said;"

" come general, don't stand there looking like one of the slaves, you have only seen a peep through the slave horrors, a specimen of what is going on, the whole world over, on or in some shape or others. If we glandelinian generals are to go prying and spying and the like, into all the dismals of child slavery, and the woe be begone lives they live, we should have no heart to anything. We like a christian spy looking too close to one of our camps." and the general sat way back in his easy chair and started to study profoundly what he had written.

General Cannonia saw say sat down and pulled out his handkerchief to wipe off his brow, and then sat there grim with indignation. He moped and moped, but while he mused, the fire burned, and at last he broke out;;

" I tell you Your Excellency, I can't get over why such thing even if you can. It's a perfect abomination for you to defend such a wicked and cruel system of slavery------that is my opinion....."

" what now?" said general Mylstze looking up. " at it again hey?"

" I say it is a perfect abomination for you to defend such child slave horrors." said general Cannonia, with increasing warmth.

" I defend the system of child slavery my dear Cousin Cannonia. what makes you think I do defend such a system" said general Mylstze.

" Of course you defend it----you all do---all the glandelinian generals mostly do. what do we all have slaves for if we did not defend it it?"

" Are you such a sweet innocent little boy general Cannonia as to suppose no one in this world ever does what they don't think is right. Did you not ever at your first military career do anything in your war plans and battle movements that you did not think quite right.?"

" If I did I made a hastr hasty repair where I caused a break or a disaster. I hope." said General Cannonia.

" So did I" said general Mylstze as he started to look over a map" I'm repairing breaks all the time.."

" If you are such a good general why do you keep on blundering for all the time?"

" As good, and as great a general as you are Cannonia, did you not ever keep on doing anything wrong in military movements after you've formley found a mistake?"

" Only when I've been misenformed by a courier." said general Cannonia.

" Well I have done the same thing when a mistaken courer brought a blundering news to me." said General Mylstze Mylstze" and that is just my main difficulty,difficulty."

" But I always resolve I won't do it again, and therefore try to break off such habits?"

" Well I have been resolving to stop blunders off and on, these few years that the war has been going on" said general Mylstze" but I have not yet some how got clear. Have you got clear of all your blunders general!!!!!"

" Cousin Cousin Inner Hied Mylstze" said general Cannonia, seriously, and laying down a geography he had been reading," I suppose I deserve that you should reprove my short comings. Therefore I know what you say is fairly true without a doubt,, no one else feels them more than I do, but it does seem to me after all that there might surely be some di did difference between me and you...It seems to me would cut off my right hand rather than keep on from day to day doing what I think will bring a disaster not to my army but also to the glandelinian cause,, But then my conduct is so consistent with my with my profession, I don't wonder you reprove me being my superior as you are...""

" Oh now comne Cousin general Cannonia" said Mylatze " just because I reprove you don't take on so awfully serious. " You know what a good for nothing saucy thing of a boy I always was. I love to go and poke you up that is all----just to see you get surpised. But I do think you are desperately disturbingly good in your generalship, and it would bore me to death to seem home you."

" But this is a serious subject, my dear cousin" said general Cannonia.

" Dismally so" said Mylatze" And I---well I never want to talk serious in such hot times as this, what with christian armies striking me right and left, with raids and all, and forced marches a fellow ge can not get himself up to any good arguments and I believe" said general Mylatze suddenly rousing himself up"There's a theory now. I under stand why the northern Governments are always so much against our child slave trade, than the Glandellinian states--------I see into the whole subject."

" Oh Mylatze you seem to be nothing but a sad rattle brain."

"Am I? Well I am I suppose but for once I will be serious now, but you must hand me that buskrt of org oranges, you see, you'll have to stay me with flagons and comfort me with oranges and other fruit, if I am going to make this effort. Nos " Now " said Mylatze drawing the basket up" I'll begin; When in the course of human events it becomes necessary for a fellow to hold six or seven children belonging to some one else in captivity and to do what he pleases with them, a decent reguard regard to the opinion of the nationals requires---"

" I don't see where you are growing any more serious," said general Cannonia.

" Wait I'm coming there by and by-------and you'll hear. " The short of the matter is General" said he, his handsome face suddenly settling into an earnest and serious expression" On this question of child slavery there can be I think be but one opinion. All private Glandellinian planters, factory owners, mill owners, or private home owners and the like who have money to make by it,---Glandellinian traders who have all such to please---politicians who want to rule by it may warp and bend languages and all horrors to such a degree thatshall astonish the whole world at their horrors, they can press natura into slavery and defy the Word of God and the Bible, and no one knows what else into the service, but after all neither they nor the whole world believes in it one particle one. It comes from the devil and his followers, that's all to it, and to my mind it is a pretty respectable specimen of what the evil spirits can do in their own line."

" General Cannonia stopped his reading, and looked surprised setting down the book, and general Mylatze appurently enjoying HP astonishment went on. " You seem to wonder, but if you will let me have a good start, I'll make a clean breast of it. Strip the whole thing and you'll find out. This cursed business accursed of God and man and a threatening fatal ruin to Glandellinia, what is it? Strip it of all its ornament run it down to the very roots and nucleus of the whole, and what is it? Why because I have a large gang of little children sold to me, and because they are innocent innocent and delicate, and I their master am very intelligent and strong,, an and because I know how and can do it, therefore I may do what I please with them, steal all they once owned, deprive them of pleasure, fun and happiness, and give them only as suits my own fancy. Whatever is too hard, too dirty, too disagreeable or uncomfortable for me to do, I may force these little ones to do. Because I'm lazy and don't like to work, these slaves shall work for me. Because the sun burns me or is too hot for me, these slaves no matter what the result to them may be shall stay in the sun. They shall work in outside in below zero weather, in all kinds of winter and summer storms, sick or well, injured or not. They shall earn the money for me and I shall spend it as I see fit, and only for myself. If they get sick so they cannot work anyfurther, instead of paying the expenses of a doctor for them, they'll fe work just the same or die.They shall lie down in every puddle, that I may walk over dry ground. During a march of my army the slaves shall go on ahead to scout the ground for me risking the chances of being caught in a dangerous bog so my army won't perish in it. The slaves shall do my will and not their's, all the days of their mortal lives, and have no chances whatever of getting to heaven either if I can find convienes convenient. If they start up christian ways they die as christians die. If one runs away and is caught, six other slaves will be forced under penalty of death if refusing to burn the runaway at the stake. This is what I call child slavery. I defy any one on earth, Glandellinian or christian to read any other slave code as it stands in our law books, and make anything else of it. Talk of the sad abuses of slavery, and the horrors they usually go through. That's a humbug. The thing itself in the essence of all hell tortures. And the only reason the Glandellinian country don't go to destruction like Sodom and Gomorrah is because something is unusually wrong with those in Heaven I'm thinking. Our pity makes for shames shakem because I and my own followers and my own army are men born of women, and not savage women friends all of us of my army do not, and dare not,---we Glandellinian generals would scorn to use the full power which our wicked and savage laws puts into our hands. And he of gunboys and other armies who does the worse and goes the furthest, only uses within limits the pwer that the law gives him."

General Mylatze had started up and as his manner was when excited was walking with hurried steps up and down the floor of the big tent. "is fine face classic as a great Statue seemed to actually burn with the fever of his feelings feelings. His large blue eyes flashed like fire like fire, and he gestured with an unconscious eagerness as if he was a orator .General Cannonia had never seen him in this mood before, and he sat perfectly quiet.

" I declare to you right now" said he suddenly stopping before his cousin, "it's no part of use to talk or feel on take up on this subject as we too are fighting against the northern Country that is struggling desperately to free all these slaves, but I declare to you nevertheless, that there have been times often when I have thought if our country would have been overrun and crushed by many a mighty Glandellinian or Abbieannian army I mean, and would be crushed and sink even from sight from Abbieann has terrible blows I would gladly go with it. I'm surprise too that I who was born in the fair city of Angelinia Aguthia, who have been reared up there should take sides with the south, but I have through the stern will of my father who got killed at the battle of Angelina Junction. When I have been advancing from place to place within rebel territory or about on my scouting and foraging tours and otherwtravels, and reflected thatevery brutal disgusting mean low lived fellow I have met was allowed by our laws to become absolute despot of as many little children even not belonging to the Glandellinians at all as he could, cheat, steal, or possess money enough to buy,--when I have seen such men in actual ownership of helpless children, little boys and girls,---I have been ready to curse not only Abbieannia and my own country together, but to curse the whole human race. The whole fault lies in Abbieannia and not in us. If Abbieannia wanted to really stop it she could have long ago and need no quarrel like this about it either."

" Mylatze, Mylatze" said general Cannonia" I'm sure you've said enough. I never in my life heard anything like this even anywhere in the furthest north of Abbieannia."

" At the furthest north of Abbieannia" said general Mylatze with a sudden change of expression and resuming sum thing of his habitual careless and peculiar tone. " Pooh you northern Glandellinian folks are cold blooded, you are cool in everything, you can't begin to curse up hill and down hill as we can, when we fairy get at it."

" Well but the question about child slavery is---" said Cannonia.

" Oh yes to be sure, and a peculiar question too. How come we in this state to bring on such misery and slavery, well I shall answer in the good old words you used to teach me sundays. " We came by by the wickedness of Glandellinia's laws. And my former slaves which I, alas, had freed were my fathers, and what is are my mothers, and then they were mine, they and their increase, which bids fair to be a pretty considerable item. My father you know was born in Angelinia Aguthia too, and he was just such another man as your own father too---but he became a regular old Glandellinian--but upright energitic noble minded and with an iron will. Your father went south to settle down in old Glandellinia to use to say rule over rocks and stones, and to force an existance out of nature, and mine settled in northern Glandellinia to rule over children, and force existances and happiness out of them. My merther mother" said general Mylatze" was devine. Don't look at me so funny, you know what I mean, she probably was of mortal birth, but so far as I ever was able to make out, there was no trace of any human weakness or error about her, and therefore every me who lived to remember her, whether bond, or free child child slave, acquaintance or relative, or friend all will sat say the same. Why Cos cousin Cousin my b mother has been all that stood between me and utter unbelief for my life.

She was a Catholic, and my father devoured her for it and took me away. My sister and I were twins and it always said you know that twins ought to resemble each other in every way, but we were in all points a contrast. She had black fiery eyes and black hair, a strong fine woman profine profile, and a brick rich brown spanish complexion. She was as active and observing, I wicked and too active. She was generous to her friends and equals,, but proud dominent, ob overbearing, to those who would make slaves a life of horror. Now take general Beppo Evans for instance. He is altogether different to b from me. He is utterly unmerciful to any one that sets himself up against him and in battle won't take prisoners. Truthful we both are, he from pride and courage, and I too the same way. but we differ in the child slave way, even though we loved each other about as boys generally do-----of and on, and in general he was his fathers pet, and I my mothers.

There is a morbid sensitiveness and acuteness of feeling in my way on all possible subjects, of which I and Beppo Evans have no kind of an understanding. He is good to slaves too but severe when they won't behave or do their work. I remember one little slave he have, I remember how she just looked, withnher pale cheeks, her deep soft serious eyes, her white dress,----she always wore white, and I used to think of her when ever I read in Revolutions about the saints that were arrayed in fine linin, clean and white. She had a great deal of genius of one sort of another, even in the work she did; particularly in her work, and she used to work better and faster than any of the other slaves, working with a will that the others did not, and sing while at work like an angel, and though Beppo Evans had mad it a rule never to allow any of his slaves to sing while at work, he enjoyed her singing at last and tried to encourage her in it; and finally one day just out of pity and sympathy, he sent a courier under a flag of truce within the christian lines with him, to give her over as a free child, a thing that Ma Manley exploded over but could get no results even when he reported to the government of Mexico these days this matter of slavery had never been canvassed as it is now, no one ever dreamed of any harm in it. My father was a born Abbieannian like myself. I think in some preexistent state state he must have been in the higher circle of spirits and brought all his old court pride with him, for it was ingraine bred in the bone, and he was an aristocrat though he was originally of poor and not in any way of noble family. My sister was begotten in the image of my mother, and I in my fathers image.

Now you know an aristocrat when he has more cause for Glandelinia's rights than that of Abbieannia, you know the world over, has no human sympathies, beyond a certain line in even society. In Calverinia the nature of child slavery and its results is in one place, in southern Angelinia, in another, and in Glandelinia still worse, but the arostracot of all these states never goes over it. What would be hardship, and distress and in injustice in his own clase is a cool matter of course in another one. Now for general Evans, his dividing line was of that nature. Among his equals and others never was a man more just and generous and kind, but he considered the child slaves, through all possible gradations of races, nationalities and color as an interm intermediate lik link between man and the lo lowest class of animals, if there any such lower than "rats" and graded his ideas of justice and generiosity on this hypothesis. I supose to be sure, if any one had asked him plump and sure, whether they had human immortal souls, he might have said;

Whether they have or not does not worry me one bit. But my father was not a man troubled with spiritualism and neither was Beppo Evans, religious sentiment he had none, has no veneration for God at all and thinks him much lower than the lower classes of the child slaves.

Well since the beginning of my campaign general Beppo Evans took into his army some fifty five thousand child slaves, and he is an inflexible driving, punctilious military officer, everything in the army for the slaves was to move by system, to be sustained with unfailing accuracy and precision. Now if you take it into account that all this was to be worked out by a set of delicate little girls and boys, who know nothing all their lives in the absence of every possible motive to learn how to dig trenches, help soldiers bui build fortifications, erect tents, clean w wagons, and guns and all other work, and you'll see there might n be naturally in his army a great many things that looked very horrible and distressing to a sensitive man like me.

Beside all he has eve every kind of military soldier over the slaves as ever saw and the like wh had gone through a regular apprenticeship of hardness and brutality and taken his degree to be admited to pr practice. My own officers could never endure suc such officers like Evans has, nor but they have obtained an entire ascendancy over gener general ways, and thesemen were the absolute despot of these sl slaves.

I was newly commissioned to such a high rank as I have now then, but I had the same love, that I should have for all kinds of human beings---- kind of passon p especially for the study of the child slaves. I was found in all slave plantations and among the working slaves a good deal and of course became a great favorite, and all sorts of complain complaints and grievances were breathed in my ear, and I told them to general Dargin, and we between us formed a sort of committe committee f r a redress of greviances. We hindered and repressed a great deal of cruelty and congratulated ourselves on du duing a vast deal of good, till as often happens Evans severity one day overacted. A sli v slave ran away from Beppo Evans to my lines, and therefore I forgot myself that time for generally I'm a fond indulgent general, liked Beppo Evans as one of my best friends but I was a man and am a man that never flinches from anything think necessary, so I put down my foot like a rock, between Beppo Evans and his too overacted severity to the slaves.

He told him in languagecperfectly simple and respectful and deferential but quite explicit, that over the child slaves since they belonged to our armies, he shouldcbe should be entire master, but that I would tolerate no severity or cruelty to them under no conditions and if he felt otherwise he was to hand over his sword to me and resign from the command. As he for some reason revered and respected me above all things he readily consented in some measure. I used to often hear his own officers reason in cases with him endeavoring him or to excite his sympathies. But he would listen to the most pitiful appeals with the most discouraging politeness and coolness. "It all resolves in this" he would say to his officers who complained" Must I part with my overseers or keep him them. They are the soul of military punctuality, honesty and efficiency, throughout good officers, and if they resign from command, I'll b I'll be out of luck. Our government includes some necessary hardness. General rules will bear hard on the most particular cases.' This last maxim general Beppo Evans seemed to consider a settler in the whole question. After he said that, he felt he was sure of success but soon I observed rebellion was threatening among his slaves and hundreds of them to get even gave all the information they could to the Nationals. Yet Beppo Evans showed the exact sort of talent for any good general. He could have easily divided Angelinia and Calverinia as easily as as easily as an orange, or trut trod on Abbieannia as quietly and as systematically as any man living. At last his best more humane officers gave up in despair. It never will be known till the las last account while noble and sensitive nature like mine has felt, to witness so much cruelty. It has been an age of low sorrow of such natures in such a hell begotten country like ours. Whatwremained for me to do was to train my slaves in my own views and sentiments. Well after all you say about tetraining, child slaves will grow up substantially what they are by nature, and only that in providing f course they live long enough to grow up which they really don't. General Beppo Evans is an aristocrat, and all his sympathies and his reasonings are on the military line only, and all his mothers exhortations went to the winds. As to me they sank deep into me. My mother never contradicted in any form anything that my own father said or did, or seemed to differ from him but she impressed, burned int. my very soul with all the force of her deep earnest holy nature an ideaof the dignity and worth of the lowest of the human soul. I have looked in her face with solemn awe when she would point up to the stars in the evening, and say to me" for there inner the poorest lowest soul, even the lowest of little child slaves will be living, when all these stars are gone forever, will live as long as God lives."

She had one fine painting of some kind, and as well as I remember it was of Jesus blessing little children. The picture was very fine, and used to impress me very strongly. "and there James" she would say" The apostels did not want the children to bother Him but He called them to Him and put His hands on them and blessed them. Remember this my dear dear Cousin. If I had lived to grow up under her care she might surely have impressed me into I know not what of such entusiasm that I would remain firm to the cause o of the Nationals only. Also I might have been a saint, reformer, or a martyr, but alas, alas I left her when I was only twelve, and though she is still living I have not even had the chance to see her again."

General Mylette rested his head on his hands, and did not speak for some minutes. After a while he looked up, and went on;

"But poor mean thrash this whole business of fighting a war of the question of child slavery it is, a mere matter for the most part of latetitude and longitude, and also geographical position, acting with natural temperament. The greater part of the war is nothing but a sudden disasterous storm, an odd accident. The Manleys and other rebel generals like me for instance carry on their own part of the war in and in their own way in the west and elsewhere, and becomes a regular tornado of horror, and in due time will cantonally and foolishly devastate the whole of Calverinia, and because I do not fight for his purpose only, and only for Country and flag, and because I exchange child slaves for prisoners when I have no national soldiers to exchange, they think me a christian general also fighting for Glandelinia for only a christian purpose. Yet in nearly everything else I am a sort of duplicate of them, in constitution and habit. I can see the situation looking out in a hundred and fifty ways, just that same strong, over bearing, dominant and wicked spirit. You know very well how impossible it is to persuade some of the better Glandelinian generals from serving the Manleys. The fact is that though John Manley in particular is ruthless and bloody he has fallen on a war to extrimenation and embraced the same kind of theory, he is to the heart an aristocrat of the devil, as much so and many others are, and who rules over five hundred thousand slaves in his army."

General Gennonia felt rather disposed to cavil at this picture and was laying down hisgeography to begin but general Mylette stopped him...

Now general Gennonia I am sure I know every word you are going to say to me. I do not say I and the Manleys are alike in fact even though we might be equally as wicked. Manley and his father and three brothers have fallen into a condition where everything suffers from his armies, even nature herself, and I where everything acts for it, and so Manley had turned out to be a pretty willful, stout, overbearing old "Butcher" and nature destroyer, and a willful stout defender of country and Flag, leaving out the child slave question.....Yet if and Manley would have owned a big child slave plantation in any part of southern Calverinia or Glandelinia,... we would have been like two old strange bull dogs growling at each other over an old dirty bone."

"what an counter insurgent you are."said Gennonia Gennonia. " an enemy of Abbieannia and also of Manley and his brothers."

"I don't mean them any disrespect no matter how much I might dislike them" said Colonel Mylette" You know I cannot have no reference of any reverence for them, and not only that, but as I'm equal in command and rank as the highest of the Manleys and that is John, let the other Manleys keep their noses out of my business.But to go back to my history....;

When my father entered the army, two years before the outbreak of this quarrel with Abbieannia we left the whole propertybto me and my sister, to be divided as we should agree. At the out break of the war the Nationals raided on places and seized all the slaves therein, and put the torch to everything else, and blew up our works.. Now since the war is fairly on, there does not breathe on this earth a nobler soul, more generous fellow, than my chief helper general Beppo Johnston Evans, in all that concerns his equals, and we have got on admirably with this campaign so far, he going on part of the way with his army, and army and I the other, without a single blunder or mistake. So we undertook to work the campaign together, and Beppo Evans whose outward life and capabilities equals mine b come an enthusiastic campaign general and a wonderfully successfully one and therefore I can depend on him for everything. But he has told me he had one general in his command that could not com very far with him in the matter. and I and he do not agree the same way in the matter of child slaves. There is no army of Glandelinians believe any where in this big field of war that has as many child slaves as he has, about one million seven hundred thousand in his lonest. and they have been bought, driven, housed fed, worked like so many like so many horned cattle, trained up to military precision, and the question is of how little of life consonest enjoyments would keep them in working order being a being a constantly recurring problem----the necessity of drivers and overseers armed guards,----the ever necessary scourge, first last and only argument---and the whole thing was and is unbearable and disgusting to me beyond measure and loathsome to me, and when I therefore thought of my mothers estimate of one poor little soul, it seem even frightful. It's all nonsense for any one to talk to me about slave children enjoying all this, even if they do not have a hard master,. To this day I have no patience with the unutterable thrush that most of the rulers of our Government has set up as in their zeal to apologize to " God " for the sin of holding slaves without regard to their health, comfort, happiness, and worse of all their souls. No better Glandelinian generals know better. Tell me that any little child, who usually usually loves to go play wants to work sixteen hours, all his days with Sunday combined, under the constant eye of a master, and overseer, without the power of putting forth one irresponsible volition on the same dreamy monotonous unchanging toil, and all for in summer a pair of thin ragged underwear, or no clothing at all, and no pair of shoes, with enough food and shelter not fit for even a slop peddler, then let Him try it. Any man or any creature that tyinks thinks that little children can as a general thing be made as comfortable that way as any other I wish he would try it. I'd buy the dog, and work him with a clear conscience conscience.

" I always supposed" said General Cannonia" that you, and all of us Glandelinians approved approved of all of these things, and thought thought them right and proper------ according to Scripture."

" Scrapi Scripture! What kind do you mean mean?"

" The Holy Bible of course."

" The Holy Bible--Humbug and fiddlesticks.. I've read every bible there is and saw no such thing. But mayn maybe Manleys Bible and the one I read may be two different things. His Bible belongs to the Devil, mine to God. And we are not reduced to that yet. Yet even Beppo Evans who is as determined a despot as ever walked, does not pretend to this kind of defense; no he stands high and haughty, onthat good and respectable ground, The right of the owner,x and the duty of the owner to his slave." Treat them as you wish them to serve you" and he says and I think quite sensibly that the Glandelinian slave planter planter is only doing in another form what the army would do by the lower classes of the slves, that is I take it,appropriating them, body, bone, soul and spirit to their use and convience convienience He defends only his own system of slavery--and consistently. He says there can be n no freedom of Glandelinia without slavery either nominal or real. There must he says be a class of slave children from all nationalities given up to physical toil and confined to an animal nature, and a higher one thereby acquires leisure and wealth for a more expanded intelligence and improvement, and becomes therefore the directing soul of the lower. So he reasons because as I said, he is born an aristocrat , so I don't believe because I was born a demo crat."

" How in the world can you two b becompared?" said general Cannonia. " The slaves of either your army of yours is not sold, traded, parted from brother or sister, and whipped, but exchanged for prisoners."

" But Beppo is diff rent that way. The child for that time being before being exchanged is as much at the will of his owner as if he were sold to him. ther slave own rs like to like those in Manleys army can whip or chock his refractory slave to death, Beppo Evans can starve him to death. as to familily or relation security it is hard to say which is the worse---to have brother and sister sold and seperated, or see them starve to death in camp."

" BUT it is no kind of apology for slavery to prove that it is not worse than some other bone thing."

" I did not give it for one---may I'll say besides that our kind is the more bold and a terrible infringement of childrens rights, actually buying a little boy or girl up, like any kind of lower class of animal, looking at their teeth. cracking their joints and trying their paces, and then paying down for them---having speculators, breeders, traders, and brokers, in human bodies and souls---set the thing before the eyes of the Abbieannian Empire in a more tangible form though the thing done, be after all in its nature the same, that is appropriating as out of litle human beings to the use and improvement of another Without any regard to their own."

" I never thought of the matter I matter in that light." said general Cannonia, " While or well I've traveledthroughout Glandelinia and southern Calverinia soon, and I've looked over a good many documents as to the state of the lower classes of child slaves, and I really think there is no denying general peppo Evans when he says that his and my slaves are better off that all the population of slaves in Manleys armies, and those owned by planters. You see you must not infer from what I have told you that Beppo Evans is a hard masir master, for he is not. He like I is despotic, and unmerciful to insubordination, he would slash a boy or girl ten times with a whip with as little remourse as he would an enemy if he opposed him and so would I. Obey and work as they should and they find him an easy master as well as I. And he as well as I take a great pride in hafing our slaves comfortably housed, fed and even clothed, and neat and clean. see to it their health is good, and they are well cared for when sick. then was with him at the beginning of the campaign I insisted that he should do something for their instruction, and to p- please me he did get a Protestant chaplain, and used to have them given some sort of Sunday School Instructions, though I believed, in his heart that he thought it would do as much good to set a chaplain over his dogs and horses. And the fact is that most of them in secret despite being animalized by every bad influence and treatment since their first day of slavery and spending the whole of every week day in unrel unreflecting toil did be christians insecret, and they made much more headquarters heavy in their instructions than even I thought they would. The child slave as we find out is naturally more inclined to religion than others."

" Well" said general Cannonia" now came you to have him seperate from you during the beginning of thi this campaign."?

" Well no he would prevent too many big christian armies from striking me in every direction. Yet he did think it absurd after he had reformed and altered, and improved everywhere to suit my notions, that I still remained unsatisfied. The fact was, after all the thing that I hated most of all, the using of these little children, the perpetuation of all this ignorance, brutality, and vice,---just to carry on the cam campaign for me.

" Besides I was always interfering with the details while his army remained joined with mine. Being myself of a tender heart I had altogether too much fellow feeling for the unfortunate slaves, and when the poor more delicate ones could not get along with their work fast enough, it seemed so exeatly what I would doif were they, I could not and would not have them flogged flogged for it. Well of course, there was an end to child slave discipline, and Evans and came to about the same point that I and my respected father did, years before. So I told him plainly that he would never get anything out of his slaves by such meanness, and advised him sternly to turn all the slaves back over to me where they belonged, and while I go one way let him manage the rest of the campaign without the childslaves. so we parted, and he is heading one way toard toard Angelinia Acathia, while I am going the other way."

" But why don't you free your slaves I altogether instead of just exchanging them?"

" Well I cannot go too far in my business. To hold them as tools for money making or trench digging and fortification building and the like, I could and will not, but to have them to keep wagons clean and horses, and clean shoes and boots don't look quite so ugly to me. Some of the slaves I even have now like Annie for instance were the oldest of my slaves, to whom I am much attatched, and the younger ones I picked up from plantation owners or who were sold to me by masters who wanted to get rid of them. All are well satisfied to be exchanged rather than recieve free papers." He paused and walked reflectively upon and down the room!

" There was said general Mylatze " a time in my life when I had plans and hopes,, of doing something in thi x this world more than to just make campaigns and fight battles. I had vague indistinct yearl yearnings to be a sort of " Christian emancipator" to whether our country wins the war or not, to free my native land for the good of Glandelinia Glandelinia and Abbieannia both from this worse of all sects and stains. There are otyers others of the generals who have hadsuch fever fits, I suppose some time but then/!!!!--"

" Well why did you not start to?" said general Cannonia" You are like one who puts his hand first to the plow and fianing finding it hardwork hands it to some one else to do."

" Well things did not do with me as I expected, and I got the despair of that such a thing cannot be done unless Abbieannia crushes the Glandelinian rebellion. I suppose it was a necessary incident of wisdom to h us both, but some how or other instead of being actor and regenerator in such a society, I became too strong for my cause, and having the desire rather to free them than let the Abbieanniens free them I have decided to then the time comes make my part of the war bloodier than Manley can and ever will. General Beppo Evans scolds me every time we meet and he has the better of me I grant----for he really does something; his military work is a logical result of his opinions, and has caused the Nationals to dread him so that no army yet will meet or oppose him."

" My dear cousin can you be satisfied if you ever do capture the city you had been born in?"

" Satisfied. Why I despise it but it is a duty that I have to perform or lose my command and be branded as a slacker. But than to come back to this point----we both are on the liberation business. I don't think my feelings about child slavery are peculiar. I find many Glandelinian officers even under the Manleys, who in their hearts think of it just as I do. The whole country of Glandelinia and Calverinia groans unfeignedly groans and sighs and moans under it, and bad and horrible as it is for these poor little slaves it is far worse if anything for the master or driver. It takes no spectacles to see that a great class of vicious improvident degraded people and soldiers among us are an evil to the very good God in Heaven as well as to themselves and the unfortunate child slaves. The Glandelinians in the armies of the Manleys and others, cannot fail feel that as we do, because they have no hearts, and keep them slaves just only for the purpose to keep them from being happy and not for the necessary of working them. Music they are not allowed to hear, they are not allowed to speak among themselves, and they cannot even go beyond the company street from their own internment camp or tent /itwithout being shot down like a to dog. They are in private homes, they are not allowed to associate with Glandelinian children and boy or girl scouts, and they are not allowed to learn to read or ri arright write for they are a race that God alone will clean to and assimilate with. To most masters the slaves as treated as if they were a case of small pox attacking their own children, and our Glandelinian laws positively and utterly forbid under penalty any kind of educational system, and for one they do it very wisely too for just begin and educate one hundred thousand slaves in one army, and the whole army would think it was blown high in the sky. If we did not give them liberty they would take it."

" And what do you think will come as an end of this?" said Cannonia.

" I do not know for sure. But one thing is certain---that there is a tremendous mustering about the Abbiecannian ranges, the whole country over, and there is a dreadful dies irae coming on sooner or later. The same thing is working a hell of war already in Culverinia and parts of Angelinia State. This war already is so bad that I ,t reminds me of the millennium that was coming, and that through Abbiecannia all child slaves shall be free and happy. Sometimes ' think all this slave horror, all this signing and groaning, and stirring among the grave yards of millions of slaughtered work killed slaves foretells what my mother used to tell me what was coming. But it has come already. Look at this big conflict for instance."

" General Mylelze sometimes ,think you'll never capture Angelinia Agathia, and no one else of our side" said general Cannonia. laying down his book, and looking anxiously at his ol cousin.

" Thank you for for your good opinion but it's up and down with me,--up to ,ngelinia Agathia for an attempt, down in retreat in pe practice. I won't capture Angelinia Agathia unless vivien Hickey holds out against the mighty besiegers, and if that falls, I'm one resigning my command.But there is the mess call-------do lets go---- and don't say now I have not had one down right serious talk,,, for once in my life... ....."

During mess hours general Black Brooks also allused to the incident of the new child slave who was treacherously slain by the mysterious sniper. " I suppose you think general Mylelze" that all of Manleys army is barbarians."

" I think that is a barbarious thing" said Mylelze" But what ,I think of Manleys army is not fit for me to say here. I've got thousands of scourgers hunting down that sniper the moment the thing happened and when he is brought to me I'll make him answer for it with facing the firing squad."

" Well now said general Jack Brooks " I know it is impossible to get along with those christian snipers. They are so bad they ought not to live. I don't feel a particle of sympathy for such cases, and not even for soldiers of a nother Glandelinian army who will do the same sort of thing. Some day Mylelze and Manley will be having a war of their own if Manley don't keep his blood thirsty soldiers where they belong."

" But General Brooks said" said Cannerline" The al slave was a runaway."

" Oh ,iddlesticks as if they were any excuse. The poor little creature was unhappy that's what made her run away. Im very unhappy often. I presume" said he, that" That I've never seen any slaves of Manleys army that even knew what it was to smile. It is because they are treated so bad. But I admire them too for there is some of them who secretly serve christian spies, and help christian soldiers escape from his army, and of such, as checking them nearly to death, beating them till the blood blows, suffocate them till they are black inthe face or any kind o of torture. I remember when served him general Manley had a girl slave that was so strong for helping christian soldiers and spies, that she would aid him to run away and seek shelter in an impassable swamp just to help him escape, helping him to steal plans, letters and all sorts of military things. The child was caught at it often and shipped, chocked and cut up time and again, and twice her belly was almost cut open and it never did any good, and the last time she helped a spy she run away with him. There would be no reason to this if those armies would only treat their slaves kindly."

" Icaptured a desperate christian spy with six runaway slaves who followed him'said Mylelze" that all the cavarly, and infantry persuers had tried their efforts to do in vain."

" You are able to do anything " said general Cannonia. " once seven strong christian soldiers had me a prisoner and you got me away from them single handed."

" tell he was a powerful gigantic fellow,native born Abbiecannian, and he appeared to have a desperation in him to an uncommon degree, and a high spirit. He was worse than a regular regular African Lion. They called him" " THE DRAGON" Often he had come to my lines on a raid, no one could capture him or do anything with him, he could outshoot twenty persuers easily, and he was spying round from one army to another always being unusually successful till at last Beppo Evans got him. I was one visit to him at the time ward the christian army close by. Evans was greatly exasperated, but ,told him it was his own fault for not putting the proper amount of guards around his headquarters and laid him any wager that I could capture the man, and finally it was agreed upon that if ,caught him I should have him as my victim. So I mustered out a party of fourty good men, accompanied by six onile slaves, with guns and three good blood hounds for the persuit. So Glandelinians you know can get up just as much enthusiasm in hunting a man fugitive as a deer if it is only customary in fact ,got a great deal excited myself though ,had only intended to make him a prisoner in case he was caught.

well the dogs bayed and howled, and we rode and scampered, and finally we started him. He first fired two shots which missed me and my horse, and struck a soldier behind .behind killing him. He than ran and bounded like a buck stopping once in a while to shoot at us, and twen kept us well in the rear for some long time but at last he got caught in an impenetrable thicket of black berry bushes then he turned to bay and running out of ammunition for his pistols picked up a big heavy branch from a tree, and I tell you he fought the men who closed in one him right fallen gallently. He dashed them to right and loft and actually killed six of them, when a shot from a gun brought him down, and he fell wounded and bleeding almost at my feet. The poor fellow looked up at Me with despair and defiance both in his eye. I kept back the negs and the rest of the party as they came pressing up, and claimed him as my prisoner. It was all ,could do to keep them from shooting him in the flush of success, but I persisted in my bargian and himwas turned over to me. Well ,took him in hand and took him to my own private tent had a good n made bed made for him, dressed his wounds, and tended him myself still I got him fairly on his feet again."

" Then what in the world did you to do to him, have him shot as a spy!" said general Bargin.

" No. I had free papers and a pro parole made out for him and told him to go back to his command, and take along a number of slaves with him."

" And did he go?" asked Cannonia.

" Yes, and ,gave him six slaves. There was then a day when he had lain down his very life for me. I was almost killed at Delight's ,unction when six times a sniper tried to shoot me, and he recieved the bullet intended for me even though he was on the side of the Nationals. He was mortally wounded and there was no saving him. I felt though he fought on the opposite side he was a loving friend neverthe less and never felt anybodys loss more."

Both Jannie and ,illian had come gradually nearer and nearer to the general as he told the story, and Jannie's lips were apart, and her eyes wide with absorbing interest. As he finished she started to sob convulsively.

" Jannie, ,annie what in the world is the matter with you now" said general Mylelze as the child slaves small frame trembled and shook with the vo violence of her feelings. " You little slaves" he added, ought never to hear these kinds of stories----as you cannot bear them."

" Yes sir ,can bear them" said Jannie controlling herself suddenly with a strength strength of resolution singular in such a child slave. " and I'm not nervious or afraid, but these things are so sad, they affect me."

" What do you mean, Jannie."!

" I can't y tell you now general, I always think of many things, but perhaps some day ,will let you know."

" Well think away little one, only please do not cry any more and worry me" said general Mylelze. " Look see, here what a beautiful orange I have got for you."

Jannie than took it and smiled, even though there were still tears in her black eyes.

" Come go out and play with ,illian" said General Mylelze pushing them both gently out of the mess tent. A few minutes passed, and then came merry laughs as Jannie and Lillian were playing some funny kind of a game. Maybe there might be a slight danger that our little slave friend be neglected too much amid the adventures of the Glandelinian generals, but from this tent if our leader will accompany me up to the child slave tent they may perhaps learn a litti of her affairs. There were only a few slaves in the tent just now, and Annie was eating her supper, and Jannie had a paper and pencil before her intent on something that seemed to cost her a great deal of anxious thought. The fact was that Jannie was yearning for her old home and it had become so strong that she had begged a sheet of writing paper from general Bargin, and knowing how to write to a good extent she concieved the bold idea of writing a letter to what she hoped would be to " God ,imself" and she was busy now on her ola paper. Jannie was in a good deal of trouble for fear some of the soldiers might object to her writing this letter, and there fore wished to keep it a secret. And while she was working, and breathing very hard, in her earnestness, Lillian ,alighted like some golden peasant on the round of her chair behind her and peeped over her shoulder.

" Oh Jannie, Jannie to whom are you writing the letter."

" I'm trying to write to our Lord Lillian," said Jannie drawing the back of her hands over her eyes' But somehow I'm afraid the soldiers won't mail it, and ,shan't be able to make it go out to him."

" I wish I could help you Jannie. I've learned to write soon. Last year I could make a ,ake all the letters but I'm afraid now I have forgotten."

So little Lillian put her golden head closer to her friends and the two commenced a grave and earnest time of work each one equally earnest and with a good deal of consulting and advising over every word the composition began as they both felt very good to look quit quite like writing.

" Yes Jannie it's a beautiful letter and the Dear god will like it very much" said Lillian gazing delight edly on it. " How pleased you will be, and he,ll sure free us poor little children. Isn't a shame you ever had to go away from your mother and father, and I too. I mean to ask God to let you go back soon. "

They all say that the christians may free us all some day as a on as they win the war," said Jannie. But I,m expecting they'll be too slow. The good one especially Jesus said would come for us some day and set me free."

" Oh he'll certainly come" said Lillian. " and won't it be glad."

" and I liked to send a letter you know to let the Dear God know where I was, and tell him ,Him ,am well off in Mylelzes army, for if he thinks I'm in Manleys army he'll feel dreadful, poor God."

" I say, Jannie" said Mylelze c. coming into the tent at this moment.

Both the little girls started and turned red.

" What are you two writing here" said Mylelze looking s suspicious and coming p up and looking at the letter.

"Oh it's Jannie's letter. She want's me to know where she is a He'll free her." said Lillian" isn't it written nice?"

Mylotze took it from the table and glanced over it.

"I would not discourage either of you" said general Mylotze" but I think Jannie you had better get me to write a letter for you to an exchange depot. I'll do it when I come back from a short distance scouting tour."

"It's very important she should write to Him" said Lillian" Because then God will send down some one with money to redeem her and take her home again you know general she told me so."

General Mylotze thought in his heart, that it seemed an unusual thing for a little slave girl wanting to write a letter to God for her freedom, but he did not make any audible comment upon it or laugh or smile either, only ordered Jannie to bring his Horse, and to come with him on the tour as he wished to have her for a companion.

"Jannie's letter was written in due form for her that evening and swiftly sent off to the " Child Slave's Exchange Depo". for the exchange papers to be made out immediately.

General Mylotze still preserved in his labors of keeping the army on a swift march since the battle of San Pedro. And it was universally agreed among every general and other officer, down from Commonia down, to the lowest commander, that general Mylotze Mylotze was very curious. They all agreed that no general of other armies ever kept the troops going as he did he did---that he hardly rested at all, and they were surprised that he should be any relation to Commonia. Even Commonia himself declared that it was absolutely tiresome to see Con Cousin Mylotze always keep the army on the go only stopping for a few hours sleep at night and fighting skirmishers every hour.

And in fact Mylotzes advance was being so incessant and forced as to lay some foundation for the complaint. He moved column after column as fast as a machine, from day light till dark; fighting battles every day and a score of times a day giving to both sides each time a loss of a ten thousand or ten thousand, and moving with the energy on of one who is pressed on by some immediate urgency, and then when the light faded, and the army encamped for a few hours well needed rest, with one turn out some his order for some division to attack a portion of the christian army arrayed before him, and there he was again going on as briskly as ever. It was really a labor to see him press on as he did.

CHAPTER FIFTY SIX....

..A CHILD SLAVE WHO ACTS AS A SECRET CHRISTIAN SPY.

A PLAN FOR EXCHANGING CHILD SLAVES. ARMED BY THE MIDDLEMEN.
A FADING HUMAN FLOWER.
A TEMPORARY JUNCTION WITH BEPPO EVANS.
BAD PURCHASE KINGS.

The morning when the army made a halt longer than was usual general Mylotzes voice was heard calling Jannie to his tent.

"Come over here Jannie" I've something to show you. Come quick."

"What is it sir" said Jannie as she obeyed.

"I have made a purchase for your companionship---see here" said general Mylotze and with the word he brought forth another little slave girl, fourteen, eight, or nine years of age. She was one of the prettiest prettiest of any children slaves Jannie had ever seen for a " Little Evangeline St Clare" in her features and form and her delicate blue eyes moved with quick and restless glances over everything in the tent. Her mouth half open with astonishment at the grandeurs of the new masters army, camp and his tent in particular displayed a white and brilliant set of teeth and her hair was long and golden and bobbed altogether different than all other slaves, and although she looked innocent, and good, the expression of her face nevertheless had an odd mixture of innocent shrewdness and cunning over which was only drawn like a kind of veil an expression of the most doleful gravity and solemnity. She was dressed in a single dirty ragged garment made of an old potato sack, and stood almost entirely naked with her hands behind her. Pretty as she was there was something odd and goblin like about her appearance. It--something as Jannie thought to herself--that made one to be slave for the christians and to inspire Jannie for her companionship while general Burgin nims. If turning to Mylotze said

"Why Your Excellency what in the world have you brought that thing into our camp for?"

"For the same purpose as we got the other slaves and for Jannie to educate and train in the way she should go and to do her work. I thought she was rather a funny specimen pretty as she is. Here girl" he added giving a sort of whistle as a man would to call the attention of his dog" This little Girl Jannie is to be your new companion, and I hope you'll please you under her as your mistress. I'm going to give you up to her, now see that you behave yourself, give us a christian song now, and show us some of your dancing."

The little girl started in a clear shrill but musical voice, a beautiful catholic church hymn to which she kept time with her hands and feet most gracefully, spinning round and clapping her hands, in a fantastic sort of way, and producing a sound of voice in singing that the best woman Sprucesinger in singer would have been put to shame with; and when she suddenly stopped and stood with her hands again folded and a most unconscious expression of meekness and solemnity over her face only broken by the cunning dances in which one shot askance from the corner of her eyes.

General Burgin and Jannie too stood perfectly paralyzed with blank amazement.

"Yes" said Mylotze "remember please behave yourself."

"Yes general" said the girl with strange sometimes gravity, her eyes twinkling as she spoke.

"Remember you are going to be good when you are here please do you understand me." said general Mylotze.

"Oh yes sir" said the slave with another twinkle, her hands still devotedly folded.

"Now your excellency what on earth do this thing for" said general Burgin: "Your camp is all full of these little plagues now, that even one of the contrabands can't set his foot down without treading into a swarm of them pretty they are, I've even got with the turning and find a score of them sleeping in my own tents and sometimes whose feet are taking out from under my cot, one lying on my writing table, and they are, everywhere like pesty flies and roaches. What on earth did you want to bring this one the camp for?"

"It is for a purpose of my own" said Mylotze a little severely " but I choose to have it. I'll do and no word against it from any one at all. Remember Jannie she is to be given over to your education. And general Burgin I don't see why you are object. You are always preaching about how many I should buy to exchange. I thought I would make Jannie present of a new slave and let her try her in hand on her and bring her up in the way she should go."

"Well I don't want her in my tent I am sure, I have more slaves than I know what to do with now."

"That's you make believe christian slave holding generals all over. You'll argue that they ought to be free, but let me assure of you that should take us into your tent with you, and take the label of the kidnapping up on yourselves. So what it was to that, they are dirty and disagreeable, and it's too much care and so on."

"Your Excellency you know I did not say it in that fashion" said general Burgin.

evidently softening. "Well maybe she may be welcome at that" he said looking rather more favorably on the child.

Indeed general Mylatze might have touched the right string for general Cannonlu's conscientiousness was ever on the alert. "But" he added" I did not really see ant reason for you buying this little girl there are enough now in your army to take up the time and skill of every soldier in the army as well as us generals and other officers, too..""" "

" Well then general Cannonlu" said Mylatze drawing him aside,," I ought to beg your pardon for most of my foolish things I do. you are a great and good general but the fact is that this little girl belongud to a couple couple of plantuntation owners that I had passed by on my advance, and I heard her screaming and on investigating from them beating her and swearing and blaspheming to beat the band. She looked bright, pretty and funny too as if something good might be made of her yet, and so I absolute ly took her away from them, placed them under arrest, and I'm giving her to Jannie to instruct and care for. Try now Jannie, give her a Abbisan Abbisannian bringing up if you ,i like and she what it will make of her. You know I am not brought up that way to instruct her, but I'd like you to try."

" Well I'll do what I can" said Jannie, and she approached tye new slave very much if she was a total strange and half bashfully.

" She is half naked and dreadfully dirty." she said.

" Well take her into your tent, and make some of them clothe and clean her up."

Therefore Jannie brought her into the child slave tent.

" I don't see what general Mylatze wants with another no account slave" said one of the Glandelinian boy scouts surveying the new arrival with no friendly air as she was taken into the tent by Jannie. " I won't have her around me on no account."

" Bah " said the Gland ine glandelinian girl scouts with supreme disgust. "Let her keep out of my way and Jannie too. What in the world did general Mylatze want with more of these dirty accursed slaves for any way."

" Is that so " said one of the colonels who overheard the remark. "you seem to think yourself important because you have parents and are scouts. you are no higher nor lo lower than a slave."

Jannie saw that there was no one in the camp that would undertake to see to the cleaning and dressing of the new arrival, and the other 1 slaves were out at work, and so she was forced to do it herself, with some very ungracious and reluctant assistant from the two girl scouts who were compelled to do so by the colonels it however is not for ours to hear the particulars of the first toilet of a neglected abused child slave. In fact in that country and throughout glandelinia, Glandelinia immense multitudes of child slaves must toil and die in a state that it would be too great a shock of the nerves of christian mortals to ever hear described. Jannie herself had a great strong practical deal of resolution, n and therefore she went through all the disgusting details with the work of a herion heroine, though it must be confessed with no very gracious air, for endurance was the utmost to which her principal could bring to her as young as she was. When she saw on the back and shoulders and other portions of the childs body great sores sores, welts and callused spots, real marks of the system under which she had probably grown up thus far, her heart became pitiful within her.

" See there Janie." said the helping girl scout, pointing to the marks" Don't that show that she had a hard cruel master somewhere. And oh we will have a fine time with her I reckon for she might have done things that brought it upon her. I hate these child slaves like these kind they are so disgusting and so many of them are christian dogs I wonder exceedingly that general Mylatze would have taken her."

" The little girl slave heard all these comments with the subdued and dole air dolaful air which seemed her nature, only scanning with a keen and furtive air and slave glance of her flickering eyes, the uniform that the girl scout wore; when arrayed at last in a suit of decent and whole clothing,, and her hair bobbed properly, Jannie with some satisfaction thought she looked more like the other slaves did, and in her sim simple mind began to mature some plans for her instruction. Therefore sitting down befor her she began to question her;;;

" How old are you Clara?"

" I do not know Jannie" said the child.

" Don't know how old you are! did you not have any one tell you!"

" No. no one said anything to me but cursing and swearing."

" Who was your mother?"

" My master said , he never had no father and mother." said the child sadly.

" What do they know about it. surely you had a mother, and father, and probably brother and sister!"

" No."

" What do you mean. Well were you born here or at home!"

" I don't believe I ever was born" persisted the child slave, looking so sober that Jannie who was soft hearted felt as if she had got hold of some soul in childish form from Purgatory, but nevertheless she was not morgion e,and she said, while trying to control herself.-

" Try and answer me properly Clara for I'm your friend and not prplaying any tricks on you. Plese I please be good to me and tell me where you was born, and who your father and mother were."

" My master said I never was born, that I grew up out of the ground one tree" reit- erated the child morn emphatically" They say I never had any parents or nothing, but that they brought me up out of the ground, and then had me raised by a speculator, with lots of other Glandelinians. My master hates all christians."

The child was evidently sincere, and the girl scout breaking into a loud laugh,, said, Heavens Jannie, there is thousands of them brought p this way, never hampered, or anything. glandelinian traders and speculators buy them very cheap when we are they are little, and then got them raised for market."

" How long have you been owned by your master and mistress.?"

" I do not know that either Jannie. I never was told."

" was it a year or more, or less."!

" I do not know Jannie. I said I never was told."

" Jannie these slaves---they cannot tell anything, they do not even know about time; or how long a day or night is; what the sun moon and stars are or anything. They don't know what a year is, they don't even know themselves or what years old is."

" Have you ever heard about God and His Blessed Mother Clara!"

The child brightened at this and said,

" Yes; my master said that that God does not care for slaves and will a make us all go to a terrible place where there is darkness and smoke if we be good and be a christ ian; for they say the christians only be good so they can steal God and take him out of heaven."

" Do you believe that He made you!"

" No; the glandelinians say that God was made by them" said the child;

The idea appeared to scare her immediately. for her eyes dila dilated as she said this and then she added" My master said I grew up from the ground on a great tree and that the tree is still standing; and he showed it to me. They say that God never made me but they made Him."

" Jannie thought within her heart." There may be millions of little ones like her she'll never see God because of the wicked Glandelinians. oh God make the christians win quick planes and free us all. Then she continued"

" Do you know how to clean horses and scrub vaguns."

" No; but I know how to plant crops!"

" What else can you do, what did you do for your wicked master and mistress!"

" Tend to his crops, fetch water; wash dishes, clean knives, scrub the floor in every room; and wait on important folks and soldiers."

" Were they good to you!"

" No they beat me because I want to be a christian and be good" said the child, beginning the girl scouts cunningly and hostily.

" Jannie rose from this discouraging questioning, and suddenly observed that general Mylatze himself was leaning over the back of her chair; being as she was Jannie's idea of education like all her other simple ideas, was however very set and to the purpose, and of the kind that prevails among brothers and sisters throughout all of Abbisania Abbisannia and which should be preserved and put into this very country of America and probably then there could be no sinners and criminals. As nearly as could be expressed therefore, they could be comprised in very few words;, to teach them to mind when they are spoken to and to set the example by being the same; to teach them everyth ng in religion and everything that her simple mind could bring about, and to instruct them if they told lies. And though of course in the flood of light light that is now poured in upon education, these are left far away in the rear, and yet it is an undisputed fact that all parents and relatives in Abbisannia raised their children up good and proper, that unlike this country you could find no dependent children of any kind and they are universally respectable and loving and friendly even to strangers, and such things as shipings and siblings are not know and it is not needed. Would to God that could be the case here also. But about the child slaves. At all events Jannie knew of nothing else to do, and therefore applied her mind to to her new charge with the best diligence she could command.

The child was announced and considered among all other slaves as Jannie's new sister and as she was looked upon among all the others like one from Purgatory Jannie felt that there could be no enemies among child slaves; for every slave in the place whether distant or near did all they could to make the child smile and to be useful. And with a self sacrifice which all of our readers I hope will appreciate Jannie resolved in instead of comfortably making her own bed, sweeping and dusting the tent; which she had hitherto done in utter scorn of all offers of help from other fellow slaves------to remain herself of the martyrdom of instructing poor Clara to perform these operations, which was successful. One thing that went wrong however was the abuse of the glandelinian child scouts---and on the day that was coming to them. She was a good slave in her nature but not knowingbright or strong, she was as others were to her; good if they were fed, and doubly bad if they were.

Jannie began with Clara by taking her into the tent the first morning before the army was to advance and slowly and most solemnly commenced a course of instruction in the art and mystery of bed making.

Now Clara, I'm going to show you just how to make up my bed, just the way I want it. I am very particular about my bed, and therefore you must learn exactly how I do it my- self."

"Yes Jannie" said Clara with a very deep sigh, and a face of sorrowful earnestness.

" " all right. Now Clara dear please look here---this is the hem of the sheet---thi this is the right side of the sheet---and this is the wrong, are you able to remember what I told you?"

" Yes Jannie dear" said Clara with another sigh.

" Well now the under sheet you must bring over the bolster so---and place it and tuck it down down under the mattress so---do you see?"

"Yes Jannie" said Clara with profound attention.

But now the upper sheet" said Jannie" must be brought down in this way, and tucked under firm and smooth at the foot---so the narrow hem at the foot."

" Yes Jannie" said Clara as before.

" Now Clara, let me see you do this" said Jannie, pulling off the clothes and seating herself.

Clara with great gravity and shrewdness and attetin attentiveness, went through the performance conflic completely to Jannie's satisfaction, smoothing the sheets, parting or patting out every wrinkle, and smoothing throughout the whole process, a gravity and serious seriousness with which her little instrumteress was greatly suffied. but by some unlucky unlucky slip, something like the corner of a yellow envelope appeared at of one of her sleeves just as she was finishing, and caught Jannie's attention. Instantly she pounched upon it a great fear in her heart.

" what's this. you foolish reckless girl---you've been stealling this, an envelope from some generals." she cried.

Jannie pulled the envelope out of the child's sleeve yet the child was not in the least concerned or discomforted, she only looked at it with an air of the most surprised and unconscious innocence.

" good Lord why that's general Dargins message to general Cannonia ain't it" said Jannie." how could you have taken it clara!"

" I know it is his letter to the generals" said Clara. " The Glandelinians took me a slave, and I'm going to secretly help the christians all I can."

" Clara you reckless foolish girl, don't you know it's dangerous here,--that if they knes you stole that envelope you'd die for it."

" Maybe I would, but I did not think of it for the momept---never thought of it till this blessed minute, but death is better than a slave."

" Clara" said jannie looking around very cautiously" Don't you know that you are taking an awful risk, and that's its wicked to take needless risks!"

" I never care for anything no matter how dangerous it is" said clara with virtuous gravity" it's just the truth, I've been telling now, and ain't nothing else. They make us all slaves, the christians are fighting to make us free, and it is our duty to help them free us."

" Yes but if this is found out oh God."

" Never mind jannie I'd confess to it, and save you but if the Glandelinians were to kill and torture me a hundred times a day for a month, I would not do anything else" said Clara defiantly. " I never will quit stealing on the Glandelinians---anodlem sorry you say it peaking out of my sleeve. You can hide it under the cot, or in some old clothes and no one will ever find out."

Jannie was so scared at this that she did not know what to do but looking out of the tent to see that no one was around, she quickly lit a match and set the envelope and letter afire and burned it all up.

" now for my sake please don't do that again." said jannie. " still you tell me now that you did not take anything else!"

Clara confessed that she destroyed a plan general Mylatze had made but still persisted that it was her duty for the christian cause to do so.

" Now clara" said jannie again giving cautious glances in every direction and looking outside " if you are careful and keep mum and say nothing I won't speak a word about it to any one. But I know you might have taken something else since you've been around the camp these this morning, for I let you run about all day yesterday. Now tell me if you took anything and where it is so I can hide or destroy the evidence for my God if you are found out."

" I took general Mylatzes geography."

"you did, you foolish child. well what else!"

" I took a order to general Black Brooks."

" Go bringthh them to me this minu e both of them please."

" I can't Jannie I burned them up."

" Burned them up. I think you are telling me a story. Plea please bringout to me and yourself and bring them. I'm doing this so you won't be discovered."

But Clara with loud protestations declared she could not as they were burned.

" But you were foolish still more to have burned them up." said Jannie.

" I could not help it. I thought it was the best way to prevent the generals from winning a battle."

" just at this moment Lillian came innocently into the tent, with a coral necklace on her neck and she said;

" why Jannie there is an awful commotion at general Mylatzes headquarters."

" Why what is the matter."

" Some one got away with some important papers, an ev envelope with a letter in it, and his prised Geography."

" why how did you come to know of that." said Jannie.

" "Come to know it. Why I have passed his headquarters and been with him all day." said Lillian.

" Did he miss it yesterday.?"

" Yes and what is funny Jannie he suspects some child slave for it, and is going to have every one searched. I came to warn you in case the search was started."

Jannie looked perfectly bewildered, the more so as more child slaves came in with excited news.

" I'm sure , can't tell anything what to do with such a case" said me of them in despair. " what in the world does the general think any one of us took them for. I know she to suspect though" added the boy looking at Clara. and " what in the world did you sent to go and take those things for girlie."

" Why to win my freedom of course, and I could not think of anything else to do." said clara rubbing her eyes.

" But of course you needd not do such things that christian spies are sent over to do" said Lillian" That's too dangerous just as if you were a man."

" I know it is but I don't care" said Clara.

" Goodness there is no such thing as self respect in that girl said another girl slave looking provokingly at Clara. " if the Glandelinians find out you took it they'll whip you till the blood runs. You surely would catch it."

"But is there any one going to tell!" asked clara.

" No, no clara" said Lillian with an air of earnestness which she could command at times." You must not fear anything like that. We don't bear to double cross on each other."

" Good yes but Lillian is so good that she would risk her life for another slave". said Jannie. " No one will tell on her for she'll be cut up dreadfully. We won't say a word to no one."

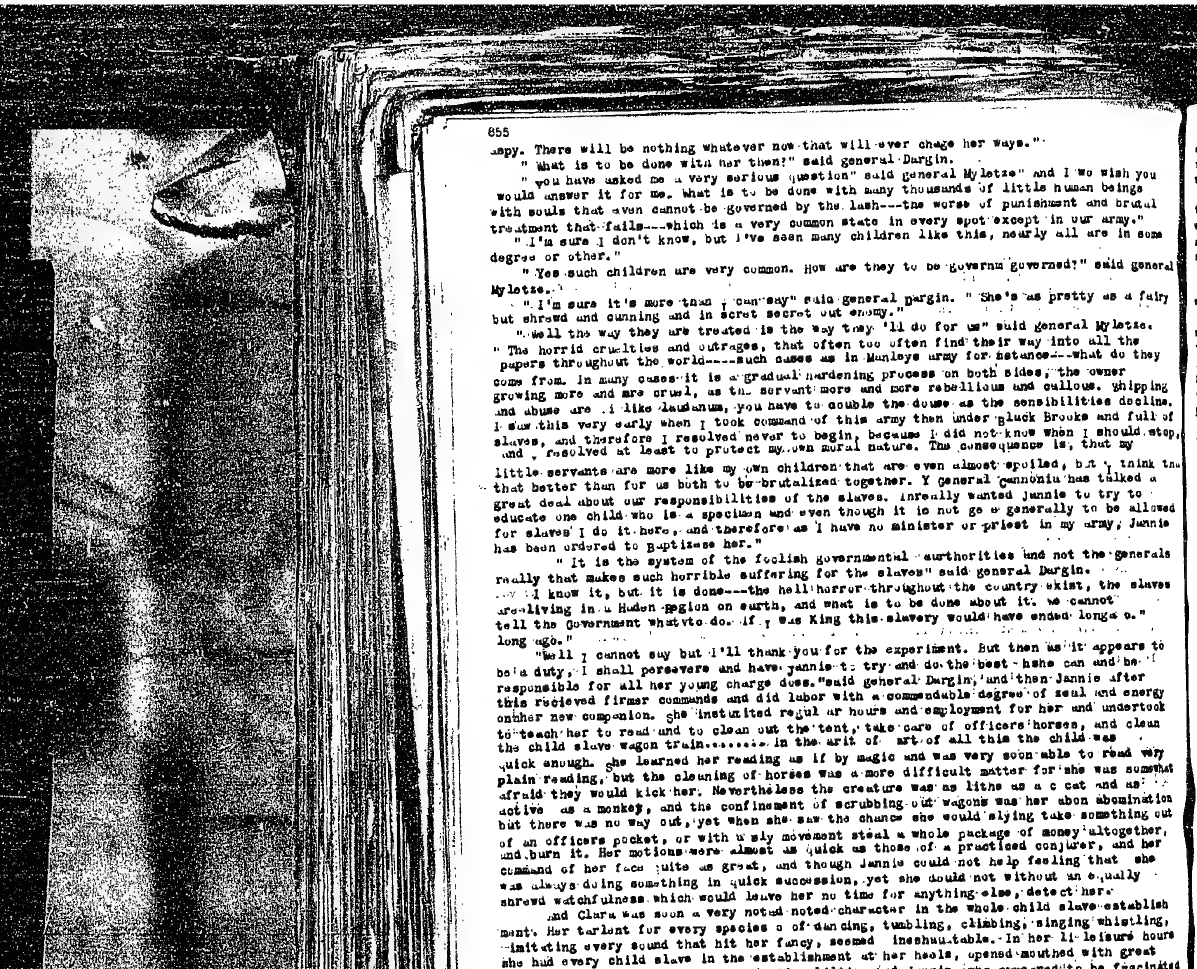
Clara was comforted, in a moment.

" no matter what we are we all got christian blood in us that's plain." said Jannie again while , Lillian stood looking at Clara. There stood the two prettiest of child slaves in general Mylatzes camp. both had golden heads and appeared to have belonged to some high grad families, their deep eyes were the same. they had the same spiritual noble brow and prin- like movements almost like " Little Eva " in " Uncle Tom's Cabin" but both stood representives of different Nat; Nationalties. one was a saxon born of ages of cultivation command, education, physical, and moral, the german both being those now of the oppressed and sufferers of toil and exile.

Something perhaps of such thoughts struggled through Lillians mind. But mind, but in most cases a childs thoughts are quite dim undefined instincts, and in Lillians noble nature many such were yearning and working, for which she had no power of utterance. When Jannie expatiated on Lili: Clara Clara: reckless conduct, the child looked perplexed and sorrowful, but said sweetly:

" Poor Clara why need you do the work of a christian spy/ especially in this army. Mylatze is good to all of us and you are going to be taken good care of now. I'm sure all the generals here would rather give you anything of theirs, than have you take it!"

Since she came to this camp the girl had received the first words of kindness that she had ever heard, in her life, and now the sweet tone and manner of Lillian struck strangely pa Claras heart, and a sparkle of something like a tear shone in the keen eye but it was followed by a short laugh and a grin. No the ear that had never heard anything but abuse is strangely incredulous of anything so heavenly as kindness, and Clara only thought these Glandelinians were as wicked as all the rest, and just as cruel, and therefore she did not believe there were any kind persons anywhere.



The strange part is the Glandelinian generals knew right well enough who had destroyed the letter and papers but what to do to Clara was a case of puzzles, for they did not want to punish her as a spy when they felt sure she did not know better in the first place. Therefore general General Dargin thought he would take time to think of it, and by the way of gaining time and in the hopes of some indefinite moral virtues supposed to be inherent in a good lecture, the general spoke to her long and carefully, and then sending her back to Jannie sent to see general Mylatze.

" I don't see" said general Dargin to the chief" How any of us are going to manage the child. She has been treated so cruel by other masters that she thinks it her duty her duty to do the work of a christian spy."

" Well keep everything of important out of her sight then, and beso careful she does not overhear any information. If she does anything again you may have to whip her, that's the only punishment I can command to her."

" But I hate to whip any of the slaves as that only makes them more spiteful" said general Dargin. " I never heard of children really having to be whipped in any place in Abbleannia, and she might be right in our her moral sense of the view but it is damaging to her.".

" It certainly is" said general Mylatze. " and I've seen what she went through before I took her from her master and mistress. I've seen this child whipped with a scourge, struck over the head with a poker, knocked down with the shovel or thongs, kicked in the stomach and beaten with onion ever since the handiest, and smoked almost to death, and held with her face buried in sand for six minutes and everything else, and seeing that she is used to this style of punishment I think it'll take only a hell of torture to make much impression and then maybe that won't do any good. I'll bet she'll always be aspy. There will be nothing whatever now that will ever chage her ways."

"What is to be done with her then?" said general Dargin.

"you have asked me a very serious question" said general Mylet;e" and I wo wish you would answer it for me. What is to be done with many thousands of little human beings with souls that even cannot be governed by the lash---the worse of punishment and brutal treatment that fails---which is a very common state in every spot except in our army."

"I'm sure I don't know, but I've seen many children like this, nearly all are in some degree or other."

"Yes such children are very common. How are they to be governm governed?" said general Mylet;e.

"I'm sure it's more than I can say" said general pargin. "She's as pretty as a fairy but shrewd and cunning and in scret secret out enemy."

"well the way they are treated is the way they 'll do for us" said general Mylet;e. "The horrid cruelties and outrages, that often too often find their way into all the papers throughout the world----such cases as in Munleys army for instance---what do they come from. In many cases it is a gradual hardening process on both sides, the owner growing more and mre cruel, as the servant more and more rebellious and callous. Whipping and abuse are ..i like laudanum, you have to double the dose as the sensibilities decline. I saw this very early when I took command of this army then under Gluck Brooks and full of slaves, and therefore I resolved never to begin, because I did not know when I should stop, and resolved at least to protect my own moral nature. The consequence is, that my little servants are more like my own children that are even almost spoiled, but I think the that better than for us both to be brutalized together. Y general Cannonia has talked a great deal about our responsibilities of the slaves. Inreally wanted Jannie to try to educate one child who is a specimen and even though it is not ge e generally to be allowed for slaves I do it here, and therefore as I have no minister or priest in my army, Jannie has been ordered to Baptizese her."

"It is the system of the foolish governmental aurthorities and not the generals really that makes such horrible suffering for the slaves" said general Dargin.

"I know it, but it is done---the hell horror throughout the country exist, the slaves are living in a Hudes region on earth, and what is to be done about it. we cannot tell the Government whattto do. If I was King this slavery would have ended longe e." long ago."

"Well I cannot say but I'll thank you for the experiment. But then as it appears to be a duty, I shall persevere and have jannie t: try and do the best he can and be responsible for all her young charge does."said general Dargin, and then Jannie after this recieved firmer commands and did labor with a commendable degree of zeal and energy on ther new companion. she instuited regul ar hours and employment for her and undertook to teach her to read and to clean out the tent, take care of officers horses, and clean the child slave wagon train.....In the arit of art of all this the child was quick enough. she learned her reading as if by magic and was very soon able to read very plain reading, but the cleaning of horses was a more difficult matter for she was somewhat afraid they would kick her. Nevertheless the creature was as lithe as a c cat and as active as a monkey, and the confinement of scrubbing out wagons was her abon abomination but there was no way out, yet when she saw the chance she would slying take something out of an officers pocket, or with a sly movement steal a whole package of money altogether, and burn it. Her motions were almost as quick as those of a practiced conjurer, and her command of her face quite as great, and though Jannie could not help feeling that she was always doing something in quick succession, yet she could not without an equally shrewd watchfulness which would leave her no time for anything else, detect her.

and Clara was soon a very noted noted character in the whole child slave establishment. Her tarlent for every species o of dancing, tumbling, climbing, singing whistling, imitating every sound that hit her fancy, seemed inexhaustable. In her li leisure hours she had every child slave in the establishment at her heels, opened mouthed with great adi admiration and wonder, not excepting Lillian and Jannie, who appeared to be fascinated by her wild diablerie as a dove is sometimes charmed by a glittering serpent. General Cannonia was quite uneasy that both Jannie and Lillian should fancy Claras company so much, and implored general Mylet;e to forbig it.

"Pooh let the child slaves alone" said general Mylet;e. "The new girl will do them all good."

"But she is a spy---are you not afraid she will teach the other slaves to do the same things."!"

"She can't teach Jannie any sort of such mischief she might teach it to other of the slaves but not Jannie. She is just like those Vivian girls, whose minds evil rolls off like dew ofa cabage ea cabbage leaf---not a drop sinks in."

"Don't be too sure" said general Cannonia." I know I would never allow any of my slaves to play around with that little spy."

"well your child slaves need not tu" said general Mylet;e" But mine may if they we wish, for if Jannie could have been spoiled or turned into a spy it would have been don done years ago."

No matter who they were however all of the child slaves were disgused and contemned by all the Glandelinian girl s and boy scouts who thought them beneath their noi notice. But they had soon found on many an occasion to alter their opinion. It was very often discovered that who ever said an abusive word to any one slave that one was sure to meet with some kind of accident shortly after, either a pair of uniform trou ers or a coat and thole suit would be mysteriously missing, or an article of a full dress uniform or hat would be found utterly ruined, or the ..eream would stumble accidentally into a bucket of hot water or a torrent of dirty slop would suddenly and unaccountably deluge them from above when in full gala dress-----and on all these occasions when investigation was made, there was no one found who could be held responsible for the indignity. Each slave would be cited, and be up before all official Tribunals time and again, but always sustained their examinations with the most edifying innocence and gravity of appearance.

Not one of the scouts nor any of the generals ever doubt doubted who did the things, but as there was not the low least scrap of evidence to be established, the generals were too just in one way to feel at liberty to proceed to punish the slaves without it. And the mischiefs were done, and always so nicely planned and timed as to further shield and shelter the aggressor. Thus the times for revenge on the two leading of all the girl and boy scouts were al always always chosen in those seasons when they were in disgrace disgrace for something with their superior officer, when any complaint from them would of course meet with no sympathy. In short all of general Mylet;es child slaves made all Glandelinian boy and girl scouts understand the propriety propriety of letting them alone, and they were let alone accordingly.

All of Mylet;es child slaves were unusually smart in all manual operations, learning everything that was taught with surprising quickness. with even a few lessons they had learned to do everything asked of them, in a way in which even the very officers and overseers could find no fault. When fixing the cots of officers and even their own mortal hands could not lay spread smoother, adjust pillows more accurately, sweet and dust and arrange and clean horses and wagons, and artillery and guns and the like more perfectly than these child slaves, and they very often got themselves dinners and suppers that even the best of child scouts and officers would envy them for. But Clara was an opposite. If Jannie after three or fours days of careful and patient supervision was so sanguine as to suppose Clara had at last fallen into the right way, could do without overlooking and so go off and busy herself about something else, Clara would hold a perfect carnaval of confusion for some two or three hours with her fellow slaves. Instead of making up her own bed, she would amuse herself with pulling off the pillow cases, putting her golden head along the pillows, till it would sometimes be grotesquely ornamented with feathers sticking out in various directions, then she would climb the posts, or even tent pole and hang head down wards from the top, flourishing the sheets and spreads about her like sings, or dress the bolster up in some generals olf uniform, and enact various performances with that singing and whistling and making all kinds of faces in short, as jannie who would come back in time to see it phrased it" would be enough to make a stone statue die laughing.

On one occasion Jannie found Clara with her very best hat on her head going on with a dance for the benefit of all the other slaves and then hear later she again took some thing from Mylet;es headquarters and gave it to a christian spy.

Clara" she would say when at the end of all patience" what makes you take such reckle reckless chances.?"

"I'm expected to serve the country that is fighting for our freedom." was the answer?

"I don't know what will happen to you yet Clara".

"Goodness Jannie,you must know that I'm doing right. I ain't used to being a slave and will take my freedom when I see the first chance."

"Why Clara that would be more dangerous still. You can do well here if you have a mine to and general Mylet;e is good to you too---what is the reason you will destroy his own plume."

"But I'm helping the christians win my freedom.For i.s good for me."

Jannie and other slaves then t e tried to explain matters to her, but Clara inverp invariably made a commotion, screaming that nothing would make her stop doing it, and gree groaning and imploring though half an hour afterwards, when roosted on some projection of a fence and surrounded by the slaves she would give them a good view of the affair.

"Lord if they would know who would take them I'd get a good licking." she would say."

Clara always made a great capitol of the news of great spies and scouts and the enormities of their work evidently come considering them as something peculiarly distin guishing.

"Listen all you fellos child slaves" she would say to : some of her auditors. "Do you know if you had courage enough you all could be spies. well there are girls pretty girls called the Vivian Princesses of Abbiennia who are. Christian boy and girl scouts and our own are spies too-----general Dargin says so, but I suspect the Vivian girls are the biggest ma e one of all but Lord I don't believe they have anything on me. I used to keep my former master and mistress swearing at me for stealing things from officers that came to their place to obtain a meal. I suspect I'm the best little girl spy in the world." and Clara would cut a summerset and come up brisk and quickly onto a higher perch and evidently plume herself on the distiction. Jannie busied herself very earnestly in sunday teaching Clara out of her bible. Clara had a very uncommon verbal memory and committed wi with a fluency that greatly encouraged her little instructeress.

"What good Jannie do you expect it is going to do her to teach her religion also?"

said general Myletze Myletze.

" Why it always has done us much good. It is what children no matter who they are should and have to learn." said Jannie as she stood respectably before him.

" Well I see but should she understand it she'll make it worse for those fighting against the christians."

" Oh she'll never understand it that good, but after she has grown up a little more it will come to her."

" Well Miss has not come to me yet" said general Myletze " Though I'll bear testimony that my mother put it through me right when I was a little boy."

" an you are good at all kind of things general. God has many hopes in you" said Jannie.

" Well but Has he no now!" said general Myletze.

" I wish you were so good as to fight on the christian side your Excellency."

" So do I that's a fact Jannie" said the general. " Well go ahead and teach Clara from your little Bible, maybe you'll make something of her yet. I'll remain here and listen."

Clara who had stood like a childish statue during this discussion, with her hands decently folded now at a signal from Jannie went on;

" our first parents being left to the freedom of their Paradise like some and their son will fell from the state in which they were created by breaking the First law of of God."

Clara's eyes grew mi misty, and she looked inquiringly.

" What is it Clara!" said Jannie.

" Please Jannie wh was that the state of Glandelinia!"

" What state Clara!"

" That state where they committed the first sin and started up the child slavery. I used to hear my master say that the vivian girls were our first parents!"

General Myletze could not help laughing.

" You better give her a meaning or she'll be more puzzled than ever." There seems to be a theory of child slavery started by the Vivian Girls suggested there."

" Oh please general don't discourage her now" said Jannie pleadingly" How can I do it if you will be laughing."

" Well I won't die a disturb the work again on my honor" and general Mylet e moved out. Now Clara finished her recitations. and they were all very well only that now and then she would oddly transpose some important words, and persist in her refusal to believe in some things she heard, and some of her fellow slaves took pleasure in trying to encourage her until Jannie almost gave up in desiar and said to Annie herself;

" How can I do anything with her if she won't believe what the Bible says."!

" Well it's too bad but it's what she was instructed by her wicked mastersho bad master who confirmed her in the wrong way. But general Myletze wants you to bring her up right and as she is a reasonable creature she will come out all right if you get the right influence over her. "

However for a while Claras training proceeded for a week or two, poor Jannie worrying herself from hour to hour fearing she could never impress her with the lessons as she would not believe, and always thought that the Glandelinians were more mightier than poor God Himself. such wicked instruction from her masters she had recieved.

General Myletze took the same kind of amusement in all his child slaves that a man might in the tricks of a parrot, rabbit, dog or any pet animal, when ever a slaves supposed offe m brought them into disgrace in other quarters they always would take refuge in his tent or headquarters, and Myletze in one way or other, would make peace for them, and allow no one to punish them unless they brought evidence against them which they nevertheless could not do. From him they got many a supper that no one else in the army could ever expect and a little money too which they laid out in nuts and candies which they would buy at some captured town which they would distribute even among their enemies the boy and girl scouts with careless generiousity, for the slaves to do them justice were good natured, righteous and liberal and only spiteful in self defense.

It was late one afternoon hour the 2ith of April and the big tent door of the child slave quarters stood wide open to invite any stray breeze that might feel in good humor to enter for the glandelinian armies was now besieging a town called Corinthia and was encamped for quite a while. General Myletze sat in his tent leisurely tipped back in his chair with his heels in another and was enjoying his after dinner cigar. General Black Brooks sat in the entrance busy giving orders to officers who came to report the operations of the seige, and yet he seemed like one having something important in his mind which he was seeking an opportunity to introduce.

" Do you know your excellency" he said' That annie has recieved a letter from general Mcdonia Bicknell con cerning her sister Jane."

" you don't say. well the poor girl has some friend there it seems. Now is she I wonder?"

" She has been sold by Manley to a man whom he thinks is a new slave owner but who in secret is a christian spy" said general Brooks' she " She is kindly treated, and has not much to do."

" Ah well I'm happy of it very glad about it" said general Myletze heartily. Annie will soon her of her sister getting reconciled to a christian army camp, and will then come here looking for annie."

" On the contrary she inquires very anxiously" said general Brooks' when you your self could redeem her."

" I don't know I'm sure now. I can do it at all now when she is in the hands of a christian spy" said general Myletze. " If I could dare to chance it, would send annie to her, but once get her going to the wrong part of the army of Manley she'll come to ruin. It's just like jumping from one log to another avoiding a treacherous deep bog in a swamp, and then be sold to one master after another, and after a master borrow money to pay for her, and all these confounded notes falling due before a slave has time to see any one and turn around, damning her life, and damning her soul—all sorrow and horror. No I won't try that game. I must encourage her to go to the National army to whom that spy belongs."

" It does seem to me your excellency that something something might be done to enlighten matters. Suppose we could release a number of our prisonrs, and instruct them with passes to enter Manleys lines with annie and bring her to her sister!"

" Oh Ridiculous Generals you are one of the finest strategelinian generals in my dominand but still you have not any sense enough to know that you don't understand Manley and his army—and that that would fail as well as any other plan. [illegible] at least general Myletze." said general Brooks' Could you not at least think up some plan at least, and the like and let Manley and see if I cannot help you get her there safely."

" Oh both, don't plague me general Brooks—I know general Manley and his army are then any one else does. I know about what things are likely to be and even there a spy might be detected soon and be caught and she'll get at worse than before. There is no trimming and sparing any affairs with general Manley or any of his generals you don't know anything about general Manley I tell you but I don't like and therefore I do not think it wise to butt into his business."

And general Myletze not knowing of any other way of enforcing his ideas, raised his voice, a mode of arguing very convincing and convenient, when a general is discussing matters of which he knows best with his fellow officers general black Brooks ceased talking with something of a sigh, and ugroan. Indeed the fact was that though Myletze had stated that he knew more about Mr Manley than any one else, Black Brooks had a far more energitic and practical mind, and a force of character in every way superior of his superior officer, so that it would not have been an absurd supposition to have allowed him the ability of managing another great generals, including Myletze supposed. His heart was set determinedly on performing his promise to annie, and therefore the sighs of discouragements thickened around him and for a while he listened to the rolling thunder of the seige guns bombarding Corinthia, and then he said;

" Don't you think we might in some mystery and contrivent to send some letter or agents into Manleys army and get her from the spy by buying her from him and yet stating the real purpose. Poor annie, her heartse years for her dear sisters."

" I'm sorry if it does. I think I was premature in promishing. I'm sure not not I'm not sure now but it's the best way to tell annie and let her make up her mind to do as she thinks best. The probabilities that the spy may be shrewd and therefore annie's sister will have a chance yet, and therefore as annie has her free papers she had better take up wit with the National lines as I suggested to her offhand, or some one will be forcing her to."

" But general Myletze Annie claims that one always wishes to remain here until she finds her sister, because she thinks she'll find her easier by remaining in our ranks than being in the christian lines. Therefore I could never think of giving Annie so much advice."

" It's a pity general Brooks that you have burdened my soul with determination above their conditions and prospects. I have always thought so." [illegible]

" It's only the morality of the Holy Bible, Your excellency."

" Well, well general, I don't intend to interfere with your religious notions, and religion has nothing to do with annie's ways. I don't care a snap what she does or whether she stays here or not, but if I tell you her free papers won't be worth anything if she enters Manleys army looking for her sister and that settles that."

" Well that may be so" said Black Brooks and that" and that is why from my heart I have Manley and his whole army and will never serve in it or bring my army to aid him in any trouble with the Nationals. I tell you Your Excellency I cannot absolve myself of the promises I make to these poor helpless little creatures, who in the eyes of God ought never to have known what slavery was. If I cannot get annie's sister by no other way, I will send christian spies who are captured by my men to Manleys army on the promise of absolving from the punishment they should recieve providing they find annie's sister."

" Surely you would not degrade yourself that way general Brooks! I never even could consent to it."

" Degrade, would it degrade me as much as to break my faith with these poor helpless child slaves whom we are not fighting against like Manley is for their remaining as slaves. so foolishly! No indeed."

"well you are always heroic and transcendental" said Myletze" But I think you had better consider before you undertake such a piece of difficulty."

Here the conversation was interrupted by th the appearance of little annie herself, who came inside the tent with the generals dinner.

" Here is your dinner sir" she said."

Then she said " If you please sir?"

" well annie what is it?" said the general rising for even the general would rise at the entrance of a slave whom he liked so well, though of course annie was only a military servant now and no more slave having her free papers.

" If you would only come outside and look at what entered the camp this morning."

The general indeed smiled as he saw a swarm of prostrate ducks chickens and other fowl which Annie herself had helped soldiers gather up in a forage.

" I'm a thinking they could go to the other slaves, and whether we could have chicken chicken pie or stewed chicken."

" Really Annie, I don't care what you do with them birds, serve them to the others any way you like."

Annie's friends stood mumbling them abstratecedly for it was quite evident that the chickens were not what theysere really thinking of. At last with a short laugh with which Annie often introduced a doubtful proposal, she said;

" Gracious your Excellency, why should you and general Brooks be troubling your selves about my sister if she is softly in the hands of a christian spy."and she laigsed laughed again.

" I don't understand what you mean annie," said general Mylets morning doubting however from her his knowledge of annie's manner that she had heard every word of the conversation, that had passed between him and general Brooks."

" Why your Excellency" said annie laughing again" You do not need to worry over her if the christian spies go among the Glandelinian armies over there and hire out the slaves and make spies of them out of them. I recieved a letter from her and she has told me everything."

" well but annie, what do you propose that we should do to try and get your sister for you."

" But I ain't proposing anything just now, only Jannie said the other day that the christian spies are too clever to allow themselves to be caught for they are all professional spies, and therefore cannot be detected she said."

" well what else, Annie?"

" well I was thinking your excellency it was the one of your prisoners who is held for exchange should be put up to do something over there. The prisoner has been placed, as you know under my care having been wounded in a recent battle, and he does know all a bout my sister, and if you will be gracious general and let him go, he would fetch my sister back for me; I'm not afraid that he'll double cross me nor you either, because all the Nationals you know are honest."

" But he was a christian spy Annie."

" I know general but surely that ain't no odds, for he will do the right thing for us."

" But Annie we Glandelinians are not supposed to send a christian spy over to General Munleys army."

" Lord general he will come back, he is honest enough to do it, for he does well enough for me, and he'll surely take Annie to us or my sister to us, and he won't fool us or double cross us."

" But you must know Annie that general Munleys army is a good way off."

" I know but that does not make me afraid. it's way upwest somewhere, near emperor Vivians army nevertheless" said annie, speaking the last in the tone of a question, and looking at general Mylets.

" No Annie, it's many hundreds of miles off." said general Mylets

" Annie's countenance fells

" Never mind Annie. If you wish to find Annie I'll tell you wa what you ought to do. You got your free papers, why not as you know the way go to general Conpentinian Aronburgs army and he' ll still transport you to the Vivian armies which will bring you nearer. If you get you may try and get in touch with those Vivian Girls and they'll help you find your sister."

As when a bright sunbeam turns a dark cloud to silver, so annies face bright ened immediately.

" Thank good and you are good to me general. I was never thinking of such good advise but how can I get to general Aronburgs army when I have nothing but these clothes on."

" I'll fit you up in the proper clothing " said the general.

" How many weeks are there in a year your excellency."

" Fifty two."

" That many. how long would it take me to get to emperor Vivians army if it is a thousand miles?"

" well it depends on hot you travel" said general Mylets.

" Suppose I go in my a train."

" About eighteen or nineteen hours" said Mylets." Providing you can get a train.

" why that won't be so long" said annie " WITH AN ACCENT OF SURPRISE AND delight" and how long would it take the Vivian girls to find her for me?"

About some five or six days-but than they would not be doing it all--they'll have their own scouts do some of it too."

" I would not like you to think I would go over there to Munleys as you are quite right in knowing w what they and their armies are. I hope none of your other slaves will ever have to go there."

" Don't fear about that annie, I'll take care of the honor for your friends." said Mylets smiling." but when do you expect to go to find Conpentinian Aronburgs army."

" well I was not expecting to go right away but Jannie, she says a few prisoners are going to be liberated for an exchange to morrow as you told her so, and she said you could let me go along with them-so to night I'll just put my things together. If you are willing, I'll go with them to morrow, if you'll write my pass through the lines."

" well Annie I'll attend to it right away, but I'll have to have others of my generals confirm it. I will hold counsill with them, I know they'll not object."

General Mylets reentered his tent, and annie delighted, went out of the camp at that point back to her own tent, to make her preparations.

" God is good to me Jannie" said annie" You did not know I'm going with those liberated prisoners to morrow to the christian lines did you not," said annie as entering her tent she found her busy in packing up what little goods she had." I thought, I would ju just pack what I have, but I'm going Jannie, and jack is going to by my successor. Uncle

" It's a good idea" said jannie. How are you going?"

" To morrow with the released prisoners. and now Jannie I know you'll just sit down and write to my sister, and tell her all about it won't you?"

" To be sure" said jannie. " annie Your sister will be right glad to hear from you so I'll go right up to my table and you can tell how we are getting along here."

" Yes, yes jannie, you write it for me and I'll get you up the best dinner you ever ate in your life as you won't have any more suppers or meals cooked by me."

Life passes with us all a day or so at a time, and so it passed with our per friend Jannie, till about a whole month had gone and it was now May and the seige of Corinthia was still on the army having still remained at the spot keeping up a cannonade that never stopped day and night. Though parted from a l her soul held dear, and though often yearing for what lay beyond in freedom, still she never was positively and consciously miserable, for so well was she treated in Mylets army that nothing but a crush that breaks every string can wholly mar her happiness, and on looking back to seasons which in review appear to us as those of horror and misery and deprivation and trial, we can remember that each hour as it glided, brought its diversions and alleviations so that though she was not happy wholly, she was not either really miserable.

Jannie read when ever she had her opportunity of her bible and learned that wherever st state she was in, therein she should be content, to remember she was well off and not in Munley's army!

It therefore seemed to her good and reasonable doctrine and accorded well with the settled thought or thoughtful habit and the like which she had acquired, from the reading of her holy bible, The letter she promished to write for annie was in due time made out in a good round school boy hand but it was feared that the letter would never pass through Munleys lines. It contained various refreshing items of home intelligence, with which Jannie herself longed for, stated how annie had been free and sent to general Aronburgs army to be transported to Vivians, all of which her sister was informed and other things. It also told that Mylets army was besieging orit Corinthia for the present but that the besieged might soon retreat any day now. The rest of this letter gave a list of directions of which annie was to go, each one headed with a flourishing capitol, and also told of the names of two new slaves in mylets army that appeared since she came, and stated in the same connection that general Mylets and his staff were well and advancing without being checked. The style of the letter was decidedly concise and terse but Jannie thought she had written the most wonderful composition in her life. She was never tired of looking at its duplicate and even held a council with both Lillian and Clara on th intention of getting it framed to hang up in her wagon. Nothing but the difficulty of ar arranging it so that both sides of the pen page would show at once she stood in the way of this undertaking.

The friendship between the two new slaves and jannie had grown with the time they were there. It would be hard to say what place they held in the soft impressible heart of their instructeress. Yet Jannie looked at them as if they both were something frail and elastial like, and almost worshippedthem as something heavenly and devine.

When the boy slaves would gaze on the three of them as the Christians would gaze devotedly on the image of Jesus with a mixture of reverence and tenderness, and to humor their graceful tendicies and meet those thousand simple wants which invest child hood like many colored rainbow was the main delight of the elderboy slaves.

In some foraging party which returned the eyes of these boys were ever on the wagons for rare food delights for them, and the choicest peach or orange and other fruits and even straw berries were carted away by them to give to the girls when they came back, and the sight that pleased the boys most was their sunny heads looking out the tent for their distant approach and their childish question-

" well boys what have you got for us to day?"

Now was either Clara or Lillian less zealious in kind offices in return, Though having been child slaves, and having had hard masters they had nevertheless been able to have beautiful manners, they had a fine musical ear, a quick poetic fancy and an instinct an instinctive fancy or sympathy with what should or what is to be grand and noble and made them such a reader of the bible as Jannie herself had never heard before. At first either Lillian or Clara only read to please their friend, but when their own earnest nature threw out its tendrils, and wound around the majestic book, and therefore the two elves loved it, because it was to them in their strange yearnings and strong dim strange emotions such as impassioned imaginitive children love to feel. And the parts that pleased her most were the Revelations, the Prophecies and the Gospels, parts whose dim and wonderous imagery and fervent language impressed them all the more, that they also questioned vainly of their meaning, and the two little girls and Jannie their friend felt just alike about it.

All that they knew was however that they spoke of a glory to be revealed, something wonderous yet to come, which made them rejoice in their souls, and yet they know not why, and thought it was not so in other ways; yet in others that which cannot be understood is not always without profit. For in any person whether good or bad the soul usually awakes, and becomes a trembling stranger between two dim eternities, the eternal past, the eternal future. The light shone only around them in a small space, therefore these child slaves yearned exceedingly for the unkown, and the voices and the shadowy movings, which come to them from out the cloudy pillar of inspiration have each ones echoes and unsaid answers in their own expecting nature. At this time in our story the whole of Mye pyletzes Glandelinian army is before the besieged city of Corinthia and the heavy firing of cannon on both sides, the Hout of the all conflict itself, the several desperate National country attacks and driven all the slaves to seek the more safer portions of the camp. General Myletzes newly selected Head Quarters during the seige was a sort of country cottage surrounded by light verandas of bamboo work, and opening on all sides into gardens and pleasure grounds. The cosdon vine room opened on to a large garden frugent fragrant now with every picturesque plant and flower of spring, where winding pathe ran down to the very shore of the river, whose silvery lengthy ribbon of water lay there riding and sulking in the spring sunbeams, a picture never for an hour the same yet every hour more beautiful.

It was now one of those intensely golden hours of golden sunsets which is supposed to kindle the whole horizon into one blaze of glory and make the water of the broad river another sky. The river lay in rosy or golden streaks, saved where white puffy clouds of smoke from bursting shells in the distance glided hither and thither like so many spirits and little golden stars twinkled through the glow and seemed to look down at themselves as they trembled in the water. Jannie, and her two girl friends were seated on a log in an arbor at the foot of the garden watching the scene. It was Saturday evening and Jannie's bible lay upon her knee open but just now she was watching the sight and listening to the rolling thunder of cannon and the sharp whip like crack of bursting shrapnell. Jannie read " and I saw a sea of glass mingled with fire."

"Lillian" Said Jannie suddenly stopping and pointing to the river" That looks like it don't it."

"what Jannie."?

" Don't you see it in the river there!" said the child pointing to the glassy water which as it rose and fell reflected the golden glow of the sky. " The river itself looks just like a sea of glass mingled with fire."

" It does look like it the true enough" said Jannie."

" where do you supposed emperor Vivians big christian army is Jannie?" asked Clara.

" Oh ever so far away Clara."

" Oh how I wish I could see it" said Clara. " But look at those clouds of smoke; they like a big fire is burning in the besieged city yonder, and you can see beyond them many shells bursting. I've seen many christian soldiers before they sold to Mylatze."

Jannie had no doubt of it at all, and it did not surprise her in the least if Lillian or Clara had told her that they had seen Heaven he would have believed it as not.

Suddenly Jannie sing

" Oh I've seen some beautiful children like spirits bright
That hope for Abbieannia's glories to come.
They are all robed in purple and white uniforms in spotless white,
And marching christian armies with them march along."

"Jannie Oh you I've seen them." said Lillian.

"Yes."

" They come to me in my dreams, those you sing about, and Lillians eyes grew dreamy as she hummed the same song in a low voice as she knew it too.

" Jannie " she said" I wish we could go to emperor Vivians army."

" Why Lillian."?

The child rose, and pointed her little hand toward the west, and as she did so the glow of evening lit her golden hair and flushed cheek with a kind of unearthly radiance and her eyes were bent earnestly toward the west.

" I'm going there some day" she said determinedly" To try an and find the Vivian girls Jannie, I'm going to run away if I can before long."

Jannie felt a sudden thrust into her heart, and then she thought how often she had noticed as long as she had been a slave that many of them had worked so hard and suffered so hard, that their hands had grown thinner and their skin more transparent, and their mouth shorter and how why when they worked in the military fields outside army camps grew short in they once could for hours, they became so tired and languid, and sometimes collapsed. She had often heard of the illness that hardships bring on slaves that no medicaments could cure and how their hands and faces would burn with hectic and other fevers. There had been within Glandelinian camps even like Manleys many thousands of child slaves that had literally been like little Evan in " Uncle Toms Cabin" itself but their names could have been not placed on grave stones, and their harrowed eyes, their angular words, and ways would never be seen again. In how many wicked rebel camps had there been many children who resembled Evan even in beauty and character, with that sad spiritual light in the eye, when the little hard working souls would in spite of the hardness of the masters reveals themselves in words sweeter and wiser than the ordinary words of others child slaves---and though the Glandelinians expect to retain such slaves. they could expect to in vain for the seal of heaven was on them, God was about His enemies of their prey, and therefore the reason that the light of immortality looked out from their eyes. Even so ! Beloved Eva St Clare, fair star of thy calling. Thou art just to look down on the fair children like Thee, and they'll pass away as of Manleys hordes, and they that try to hinder it, succeed not. The colloquy between Jannie and the two little girls was interrupted by a hasty call from one of the Colonels.

" Jannie, Lillian, and Clara---why you kids, the shot and shell will be falling around there before long, and its dangerous even now for you to be out there."

The three children at this hastened in, and no sooner had they done so when an explosion occured on the roof of the structure and a part of the outside section of it fell in. General Black Brooks was old and skilled in the tatics of nursing. He was from the State of Anglo-Hollentinia, and knew well how many child slaves had died under the burden of their hardships, which start first like a soft insidious disease, which even swept away so many countless of the fairest and loveliest children in the slave market, and before one fibre of life seems broken seals them slowly but surely for death.

He had only once in his life sev served under general Manley and had noted the condition of the child slaves there, how many died from illness brought on by overwork, though they just only seemed to die away just like little Eva did in Uncle toms cabin they would also have the same slight dry cough, the daily brightening cheek, the lustre of the eye, and the airy buoyancy born of fever, and he had tried to communicate with his fears to general Manley, but he would throw back his suggestions with a restless (Care not) petulance, and would only say" I don't worry what they do or suffer."

" Once general Commonia himself feared that something terrible would be done by the Nationals some day because of the sufferings of the slaves and he had spoken of it so much to general Myletze that the latter grew impatient.

" Don't be croaking so about what will happen cousin ---I hate it" He would say " Don't you see that we might any how win the war. don't you see that Vivian Hickey is holding out gallantly and the efforts of the Nationals to capture Galverine is proving of no avail. The nationals in this war is like a child who always lose strength when they grow fast. Therefore what in the world are you worrying about?"

" But Manley and his generals cannot even do anything with success, and they have the flower of the Glandelinian nation. Manleys army is like a delicate child going down with Consumption."

" Oh nonsense about the situation of those army Manleys---what they do anyhow is not anything. They are not such good commanders at all. General Federal, and Picknell have made more progress than they have."

" Well that is just the way many others met defeat, like at RobesPierre d Dantonia at November river, and angeline junction and---"

" Oh stop those nonsensible war and battle stories. You old hands get wise, even I see that the best of Glandelinian generals cannot lost one battle, or make one of the slightest blunders but you see desperation for the nation and ruin in the end. Only let us take care of our own armies, keep them well trained, and we ourselves will do well enough even if Manley doesn't. The war is only in its infancy and has a long run to go yet."

So General Myletze said, but he himself had grown nervious and restless. He watched the bulletins for the reports of what occured in the west feverishly day by day as might be told by the frequency with which he repeated over" That Manley and his armies were doing quite well"---that there was not anything in his most serious defeats,---it was only like some child having a little stomach affection which goes over when taken care of properly. But he kept everything and every incident on the watch more than ever before, and as Clara was so often monkeying with his own plottings, he watched her as a eagle watches his prey, and trying to break her of the habit, took her oftener to watch him go out scouting, and brought home for not anything good he could secure, but that he said" the child was dangerous as a christian spy" but then that if she saw several things she won't endanger his army by her constant mischief which even he could not avert, and which he did not like to punish her for.

If it must be told the thing that made him more nervious and struck a deeper pang in his heart than anything else was the daily increasing maturity of the childs mind and feelings concerning the christian cause, and the fate of the other child slaves within the other Glandelinian armies, while still retaining all a child's fanciful ideas; yet she often dropped unconsciously words of such a reach of thought, and strange unworldly wisdom that they seemed not only to be a sort of inspiration but but absolutely made general Mylatze so confounded suspicious that secretly that he had every important man and even child slaves watch her secretly and report her every move. At such times when he took a good look at her he would feel a sudden thrill, and his heart rose up with wild determination to keep her within his sight, to never let her go anywhere without his knowing it, and to have his officers watch every point of objective in his tent and headquarters. She seemed too unusual to be a real child slave, and was too quick in her motions and very independent in her nature and high spirited.

And this child's whole heart and soulk soul was absorbed in unusual works of love and kindness. She was always impulsively generous and there was a touching and womanlingly thoughtfulness about her, and a certain cleverness about her, that every one noticed, and the quickness at which he seemed to have learned her reading, and writing which she now could even outdo Jannie made Mylatz Mylatze suspicious the more.

She still loved to play with Lillian and Jannie, and all the other child slaves, but she now seemed rather a spectator more than an actor of their plays, and she would sit or lie for half an hour or two hours at a time, laughing at the odd tricks of the younger slaves, and then a shadow would seem to passacross her face her eyes grew misty and her thoughts were afar.

"Jannie" she said suddenly to her slave companion one day; " why don't you undertake to run away to the christian lines some time with me."

" What a question Clara. We never run away from Mylatzes army. He is too good to us and he exchanges us anyway."

" But why don't you want to go?" said Clara.

" Because any how it would be useless and dangerous for me to run away. It don't help us any more, and we are not made for anything else but to be slaved. The glandelinian generals said so."

" But you ought to read the bible and see what it says about such things, that even the Glandelinians won't allow you to even do God's own Holy will."

" Oh Mylatze let's us do that, for we are allowed to read the bible all we want."

" It seems to me though Jannie, that freedom is for us as well as the soldiers. That is why the christians are fighting for us too. we need our freedom right now, and something might happen some day that Mylatze won't be able to take care of us any more."

" Clara you are a odd little girl." said Jannie. " You put me in mind of Evangeline at Clara, and you look so like her that I almost am afraid."

" But you'll like me better if you'll come with me to the christian army" continued Clara.

" Yes and see how far we,ll get and how much good it will do. I do not fear our soldiers for they'll let us go if we do run away, but we,ll run upon some other soldiers from probably Manleys or others, and they are the worse creatures I have ever heard of."

" Here's poor Annie and she,s gone to the christian army now" said Clara. " She does love her sister so much and wishes she could find her worse than anything. and what will she do when she is free and finds her sister at last. we ought to have a good chance also."

Jannie was busy turning over the contents of a trunk as she answered;

" Well of course by and by Clara, we will have other things to think of besides running away, such as reading the bible to your fellow slaves. Not that yet but that is very proper, many have done it themselves when they had the chance, but when you go to run away and come into contact with glandelinians she'll recapture you and sell to you to worse masters you'll be sorry you ever ran away from here. See here " she added" These Rosary beads I'm going to give to you as a present as you'll need them. I got several pair of my own. I can tell you Clara they help you a good deal when you feel bad.""

Clara took the rosary Beads and her large thoughtful eyes rested on them, but it was plain her thoughts were elsewhere.

" How sober you look Clara" said Jannie.

" These are worth a great deal than you think Jannie" she said.

" To be sure I know they are. All the christians use them. They are worth in every hail mary and other prayers then a million dollars each time."

" I was I had you with me" said Lillian---" won't you go with me just to please me!"

" what would you want me to do when I did go with you."

" I'd take you back to your home and you'll see your mother and father once more---"

Clara was cut short by Jannie's sober face.

" Take me back to my home my parents. why how do you know you could!"

" I'd have a chance ye to teach you what really is in in the bible, and write your parents where you are" said Clara steadily. " I know Jannie it does some very hard on all you poor little slaves but you are foolish yet for when you slaves have a chance for freedom you throw it down. I think it is wrong."

" Come ,come Clara you are the foolish child. You don't know anything about the peril of any one running away" said Jannie. " besides your way of taking makes me believe you are not really a slave yourself, but a christian girl spy from a far away camp posing as a slave. but I won't say nothing."

Yes Jannie had her suspicions of the little girl, who now stole away to go out to do some of her work.

About this time during the continued seige of Corinthia which was still pressing, General Beppo Evans having left his army under the command of his uncle had arrived to have an interview with general Mylatze on something, that was very important,.....

No sight could be more singular and beautiful and yet majestic than the appearance of these two great glandelinian generals. They were both from different states, altogether, Beppo Evans was born in southern Glandelidia, Mylatze in Angelinia Agathia, southern Abbleannia, but in the cause they were both equal, and a mysterious tie seemed to unite them in a close friendship than ordinary.

When Mylatze took him to view the seige, and the firing of so many guns which made a great sight, both would saunter arm inarm, up and down the seige works, or watch the great explosions in the distance, listen to the drum drum roar of cannon, and admire the extraordinary view caused by many great big fires, General Beppo Evans with his blue eyes, and black hair, his ethereally flexible but strong form and vivacious features, and Beppo Evans dark eyes, with haughty roman profile, firmly knit limbs, and decided bearing. But were in uniforms alike and wore the same shape of large bell rimmed hats and the same boots and sabre scabbards. They were nevertheless even while watching the big seige, abusing each others opinions about it, and the formations of the seige lines, and yet never the wit less absorbed in each others purpose, in fact the very contrary seemed to unite them, like the attraction between opposite poles of the powerful magnet.

There was one of the glandelinian boy scouts in Mylatzes army who appeared to be a noble dark eyed princely boy full of vivacity and spirit, and though he generally was of the kind that cared not at all for child slaves and hated them and thought them far beneath his notice yet from the first moment of seeing her, he seemed to be perfectly fascinated by the strange spiritually graces of the two little girl slaves Lillian and Clara, and felt soft hearted for Jannie also and favored her as well. He had a nice pet horse and big as it was was as easy to ride as a cradle, and as gentle as the three little girls and this horse was brought up to the back of the tent by one of the other boy scouts of about thirteen years,. The princely boy scout had a pride in his new possession, but he had seen the boy strike the good horse with a piece of stick and then fling dirt into his face, and as he brought him up his brow darkened.

" What was the idea Hendro you cruel dog. You have no right to strike agentle horse like mine. Why you have not even rubbed my horse down this morning, and yet add to it by insults. You know a boy scout is supposed to be a good to dumb animals. I'll report you I will."

" Yes Frank but the horse was stubborn and those dirty slaves bothered it" said Hendro kind of sarcastically" he got that dust on his own face."

" You rascal don't you dare tell me I'm blind" said Frank violently risi raising his riding whip.

" well you can mind your own business and shut your mouth."

" How dare youspeak to me like that" said Frank striking him across the leg with his riding whip, and seizing one of his arms forced him to his knees, and beat him till he was out of breath.

" There youimpudent dog. now you will learn not to be brutal to animals. Take the horse back and clean him properly. I,ll teach you your place. you and your followers belong in glandleys army not here."

"Captian" said another scout " You should not have beaten him when he w is in uniform. It does not look right and-

" You hold your tongue till you are asked to speak" said Frank turning on his heel and walking up the steps to to the child slave tent to speak to the three girls, who stood outside in their best slave clothes.

" You poor slaves I am sorry that stupid fellow has kept you waiting for me " He said " but I had to teach him to be kind to dumb animals.. Lets sit down here on this seat till he comes with the horse. What's the matter Clara you look sobre.

" But now could he be so cruel and wicked to the poor horse!" said Jannie.

" Cruel...wicked" said the boy with unaffected surprise. " Why he was brutal. I saw what he did. But do you mean Jannie?"

" I don't want you to even associate with him-when he does so." said Jannie.

" Dear Jannie, I have to he is my private, and yet I hated to even whip him but it's the rule here when a boy scout breaks the law and is brutal to animals. and then as is so full of lies and excuses. The only way to train these new boy scouts is to put it down at once if you have to thrash him to do so---not let him even open his mouth, that's the way my father used to manage me. If he's brutal to a horse he'll be brutal to others.

" ut sometimes even a whipping won't do any good, and he might revenge it onyou."

"He's an one-mmon Glandelinian boy there" said Frank. " Buy you know yourself from what you heard that he'll lie as fast as he can speak. Even his wicked father frightened him into deceiving everytime. If he continues to treat my horse so I'll have to get some one else to be my orderly. I won't keep him."

" Why Jannie you've taken such a fancy of frank that I am all so jealious" said Lillian laughing.

" but do you think beating will do him any good in the end." said Clara---and maybe he did not deserve deserve it any more than the horse."

" Oh well it may go for sometime when he does and don't get it. It is the first time I had to do it however and he I is a regular spirit I can tell you, but I don't think I will need to beat him again for he,ll come to reason now."

however the three girls were not satisfied and tried in vain to make their new found friend understand their feelings. Hendro the other scout soon again appeared with the horse and his face was troubled, appeared as if he had been crying.

" Well Hendro" you have done pretty good this time." said his young superior with a more gracious air. " Come now and hold the horse of this little girl while I put her in unto the saddle. The general said for to take the three out for a ride with me."

The boy scout came and stood by the pony of Lilliane and the two others and soon they were mounted for Frank who valued himself on his gentlemanly adroitness in all manners of gallentry had the three girls in the saddle of their own horses, and gathering the reins of each placed them in their hands.

" put Clara bent to the other side of her horse where Hendro was standing and said as he relinquished the reins,

" That's a good boy Hendro. Thank you, but please for my sake don't be cruel to a poor horse again."

Hendro looked up in amazement into the sweet young face the blood rushed to his cheek, and the tears again to his eyes.

" Here Hendro" said his captian imperiously.

Hendro sprang, and held the horse, while his captian mounted.

" There's fifty cents to buy something good with Hendro" said Frank" go " Go get some but remember if you'll never beat another horse I'll be a good friend to you."

" And Frank cantered down the road with the three fair children. Hendro stood looking after the children. one had given him money, and one had given him what he wanted more, a kind word kindly spoken. Hendro had been only a few mon months away from his parents, he had joined the boy scouts and he was now getting his breaking in, at the hands of his young superior who, really liked the boy and had been often more kind than necessary but he was a lad that could not tolerate brutality to any animal whatever and therefore could hardly res restrain from what he did, and now was remourseful. The scene of the beating had been witnessed by the two main generals, Mylatze and Beppo Evans from another portion of the camp they having returned from the sea, seige lines.. Mylatze cheek flushed but he only ob e observed with his usual c sarcastic carelessness;

" I suppose that is what we we may call a way to educate a new boy scout General!"

" Well Frank is a devil of a lad when his blood is up at the cruelty to animals" said Beppo Evans carelessely.

" I suppose you consider that an instructive practice for him."said Mylatze dryly.

" I could notbhelp it if I didn't. I myself when a boy was a regular little tempest when any one was cruel to an animal, and I have given many one old it a worse thing than a mere lashing with a whip. but then Hendro is a perfect sprite---no amount of whipping can hurt him if he does not learn the proper boy scout ways. The worse thing then a whipping is to be thrown out of service. He'd feel that worse, and it's coming to him if he don't stop it soon."

" and this way of treating child slaves too for instancethe first verse of some book I've read" every one, men women and children are born free and equal."

" Pooh" said general Beppo Evans" we can see plainly enough that all these slaves were not made by God to be free, nor born to be equal, they are born anything else but to be slaves. For my part I think this is sheer humbugs. It is as Glandelinians, who ought to have equal rights, Glandelinia should be a free nation, severed from the Government of Abbiennia, and not the slaves."

" If you can keep a candible of that opinion" said general Mylatze" There will be a turning point in this question some day."

" Of course even the battling christian armies once they are down must also be kept down, consistently, steadily as I should" said Beppo Evans, setting his foot hard down as if he were standing on a child slave.

" IT MAKES A terrible slip when the christian armies recover and get up" said general Mylatze" At Angelina Junction and elsewhere for instance."

" Pooh" said Beppo Evans---beatone can take care of that in this very part of the country with our capture of Angelinia Abathia and as to the slaves we must not our purpose on the score that the lower classes must not be educated."

" That is far past hoping for" said general Mylatze" I know from my own experiances. educated they are not, and we have only to say now. Our system is educating in making them all our worse and very secret enemies. We are breaking all Nationalis ties, and making them all turn against even our cause too, and if they you too get the upper hand, we'll find they'll turn out to be what or less we were ourselves."

" They shall never get the upper hand." said general Evans.

" Maybe but the nationals will set them free."

" The Nationals shall never win the war." said Evans.

" That's right general" said Mylatze," you are like one who will sit on a powe powder cask, and lit the fuse to see where you will land."

" Well" said Evans" I'll land somewhere that's true. I'm not afraid to even sit on a stick of blasting dynamite as long as I can get away before they light the fuse,"

"General Louis Turner thought so, and Hanley and his Confederatesthink so now, and some pleasant morning you may all be caught to meet each other in some fatal disaster of the war, when the explosives of the Abbiennian nation bursts like an earthquake of exploding volcanoes."

" Unless D.Clarendit" said Beppo Evans laughing."

" I tell you Beppo " said Mylatze " If there is anything that is revealed with strength of a devine law in our times of this inglorious chile slave horror and a terrible conflict brought on by it, it is that the powerful masses of Abbiennia shall surely rise, and they'll even cause the child slaves all to be free before you'll ever expect it, and even the under classes will become the upper."

" That is one of these christian sun mumbugs" general Mylatze. " Why did you not ever take to the stump---you'd make yourself a famious stump orator. Well I hope I shall be dead, and gone before this millennium of the Abbiennian masses comes on!"

" Right or wrong in their ce cause they'll again go governm us again some day. If they ever do win the war" said Mylatze" and they'll be just the rulers as they were before. The Civil war in merica, the queries and the French reign of terror and the child slave rebellions here in Calverinia--

" oh come general Mylatze as if we did not have enough of that abominable con tempt ible child slave rebellions. Those slaves nevertheless did not free themselves, they were not of Abbiennian blood, if they had been there would have been another story. The Abbiennians is or wanted wants to be the dominant race of the world, and might be as if we let them."

" Well there's a pretty fair infusion of the Abbiennian blood among all our child slaves now" said Mylatze. " And there are plenty among them who have only enough of the other Nationality in them to cause them to not know any better, but if they ever see the chance, they themselves will lead Abbiennia on to victory. Many of the slaves are born Abbien t Abbiennians with all our own and their own haughty feeling burning coursing in their veins, and they will not always be bought, sold and traded. They too will rise, and raise with them their mothers race, and other races."

" That is all nonsense."

" well" said general Mylatze" I think your turients might do for for an old saying it this affect' as it was in the days of Noah,-so it shall b be---they ate, they drank, they planted, they tolled, and were not till the flood came and took them."

" On the whole" said Beppo Evans laughing' you will never need to fear for ourselves, for our possessions, or our nine points. We've got the power to whip any christian or heathen nation on earth put unto us together, so how can Abbiennia whip us. " And this subject race of child slaves" said he stamping firmly, is down, and shall stay down. " and the whole of Glandelinia has enough energy and enough armies and generals to manage our own cause and our own way of the war."

" Generals trained like the Manleys and their confederates will be grand guardians of our powder magazines" said general Mylatze. " They are so cool and self possessed,and the proverb says;" The generals that cannot worse their superiors cannot win a war."

" There is sure trouble there" said Beppo Evans thoughtfully" There's no doubt that our system is a difficult one, to train generals under. There's general peaceful for instance. The government finds trouble with all these generals. They are brutal in the extreme, commit massacres that makes the so whole world protest, and all are a perfect string of explosives when excited. I believe the Manleys when young ought to have been sent to an Abbiennian military school for education and training instead of those in Glandelinia where obedience is more fashionable and where they would have been able to know where things come to be stay."

" such training of generals is the staple work of the whole human race for soldiers' said Mylatze" and also I should think it is of a consideration that the system in Abbiennia would not have worked either."

" It sure does not for some things" said Beppo Evans" for others again it does more. It makes generals more manly and courageous and the very vice of an abject race tend to strengthen inthem in the opposite military ways. I think Cannonia now has a kenner side sense of the si ar situation entirely."

" A christian view on the subject certainly" said general Mylatze.

" It might be true christian like or not and it does as chr stian like as most like all other things in the world," said general Cannonia.

That may be in one condition" said general Mylatze.

" well there is no use in talking about it General Mylatze" I believe we have been around a whole color camp about five hundred times and all we have done is firing and the like at the Nationalis or plotting you on it bravely as you are attacking them. what do you say of scouting for a short space of time."

The two went to consult to and to Mylatzes tent, and were soon near a line of small trees much further to the rear, and intended to be and as they were going forward and watching everything that was going on general C. Beppo Evans said;

" I tell you general Mylatze, if I thought as you do I would do something worth while."

I dear say you would,------you are one of the doing sort------but what?"

" Why, strengthen your hold by armies in these positions, and then why when you have that accomplished leave your little child slaves, especially for a specimen and then turn them out for your s enslaved class." said Beppo Evans with a half scornful smile.

" You might as well set a big volcano like Mt vivian or Andrean on the christian army flat and tell them to stand up under it, and the child slaves too as tell me or any other Glandelinian general to elevate my servants under all the superincumbent mass of hatred that is massed upon them. Any how one man can do nothing whatever, against the whole action of a community like that. And education and the like you know, must be a state or city education or there won't be no need to stary start one."

" What in the world are the nationals up to now" said Beppo Evans, and the two generals were lost in the curiousity of the occurance, and heard no more untill the scraping of horses feet was heard behind them.

" There comes the boy scout with his three pretty little slave friends" said general Mylette. " Look here Evans did you ever in your life see anything so beautiful?"

And in truth , might as well say it was a beautiful sight. Frank with his bold brow and dark glossy curls, and glowing cheek was laughing gayly, as he bent toward his three fair friends, as they came on. They were dressed in the blue riding dresses of the higher slaves and each with a cap of the same color. The riding had given them a brilliant hue to their cheeks, and heightened the effect of their singular transparent skin and golden hair, while annie too looked improved.

" Good heavens what perfect unusual beauty for child slaves." said General Evans. " I e tell you Mylette I hardly believe the two golden haired children are slaves. look out Mylette they might be two of the vivian Girl Princesses p spying on you and if so they'll make your heart ache some day like they did the Manleys"

" Maybe they will too truely---god knows I'm afraid of them and especually the one called "lara" said general Mylette in a tone of sudden bitterness, as he hurried down to tak " take the three girls down off their horses.

" I hope you little girls are not too tired" he said as he looked them over.

" No Your Excellency" said one of the children but her short hard breathing alarmed the feneral g general.

But but why didnt you ri

" But why did you want ti to ride s fast for girls?" said the general general!

" Did you have a meeting with any of the gkande glande inians/ Glande inians ths this morning!"

" Yes, there were some Glande Glande inians whoom we had never seen before; yet I liked theexperience so much that I forgot myself and we rode like everythi g!"

" The girls rode back with general Mylettewho placed them into his own tent and as he tld them to lie down on the cot he said to the boyscout;

" Next ti e time you go out with her you must be careful of the children and not letthem run into any other kind lf of Glandelinians" forthey do not care whom the slac slaves belong to and will surely steal them."

" I took care of them" said Frank seating himself by the girls . The" The Glandelinians did not get her for I ex l explained matters when they overtook us."

The three girls soon found themselves much better since their experience, and both Mylet e and Evans again went out to resume their scouting, and the four children therefore were left to gether/.

" Do you know girls; I'm so sorry that general Evans is only t going to stay about one day here and then he'll go back to his army t resume his own advance northward. And therefore as I belong o tc his scouts I shant be able to see you again forever s so long. If I stayed with you I'd try to get the freedo freedom apers made out for thethree of you, and then you would have a a chance to go to the Christians because you know b despite me being a boyscout with Evans I firmly believe the christians are in the right. I think on the whole that the Christians will surely win win the war some day."

" Do you really think that the Christians would win for sure?"

" We'l of course I am and even some of the slaves who are even o more well off than you are think the very same."

" would you think the slaves were well off even if there were not one creature in the world to love them?"

" Of course not. There are many slaves whom I have seen who were taken away from ev every friend they ever h d had, and who have no creature to love them---and that I can't blame them even if they are not even good. I don't even believe they can he help it either as they know of. I'm sorry I can't recover their parents for them and I cannot help even loving the myself even as I feel so for you three girls nor any other oo poor slave as I know of/".

" Why can't you?" said Jennie.

" I cannot tell but it in true. Why Jennie you would not like me to be enemies of all the poor slaves would ou?"

" No indeed."

" Well there you are."

" Yes and the Bible says we must love everybody."

" Yes I know that and it says a great many such things, but then no one ever thinks of doing them---you n know girls, no one does, and if everyone loved each other as they should I don't believe there would be such a thing as a war."

The little girls did not spe k speak but their eyes were fixed and thoughtful, for a few moments/....

" Anny rate" she said " For my sake do love even your own superiors, and be kinder to even your orderly when you whipped this morning as a especially for my sake."

" I could love anything for your sake, girls for I think you are three of the lovelinest little creatures for slaves I have ever known". And Frank indeed e spoke with an earnestness that flushed his handsome face. The three girls indeed re received it with perfect si plicity without even a change of feeling or feature, one of them merely saying;

" I'm glad you feel so dear Frankie. When you are gone with Evans I'll hope you'll remember, and that we'll meet again some day."

The dinner bell put an end to the interview/!!!....!!!''

The next day when the Nationals were mal e making several assaults upon the christianlines generals Evans and Mylette parted, and the three little girls who had been somewhat stimulated by the friendship of the first good Glandelinian boyscout they had ever known began to feel still happil feel more happy, but one of them and that was Lillian had recieved a slight injury to her hand during the day before, and fearing infection her hand had to be attended to. During the last two days following things went on so outside that general Mylette was at last willing to call upon other portions of his army, a thing from which he had at first no desire for but now he did so because it was an admission of an unwelcome truth . And for these three dy daysat least, the three slaves and all their followers, were confined to their tent at a more lower point of ground, and a whole Brigade of troops laced near by to guard them, and others, while all this time there was a great noise as if a hunder and hail storm was going on/ so close and then so fore The Nationals were making a fierce effort to break the seige and had deliver ed such a fierce assaultupon Mylette Mylettes army.

For a time general Dargin had taken no to notice of the army's gradually breaking li e along his own front, or of its weakening strength, because he had been completely absorbed in studying out two or three new forms of National colu ns else where, which he believed would strike his own line of batle next/ and overlap his. It was the first principal of general Dargins Dargins belief that no one was or ever could be so fiercely attacked those two days as his own troops, and therefore while resisting the assault to the fiercestnature, he always rebuked quite indignantly any suggestion thatany other Glandelinian trench full of on men could be equally attacked. He was always sure, in such a case, that it was nothing but a mere r trifle of the battle that was to come, and that if the other divisions of troops had had to repell the assaults he had met , they would soon know the difference. General Cannonis had on different occasions during the battle tried to awaken his fears about the shrewdness of the besieged Nationals, but to no avail.

" I don't se anything as ails any portion of the besieging lines" he would say" I'm holding my own perfectly, and so are the rest. They are as well off as a child who runs about and plays."

" But they are assaulting general Black Brooks in monsterous columns and giving him a terrible volley of grape shell an canister as well."

" Grape and canister, and an overwhelming assault, you don't need to tell me about such things. I've always been subjected to an a overwhelming assault upon my lines ever since I joined the army. At the battle of Delight's Junction they thought t hey had my army shatterad. Hour after hour one officer after another rode up to warn me of my danger. But I thrashed the attack in time. Oh this assault of the Nationals is nothing."

" But the line of battle, is getting weaker, and shorter, like a prize fighter getting short breathed breathed."

" Good Lord I've had that same situation at Delight 's Junction---it's only a te temporary break."

" But general Cannonis will need reinforcements."

" Well send your division reinforcements and reinforce Blak Black Brooks also. This afternoon I'll bet there won't be a line of attacking soldiers within sight, and surely they don't seem to be attacking so fiercely as all that."

" General Cannonis shut his mouth then for a few hours. But now came news that general Black Brooks was fairly prostrated, that general Cannonis had to bring in his whole force to his aid,, and things even along Dargins line even suddenly took on a new t rn. It appeared the Nationals had turned into a tornado along his own front and was attacking with a fury of insanityf.....

" He knew it " he said" He had always felt it, that he was now destined to be the most miserable of generals. Here he was with his wretched co and command and his only reserve columns going doom to the very grave before his eyes"

And general Dargin routed on general Terrarline and others, and while trying to rest ore his broken lines and rescues the Christian attack, he run rumpussed and scolded, with more energy than ever all day on the strength of his new misery, untill a bullet struck him in the leg and he was brought wounded to the rear.

" My goodness general Dargin I please don't tell me" said general Mylatze who had ordered up a portion of his own forces to repell the ak attack. " But how long ago you are wounded you ought not to give up the situation so at once."

" You have a better military understanding than I have, your Excellency. You never will be defeated if all the Han Hadas regions were attacking----------and you know it ."""""

" But please don't talk so about it now as if it were a gone case.I'll have the Nationals broken up before you can think of it. and make the town surrender also."

" I can't take it as indifferently as you can your Excellency. If you don't feel when your best part of the line of battle is in this alarming state, I do. It 's a blow too much for me, with all I was bearing before."

" It's true your line and others have been shattered" said general Mylatze " that now the line of battle is as is more like a delicate child trying to fight a strong lion, but I have enough on men at my own back to increase the line where ever necessary, even though the situation just now of course is quite critical. But just now that portion of the army is just prostrated by the heat of the National assault, which has grown so rapidly that the Nationals will soon exhaust their strength and by the excitement of their apparent success, but as long as I have the main army in position there is fairly good room for hope."

" Well of course your Excellency ou can look onthe bright side of it, and therefore pray do------it's a mercy if people have no sensitive feelings, in this world. I' sure I wish I did not feel as I do, it only makes me own l completely wretched. I wish I could be as easy as the rest of you generals. But I'll bet you some day the greatest of us will be surrendering the sword to the Nationals."

And the " rest of them" had good reason to breathe the same prayer,, for the Nationals increased their efforts, every movement of an assailing columns, every frenzied command shouted here and there by scared excited generals and other officers, every word spoken in the inactive part of the camp, everything that was done or was not done everywhere, the terrible roar of cattle, was only a proof thatthe besieged surrounded as they were, were making the most des perate efforts to break through and sweep Mylatze aside/. Poor Jannie and the other slaves heard of some of these disasters, of general Dargin being injured, and nearly cried their little eyes out, in pity for general Dargin, and in sorrow that it was ned necessary that the christians and the Glandelinian army so much distress.

The next day however there was a great improvement of symptons---one of those deceitful lulls, by which the inexorable christian armies so often beguile theanxious hearts of Glandelinian generals, even on the verge of impending horror and disaster. During the lull the little girls and others were again in the company ofnella, they played, was ed, and the girls heads, and general Mylatze in a transport declared that he would soon have the city of Corinthia in his possession.

Any of his other generals however alone felt no encouragements from this illusive pause in the christian assault, for the artillery kept up its firing big fires distant and near were still burning and great or l explosions once in a while seemed to tear the very bowles of the earth into the air. There were other little hearts too that felt the same certainity, and that was the little hearts of the child slaves. But what war it also that so a sometimes spoke in Jannie's soul so calmly and clearly, that her time of future slavery was short/ indeed. Is it the secret inst inct of something unknown, or the souls cumulative throb as she hears of so many great christian victories in t he west and south? Be what it may it rest at inthe heart of Jannie, a calm sweet prophetic certainity that freedom was near, calm as the light of sun set , sweet as the brilliant still ness of fa Fall, there her little heart reposed, only troubled by sorrow for those who loved loved her so dearly for they would not be free yet.

For the child though nursed so tenderly by her friends and though life was unfolding before her with every brightness that love and kindness of good Glandelinian generals could give, had no regret for herself in going,and in that book which she and her simple little friends had read so often together, she had seen and taken to her young heart the image of One who love the little child, and as she gazed and mused, He had ceased to be a picture and an image of the distant past , and come to be a living all a surrounding reality. His love enfolded her childish heart with more than mortal tenderness, and it was to His friends the Christians to whom she felt sure she was going, and to be a free child, though how near that time would be she could not really understand yet.

But nevertheless her heart yearned with sad tenderness for all that she would probably leave behind. General Mylatze must---for Jannie though ch never distinct l distinctively thought so and an instinctive perception that she was more in his heart than any other. she loved h r companion slaves, because they were such loving creatures, and a l the sorrow that she had seen in them only saddened and perplexed her, for she had a child's implicit trust that no little child slave could do wrong . There was something about every slave that Jannie could not make out, and especially Lillian, and Clara, and she always smoothed it over with thinking, that after all it was they were two of the Vivian Girls in disguise pretending anything, even ignorance in reading so they could succeed in doing the work they were bou d to do." bound to do. She felt strongly for all the faith faithful child slaves she knew to whom she and even her two beautiful companions companions were as daylight and sunshine. Of course children do not often general ize, but Jannie surely was an uncon unconscious mature child, justlike the Vivian girls, who pretty as they are are still prettier than their features in goodness, love, respect and braveness, and which no good treatment and petting can ever spoil, and the things that she had witnessed of the evils of the system under which the unfortunate slaves were living had fallen one by one into the depths of her thoughtful pondering heart . she too had vague longings to do something for them to bless and save not only them, but all in their condition, longings that contrasted sadly with t he feebleness of her little frame. And the fact that she had only one wicked drunken master in her day of slavery, one who did not really beat her but neglected her, did not change her in the least . Finally on this day of the decisful lull in the seige battle she decided to take courage and inquire at least into Clara's true self.

W Clara dear" she said that afternoon when she was reading t o her friend;

" I can understand why Jesus wanted to die for us."

" I know that too." said Clara.

" Why ." said Jannie.

" Because I've felt so too."

" What is it Clara------I don't understand."!

" I can't tell you know you know Jannie, but when I saw those hundreds of o poor little creatures in slavery everywhere no matter where I went, when I saw you on the boat with Dargin though you did not see me, and the--All of them had lost their mothers and fathers or been taken from the , and lost brothers and sisters, and cried pitiously for each other, and when I heard about so many dying from brutal treatment and overwork every day,---oh is not that dreadful---and so many others horrors, I've felt that every Angelinian soldier, and even I would be glad to die, if my dying could stop all these horrors, and bring about the freedom of so many slaves. I would die for them a thousand times Jannie If I could if it would do any good, at the stake or any way," said the child earnestly laying her hand on her's Jannie looked at Clara with awe, and when she hearing her sweet ers voice, glided away, Jannie wiped her eyes many times, as she looked after her.

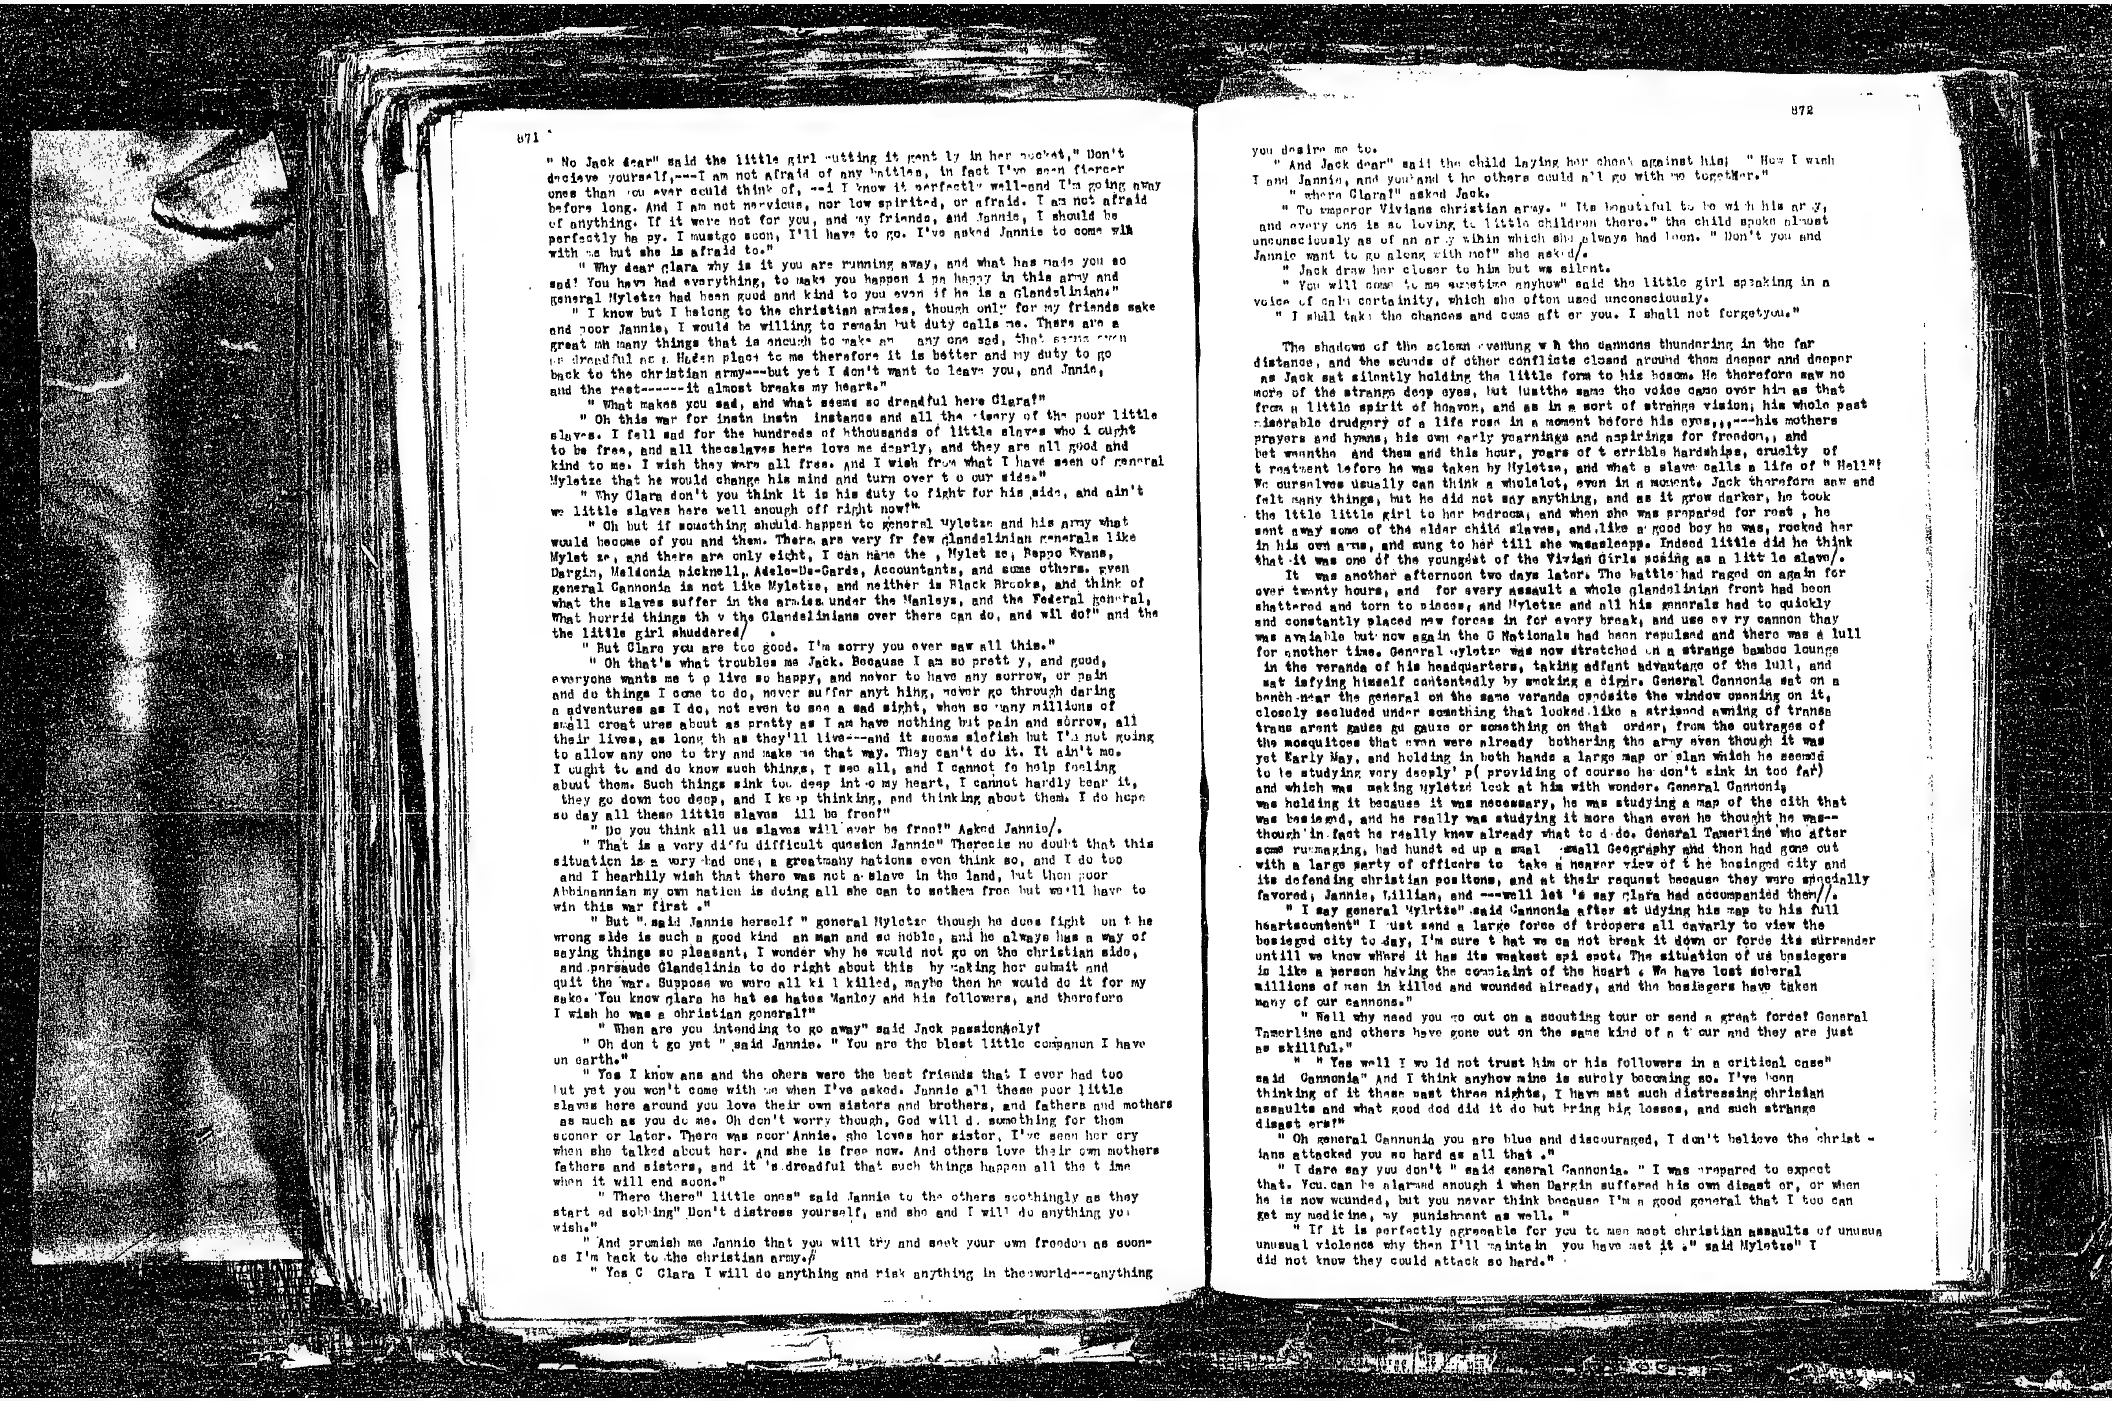
" It 's no use trying to keep her here as a slave" he said to Jack whom he she e met a moment or two afterwards. " I believe she is the youngest of the Vivian girls spying here, even though I have never known or seen any of them. But she's so pretty I'm suspicious too."

" Ah yes, yes it seems so" said Jack raising his hands" I've always said so to all the slaves here. " she never looks like a child that really could be held as a slave unless she wants to be so--there's always something strange, shrewd and deep in her eyes, and you often observe how she had done things that gets all the generals nervious. I've told Annie that before she le left ---it's coming t ur true---we all see it-- dear Lord knows. I hope the dear little blessed lamb su succeeds in her work and before she goes away takes you with her."

Clara atthis oment came tripping into the tent. It was late in the afternoon and the rays of the sun formed a kind of glory around her and behind her, as she ca e forward in her white slave uniform with her golden hair and beautiful glowing cheeks, her eyes unaturally bright , with the slow fever of desire which burned in her veins. Jack himself had sent for her t o show her a small statue of the Sacred Heart of Jesus which a National prisoner had given him, but her appearance as she came on, impressed him suddenly and painfully. He was fascinated, and yet afraid, especially as she looked so fearlessly athim at him and sl long she stood there that she appeared like a celestial child among his fellow slaves/. Her beauty was so intense, and so fragile, that he could not hardly bear to look at her, and he felt the blood rush t his cheeks. The boy stood almost t ransfixed and almost forgot what he was going to give t o her/ which he held in his hands.



" Clara who ever in the world are you---you are not one of the Princesses surely!" he gasped.

" Jack dear," said she with sudden firmness" I've had things I desired to say to you a very long ti e ago for a great while and to day is the only chance so far. I wanted to say them now before it is too late."

" Jack trembled as she sat down beside him. Yet she laid her head right on his bosom, and said;

" It is of no use to keep it from you or Jannie any further. The time is coming when I a am going to leave you. I'm going soon, and never come back."

" Oh now, Clara, my dear friend Clara" said Jack trembling as he spoke but speaking as cheerfully as he could under the circumstances" You've got nervious and low spirited and afraid because we are in a battle just now. You mustnot indulge in such gloomy thoughts as the Nationals won't hurt you at all but set you free. See here. The

" No Jack dear" said the little girl putting it gent ly in her pocket," Don't deceive yourself,---I am not afraid of any battles, in fact I've seen fiercer ones than you ever could think of, --i I know it perfectly well-and I'm going away before long. And I am not nervious, nor low spirited, or afraid. I am not afraid of anything. If it were not for you, and my friends, and Jannie, I should be perfectly ha py. I mustgo soon, I'll have to go. I've asked Jannie to come with with me but she is afraid to."

" Why dear Clara why is it you are running away, and what has made you so sad? You have had everything, to make you happen i ps happy in this army and general Mylstze had been good and kind to you even if he is a Glandelinian."

" I know but I belong to the christian armies, though only for my friends sake and poor Jannie, I would be willing to remain but duty calls me. There are a great ma many things that is enough to make an any one sad, that seems even so dreadful no w. Hsean place to me therefore it is better and my duty to go back to the christian army---but yet I don't want to leave you, and Jannie, and the rest-------it almost breaks my heart."

" What makes you sad, and what seems so dreadful here Clara?"

" Oh this war for instn instn instance and all the misery of the poor little slaves. I fell sad for the hundreds of thousands of little slaves who i ought to be free, and all theselaves here love me dearly, and they are all good and kind to me. I wish they were all free. And I wish from what I have seen of general Mylstze that he would change his mind and turn over to our sides."

" Why Clara don't you think it is his duty to fight for his side, and ain't we little slaves here well enough off right now?"

" Oh but if something should happen to general Mylstze and his army what would become of you and them. There are very fr few glandelinian generals like Mylst ze, and there are only eight, I can name the , Mylst ze, Beppo Evans, Dargin, Maldonia nicknell, Adele-De-Garde, Accountants, and some others. even general Cannonia is not like Mylstze, and neither is Black Brooks, and think of what the slaves suffer in the armies under the Manleys, and the Federal general, What horrid things th y the Glandelinians over there can do, and will do!" and the the little girl shuddered/

" But Clara you are too good. I'm sorry you ever saw all this."

" Oh that's what troubles me Jack. Because I am so prett y, and good, everyone wants me t o live so happy, and never to have any sorrow, or pain and do things I come to do, never suffer anyt hing, never go through daring n adventures as I do, not even to see a sad sight, when so many millions of small creat ures about as pretty as I am have nothing but pain and sorrow, all their lives, as long th as they'll live---and it seems slofish but I'm not going to allow any one to try and make me that way. They can't do it. It ain't me. I ought to and do know such things, I see all, and I cannot fe help feeling about them. Such things sink too deep int o my heart, I cannot hardly bear it, they go down too deep, and I ke p thinking, and thinking about them. I do hope so day all these little slaves ill be free!"

" Do you think all us slaves will ever be free!" Asked Jannie/.

" That is a very diffu difficult question Jannie" Thereis no doubt that this situation is a very bad one, a greatmany nations even think so, and I do too and I heartily wish that there was not a slave in the land, but then poor Abbinannian my own nation is doing all she can to sathem free but we'll have to win this war first ."

" But ", said Jannie herself " general Mylstze though he does fight on t he wrong side is such a good kind an man and so noble, and he always has a way of saying things so pleasant, I wonder why he would not go on the christian side, and persaude Glandelinia to do right about this by making her submit and quit the war. Suppose we were all ki l killed, maybe then he would do it for my sake. You know clara he hat es hates Manley and his followers, and therefore I wish he was a christian general!"

" When are you intending to go away" said Jack passionately!

" Oh don t go yet " said Jannie. " You are the blest little companion I have on earth."

" Yes I know ans and the others were the best friends that I ever had too but yet you won't come with me when I've asked. Jannie all these poor little slaves here around you love their own sisters and brothers, and fathers and mothers as much as you do me. Oh don't worry though, God will d. something for them sooner or later. There was poor Annie, she loves her sister, I've seen her cry when she talked about her. And she is free now. And others love their own mothers fathers and sisters, and it 's dreadful that such things happen all the t ime when it will end soon."

" There there" little ones" said Jannie to the others soothingly as they start ed sobbing" Don't distress yourself, and she and I will do anything you wish."

" And promish me Jannie that you will try and seek your own freedom as soonas I'm back to the christian army./

" Yes C Clara I will do anything and risk anything in theworld---anything you desire me to.

" And Jack dear" said the child laying her cheek against his " How I wish I and Jannie, and you and t he others could all go with me together."

" where Clara!" asked Jack.

" To emperor Vivians christian army. " Its beautiful to be with his ar y, and every one is so loving to little children there." the child spoke almost unconsciously as of an ar y within which she always had been. " Don't you and Jannie want to go along with me?" she asked/.

" Jack draw her closer to him but was silent.

" You will come to me sometime anyhow" said the little girl speaking in a voice of calm certainity, which she often used unconsciously.

" I shall take the chances and come aft er you. I shall not forgetyou."

The shadows of the solemn evening w h the cannons thundering in the far distance, and the sounds of other conflicts closed around them deeper and deeper as Jack sat silently holding the little form to his bosom. He therefore saw no more of the strange deep eyes, but inthe same the voice came over him as that from a little spirit of heaven, and as in a sort of strange vision, his whole past miserable drudgery of a life rose in a moment before his eyes,,,---his mothers prayers and hymns; his own early yearnings and aspirings for freedom,, and bet weenthe and them and this hour, years of t errible Hardships, cruelty of t reatment before he was taken by Mylstze, and what a slave calls a life of " Hell"! We ourselves usually can think a whole lot, even in a moment. Jack therefore saw and felt many things, but he did not say anything, and as it grew darker, he took the litle little girl to her bedroom, and when she was prepared for rest , he sent away some of the elder child slaves, and like a good boy he was, rocked her in his own arms, and sung to her till she wasasleepp. Indeed little did he think that it was one of the youngest of the Vivian Girls posing as a litt le slave/.

It was another afternoon two days later. The battle had raged on again for over twenty hours, and for every assault a whole glandelinian front had been shattered and torn to pieces; and Mylstze and all his generals had to quickly and constantly placed new forces in for every break, and use ev ry cannon they was available but now again the G Nationals had been repulsed and there was a lull for another time. General Mylstze was now stretched on a strange bamboo lounge in the veranda of his headquarters, taking adfant advantage of the lull, and sat isfying himself contentedly by smoking a cigar. General Cannonia sat on a bench near the general on the same veranda opposite the window opening on it, closely secluded under something that looked like a striped awning of transe trans arent gauze gu gauze or something on that order, from the outrages of the mosquitoes that even were already bothering the army even though it was yet Early May, and holding in both hands a large map or plan which he seemed to be studying very deeply' p(providing of course he don't sink in too far) and which was making Mylstze look at him with wonder. General Cannonia was holding it because it was necessary, he was studying a map of the city that was besieged, and he really was studying it more than even he thought he was-- though in fact he really knew already what to d o do. General Tamerline who after some rummaging, had hundr ed up a smal small Geography and thon had gone out with a large party of officers to take a nearer view of t he besieged city and its defending christian positons, and at their request because they were specially favored, Jannie, Lillian, and ---well let 's say Clara had accompanied them//.

" I say general Mylstze" said Cannonia after at udying his map to his full heartscontent" I must send a large force of troopers all cavarly to view the besieged city to day, I'm sure t hat we ca not break it down or forde its surrender untill we know where it has its weakest spi nout. The situation of us besiegers is like a person having the complaint of the heart . We have lost several millions of men in killed and wounded already, and the besiegers have taken many of our cannons."

" Well why need you go out on a scouting tour or send a great force? General Tamerline and others have gone out on the same kind of a t our and they are just as skillful."

" Yes well I would not trust him or his followers in a critical case" said Cannonia" And I think anyhow mine is surely becoming so. I've been thinking of it these past three nights, I have met such distressing christian assaults and what good dod did it do but bring big losses, and such strange diseases!"

" Oh general Cannonia you are blue and discouraged, I don't believe the christ - ians attacked you so hard as all that ."

" I dare say you don't " said General Cannonia. " I was prepared to expect that. You can be alarmed enough i when Dargin suffered his own disease or, or when he is now wounded, but you never think because I'm a good general that I too can get my medicine, my punishment as well. "

" If it is perfectly agreeable for you to meet most christian assaults of unusua unusual violence why then I'll maintain you have met it ." said Mylstze" I did not know they could attack so hard."

CHAPTER FIFTY SEVEN..

WHAT WAS DAISY VIVIAN DOING HERE!!! DISAPPEARANCE. A DAR DOPNE IN MYLETZES CAMP.

What the exertions of general Cannonias army was or mire were, and which he had referred to, itwould have indeed been very difficult to state. General Mylatze who really had his own trouble with his own line of battle during t he series of bloody conflicts, quietly made this co mentary to himself, and heroforo went on smoking, like a shrewd man that he was, till a party of general officers and gh their followers halted before the entrance to the veranda, and the three girls alighted and came in, while the officers account two dispersed. General Black Brooks marched to his own chamber to put away his hat and gloves, as was always his a manner before he would speak a word on any subject, while the three little girls came at general Mylatzes call, and were sitting beside him giving an acct account of the views t hey had observed. They soon heard loud exclamat ions from general Black Brooks room which like the one in which they were sitting, opened on to the same veranda, and violent reproof addressed t o someone.

" What in the world has been brewing now!" asked general Mylatze his brow suddenly darkening." That co motion is of a spy's raising I'll be bound. I saw a stranger enter here but did not say anything to him at first."

And in a minute later, general Black Brooks, in the highest indignation, came dragging a strange dirty looking boy along.

" Come out here now you dirty little sneak" he said shaking him as a cat does a rat. " I will tell general Mylatze."

" What in the world is the matter now?" asked Mylatze.

" The trouble is, that I cannot be plagued with even child spies and let them get away with it. It 's just past all bearing, flesh and blood cannot endure it, with the losses we've been suffering in t he battle already. Here I come back from a scouting t our, and what do I see but this boy burning up my letters, maps, and plans and several books, and drawing a duplicate of an important plan of this seige. I never saw anything like it in all my life.And by his appearance he's no slave either. He came directi from the christian lines I'll be bound."

" I told you Cousin" said Cannonia" That you'd find out t hat even the christian lines are swarming with these child spies, and t hat you will have to use severity. If I had him now" He said, looking reproachfully at Mylatze I'" I'd sendt hat child out, and have him thou thoroughly whipped, I'd have himwhipped t ill he could not stand."

" Surely I don't doubt it., you'd even have him put to deat h if you could." said general Mylatze. " To l Tell me of the lovely rule of you Glandelinian generals. You are like one of Manleys. I never saw half a dozen officers that would not half kill a horse, or a slave either, if they had their own way with them, let alone a spy. We send spies int o the chr st christian lines and sure they have a right to send one to us every now and then. It's fair in war you know. They don't kill our spies unless we kill their's."

" T here is no use in this shilly shally way of your's general " said Cannonia. " General Brooks is aman of sense, and he h sees it now as plain as I do."

Of course Black brooks had just the capability of indignation that belongs to any general that finds his room gutted clean out by spies, and thins had been pretty actively roused by the artifice and wast efulness of all his papers and other military property bythe child spy, and in fact many many of our readers must probably own that they might have felt just so in this generals circumstances, but Cannonia's words went beyond him, and he therefore felt less heat ."

" I would not have this boy say put to death for all the world" he said" But I'm sure general Mylet ze I am not able to say what I should do. You know to punishany in any way you can does not make him give up hisvocation because he does it for his cause, as wwould do it for ours. But he was so destructive of everything I had, and I do not absolutely see any sense inall that ."

" Come here lad" said Mylatze st ernly calling the child up to him."

The lad came u p, his eyes glittering and strangely blinking with a mixture of apprehensiveness, and yet a sort of defiance.

" What were you doing in his room" said Mylatze who could not help being amazed with t he child's expression.

" I was doing it for t he Christ ian cause" said the lad demurely. " I was sent by one of the Vivian Girls."

" And as young as you are lad, what makes you desire to be a spy?"

" I expect it is my desire to help Violet - And her sisters" again answered the boy" And as they said I must I got to obey."

" But my lad don't you underst and how dangerous it is to spy on us soldiers and generals. Supposing I was general Manley inst ead of Izmer Mylatze?"

" I'm not afraid of him. You cannot imagine how much the Vivian Girls har done for us. They can do anything for me they think of and so I must rat urn it some way."

" But do you have to spy for that ?"

" Lord yes Your Excellency, even emperor Vivian, and all the christian generals say so. Any one can whip e me a lot harder than any slave, you can pull my he hair out of my head, and beat me up or knock me against a wall, but it would do no good, I will always spy now as long as I live, or the war continues, even if I die a hundred thousa nd deaths at the stake, for it would do no good either- -------I'm a spy. Lord I'll never be anything else but a spy anyhow."

" Well I shall have to give him up to some whipping post" said general Brooks stubbornly" I can't have thattrouble any longer. And then I'm going to make him a slave, and work him as hard as I can."

" Well I'd just like to ask one question" said general Mylatze.

" Well what is it?"

" Why if we send o spies of all kinds int o the christian lines, and they don't t reat them harsh, what's the use of sending this poor boy to a whipping post when he knows as well as others that he risked his very life, and done his duty. If it was full grown soldier of course it would be the firing squad, to morrow morning, but a ten year old lad. He leave him here. I won't have him whipped. And I suppose this little boy is about a fair sample of what thousands of other christian child spies are."

General Black Brooks did not make an immediate answer, and Jannie who with her t wo friends stood a silent spectator of the scene thus far, and wondered exceedingly, made a silent sign for the boy to follow her. She went outside into the tent where she belonged with the other slaves and the boy of course obediently followed her.

" What in the world is Jannie up to now I wonder?" sa id general Mylet ze " I mean to sack in and find out."

And ada advancing t ward the tent onti e toe, he lift ed up the entrance of it, and carefully looked in. Then he returned and laying his finger on his lips, he made a silent gesture to general Cannonia to come and look. He obeyed and both took in the scene thatensued. There sat the t wo children on a cot, with their side faces t ward the s two generl generals. The boy spy with his air of careless drollery and unconcern, but opposite to him, Jannie her whole face fervent with feeling, and tears in her large eyes.

" What made you come here to spy, litt le boy. And why won't you t ry to learn some other kind of duty less dangerous. Don't you know what would happen if you were ca ught caught like this in Manleys army?"

" I do, but I don't care, that's all" said the boy.

" what ma es you take up such a vocationlittle boy? Why won't you try to le something else, and be wise. Don't you love any Glandelinian whether he is good or not ?"

" I can't love any one but the christians, I love the Vivian Girls and all that follow in their cause" said the lad pouting.

" But would you spy own on your own father or even mother if they fought on the side of the Glandelinians."

" I never can give a sat isfactory answerto that you know. I tell you if I want to spy I'd spy on all the creatures of Heaven it self if they sided with the Glandelinians."

" Oh but that is a very bad thing to say" said Jannie sadly" But had you not known?"

" No I would not change my mind---never for nobody."

" But little boy, if you'd only try to change your mind, you might -"

" Could never be nothing but a spy, if I ever was anyt hing else" said the boy. " If t he Vivian Girls the selves told me to stop it then of course I would."

" But you can ask them to let you off of it my boy. The Vivian Girls would st ill love you no matter wha t you did lon you would take it."

The boy gave a short blunt laugh that was always the normal mode of a spy expressing incredulity.

" Don't you think so." said Jannie?

" No I've signed it down with them as short ofcontract ---and therefore I cannot under any condition even for the sake of my soul break my pledge with them. T here cannot be any one breaking a pledge with them, without also doing the same to his country, and therefore I will never do anything else. I don't care who knows." said the boy beginning to whist le.

" Oh you poor boy, how can I help loving you then, since you won't give up anything for their sake" said Jannie with a sudden burst of feeling, and lay ing her little thin white hand on the boys shoulder. " I love you, because you are indeed brave boy, and because you will do anything for those that love you. I love you and therefore beg you to be careful, and not go near any other camp that is not like this one. It is very dangerous my dear boy, and I think you will e learn the truth before a very long while, but it really grieves me, to have so good a boy like you run so many risks. I wish you would try and be as careful as you can for my sa ke----it is only a little while that you will be here. Please for my sake promish you'll at least keep away from Manley."

The bright keen eyes of the little boy sny were overcast with tears------ lar e bright drops rolled heavily down one by one, and fell on Jannie's hand. Yes in that moment a ray of confidence love of the little girl friend had penetrated the boys brave soul. He laid his head down bet ween his knees and sobbed, while the beautiful black haired little girl, be bending over him looked like the picture of some unusually bright angel stooping to reclaim a sinner.....

" You poor brave boy" said Jannie" Don't you know that Jesus loves little boys and girls and good soldiers that does all they can to help the christians set the little child slaves free. He therefore is just as willing t o love you as e me. He loves you just as I do---or more, yes more, because He is better than I am. He therefore will help you in all you do, though you must do it right , and you can also therefore help us. Only think of it my little friend,---you can sa ve us all if you be good, and cont inue in your work and do it wisely. But H He does not like you to be reckless, and uselessly throw your life away for any cause no matter how Righteous it is."

" Oh dear little girl, dear Jannie" said the boy" I will try t o do my best, and to please you I'll keep away from Manleys army. I never did believe he was so awfully dangerous."

General Mylet ze at this moment drowned the curt sin.

" That little Jannie, puts me in mind of mother" he said to general Cannonia/ himself. " Ithis true what she t old me, if the christian armies would ever fight t o put down child slavery, she was sure all child slaves will do all they can to help the christians."""""""

" I've always had a prejudice against all child slaves said general Cannonia" " And it is a fact, I never could bear to have any of t he slaves no man matter how pretty touch me---but I do and hope none of t hem ever know it."

" I'd like to see any child t hat does not observe that" said general Mylet ze" There's no keeping any secret from t hem. They can te ll even by a mans face whether he'll be a brutal master or an easy one. But I believe that all the trying in the world t o benifet a child slave, and all the substantial favors you can do them, will never excite one emotion of gratitude, while that feeling of revenge remains in the heart , it is a queer kind of a fact but so it is."

" I don't know how I can help it" said general C[illegible]da" T [illegible] slaves seem somehow to be very disagreeable to me-- these child slaves in particular---how can I help feeling so?"

" All the others do it seems."

" Well they are different . and aft era'l these child slaves are more than Christ like and that is what I do not see to my liking " said general Cannonia. " I'm different than you are Mylet ze. I'm in favor of all Clandelinia fight s for, while you only fight for fame and country. But I wish I were like you. These christian child slaves might yet t each me a lesson and save my soul in time."

" It would not be the first time a little child had been used t o instruct an old disciple, it never were s o" said Mylet ze." All these little slaves are christians in secret no matter were they where they are, and all hell cannot force it out of them."Said Mylet ze.

During the reign of Corinthia which still continued the child slaves had been furnished by Mylet ze with a new kind of tent which really he had captured from a christian camp but as danger lurked during so many sorties, he had allowed the three pret ty slaves to occupy his own headquarters, for he knew that the deceitful lulls which had buoyed the Clandelinian armies up every now and then was a fast passing away, seldom and ore seldom, was the lulls to be, and oftener and no more oftener a portion of the besieging lines would be fiercely attacked, and yet t o the comfort of Mylet ze the Nationals were fast depleting their own troops and the final issue he knew must soon come. It was t ward the middle of the afternoon as Clara herself was reclining---her bible in h nd upon her little transparent fingers lying listlessly bet ween the leaves, when suddenly she heard an officers voice in sharp reproachful tones in the veranda just at the time when the noise of battle in the distance was was unusually loud.

" What now you poor foolish child. Wh where have you been. You have been almost out of the very lines, hey when you know how dangerous it is. Why Jannie when in the world will you use a little co mon sense."

" But general" just went out to pick those beaut iful flowers for Lillian and Clara, and others" she heard a voice say, which she knew belonged to Jannie.

" Picking flowers. But goodness, Jannie, do you suppose any one of us or they want you s to go out picking flowers for them, you poor foolish child when just where that field may be a storm of grape canister and shell may lay you prostrate. Better get in the house before general Mylet ze sees you."

In a moment Clara was off from t he lounge, and in the veranda."

" Oh don't scold her general B nlack Brooks. I should like the flowers shocking dc lat her give them to me I want them."

" Why it is all right Clara t o have the flowers, but she al ost risked her life to get them." said the general." No one is allowed outside the lines now."

" Well she won't make the mistake again" said Clara" Jannie do bring them here."

" Jannie, who had stood silently holding down her head, now came up and offered her flowers. She did it with a look of hesitation and bashfulness, quite unlike the eldrickh boldness and brightness which was usual with her.

" You can make beautiful bouquets" said Clara looking at it.

" It was a goodly formed one of the choicest spring flowers, some of early daisies, Dandelions, and even Scarlet geraniums and some white and red and pink, japonicas and rose Roses, with glossy leaves. It was t ied up with an evident eye to the cont rast of color, and the arrangement of every leaf leaf had been carefully studied. Jannie looked more than pleased as Clara said;

" Jannie dear you certainly can arrange flowers very beautifully. " Here is a nice vase that I have no flowers for" she continued. I wish you would try and arrange every day something for it. I'll tell you where you'e n can get some beautiful flowers."

" Well that 's odd" said the general looking curious. " What in the world kind of children are you. And what do you want so many flowers for?"

"B Never mind general, you do not object to it do you?"

" Of course you and all the little ones here are allowed to have all the beautiful flowers you like, but I do not want any one to go int o the zone of Danger for heavens sake. Try and find flowers in a more safer place after this do you hear Jannie."

Jannie made a short court sey, and looked down, and as she turned away, Clara saw a t ear roll down her cheek.

" You see general, I know Jannie likes to do anyt hing for me" said Clara t the officer.

" Well I know it, but I do not like her to go into any danger. She knows it is to her desh to go out there to pick flowers with shells roaring the heavens with the infernal racket---but she recklessly did it nevertheless, that is all there is to it. But if you or othe others fncy to have her t o pick them for you so be it. But I'll have to watch her and see where she goes for them hereafter, as they won't be bringing her da back dands."

" General I think Jannie is quite different from what she used to be---she is trying t o be a brave obedient girl."

" She'll have to try a good while be fore she get 's to be good enough to go under heavy she'l fire without being killed or t orn up" said the general with a careless laugh.

" Well you know general, poor Jannie, everything elsewhere has always been against her."

" Yes it has been, but not since she has been here I'm sure. Everybody even the meanest of the soldiers like her, but no one want's her to risk her life just for an old bunch of flowers."

" But general it's so different to be brought up as I and others have been witheo many friends so many things to make us good and happy , and to be brought up as she has been in the past, all the ti e, till she came here."

" Most likely" said the general, yawning" They poor things certainly get it good and hot in Manleys army. "

Later on Jann e herself as ed of Clara!

" Clara you believe don't you that all us child slaves could go to Heaven and become saints as well as the best of the christians."

" Child slaves! What a ridiculous question. No one but you Jannie dear would ever think of asking such a qui question. Sure they could. Everybody can who lives a good right sone life."

" And Clara is not God our Father, as much as the christians? And is not Jesus our Saviour as well as of the Christians."

" I'll say it is. God made everybody, and everything that is living" said Clara.

" It surely, is so sad, so sad" said Jannie looking out on the distant river and listening to the sound of far away conflict, and speaking half to her self/.

" What is so sad"Said Clara.

" Why that so many hundreds of thousands of little slaves like me in Manleys army who could be saved and be saints, a and live with angels, should all go down to the very ruin of their little souls down down t o perdition and nobody help them---oh dear."

" Well it cannot be helped as long as the Nat ionals dod not win the war and s there is no use in worrying about it Jannie. I don't know what's to be done, and in some way we ought to be thankful that the christians have had some gained some advantages so far."

" I cannot be thankful" said Jannie" I'm sorry for the poor child slaves, and do not like even the christians sovdry much because they do not try t o win the war any quicker...""

" That is odd enough" said Clara" I'm sure my own vocation makes me thankful for all the advantages I have."

There was a moment of silence and then suddenly Li Clara said,

" Jack, I want some of my trinkets taken out of my little trunk in here--all of them."

" What for?" said the boy...

" Well Jack I desire to give them away to all your companions here, while I am able to give it to them myself. Won't you ask Lillian to come and sortt hem outfor me!!!!!!"

Jack raised his voice(about a mile high) and called to Lillianwho he knew was sitting outside the tent listening t with awe to the noises of the distant battle. Clara had unl unlocked her little trunk as her friend came in, and surprised her and every one by suddenly shaking her head violently and what had been long bobbed hair suddenly changed to long tresses, and she said to Lillian" There's no one to come in here to night . Come Lillian and curl my hair for me make long curls, while while Jack sorts out the things in my little trunks."

" What's that!" said Jannie who was surprised to see the new appearance that Clara made with her sudden long hair.

" Jannie I just want Lillian to curl my hair-- they were in good long curls and I have to ma e them back t o t heir pre proper form. Besides I've lots of things in my trunk t hat I wish to give away t o all the litt le slaves."

" Lillian took out from a small trunk of her own a small curling iron."

" Takecare Lillian don't spoil her beautiful hair" said Jannie" Curl it carefull carefully, for I like to see how she looks when her hair is all in curls."

"""Oh Jannie, OPride is not a good vur virt ue" said Clara sadly.

" Yes I know, but it ain't right to refuse t o look your best when you can either but you should have kept them or your ha ir bobbed against the t ime that general Mylatzes comes up to capt ure Angelinia Aenthia, and to see how the city loo ed" said Jannie in a gay tone."\"....."

" General Mylet ze shall never get there if I can help it " she thought to herself and then she said aloud" I will never be here long enough for t hat Jannie,----I'm going t o a bet ter army and no Glandelinian soldier living can prevent or stop me. Oh believe me Jannie. Do you see t hat I am really not a child slave but a girl scout and that I got a very import ant dut y to perform."

" Why do you insist that I sho d should believe such a thing Clara!" said Jannie.

" Only because it is perfectly true, Jannie dear, and if you will believe it now, perhaps you will get to feel about it as I do. You can come along with me if you want. I asked you too before, and you was afraid."

Jannie did not say anyt hing more how ver, but stood gloomily eyeing the long beautiful curls being so rapidly manufact ured, which as t hey were being formed made t h her look altogether different. Jannie raised them up looked earnestly at them, twined them around her thin fingers, and looked from time t o time anxiously at Jack.

" It is just what I have been foreboding" S id Jannie to Jack" It is just whatwill be preying on my health from day to day, even bring me downward to the grave though probably none of t he Glandelinians anywhere would really ever care. I h ve seen this long. Jack you will see aft er a while that I wasperfectly right."

" Yes and I suppose it will afford you great consolation, no doubt at that." said Jack ina dry bitter tone.

Jannie lay back ona lounge or cot and covered her face with a hand kerchief. Clara's clear blue eyes looked earnestly from one to the other. It seemed like the calm comprehending gaze of some beautiful soul of a little girl half loosed from its earthly bonds, it was evident also that she could observe, feel and appreciate t he differences between girl and boy. She beckoned with her hand to Jannie. She came and sat down by her.

" Jannie, my time to go is coming every hour even, and I know I must go, it is my duty. There are some tnthings of u importance t hat I must say and do ------that you know I ought to do, and so Jannie you must let us speak a word on the subject . It must come out now before the time is up, and it is not right for us put it off.Do be willing that I should speak now. It is safe and here are no Glandelinians around. Most of them not engaged with the seige have retired for the night , and taps for them has sounded long ago....."

" Clara you may" said Jannie covering her eyes with one hand, and holding up Clara's hand with the ot her and half sobbing..

" Then I want to see all the little slaves t ogat here I wish to say something very important t o them t o night" said Clara.

" See if they are in their Mess hall yet will you Lillian" said Jannie in a tone of something like dry endurance..

Lillian dispatched one of the slaves who was in the tent as a messenger and soon the whole force of the little ones were gathered in the big tent while one remained outside to be on guard. Clara sat on her cot , her long curly hair hanging loosely about her face something new to them all inst, ead of the golden bob formerly about her head, her crimson cheeks contrasting unsi unusually with the intense whiteness of her complexion, and the beautiful south contour of her limbs and features, and her large, soul like eyes, fixedearnestly on every one. By this appearance every one of the child slaves were struck with a strange sudden emot on. The strange spirit ual like face, the long beautiful locks of hair inplace of the child slave bob, Jannie's piteous face, and her sobs, , struck at once upon the feelings of the sensitive little ones, and as they came in they looked at one another, and sighed, and sh shook their heads, and there was a deep silence like what a person experiences, when he passed through a lonely graveyard.....((!!

Clara, then r ose stood up and looked long and earnest ly round upon every one who were present . All appeared apprehensive and sad,and some of the girl slaves either looked curious, or hid t heir faces in her their aprons.

" I can't for my l you dear child slaves" sa id. " Clara" Because I must t ell you something. I have been among many thousands of you, and from what you do I know your lives through and through. I love you slaves, I love you all, and therefore I have something t o say to yo , which I want to always to remember, to keep secret and never say to any one of the Glandelinians, not even in this army.I'm goin going to leave, you as it is my duty, and duty calls me back. Before to morrow morning approaches,you will never see me any more unless you are free and ---""

Here however the child was interrupted by some of them crying, sobbing, and l lamentat ing, and then every one breaking out into sobs, and in which her bird like voice was lost entirely. She waited for about a minute; and then speaking in a v t one that checked the sobs and weeping of all she said

"If you love me litt le slaves, you will not interrupt me so. Be wise and listen to what I will say. I want to speak t o you about your fut ure as well as your souls. All you of you I know are very good, but nevertheless you are thinking and yearning for your freedom. I wonder I want you to remember thatthere are many more big christian armies existing that no one even knows; and I'm going to one of them, and you can go t here too if you'll only wait patiently untill the chance comes. The freedom is as much for you as it is for me. But if you want to go there and be free, you must keep good as you are here, and must l not even when free live careless, idle thought less lives. You must be christians there. You ust remember t hat when the Nat ionals free any of you, or when ever Mylet ze excha exchanges you you must become boy or girl scouts if you are able. If you want to be free, Jesus will help you. You must pray to him,you must read---"

Suddenly the litt le girl checked herself, looked at them sorrowfully, and said

" Oh I forgot there are many of you poor souls who have never learned to read. But never mind, I have always prayed for all you child slaves no matt er how way of you there be or where youare, and I know Jesus will help you, even if you are not able to read or write. But try l all the best you are able, pray yourself yourselves the best you can every day, ask Him to helphyou, and get a Bible read toyou when ever you can, and some day I hope I shall see many of you whom I've been among within the christian lines before long."

" Amen" was the murmurgd res o response from the lips of all, though the younger and more innocent ones f r the time were completely overcome, and st arted sobbing, and crying, with t heir faces t hidden in their heads.

" I know" said Clara" Though you know I was not with you very long, you all love me e never h nevertheless."

" Yes, yes we do indeed. God bless you was W " Was the response of all.

" Yes I know all you little slaves do, for there is not one of you that had not been always kind to me, and therefore I want to give every one of you something, that when you look at , you shall always remember me, and also t o try and seek me out within the christian lines in case you ever get away or get exchanged. I'm going to give each one of you one of these which is spread out before me on my cot, and when you look at it , t hink that I loved you, and am gone to Emperor Vivians big christian army,,, and that some day I want to see you all there, and know t hat you are free."

It was a more scene that is probably utterly impossible to describe, as with tears and sobs, t hey gathered closely around the beautiful little friend, and took from her lit tle hands what seemed to t hem a last mark of t her love. They even fell on their knees t hey sobbed and prayed, and kissed the hem of her garment, and the eldest of the slaves poured forth words of endearment, mingled in her prayers, and blessings, some begged her to take them along with her, after the manner of their sad race... As each one took their gift, which as I must explain in some at least being, a ribbon, a lock of hair, a little medal, or a golden pair of beads,, a beautiful pin, and every other beautiful article which the Reader may imagine to his heart's content, Jannie herself who was apprehensive for the effect of all this excitement, signaled to each one to pass to their own cots, and be silent so as not to bring in any soldiers who might wish to make an investigation. At last all were by their own cots but Jannie, and Lillian.

" Here Jannie," said Clara" Is a beautiful little prayer book for you with my photograph and name written in it or in it. Oh I'm so happy, so glad Jannie dear to think I shall see you some day within Emperor Viviens army---for I am sure I shall, and even this year yet, and early too, and Lillian, dear good kind little Lillian" she said, fondly throwing her arms around her friend"If'n going to see to it you'll be there too."

" Oh Clara I don't see how I can live without you anyhow" said the faithful little girl. "It is just like taking everyt hing off the place at once. Please let me go with you." and she gave way to a passion of grief.

Jannie however pushed her gently toward her cot, and thought they were all gone, but as she turned, the boy spy himself was standing there.

" Where did you start up from?" she said suddenly, being intensely surprised as she expected he was still where she had left him.

" I was here" said he, wiping the tears from his eyes. I for one must go with her. Oh Daisy, I've been through general Black Brooks headquarters, and I've destroyed all the evidence against you he had. Are you going early to morrow morning before you'll be arrested."

" Yes my poor brave boy to be sure I will. There don't be afraid, there will be no one to arrest me" she added decidedly. Got your horse ready and mine too ,you now where they were placed."

" Oh Daisy I surely will" said the boy earnestly" But lord it is so hard to wait till to morrow. It appears the longer we stay the greater is the danger of being taken."

" Jesus is with me Pe Penrod, is is He is with you too, he will help us both. You sure you've got my weapons and ammunition in a handy place on the horse."

" Yes Daisy I am."

And then the boy silently passed from the tent, but as he went Jannie was surprised to see he had two goodly sized pistols hidden under his coat on his beltAll being gone Jannie closed the entrance to the tent. The little girl had wiped many a tear away of her own, during the scene, and Jack himself had been sitting during the whole time, with his hand shading his own eyes, in the same attitude. When they were all gone to their cots he still remained so quiet.

" Jack" said Daisy as that really was her name Daisy Vivian, as she gently laid her hand on his.

He gave a start but made no answer.

" Dear Jack" said Daisy.

" What do you want Clara?" he said faintly.

" You must and shall accompanying me to the christian lines."

" I cannot" said the boy rising. " I cannot do it. If I run away with you and I am caught the Glandelinians will deal very bitterly with me." and the boy pronounced pronounced these words with a bitter emphasis indeed.

" But Jack are you more afraid of a little danger than of geting your freedom?" said Jannie.

" Perhaps that is so but it does not make it any easier to try." said he with a dry hard tearless manner as she turned away."

" Jack you'll break my heart" said the little girl rising and throwing herself in into the boys arms" You must not feel so, with me there is no danger. I'm only a little girl to be sure, but I even can aid you." and the child pleaded and begged with a violence, which alarmed them all, and turned the boys thought's at once to another channel.

" There Jannie----there dearest. Hush hush Clara I mean I was wrong, I wascowardly, even wicked to refuse you. I will do anything you say, only don't distress you yourself. I will be resigned, I was wicked and cowardly to speak as I did. I will come along."

Jannie rose and threw herself onto her own bedwhere she too fell into violent sobbingYou did not give me any of the little trinklet's Clara" said the boy smiling sadly looking at those still remaining on the cot.

" They were only for those who do not come with me" said she smiling" But if you do want any you can pick up from three which you like best, and you must give poor Jannie as many as she wants, but oh God I do wish she too would come. I have given them to others you know Jack because you know my dear boy they might be even far away when I am gone, and because I hope it might make them remember me, and follow me when they are free. All they'll need to do is ask some one todirect them to find emperor Hanson, or Robert Viviens army.....

..... you are anchristian boy are you not Jack?" Daisy asked doubtfully.

" Why do you ask me?"

"Because you are so good, and I don't see how you can help it."

" What is being a good or christian Clara. ?"

" Loving Christ most of all."

" Are you really one of the Vivian Girls in disguise?"

" I certainly am."

" Have you any sisters here?"

" No they are back home by now. I'm only here yet."

" Do you know where to find your army if you go?"

" I certainly do."

" Maybe you'll run into Glandelinian soldiers" said Jack.

" That makes no difference" said Daisy. " I know how to elude any soldier, whose uniform I don't trust, and in even a very few days I'll be back with my sisters, and my other friends." and the young beautiful face grew fervent, radient with joy.

Jack however said no more. It was a feeling which he had seen before in his own mother, but no chord within vibrated to it.

But though she intended to go that night she to the secret joy of her friends however was detained and for a good reason. The condition of the beautiful quiet lulls passed, the situation of the seige decin declined rapidly, there was no more any doubt of the event, the fondest hopes could not be blinded. The Glandelinians camps, within within the seige or far from it, was avowedly a an immense sick hell, filled with wounded of even both sides for many prisoners were taken, and many of the child slaves had been forced to even perform the duties of little nurses to as many as possible----and never did the wounded appreciate the value of little Daisy, Jannie and Lillian in that capacity. With sowell trained a hand and eye, such perfect adroitness and practice in every art which could promote neatness and comfort, and keep out of sight every disagreeable incident of sickness, with such a perfect sense of time, such a clear little untroubled head, such exact accuracy in remembering every prescription and direction of the army doctors, either she or the two others were everyt hing to the wounded, and even what in Daisy waste was to the enemysoldiers wasa surprise. At first as many of the Glandelinians secretly knew who she really was had shrugged their shoulders at her little peculiarities and satnesses, so unlike the careless manners of child slaves and glandelinian girl scouts, acknowledged now that she was the exact person that was wanted and badly needed, and that when she does go away and takes some slaves with her they won't hinder her or say anyt hing about it at all.

She knew it too, for the way all the soldiers were to her was altogether different than the other glandelinian armies. General Mylotze was often among the wounded which increased in numbers for every day, and many of the wounded soldiers suffered from nervious restlessness, and it was relief to them to have some one by their side.. Somet imes either Jannie or even Daisy and Lillian would work so hard for many of the injured soldiers that they would become so tired out that it was a relief for them to be carried back to their own tent, and it was Jacks great est delight, to carry one of these frail little girls in his strong arms, now from one point of the camp, and down from another, or out from a wounded generals headquarters, and when the fresh breezes blew from the direction of the river, and the child would feel rested in the morning, he would somet imes walk with the three of them under the big high pine trees or sit down under them and sing to them their favorite songs. Inner Mylotze showed his own goodness despite being a Glandelinian by doing the same thing, but somet imes he had not much time and therefore the one to be carried would say;

" Oh generallet Jack take me. Poor fellow it pleases him, and you know he can do it good, and he wants to do something for me."

" So do I Clara" said the general. I like to do it before you leave my camp for the Nationals. And I as you saw has made out free papers for Jack."

" Well general you can do everything, and are everyt hing to your cause even though it is a wrong one. When I am tired and lying down in the tent---you thought though you do not need to sit up nights---and poor Jack has only this one thing, and his singing, and I know too he has more time to do it than you have."

The desire to do something was not only confined to Jack. every slave in the tent showed the same feeling, and in their way did what they could.Poor Jannie yearned toard her own home, but she too found no opportunity sometimes night or day, and twenty t imes a night she would be aroused to see why her wounded patient would cry out, and would bathe his head, and see what the noise was in her own tent, and in the day time she seemed unusually ingenious in keeping herself busy all over the sick tent, so that even within a few days the patient was gettingspeedily better.

" I feel it particularly careful of my besieging lines now" general Mylotze said to general Cannonia" Feeble as I t thought the besieged christian army is I have seen something happen that I don't like. To day the slaves can rest and the Nurses will take charge. They have arrived to day."

" Indeed your Excellency" said Cannonia, " I thought general Darwin had warned of what was t come."

" You t alk like a man general Cannonia -----just a as if a general could be relieved of the caf dare of achild in the state of ruin, but then it's all alike---no one ever knows what I feel about the situation. I can't throw things off as you do. To morrow if things are right , to end thin all I'm going to deliver a tremendous assault upon the besieged."

General Cannonia smiled. You must my dear reader of course excuse him he could not help it ---for general Mylstze could smile under any trouble no matt er what it be. And he was going to send away in secret the litt le girl and her two friends, and make her farof farewell voi voyage so bright and placid that no one would reali e . The child felt no fear no matt er how fierce the artillery fire had been, no matter how severe the fires were, even though it was not hard for her even t o really know how the end of the seige would be approaching. The Glandelinian armies on his day suffered no really painful attack, but only petty assaults, though the firing of artillery on both sides had been increasing intensely intensely. Jack was always with her now and to him the little girl was so beautiful, so loving so trustful, so happy, so brave that not one of the slaves could resist the soothing influence of that kind of innocence that which seemed to breathe around her. Jack found a strange calm dropping over him I [illegible] not a desire to back out, it seemed only a calm resting in the present, which seemed to be so beautiful that he wished to think of no future. It was more like that hush of spirit which we feel amid the bright mild woods of fall, when the bright hetic flush is on the leaves, and the last lingering flowers by the brook, and we joy in it all the more, because we know that it will all soon pass away.....

The friend who knew most of Daisys own ways and foreshadowings of what she intend to do was her faithful girl companion Jannie. To her she sa id what she would not dist urb Jack or the rest by saying. To her she imparted those mys terious plans which she was working through her mind all the while. Jannie at last would not sleep in her own cot but lay all night on a cot nearest Daisy ready to rouse at the hour when she would be ready to leave leave.

" Jannie what on earth have you been thinking of to sleep in this cot!" said Jack one night when he came in. " I thought you liked your own cot best of all, it is so soft and straight ."

" I do Jack" said Jannie mysteriously. " I do but now-)"

" Well what is it now?"

" We must not speak loud or you'll bring in some of the soldiers, but Jack you know I want to be waiting to see her when she goes away."

" What do you mean Jannie?"

" You know she said she was going with you and the other boy. That's what I am expecting every night now, and I could not sleep out of hearing ."

" Why Jannie what makes you think so?"

" Clara she always ta lks to me. She han t o day recieved a secret message from her own father the Emperor. I must be ready to bid her good bye, for when she goes to her army we'll all be able to big bid her good by."

" What do you mean Jannie?"

" Jannie, did she recieve a message from the emperor did you say?"

" Yes, she told me that this m orning--she was soon to leave."

This dialogue passed between Jannie and Jack but ween ten and eleven one night after his arrangements had been all made for the night , when on entering the tent he found Jannie stretched on the cot nearest Daisy. He was not nervious or impressible but the solumne heart felt manner struck him. Daisy had been unusual unusually bright and cheerful that aft ernoon, and he d sat raised in her cot and looked carefully all over her little trinklets and precious things, and named the friends she had wished them t o be given to, and her manner was more animated and her voice more natural than t hey had known it since she came among them. General Mylstze himself had been however in the tent when Daisy was alone and had said to her that if she wants to get back t o her own army she must go that very night, that arrangements will be made for her, and when he kissed her for the night as if she was his own child he said to Lillian;

" Lillian if you desire you t oo may go with her for I will make out your papers." and Lillian readily consented and retired to her cot with a light or heart in he[illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [

" T here is no depart ure like yours dear Daisy---neither darkness nor shadow of death, only such a bright fading as when the morning star fades with the approach of golden dawn. But thine country won't win the w without many a battle---won't, from us poor slaves without a bad conflict."

" So did Jannie think now, as with folded arms, she stood there the next morning gazing on her empty cot. Yes indeed, who shallsay what she did think? for from the hour that voices had said in her tent" she is gone" it had somehow or other been all a dreary mist, a heavy" dimness or anguish. She had heard the voices of her fellow slaves who remained around her, she had had asked and had questions asked, and she had had them answerpd and answered them they had send her when she was going to bed general Mylet an to give her her papers of freedom---and where she would go when she recieved them, and she had answered impatient ly " that she did not know, and did not care."

Jannie and another boy had arranged theinterior of the t ent, volatile, fickle and child like as theyalways were, but they were soft hearted and full of feeling, and while Jannie presided over the general detail of order and neat ness it was their hands however t hat added the soft poetic touches to the arrangements that t ook from t he lonely chamber of the tent the grim and ghastly air which too often marks a lonely and desolate place after t he departure of a friend you long for so muchand whom you feel the same in departing from as if she had just died.

There were still flowers on the small tables, all white, blue and other colors delicate and fragrant., with graceful drooping leaves. Thelittle table which Da isy used to use, covered also with white, bore on her o favorite vase, with a single rose bud in it and a fern. T he folds of the drapery, the fall of the tent curtains, had been arranged and rearranged, by Jannie and another girl, with t hat nicety of eye which showed that both were well trained.

Even now while poor Jannie stood there thinking deeply another little child slave tripped softly into the chamber with a basket of white flowers, and yellow and beautifully red o s ones.. She stepped back and kissed Jannie lovingly and then came forward to place them on her table. Jannie however saw her as in a strange dream while she placed in her own hand a small Rock Rose and with admirable taste disposed the ot her flowers in a small vase.

The tent door opened again, and another litt le girl her eyes swolled with crying appeared holding something in her apron. Jannie made a quick friendly gesture and asked what;

" What have you got there Jane.?"

" I've got a beaut iful little flower for you too, such a pret ty one" said Jane, holding a Cape Jessamine. " I brought it to add to the others."

" But I have no vase for it ,you'll have to place it among the others" she said. The little girl came forward and laid her flower beside the vast and thoh blazing it in carefully she suddenly with a wild and bitter cry threw herself on t he floor along side Daisys former bed and wept bitt erly as a soul suddenly lost out of heaven.

Jannie hastened t o the bed, and tried to ra ise and silence her but in vain.

" Oh Daisy, Daisy. Of Od Daisy I wish I was with you too---I do I do."

" She said this with piercing wildness, and the blood flushed into Jannie's marble like face and the tears came int o her ei eyes.

" Get up please Jane" said Jannie in a more soft emed t one of voice" Don't Don't cry so. Daisy i has gone back t o Emperor vivians christian army, she is a princess and not a child slave like us."

" But I'll never see her" said Jane." I never shallsee her" and she soo sobbed loudly again. They all stood a moment in great silence.

" she said she loved me" said Jane pit eously" she did, she did,--oh dear oh dear, t here is no one left to me now there ain't."

" That's true enough" said Jannie" But do" she said to another boy---" see if you cannot comfort the poor little girl."

" I just wish I had never been born" said poor Jane" I did not want to be born a slave anyhow, and I do not see any use in living now since she is gone."

" The boy and Jannie raised her firmly but gently, and t ook her from the side of t he bed, but as she did so more t ears fell from her eyes.

" Jane, Jane you poor little girl" she said" as she led her t o her own cot" Don't give up, We all can love you, though we are not like that dear Princess. We all ha ve learned something of the love of Christ from her. We all can love you and do, and you'll be free some day. She said the christian armies cannot lose, so dry your eyes you poor little girl."

Jannie's voice was more than her words, and more than that were the honest tears t hat fell down her face. From that hour, she and all of her remaining slave companons acquired an infu inf f a feeling over the mind of their fellow deetitute thatthey never loved.

" Oh Daisy Vivian--whose little time with us did so much good" thought Jannie" What an account the Cla ndelinians will have t o suffer who are mean to you and your sisters!"

[illegible] speak more. It in safe and

There were now for a long while soft whispers, and foot fa ls in the slave tent , as one aft er another stole in to look at t he picture of the girl that had left , and which Jannie had in her possession, then sure now places brought but the harp, and then there was anexchange and an exhange of prisoners, and carriages drove up to t he door of the tent for t he slaves to be given for every prisoner ret urned, and slaves were placed in and were seat ed, all decorated in scarfs and ribbons;, and there were papers signed , and then general Mylet ted walked back and forth giving an oration, and to the last he saw only one thing fif fift y child slaves going away for as many Clandelinian soldiers given up to him, but Jannie though Mylette had offered to sent her too, tearfully refused to go, though o t he last she had seen one last thing, that golden hairedlittle girl going far away in the night, and she watched the departure of many of her friends as one who had shed every t ear, but then she saw the carriages ride away or roll away, they disappeared out of night, , and she with others followed them a little dist ance as far as the outskirts of the camps where she and Lillian and Daisy rode off with Frank, and here she watched untill they were all out of sight . Jannie st ood beside a tree looking vacant ly down in the distant hillside, she saw them at last disappear out of sight, she heard dimply t he parting words" Good by Jannie, but oh why did you not come with us, yet she could not realize her foolishness as they were going out of sight.And yet she could not realize t hat the chances could ne that something would happen that she would never see her litt le golden haired friend any more. But yet she would, and her dear fair sisters too, and others she would see th the frail seed of t hose bright seemingly immortal forms which she would soon know as much as our readers probably do.

And then all were gone out of sight , and the remaining slaves went back to the place which should never know the depart ed ones no more, and t he tent was darkened, and poor Jannie lay on the bed sobbing in uncontro llable grief . Some of the other slaves it seemed did not shed a tear, even though they did sympathise with her, but they were not hear hard heart ed, or unfeeling, but they could not gris ery their grief was too much. Poor Jane however had a feeling that her own heart , that drew her to her friend Jannie. She followed her where ever she went, whatever wor work she did, , wist fully and sadly, and when she saw her sitting so pale and quiet on Daisy's little cot , holding before her eyes her little bible, though seeing as it seemed no letter or word of what was in it , t here was more sorrow and longing to Jane in Jannie's t earless fa eyes than in her own moans and lamentations.

It was towthe 29th of May and the town of Corinthia had fallen into the hands of general Mylet os Clandelinians though the Abbiannians there had fought there way out and escaped. After this the Cla ndelinian army was on the advance again, and Jannie, with the rest lessness of grief, longing for another scene, t o change t he current of her thoughts was glad the army was on t he march again. As the camp broke up and Jannie and her followers were in their wagons again and st rove t o fill up the chasm in her hu heart by watching the hurry and hustle of the Clandelinian army preparing for the resumption of the fu rn campaign, and wat ch the changing of the scenery, and soldiers who passed her in the wagon, though t hey saw her, knew of her loss of a dear friend, only bythe expression in her eyes, for otherwise there she sat smiling and talking with her other slaves, and therefore who could see t hat all this smiling outside was nothing at all but an attempt t o keep her shocking sensat ions down/.

" I thikn Jannie is a singular litt le girl" said one slave to another, in almost a complaining tone. " I thought if there would be anyt hing in the world, that she would love, it would be that dear litt le Clara--but she surely seems to be forgetting her very easily. We cannot even get her to say a word about her. And yet if she is really broken heart ed over it, it is her own fault. She asked Jannie to come with her and she refused.And now when Mylet so wanted her to go with those who were exchange she also refused. I heard Mylette say that she will have t o go the next exchange and he'll not accept no refusals."

" They used to say t hat still wat ers run deepest." said a little girl pra ularly.

" Oh I do believe Jannie feels bad all right--but she could avoid such bitterness if she had went with her when asked--but then you know it's a great misfortune indeed t be a perfect little fool. If people are fools they will show it--- they can't help it, but then Jannie showed herself to be one. I'd rather have been made to bo in Jannie's place. I'd a gone with her I t ell you."

" Sure Jannie is getting as thin as a stick. T hey t ell me she don't never eat a single bite" said a boy. " I know she don't forget Daisy, or those those who were exchanged, Inknow there could be no one for get her-- the dear little blessed creat ure." she added wiping her eyes.

" Well at all events Jannie has no consideration for herself or no sense" said a litt le girl whose name was Marie Turner." She has never t aken advant age of an opportunity when she had it, and as good as she is nevertheless for her foolishness she does not deserve sympathy."

" But she should know her own bitterness" said a little boy , gravely.

" That's just what I think. I just no know also how I feel, even if no one else seems to. Daisy used t o but she is gone. But Jannie could have saved her self this trouble by going with her when she was asked to accompany her. But the litt le fool, no, she was afraid to go."

While thixconversation was gone in one going on in one wagon, another was had seen her go into one of the wagons when the army was preparing for t he march , some hours, before, and after vainly waiting for her too come out, she desired/.

det ermined at last to go in with her as a slave was allowed to choose any wagon

She climbed in softly and quietly. Jannie lay on her cot face downward with her little bible open before her at a little distance. Jane came nearer and sat down beside her. She hesitated for a while, and while she was sitting there so silently, Jannie suddenly raised herself up. The honest innocent little face, so full of grief, and with such an exploring expression of affection, and sympathy and love for her departed friend struck at James o heart . Jannie laid her hand on James, and bowed down her forehead on its

" Oh Jane, Jane! I'm heartbroken, I wished t had gone wih her."

" I know it, Jannie---I know it" said Jane---" But oh if you could only have had jehoe, and make up your mind to let general Mylets o exchange you the next time he does with others---you could go to the army where dear Daisy and her sisters are---and they'll help you t o live a life that willbring you up to the Lord Jesus."

" Ah Jane, I do wish I had gone, I do look up and Pray to J esus, but the trouble is, it don't seem to do me any good, I don't see anything come when I do. I wish I could."

" Jane sighed heavily.

" The good luck seems to be given to other lit tle slaves like me, to have the good luck we don't " said Jannie. " d How comes it"

" You had the opportunity, and so did I and we foolishly refused it" said Jane." God gave us the chance and we did not accept h His favor."

" Jane I don't believe I did good in refusing---I can't believe I did--I've got the habit of being afraid of running off with any one n knowing the penalty of being caught ," said Jannie." I don't believe these Glandalinians would do such horrible, things,--but I felt. I can't run the risk of being ca ught by others. I wanted to go with her, but I was afraid I can't."

" Dear Jannie---pray to the good Lord to give you co rage---say Lord I am afraid, hel - help me, I believe You can do anything for me--Help me the next t ime I have the opportunity----and He will."

" Who knows that the general will exchange me the next time!" said Jannie her eyes wandering dreamily, and s ez speaking to himself." And was all that beautiful loe love and faih only one of the ever shifting phases of our own child slave feeling having nothing real to rest on, passing away without our own breath. A nd is there no more chance of seeing little Daisy, --no real heaven,---no real freedom---Christ- or nothing!"

" Oh dear Jannie, there is ----I know it, I'm sure of it" said Janie pleadingly." Do , do dear Jannie, please believe me it is true."

" ow do you know the christians will ever win this cruel war Jane? You never heard of them winning any glorious victory yet'"

" Felt in th in my soul Jannie, and God makes me feel it now. Oh Jannie, when I was sold away from my little brot her and sister, before I was sold here, I was just most broke up about it . I felt as if there was nothing for me left , that - was wiser to kill myself, and then the good Lord, He stood by me, and e seemed to say fear not, Jane 'll be with you till you are free' and he brings light and comfort to my soul, makes all peace, and fool now happier, and love everybody, and feel willing to be just - d's own ch l child, and only have the ood ords will done,, and be sent and placed just where only the ord wants me to be. know it could not come from me, because often too have complained most bitterly, and rebe. lled against my former master, and would not do a thing, and tried to stab him once, and that's why he sold me away---but know it comes from the ord, and know a - willing to do for - - - and indeed persue in a hundred thousand adventures in w one little week,, though all interest in them be w over, the cold mechanical habig habit of marching and campaigning remaining, after all vital int erest in it has fled, for duty mos must be accomplished no matt er what side you take for and fight. All the interests and hpes hopes of little Jannie however had unconsciously wound itself around her little friend Daisy. It for Daisy that she had allowedherself to remain a slave when she could have been free, it was for her she had made her tent so magnificently decorated, it was for little Daisy she had planned the disposal of herown time,, and to do this and that for Daisy Vivian,--to help raid, to improve, to buy with what little money the general would give her, alter and arrange, or dispose something for her,--she had been so long this h habit, that now she was gone, back to her own army, there seems nothing to be thought of, and nothing to be done, and sometimes she felt she also had nothing to live for. T rue we all know there is another life, a life for which all I be, believe believe and hope for but which stands in a solemn significent figure before the future, changing them t o orders of mysterious, untold value. Jannie knew this well,and so did her compan companion slaves, and often in many a w e weary hour during the now continuous advance and marching of general Mylettes army she imagined she heard that little slender childish voice of Daisy, calling her to go to the christian armies, to seek her own freedom, and imagined she saw thatlittle hand, pointing t her the way of furut fut ure happey life and fr freedom, but a heavy lethegy of sorrow lay over her, which held her back, and demurely she had heard reumo rumors that general Mylettes himself even had free papers made out for her and that she was going to be soon sent to a christian army or out of the army itself for when once he has the papers she no longer even can remain within a glandelinian camp.

However Ja nni Jannie had one of those natures which could better and more clearly conceive of religious things from its own pirceptions and instincts instincts, and the gift to appreciate and the sense to feel the happeri happier hours often seemed to me an err attrubuite to her, and therefore in many cases so hard had been her own life in the future that she really showed a careless regard for them and hardly was so much of a christian herself as she made of t be t o be.

Jannie had never however pret ended to govern herslef by any religious oblig ation, and a certain fineness of nature h gave her such an inst inctive view view of the way she should live as a christian, that she shrank, by n anticipation from what she felt would be the exertions of her own conscious conscience if she did not at once resolve to assume them. Indeed and so consistent is any hum n human nature in trouble mostly, that in most cases there are people who live an unchristian life because they suffer, and there are really more that do than that don't . Suffering makes the person what the heart calls for. Still in some respects Jannie was another kind of a human being. He did not really herslef believe t he bible any more than any other slave did, but she read the little bi ble honestly and seriously as if the stories nevertheless fascinated, her, she thought more soberly and practically her own duty to her fellow servants ebou enough to make her extremely dissatified with both her past and present course, and therefore thought herself a fool at last, that she did not go with Daisy when she had an opportunity and almost hated herself for refussing to go with those who had been exchanged when even on the list of t he names of t he exchanged her own name stopped it first, and for refusing Mylette had been terribly angry too and told her something she'll never forget her live long days. He told her for one thing as this:

" Jannie when you are appointed as one of those wh are exchanged there is no backing out , you don't go of course on this trip buy tut you are going if I have torun you out of the army. And to night to make sure you'll go I'm vgoing to commence the legal steps necessary to your complete emancipation which is to be perfected as soon as I can get through the nscessary formalit ies and have the signature of every general on it. I love you Jannie almost as my own child, and therefore I don't want you to be a little fool. And besides s suppose somethingwould happen to me what would become of you. Answerme t hat!"

Jannie knew the time was coming now when she must go, and Jane with her, and t herefore she attatched herself to Jane more every during during the advance o f the army. Indeed in all the wide world, there was nothing that seemed to remind her so much as little Daisy, and she would insist on keeping Jane constantly with her, and fastidious and unapproadhable as she was in regard in her most deepest feelings, she almost thought aloud to Jane. Nor would hany one have wondered at all at it, who had seen the expression of affection and devotion with which Jane so frequently followed little Jannie.

yinally when the army , a made its halt , Jannie was called at once before general Mylett se and when she arived she was surly sur r surprised to find with him all of his highest generals.

"Well Jannie" said Mylette almost sternly for he had already finished the legal formalit ies for her enfranchisement " I'm going to make a free girl out of both you and Jane and a thousand more to morrow---so after to morrow have your litt le things packed u p, and get ready with the otherto set out for some distant christian camp."

" Thesudden light of surprise that shone in Jannie's face as she raised her hands t o heaven, her emphatic"OI sure don't want to go now---" rather dis . discomposedbJannie, for he did not like it that Jannie still should be so ready to wish to remain in the army when she rightly should be free."

" go he said" Jannie, let me t ell you something rightnow. You cannot back out, go you must, you must understand.And let me tell you something else. You have not had such very bad times here, that you ever need be u in such rapture of staying ." And he continued dryly" And don't you think on your own part, you would be better off free. "

" Yes sir, but it ain'tthat, it's being so hard to find the christian amy army I so desire to go t o. That's why I don't want to go."

" No indeed!" said general Mylet te with a flash of anargy. " No indeed! Why Jannie, if you had been a slave long enough in some other Glandelinian army you could not have possibly have earned by the little work you do, such clothes and such living and half freedom as I and my soldiers have given you. And look at all these generals around me. T hey are laughing and grinning at you because you are such a litt le ass. Want me to send tyou to general Manleys army?"

" Now sir I don" said Jannie. I".You have been very good, but genera, I'd rather have a litt le time to be prepared for going, and I'd rather have poor clothing, a poor house or tent, poor ever everything, and have em n me mine than have the best, and be free, and the like when I do not know where to go."

" Well that might be so too." said Mylette. " But let me tell you again, " It is best for you to be going off and leaving me than of having a disaster happen here to my army and me in which might give other Glandelinian armies a fair chance to secure you and all my other slaves and then make life so miserable for you that you'll die under it. Be wise Jannie and don't act so foolish. Though why you should not wish to go NO --e knows" but he " He added in a gafer one, and getting up and walking the floor" There is no way out just the same. The thing is written down and you are going that's all there is to it. Going to the christian army as soon as we are concentrated near enough to on to send you off and no exchange either. You'll be going with a prisoner whom I'm release for the purpose. so there is no refusing your g t going and that's all there is to it."

As she saw no way out of it Jannie asked:

" And is Jane to go along with me too?"

" Yes so she won't be in trouble" said Mylet te" And she can stay with you as long as she wants to---so that she can be of use to you, ."

" And so that settled it, Jannie knew she must go.

So when she came ba ck to her wagon she t old the whole thing to Jane.

" I suppose you are going off and leaving me th n few days or so" Jane said discontentedly.

" No for you are to go with me." said Jannie." That is writt en down on the paper too."

" That's good" said Jane" and as long as you are in trouble I'll never leave you either."

" Not while I'm in trouble Jane"! said Jannie looking sadly out of the tent." And when will my own troubles be over?"

" When you are free and see t he Vivian Girls who are your friends." said Jane.

" And you really mean tostand by th till that day comes?" said Jannie, half smiling as she t urned toward her wagon, and put her arm around her friend.

" Ah Jane you soft silly litt le girl. You would not hese to stay till that day unless you want to . You better go back to your own mother and father if they are still living and see if the christians won't get your brother and sisters, and then give my love to Daisy and her sisters if you happen to see them."

" I believe that day will come" said Jane " and very soon" s e she added earl earnestly with the te r tears in her eyes." The Good Lord even has a work for you to do."

" A work hey!" said Jane" Well now Jane I please do give me your views on what sort of work it might be -- let's hear."

" Why even a poor little girl like me had a work from the good Lord and Janie dear-- you have learning, and friends,---how much you could do for the Lord when you are free."

" Jane, indeed, you seem to think the Lord, needs a great great deal done for him when we have done as much as we can already." said Jann is smiling.

" We should do all we can for God to gain our freedom" said Jane.

" It is good theology, Jan, better than any one else would say I dare swear." said Jannie.

Nearly all of the other slaves who still remained with Jannie felt the departure and loss of Daisy as deeply as Jannie could herself, and many of these had a still stron ger reason to regre the loss of their young friend, whose ways and gentle intercessions had so often beenn she'ld to them from the tyrannical and selfish exactions of glandelidan boy and girl scouts. Poor Janni e however in particular whose heart covered from all who loved best, had comoled itself with thisone beautiful being, and therefore she was almost heart broken. She cried day and night, and was from excess of sorrow, less skillful ad alert in her ministrations onthose she served th n thanhnusual but nothing was said as she was free and only serving till the day of her owndeparture.

S And how could she help but feel the loss, yet in her goof and honest heart, it born fruitn for she kaw the little one called away by duty had to go. she was more softend more gentle ad though equally assiduous in every duty she knew she still must perform she did it with a chastened and quiet air, as ong who always ou commune with her own heart, but not in vain. she was more dilligent in teaching Jannie---taught Jane merely from the bible, and she viewed her follow slaves through the softened medium that Daisy's hand had first held before her eyes, and saw inthem on ly mortal creatures, whom God had sent on the earth ,like herself to be led by their hard life, to glory and virtur virtue.

But there was no danger or any hope which ever you may call of it f aw of the little slaves becoming a saint, but the life and departure of little Daisy worked a marked change inmany of them. The callous indifference among them was gone, there was n ow sensibility, hope, desire, ad the striving for good----a strife irrigular, interrupted, ad suspended oft, and the like but yet renewed again.

One day during oneof the times the army was advancing, whenon little girl had beensent for m by Mylettse, Jannie having served him at the time, and as the child came she hastily thrust something into her bosom.

" What are obyou gidig there Nell.I h pe you have nt beenstealig anyth ing from the gearal" said Jane imperiously lookig at her reproachfully.

" No I haven" said the little girl.

" Buy but you acted suspicious" said J n Jane" I saw you hide something, ad at this on of the soldiers seized the childs arm, ad tried to force h is hnd roughly into her bosom, while Nell, ewg enaged, kicked ad fought valeally valiaNly for what she considered her rightful possession. The clamor ad confusion of the battle drew gearal Mylettse, Janie ad others to the spot.

" She has beenstealing something" said the solo soldier scowlig.

" I did not" vociferated Nell sobbing with pass ion

" Give me what ever that is." said Janie herself firmly and looking sharply at Nell.

Nell hesitated, but on a second ad sterar order from gearal Mylettse himself pulled out of her bosom a small parcel donoup in a small box.

Jannie who recieve it turned it out. There was a small prayer book, which had beengiven to Nll by Daisy herslf, containing eve y prayer a Catholic could fid and in a small paper, a little trinket that she had also givenher onthat memoral day whenshe had takenher last farwell. Indeed gearal Mylettse ad all the oth ers were a great deal affected at the sight of it.th e little book had beenl rolled ina long strip of white crepe pa er paper, torn from some rool.

" What did you wrap this around the prayer book for?" said gearal Mylettse holding up the crepe" Who died recently?"

" Cause, cause it was a remembarance of the departure of little Clara. Oh gear gearal please dont take thel away from m, please." she said, ad laying or throwing herself down to th e floor she begato sob vehemently.

It was a curious mixture of the pathetic ad the ludicrous, the litt,e old black box, the white crepe, prayer book, a fair soft goldencurl of hair, ad a little gold medal, and Nells utter distress. Gearal Mylettse smiled, but there were tears inhiseyes as he said;

" Come come dont cry---so you shall have them" an ad putting them together he threw th em to her, ad drew Janie and others out of the room.

" I really think Jannie you can make something of that little girl." he said pointig with his thumbthumb over his left shoulder." Ay mid or any littleom who can show such real sorrow is capable of good also like you. You must try and do something with her ad tae good care of her."

" The child seems to miss her too " said Janie. " But gearal" she said looking at him pleadingly" I would like to ak you a favor, whose child shall she be whenI m am gone."

" Why if you like I'll give her to you."

" But I like to have her legally--I want her to be mim legally" said Janie.

" Whew, Janie" said th e gearal. " What will gearal Mahoy thik if I keep onfavoring you little slaves as if you were my ownchildren Th e Mahoy's will have a day of fadig, appointed for my backsliding--if I liberate another Rave for you."

" Onbut gearal God will s ome day reward you, if you give her to me, that I may have a right to take her as a free slave to th e christianamaies too, and so she can have her liberty, so that all I am trying to do will not be undon in case something happen.

" But Janie what an awful do ndoing evil th at good may come. I cant encourage it. Mahey will have fits enough that I have evenfreed you ad Jan ad exchadged so many of them already."

" But gearal Pleas dont joke ad be reasonable" said Janie pleading." You know there is n us imy making th ischild als a christian unless I too save her from all the chancesad reversde reverses of slavery, ad if you are really willing that I should have her, I was you to sig her name down on my freedom paper."

" Well wel,, said" said gearal Mylettse " I will" ad he sat down, and unfoled a plante study over.

" But I want it now" said Janie looking at him beseechingly.

" But Jade what in the world are you in a hurry for?"

" Beegus gearal this isthe only time,. " And she brough t tward him a pened a bottle of ik and the paper which he had reeally givento her. Gearal Mylettse like mod menof his clasof mid sord al cordially hated the presen tense of action especially whenabout to do something else, ad therefore he was considerably anoyed by Janie's strage downightedness.!"

strage downightedness.

" Why what in the world is the matter" said he. " Cant you take my word? " gon'y you trus me any more. Ow would think you believed s e some on might come and deal her comig at me so."

" I was to be sure" said Jade pleadigly pleadingly. " And you may one day some day be killed in battle, or fall in th e battles , ad th enhe'll be hustled off to auction in pits of all that Tieaman ad may do.N

" Really you are quite provident. Well seeing I'm in th e handsof th one who is insisting there is no nothig to do but give in " ad and NNn" and th e general wrote the girls name on it which as he was well versed in the form of th e law he could easilysdo ad and signed hisn name to it in sprawling capitols con cluded by a [illegible]

" There Thereu it ottt ... it to her.

" There" is not that satisfactory now"He said as he handed it to her.

" Thank you very much general" said Jannie smiling." But must it not be witnessed?"

"No the names of the generals are already signed down."

" Oh goodie" said Janie.

"C Yes and she is yours body and soul" said Mylettse.

." No more mine than she was before" said Jannie. " No one but you hadthe right with the help of God to give her to me, but I hope I can protect her now."

" Well she is yours by a fiction of law then" said general Mylettse as he turned back into the room and sat down to the plans he was studying. Jannie then followed Nell carefully t o to her wago, wagon, having first carefully laid away the paper.

" Jane" she suddenly said as she climbed into the wagon" Have you ever made any prob provision in case you and I go away to the christian lines?"

" No " said jane." When are we goig going."

" Very soon but if yo you delay all your indulg u indulgence will prove a great cruelty to you and myself by and by."

Jane had often thought this he herself but she answered ;

" Well I mea mean to prepare by and by?"

" When?" said Jannie.

" Oh to day maybe."

" What if you should forgetand have to leave the thin ge behind."?

" Jannie what is the matter" said ge Jane."

When we have to go we cannot delay for anything" said Jannie as she walked over to the wagon carelessly. Mechanically she repea ed the word" Freedom" and as she leaned against the wagon, and watched the sparkling water of a stream as it passed in little waves, and as in a din and dizzy haze, saw flowers and trees within easy view, she repea ted again the mystic word so common in every mouth, yet of such great hope and expectation--i" FREEDOM". Strange that there should be such a word" she said and such a good thin g and we ever forget it, that one should be living, warm and beautiful, full of hopes, desires, wants, one day and the next be free and happy with those you love."

It indeed was a warm golden evening, and as she walked tothe edge of the stream, she saw Jane sitting there busily intent upon her bible reading as best as she knew how.

" Want me to read to you Jane dear?" said Jannie, seating herself carelessly by her friend.

" If you would I'd be glad" said Jane gratefully" For you can make it so much plainer."

Jannie took the book and glanced at the place, and began reading one of the passages which Jan e had pointedout to her. It ran as follows;

" W e When the Son of Man shall come unto His glory, and all His holy angels with Him then shall He sit upon the Throne of His glory, and before Him shall be gathered all nations, and He shall separate them one from another, as a sheperd divideth his sheep from his goats." Jannie rad on in animated voice, till she came to the la t of the verses." Then shall the Kin g say unto them on His left hand-Depart from me ye cursed, into everlasting fire--for I was an hun gered, and ye gave me no meat, I was thirs ty and ye gave me no drink, I was a stranger and ye took me not in, naked and ye clothes clothed me not, I was sick and in prison, and ye visited me not. Then shall they answer unto him Him, Lord when saw we thee in hungered, or athirst, or a stranger, or naked, or sick, or in prison, and did not minister unto three. Then shall He say unto them-Inso much as ye did it not to one of the least of these my brethern, ye did it not to me."

Jannie seemed struck with this last passage, for she read it four times,- the latter three times more slowly, and as if she were revolving the words in her little mind." Jane" she said" These folk that get or will get such a hard measure seem to have been doing just what all these Glandelinians are doing--living good easy, respectable lives, and not troubling themselves to inquire how many of their brethern including us were hungry, or athirst, or sick or in prison, or a slave, and they lead wicked brutal cruel lives."

Jane did not answer. Jannie rose up and walked thoughtfully up and down the bank of the stream, seeming to forget everything in her own thoughts, so absorbed was s he, that one of the sentries had to hallo at her with great vehemence and remind her four times, that the bugle had sounded for the Mess call before he could get her attention. Jannie was quiet and sober through all meal time. After dinner, she and Jane and N ell and others took possession of their newly erected tent, almost in silence. Nell disposed herself on a cot and was soon sound asleep for she surely needed all the rest she could get. Jane silently busied herself, tryin g anew to study her b Bible. Jannie sat down and started playing a m Harmonica playing a soft and sad music, and see ed t to be in a deep reverie, and to be c n completely absorbed in her music. After a little while she opened her little shrunk, took out a little music book whose leaves were yellow with age, and began turning it over.

" There " she said sadly to Jane" This was one of my mothers books, and here is her hand writing, come and look at it."

Jane came accordingly.

" This song was something she used to sing often to me" said Jann ie. " I often imagine I hear her when ever I lay down."

She started a few majest c chords on her Harmonica and began playing the piece straight through. Some of the other child r leves was drawn by the sound to the very wagon, where they stood earnestly listening. They did not understand the song of course there being no singing to it, but the music appeared to affect them greatly, a especially when she played the most saddest parts. Jannie threw a deep and pathetic expression into the sound, for the shadowy veil of her saddest years seemed drawn away, and she seemed to hear her mothers voice leading here. The instrument seemed to be living, and threw out with vivid sympathy the strains of " Bring Flowers of the Fairest, Bring Flowers of the Rarest" one of the very beautiful of all May Songs. When Jannie had done playing she kept leaning her head upon her hand for a few moments, and then sat very still .

" What a strange sublime conception is that of what the Bible says of a last Judgement" said she to Jane," A righting of all the wrongs of ages -a solving of all moral problems by an unanswerable prlo problem or wisdom. It is in deed a wonderful in imagi image."

" It will be a fearful one o to the Glandelinians and even to us." said Jane.

" It might be for the Glandelinians more than for any one else though I suppose" said Jannie." I remember reading to you by the side of the river, that chapter in Matthew that gives an account of it, and I have been quite struck with it, and fearful of the results.One should have expected some terrible disasters and enormities charged to all those who are excluded from Heaven as the reason but no--they are condemned for not doing positive good itself, not including other harm."

" Perhaps "said Janie" It is impossible for any of the Glandelinian no matter who they are to get to heaven as long as they fight for a cause they feel sure are or is wrong."

" And what" said Jannie speaking almost to herself, but with deep feeling, " What shall be as said of those, who own little slaves, when they should have been a worker also."

" Something fearful will happen to them." said Jane vehemently.

" Always practical and to the point" said Janie, her face breaking out into a broad smile. " You never m leave me any time for any general reflections Jane, you always bring me up short against the very dimes ter itself, you have always something to happen for our being slaves always in your mind."

" Well the time will come" said Jane determinedly.

" Dear little Daisy---poor child" said Jannie -" she had set her little simple yet brave soul on a good work for me I'll be bound."

" It was probably the first time since the departure of Dais y Vivian that she had ever said as many words as these of her, and she spoke how evidently express ing a very strong feeling.

In the meantime gener l Mylotse himself was havin g another discours e with his assistance general Cannonia he said;

" My view of the situation of child slavery is such that no man no matter who ever he is can consistently profr profess himself even a good man without freeing slaves, and throwing the whole weight of his being and power against this monsterous system of dreadful injustice that lies at the foundation of all this horrible slavery, and if need be sacrificing himself and a whole army in battle for it, when in reality he is against it, and against it all. That is I mean as long as I'm to fight in behalf behalf of Glandelinia and her wicked cause I can never be a Christian otherwise, though I certainly had had intercourse with a great many enlightened christian pe prisoners, and I con fess that the pa apatyy ap apathy of thec Abbiesnian people on this subject, their nknowledge of the wrong and of what they were going to do if they win this war filled me with horror."

" If you knew all this" said general Cannonia" Why did you fight at all?"

" Oh because I have that kind of benevolence which consist of my loving only one country and one flag, and cursing all christiandom for allowing such a war to break out when , think and believe that the child slave question could have been settled without such a dreadful conflict. One can s ee you know, very easily what cause he thi thinks he has a right to follow."

" Well are you going to do different now, and resign your command?" said Cannonia.

" God only knows the future" said general Mylotse" Just now I'm more firmer in my duty to Glandelinia than before, because it is through the Nationals that I have lost all, and he who has nothing to lose from one you thought a friend at first, a has a right to chose his own will."

" And if you remain in command what are you going to do in the future?" disregarding how mad Manley will be about it." said Mylotse" beginning with all the slaves I can drag away into my own army, for whom you know I have always been doing good, and perhaps at some future day, it may a pear I can do something for a whole class, something to save my war torn country from the disgrace of that awful position in which she now stands before all civilized nations, and which caus ed Abbisania to he hurl her thunderbolt at her so hard."

" Do you suppose it possible that this Glandelinia nation licked or not by the Abbisanians can ever be forced to emancipate?" said general Cannonia.

" I don't kno w"said general Mylotse" This is a day of great war. There are great things going on on both sides, everything is risingup here and there. The vivian nobles recently r hear captured a whole Glandelinian army some where and took with them to the christian camps millions of child slaves free how at an immense loss to Glandelinia and the Manleys--and perhaps elsewhere in this dram of war may be found National armies, who will do the same. Do you think general Cannonia that I for one will ever capture Angelinia agathia as good a general as I am? "

" I hardly think so" said general Cannonia.

" Well I fell less hopeful than you think about it myself. But suppose we would be forced down to submission, should the Nationals win, who would find enough homes for all these scores f of millions of little slaves, who would try and find their relations and parents if still living who would ed u educate these millions, and teach them how to use their freedom. Maybe the Nationals exhausted by the nature of their war with us would never be able to do that thing. Th The fact is, the Na Nationals are not able to themselves I believe ever to give them much of an idea that what is necessary to form them into citizens when they grow up and recieve their citizenship pape papers. And if free they won't be allowed to remain in Glandelinia, they will have to go north into Abbieannia, where freedom and enclosure of orphan asylumns and the like will be the fashion until proper homes or their parents are found for them--- the universal custom, and tell me now is there enough christian philanthropy among the Abbisannian states, who could onaccount of the draining resources of this war be able to have the chance of process of their education and elevation? They hav have exgausted hundreds upon hundreds of millions of dollars already to carry on this war against us, and how can they now support the hundreds upon hundreds of thousands such little strangers sent into their towns and villiages , and have a chance to give time, money and everything to raise them to the christian standard. That is what I want to know. If we Glandelin ians losing the war are forced to free them, to Emancipate, who will be able to even place them in schools to educate. How many families in the christian towns survive the horrors of war who could take in a child slave, boy or girl adopt them, teach them, bear with them, and seek to make those who are not, christians? How many orphens asylumn have room enough to take the slaves who have no place to go. And how many schools are there wh ich would have room to take them in. How many families that could hoard them under these awful conditions. You see genera, Cannonia I want justice done by both sides and not only Abbiannia. N ot only is glandelinia in a badposition should she lose the war, which probably she will, in thelong run, but Abbiannia will be worse of. We are the more oc oppressors of the poor unfortunate child slaves, but if they are liberated, there ware will be many millions utterly homeless, without care, and will have to go roaming the streets begging and so on and therefore their life of freedom would be sugilly equally severe if not worse."

" Well cousin I know it so and it will be so" said general Cannonia--I know it might be so from the very start, but it is the duty of both sides to over come it, but I tu trust it shall be overcome, and I know there many bemillions f of good people in Abbiannia who may survive the war, who in this matter may be able to do something. It certainly would not need to be a great self denial for the Abbiannians to recieve s so many slaves, if they are fighting so desperate ly to free them."

" I would know" said general Mylstze.

" Yes I know you would" said Cannonia. I'D like to see anything you would not do if you thought it your duty."

"Well I'm not uncommonly good" said general Mylstze." Others ofour generals are like you too and would do the same as you do. You let many go free even without exchanging them, and you gave Jannie her free papers. I suppose gearal Manley will wonder, but he cannot dareinterfere anyhow. But I know there are many other Glandelinian generals who do exactly what you do."

"Yes but they are a minority--but if we are soon forced to begin to free the slaves to any extent unusual we should soon begin also to hear from Mylstze."

" General Cannonia did not reply. There was a pause of some moments and general Mylstzes face was overcast by a so sort of dreamy expression.

" I don't kn ow what makes me think of my own poor mother to night" he said." I have a strange kind of feeling as if she was very near me, for I keep thinking of things she used to say. Strange indeed what brings things so vidi vividly back to us sometimes."

General Mylstze walkedup and down for some time and then said;

" I believe I'll go out with a few men on a sho rt distanced scouting tour to night."

He took his hat and pass ed o t out. Cannonia followed him to the passage out of the house, and asked if he should attend him.

" Yes I would like your compan y" said general Mylstze. " I don't know how soon we will be back and we are needed to nigh t."

In the meantime Jamie was sitting alone in her wagon. It was a beautiful moonlight evening, and she sat watching the movement of the little wave crossing where the moon reflected in the water of a stream, and listened to the lisping murmur of the waves as they lapped the shore. Jannie tho ght also of her far away home, and that she should soon be a freeyoung free child, and able to have the Abbiea n Abbiannians find hermother and father. she admired the scenery with a sort of joy, and then she thought of general Mylstze, and ever second to that came the habutal prayer that she had always offered for him, and then her thoughts passed on to beautiful little baisy Vivian, whon he she now thought might have reached Emperor Vivians army by this time, and she thought that untill she almost fancied that that bright face and golden hair were looking upon her our of a little fleecy cloud in the sky. And so musing she fell asleep in herlitle wagon, and then dreamed she saw her come bound ing swiftly toard him, just as she used to come so often before she went away, with a wreathe of flowers in her hair, her cheeks so bright, and her eyes radient with delig ht, but as she looked, she seemed to see her suddenly dash away on a horse, her cheeks wore a paler hue, her eyes had a deep di devine radiance, and then her an imagined she was among them, and Vamie was awakened by a loud booming noise, and the sound of many muskets being fired off in the distance, and a tremendous explosion.

She hastened out of the wagon

She hastened ou of her wagon in alarm and with smothered voices and heavy thread came several soldiers bearing a body of a general, wroped in a cloak and lying on a stretcher. Thelight f the moon fell full on his face, and Jann ie gave a wild cryo of amasement and despair, that rang through the closest portion of the camp as the soldiers advanced with their burden toward general Mylstze headquarte s , where another group of officers had already appeared. General black Brooks had been out on a scouting tour of his own, and as he approached close to where he thought he saw another fortified town, a force of Nationals suddenly surfsed his column of men and durin the fray that ensued the Nationals were soundly thrashed but in the melles 5the general was badly if not fatally wound ed. The whole camp was full of cries and lamentations shris shrieks and screams came from many of the child slaves. Jannie and Jane alone seemed to have a righ t presence of mind, for the whole camp was in an uproar, and portions of it being fiercely attacked by a division of Nationals was as bad of as a woman in strong hysteric convulsions. At general Mylstzes direction for the latter had returned, one of the beds inthe house was hadt hastily prepared, and the bleeding form laid upon upon it. General Brooks had fainted through pain and loss of blood, but as general Mylstze applied restoratives, he revived opened his eyes, looked fixedly on them, looked earnestly around the room, and his eyes traveled wistfully over every object, and finally they rested on Janie who stood near by. The army doctor now arived and made his hie examention.

It was evident from the expression on his face, th at there was good hope of bring the general through ad he applied himself to dressing the wound, and Hecand Jannie proceeded compesedly with this work, said the lamentations and sobs and cries of the a many affrightened child slaves who had clusted about the doors and windows of the ol old building.

" Now general Mylstze" said the surgeon" we must turn all these little creatures out --" all depends on his being kept quiet."

General Brooks opened his eyes, and looked fixedly on the distressed beings , whom Jannie and others were striving to urged out of th e apartment.

" Poor creatures, to sorrow for me" hexsaid, and an expression of bitter self reproach passed over his face. Jane absolu ely refused to go. Terror had deprived her of allpresence of mind, she had thrown a herself alog onthe flcow floor, and nothing but force could persuade her to rise. The rest yeilded to Jannie's urg nt representations, that their mas ters safty depended on their stillness and obedience.

General Brooks could say but little, he lay with his eyes shut, but it was evident that he wrested with the most bitter thoughts. After a while he laid his hand on Jannie's fair head, the latter kneeling beside him and said;

" Poor Jannie."

" What did you say general" said Jannie.... .

" I am badly wounded" said the general pressing her hand..." Pray that I doulh that I should recover."

" If you wo l would like a Glandelinian priest ------""""Said th e army surgeon/

The general has tily shook his head and said weakly;

" Jannie is worth more than any priest or clergyman alive" and said again to Jannie more earnestly" Praythat I'll recover from my wound."

And indeed Jannie did pray, with all her mind and strength, for the recovery of another one of her military friends,--whose eys looked so mournfully and s teadily at h er. It was literally prayer offered with a r strong crying and tears. When Jannie

Jannie ceased her little prayer, the gearal rw ched out and took her little hand... looling earnestly at her but he did not then say an t an ything. H He closed his eyes, but still retained his hold... for when a general of a favorable k ind is soverely wounded, the child slave and the Glandelinian general hold each other with an equal grasp. He murmured softpy something to hijself a hymn of a Glande linian nature which however is not necessary to put here... and yet it was evident that the very words he might have been sig sinn singing was passing through his mind,----words of entreaty addressed to infinite pity. His lips moved at short intervals, as parts of the hymn fell brokenly from them.

" His mind is wandering or something"" said the surgeon.

"CNo I'm still conscious" said the wounded general. But the effort of speaking positively exhausted him and he lay quiet for a few minutes. They saw that he had a narrow escape indeed from death, but as he was now removed to his own bed he absolutely lapsed into unconsciousness chapter 58.

HOW MANY OF THE CHILD SLAVES CAN BE FOUND UN PROTECTED.
A PLACE WHERE SLAVES ARE SOLD BY THE WHOLE SALE...
ANOTHER PASSAGE ONTHE FLEET. DWLDON AGAIN..
.DREADFUL AND HORRIBLE PLACES.....
WHO WAS THIS NEW SLAVE..

It might be said that during other times we have heard often of the distress of slaves of any kind, whether negro or otherwise, on the loss of a kind master, and with good reason for no creature in those times on God's earth is left more sadly and utterly unprotected and desolate than the slaves in these circumstances. A child who has lost his fatyer or mother, and who has been rendered an orphan has still the protection of friends and other relation, and also of the law, he or she is something, and can do something,---has acknowledged rights and positions, but in the Glandelinian army the child slave is worse off has been worse of in many conditions may all conditions than any other negro slave has been. But the law isthe same inother cases, for the laws of Glandelinia regards the poor child slave in every respect as devoid of any rights whatever, and is as good as a bale of merchandize or otherwise as thrash and good for nothing else but toil and suffering so its master can live a life of ease and pleasure/ In all cases even the possible acknowledgement of any of the longings and wants of a slave can not be allowed to the little one even if it has a kind and irresponsible master, and then when that master is stricken down nothig remains.

There canbe and is many Glandelinian good men and righteous ones too no matter how wicked the counrtrys cause may be, but the number of those men who are good to their slaves is very small, and the greater number found is in general I mer Heidi Myletze alone. Every one of the other Glandelinian generals and their armies know this, and the slave knows this most of all, so that he feels that there are ten chances out of eleven of his finding a wicked abusive and tyrannical master and owner to one of his finding a considerate and kind one/ .Therefore it can be the wail over the loss of any kind master or the loss of one in an another way can be long.

When general Black Brooks was so sev rely wounded the Nationals had also attackedcert in portions of the Glandelinancamps with such wild fury as to c scattere the many divisions right and left and set afire many thousands of tents, and terror and consternation took hold of all the soldiers within the reign of terror including among the child slaves. so fierce was the resistance elsewhere however that the loss of both sides was dreadful and seventeen Glandelinian generals and many other officers had been stricken down in a moment and fourty big fires were raging, and one big ammunition depot was blown up with a terrific roar heard for many miles. This occured at the time general Black Brooks was severely wounded and who had been stricken down at the moment, in the flow r and strength of his youth, so that though he was not fatally wounded he was so badly injured that he would be laid up for many days to come and his army was without a reliable commander.

Amid the crash of battle, the yelling of the attackers, every section of the camp resoundedwith subs, and shrieks of despair.

Jannie whose nervious system had been enervated by a constant experience in her p past life with some other battles, especially Delight's junction ad had nothing t p to support the terror of th s shock, and at the time the whole camp was in emuproar of explosions, fiercely fighting men by hundreds of thousands and an infero of flames and explosions raging everywhere, she hadfled in fright and horror she knew not where, and all the other slaves, had fled in all direct directions so that she was widly seperated from them all, and Jane to whom she had been joined f into such friendship had beenmitten downby a stray bullet right before her eyes, al without the possibility of even a parting word.

General Cannonia with his usual charac characteristic strength and self control, had remained at the very front of his own line of troops totho last, all eye, all ear, all attention, doing everything of the little that could be done, and driving back one des perate Abbisanian assault after another, and then when black Brooks fell by his side severely wounded while scouting too near the battle brought him to general Myletzes headquarters and joined Jann ie who fled to Myletze with his whole soul in the tender and impassioned prayers which the poor little slave girl poured forth for the saving of the generals life. While the officers and soldiers were arranging five other generals for his last rest a even amid the roar of the battle in the distance and by the light of the flames, they found upon the bosom of one of them, a small plain m iminature case, opening with a s ort of spring. It was the minature f of a noble little female face, and onnthe reverse underа crystal a lock of blond

They s sorrowfully laid them back on the generals lifeless breast,---dust to dust----poor mournful relics of early dreams, which onve made that cold heart beat so warmly, warmly.Jannie's poor little soul was alwau always filled with thoughts of a far away eternity, and while she watched in sorrow and terror the burial of the dead general and other officers, about eighty of them in all, and the hasty burial of hundreds of thousands of dead soldiers both gray and purple, she did not once think that the sudden stroke had been reversed and that Myletze had come to the support of his ruined camp and drove back the assailants with dreadful losses and captured whole multidues of multitudes of prisoners and six generals, and many other officers and a whole christian camp, and whole parks of artillery.Nevertheless she felt at peace with everything and every one even though she could not forget her terror of that fearful night, and she hoped for pgeneral Brooks for whom she had poured forth her prayer into thebosom of her Father in Heaven, and therefore she had found an answer of quietness and assurance springing up within herself. In the depths of her own affectionate nature, she felt able to perceive something of the fullness of Devine love. for an oracle had written tyus, thus" He that dwelleth in love, dwelleth in god, and god in him." jannie hoped, and trusted and was at peace even though she felt the effects of the exciting night. It was only one of the frequent s r sorties upon Myletzes army, but as of unusual strength but one of musual strength had come that night.

But the funeral for the dead generalspassed, with all its military honors and prayers, an and solumne faces, even when back rolledvthe purple waves of attack before the advancing supports sent by Myletze, and after the conflict up came the everlasting har hard inquiry of" what is to be done next. Where is the next goal.? This last engagement known as the Battle of Pellen Tellin had been severe with some unusual loss to Myletzes army and therefore the question of what was to be done, rose to the mind of general Myletze, as dressed in his musual uniform, and surrounded by his anxious and wearied generals, he sat on his great horse, and inspected his lines of troopscall drawn up in military array to persue as fast as possible the armies of Jimmie and Germaine Vivian who had so fiercely attacked him that night at Pellen Tellen creek and who suffered a loss as was reported of 10,000,000 in dead and wounded only to Myletzes loss of 456,789. in killed and wounded.

The answer to the question also rose to Cannonia who began to turn his thoughts to other sections of armies, and sending Myletzes dispatch to Beppo Evans ordering that general to persue hard and give these Vivian Princes no rest. It also rose in silent terrore to all the child slaves thousands of them, who f well knew the results this battle might bring. All knew very well that the indulgences that had been accorded to them were not always from Myletze or Cannonia, but from the soldiers and under officers, and th- that now Myletze w being enraged over the sudden attack by the Nationals which purposely was made to seize all the slaves and run off with them, there seemed to be no screen from them or between them, and the anger of Myletze should he devise any thing when scured by affliction caused by the disaster, and the fall of his best general Black Brooks and scores of others, and the loss of more tents and ammunition than he captured.

It was about a few nights after the battle of Pellen Tell when the army was advancing fast that general Cannonia busied one day in giving final orders to all his generals as to how the advance of the army wasto be accomplished, heard a gentle tap at the door. He opened it and there stood jannie, the pretty young black haired slave, her hair in disorder, and her eyes swelled with crying.

" Oh general Cannonia" she said falling on her knees, and catching his sleeve" pl do go to general Myletze fr v for me. p pleadd for me. General Manley has sent a number of agent over her to take me away from here---look there I found this in a wounded christian soldiers hand." and she handed the general a paper. It wa was an an r order, written in general Manleys own hand to some strict shrewd agents, to keep a look out for a child known as Jannie Lillian, giving a good desp description of her, and her slave mark and brand so so forth.

" pow did he come to be in possession of this?" said the general with a sort of scowl.

"He spied on Manley a few weeks before joining the army that attacked that night. I was dressing his wounds, and he slapped my face in a freidly way with it and handed it to me telling me how he obtained it and what it contained, and said I would be wise to run away before they got me. I'd rather be killed outright than be taken. and Myletze said I could be free too."

General Cannonia stood considering with the paper in his hand scowling to himself.

" you see general" said jannie, I don't mind being always in Myletzes army, but to be taken back to Manley, and he has such a horrid army---the shame of it general.Oh please plead for me."

General Cannonia well knew that it was the universal custom of general Manley to send sneaking agents into other Glandelinian armies when he saw fit, to capture and bring to his own camp if possible child slaves he claims belongs to him---an army of soldiers vile enough to make it their profession to make life as miserable as a lost soul for littl little child slaves. General Cannonia had known it before, but before he had never realize realized it, till he saw the slender little form of jannie almost convulsed with distress, and had read the note. All the honest blood of man hood, the strong g andelinian blood of liberty liberty flushed to his cheeks, and trobbed bitterly in his indignant heart, but I with unu u unusual prudence and selfe control self control, he mastered himself, and crushing the paper firmly in his hands he merely said to Jannie|

" Sit down child while I go to general Mylstze."

" It is surely shameful, outrageous, monsterous" he said to himself, as he entered the headquarters of his cousin. He found the general absent and being informed where he was rode thiter and found the general seated on his horse, with officers at his back, giving some written orders, and watching the advance of his big army.

"" I came your Excellency" said Cannonia to speak with you about poor Jannie."

" The general looked troubled, and a flush rose to his cheeks, as he answered rather sharply."

" Well what about her? Something happen to her now?"

" Manley is after her with his agents. This is the paper whid which she gave me!"

" Mylstze looked at the slip and then laughed.

" Is that all" He said with his usual grin. Well let them come. They'll be sorry they came within the lines before I'll be done with her. I've endured Manleys impudence long enough, and if he interfere with my own business and work, I'll bring the dirty dog down, I'll make him lie in the dust sooner than I would a patienal general." and he scowled fiercely when he said these last werds."

" But could you not save her from them some way--some way that would be less shame rul."

" I mean to send her off to night with a prisoner I'll release for the purpose, and I'll shame Manley--that is just what I want to do. Jannie has all her life been a slave and she deserves her freedom, and because Manley thinks he still owns her he begings to forget who is is, but if he interferes with me I'll give him one lession that will bring hi him down, I fancy. I'll turn off moving against the christians and move against him!"

" But cousin consider that if you war against Manley you war against the country whose rights you are defending."

" Well then let Manley keep out of my affairs" said Mylstze with a scornful laugh " He is worse than the soldiers he calls a devil. I'll have to show him with all his airs that he is no better than the raggedest child slave wench that walks the company streets. He'll take no more airs with me?."

" But you might answer to the government if you do so" said Cannonia with energy.

" Answer to the government for thrashing that dog. I'd like to know where an offense comes in for that. But then let him mind his own business and leave my slaves alone. I'd also like to know what rig right he has to interfere with any motive of mine. I wrote recently to the glandelinian government, and they answered me that as long as the slaves are my property I can do with them what I like. I'm sure there is no offense there to exchange them for prisoers or free them if I like."

" Well you are right in one way, but wrong in another" said Cannonia. " I'm sure its mutny t mutiny to lead your army against Mylstze."

" It might seem insurrection to anybody with your feeling, but all these little creatures are under my protection, its the only way they can be kept in order. Once let any of Manleys glandelinian generals feel that they are to take any airs concerning my rights and all that, and they ll all run over you, just as Manley always has been trying. If they had commissions higher than I have I could not say a thing, but my commis ion is ower them and therefore they are the ones who show me open rebellion not II've begun now to bring them under, and I'll have him and all his confounded generals know That'll I&ll hold my own as much as they hold theirs, and if they don't mind themselves and keep out of my affairs they'll find some other armies warring against them besides the christians" said Mylst ze looksingaround him most decidedly."

General Cannonia remained for a moment as if he had swallowed some explosive mixture and was ready to burst while Mylstze his face looking blacker than usual ever seen before said to his officers in an ugly kind of voice;

" Give orders throughout tye camp to arrest all strangers whether they wear gray or any colod, and HOLD them and your lives if they get away."

" But if they are Manleys--"

" Hang Manley and his followrs" houted Mylstze in fierce stentorian tones" I say every stranger entering the camp shall be under arrest. AWAY TO THE ORDER GET."

General Cannonia though he did not recieve the order himself decided to carry out a sim similiar a plan and reaching his headquarters and not at first paying attention to Jannie, gave the order to his officer to do like wise what Mylstze said. He then told Jannie, that Mylstx Mylstze was to make it hard for any one to enter the lines that she would be safe, but that she must go back peacefully to her tent and that he would have it strongly guarded. A few days after the army being once more on the move Jannie was sitting in her wagon, when she was joined by Nell, both since the death of poor Jane, had been entirely orest fallen and discolsa disconsolate. But Nell knew that general Manley had for some reason or other been an object of dislike and hatred to general Mylstze, and therefore told Jannie that no one could get her, and that she need not be afraid. But since the warning Jannie had moved about in daily dread and trembling , not knowing what might befall her next. During the advance of the army general Mylstze had held several consultations with his generals, after communication with general Beppo Evans, and it was therefore determined to make a steady advance against general Jimmie Vivian and his brother. and as the army had recently seized lots of slaves who fled from the plantations at the approach of his army, it was decided to return them to their masters or hold them according to Mylstzes army orders.

" Do you know, Jannie that we are all watched like prisoners now?" said Nell.

"How did you hear that?" said Jannie.

" I hid myself in general Mylstzes t n tent when the general was talking to his officer and generals generals. In a few hours you will be sent off withe few prisoners to be free Jannie, and a strong escort."

" The Lords will be done" said Jannie.

" If you ever get to the christian lines never forget general Mylstze." said Nell" for you'll never have such another kind master even if you are ever retaken."

" But it is dangerous even for me to go I fear" said Jannie" I'd rather remain here then be captured and sold to general Manley for his glandelinians won't respect my papers of freedom one bit."

" Poor Nell turned away, for her little heart was full. The hope of liberty, the thought of distant mother and father, and little brothers and sisters, rose up before her little patient soul as to the mariner shipwrecked almost in port rises the vision of the church spire and loving roofs of his native village, seen over the top of some black wave only for one last farewell. She drewther arms tightly over her bosom and chocke chocked back the bitter tears and tried to pray. The poor little girl had a singular unaccountable prejudice in favor of liberty, and so it was a hard sorrow for her not to go with Nell and the more she said " Thy Will be done" the worse she e felt.

She sought out general Cannonia, who ever since Daisy's departure had treated her with marked and respectful kindness.

" Your Excellency, she said" I heard general Mylstze promished me my freedom. He told me that she had already taken it out for me, and now perhaps if you sir would be good enoufh enough to speak about it to general Mylstze he would feel like going on with it, as it was Jannie's wish that I go with her, and poor Jane you know is dead."

" I'll speak for you Nell, and do my best" said general Cannonia" but I do not think it is necessary."

This incident occured only t three days after the battle just passed. Seriously reflecting with within himself he considered that pa perhaps Jannie was to have Nell in company but that Nell forgot it and he resolved that he would now endeavor to moderate his own zeal and to see if she was to be free or not.

So the good general gathered himself up, and ttaking his plans resolved to go into general Mylstzes room, be as aggree aggreable as possible, and negotitate Nells case with all the skillof which he was master. He found general Mylstze busy at his table looking over all kinds of maps and plans, while his orderly who had been out with him was displaying before him certain letters and papers a Glndelinian spy had just brought into the camp//.....

" Your spies's have wonderful tarlent" said general Mylstze to his orderly as he looked over everything on the table." Only I'm sure or not sure about it being of any value that will enable me to capture that Vivian Prince."

" Yes your Excellency" said the orderly volubly" The spy just done what he could h and had a terrible time getting away with it too."

" What do you think?" said general Mylstze to Cannonia."

" It's a matter of bravery I suppose." said general Cannonia." But you sure can judge about it better than I."

" The fact is" said general Mylstze" That I hardly have a single successful spy in my army, and as I'm going to make a direct advance upon the whole army under those to two Vivians', and after vanquishing them go off direct tward Angelinia Agathia, I must decide upon something."

" Are you going to make so violent an advance so soon?"

" Yes. General Beppo Evans had written, and he and his generals think that a christian chieftian known as Vivianana something is coming with a monsterous army to oppose oppose me, and therefore the advance must be made with more speed and spirit.I'll let no national army stop me no matter that size."

" Well there is one thing that I want to speak to you about" said general Cannonia. " Jannie once told me you promished little Nell her liberty, and that you began the legal forms necessary to it. I hope you will use your influence to have it affected."

" That little sheup is afraid of her own shadow." said Mylstze. " I told that kid to go with Jannie and why they remain is a wonder to me."

" They are afraid Manley will come and take them."

" Indeed they shall do no such thing within my knowledge" said Mylstze sharply." Jannie is one of the best of little girls ha e have ever seen--and therefore as long as she is not within one third of a mile within a christian army she still belongs to me and therefore to take her up and destroy her papers is stealing a slave from me and he ll suffer for it I'll be bound. Besides wha what does he want to interfere for? Manley and all his generals can go to hell."

" But your excellency you don't know those scoundrels, and he and others would have secret agents even in purple uniforms out looking for every child they can pick up."

" I dare say I know they do such things" said Mylstze" They all want to steal slaves from each others armies, regardless to whom the slave belongs because the generals are a discontented set----always wanting what they think they have a right to. Now I'm surely strongly prinpipaled against any one of the other Glandelinian generals interfering with me concerning my slaves in any case, and if Manley wants a war itself with me let him start stealing my slaves. I keep a slave under the care of a kind master and the slave does well enough, and is respectable and will love even the very Glandelinians, but sent then to Manley, and they die in his army, from overwork, cruel treatment, and so on. I've seen it tried a hundred thousand times. I'll see that Jannie and Nell goeso to night and under a strong escort too. And they'll be given orders in case of assaulted by other glandelinians to take the slaves to give no quarter."

" But you know general Johnston Jacken Manley, id is so steady in his attempts, no dangerous when aroused, and that nothing can fool him he is so shrewd."

" Oh you need not tell me. I've seen a hundred like him, and no matter how he is he'll do very well as long as he minds his own business, and leave my army alone---that's all. I don't deny that he can easily have all slaves taken from my army, but if I find any missing mysteriously from my camp and I discover that he has a hand in it, I'll tend to him."

" But then considere said general Cannonia" That Manley would report you to the government."

" Oh that's all humbug" said Mylette." The government knows him as much as I do and I have the full advantage because they would pay no more attention to him than a complainin child slave. And with his army it is no time out of a thousand that a child slave gets a good master, most masters are demons, for all the talk that is made. I've been in Junction with Mylette Manleys army , way before I worsted general Kindernins at Delights Junction and never yet was acquainted with a master, that did not treat his slaves like as if they were rats and mice---quite as well as worth while to mention the treatement of the lost souls in hell. I've read of uncle Tom's cabin and Simon Legree is a saint compared to the mildest of these mean masters. Therefore the slaves in my army are mine, and to take them from my camp to bring over there I'll hold as rank stealing, and that he and his whole army is a force of bandits."

" Well " said Cannonia energetically" I know you mean well and therefore it is done. How big an escort are you going to send with them. ?"

" About 10,000 men. I know Manley and his generals go against me the way I do to my al slaves. The worse of them are ever so inconsiderate. but I have seen all the troubles these slaves had undergone. It is so hard that when I had only one little daughter, she should have been taken, but then think of these slaves who are first stolen from their parents, and then supos seperated from be brother and sister. And those Generals yonder in the west have so little feeling for them. But I,ll hold my own."

Cannonia feared at once, and knew it would do no good to say anything more, for genera general Mylettes had an infinite cap capacity for these kinds of fits when ever a subject about the Manleys was brought up to him, and general Cannonia did the bes best n next best thing he could---he wrote a letter to general Beppo Evans, stating the facts, and urging him to watch out for Manleys agents, so to keep them away from Mylettes army for heavens sake" or Manley will be " Fighting a battle with Mylette"

But there happened something the very same time that Mylette and Cannonia was having this conversation. Deldon (he did not however come from Manley) had been inside of Mylettes army for several days, and spotting Jannie within his grasp he quickly made off with her in the dark of night, placing her inside of a wagon and going far awa, untill some distance from Mylettes army she was placed with many others in a large prison where slaves were kept for auction.

A big slave prison in a small town not now inhabated with christian soldiers. Many readers may conjure up horrible visions of such a place as this. They can say it is, some foul obscure den some horrible Tartarus" informis, ingenscui, lumen, ademptum"

It surely was, even though the wickedest of "landelinians do use the slaves to be sold high. But as bad as the place might be, the slaves are well fed however, well cleaned, tended and looked after, that each one may come to sale, sleep and strong, and strong and shining. A slave prison house in this little town was kept with neatness however, and where every day any ne entering may see arranged, under a long ine of sheds, rows of little bobbed haired girls and boys, of all ages of sellable size, who stand ther there under guard as a sign of the property sold within. Then if the reader would have bee been a slave buyer or trader, he shall be courteously entreated to call and examine, and shall find an abundance of brothers and sisters, to be sold seperately, or in lots to suit the conviences of the purchaser, and that soul immortal, once bought with blood and anguish by the son of God, when the earth sho shook,, and the rocks rent, and the graves were opened, can be sold, leased, exchanged,, ,ortgaged, or exchanged for g- groceries, or drybgoods,, to suit the conditions of the wicked trade, or the fa fancy of the purchaser. It was a day or two after the conversation between Mylette and general Cannonia that jannie, and many others, were turned over tothe keeping of the owner and warddn wardens of the prison, to await the auction the next day. Mylette missing Jannie and also Nell did not think any one had stolen them as no otherslaves were missing and therefore thinking she had went off as expected since she had her papers thought she was heading toward the christian lines and therefore did not make any thing of it.

Jannie had not been allowed allowed to take anything with her, and she was ushered in for the night into a long room with all the rest, where many other little boys and girls of all ages sizes Nationalities, and shades of complexion were assembled, and from whom crying screaming and complaints and so on were proceeding.

" It won't do you any good to carry on that way" said the chief warden of the prison. " All you slaves are always crying over these little things. James , see" he said speaking approvingly to a burly Negro who was perfo performing tricks of low buffoonery which occasioned the shouts from other ow overseers which was heard. As might be imagined none of the child slaves felt anything else but lonsliness and horror, and Jannie who felt too terrified and sorrowful to cry, sat down in a dark corner, and hid her face against the wall. The Glandelinian dealers in the human article mk a make scrupulous and systematic efforts if posible to promote noisy merrith among them as a means of drowning reflection, and rendering them insensible to their condition, but usually do not make any success. And the whole object of the training to which the child slaves are put, from the time they are sold to any market till they arive to a Glandelinian army of any kind, are systematically directed toward making them callous unthinking, and brutal. The slave dealers collects their gangs, at any point they can find; and drives them to any convinent healthy place--often a watering place--to be taken care of and fattened. Here they are fed daily, and because of some inclihe to pine, some music is kept among them and theyare made to dance as merily, and he who refuses to m be merry--in whose soul thought of parents, or brothers and sisters are too strong for him or her--is marked as sullen ,dangerous and rebellious, and subjected to all the evils wic which the ll will of an utterly irresponsible and hardened and hardened man can inflict pon him. Briskness, alertness, and cheerfulness of appearance especially before observers are constantly enforced upon them both by the hope of getting a good mat master, and fear of all that the driver may bring upon them if they prove unsalable.

" what is that little black haired brat doing over there against the wall" said the Warden Negro coming p to jannie, after the man warden had left the room. This man was a full black, of great size, verly lively volubile and full of trick and grmi grimance but dangerous when his temper was aroused as well.

" hat are you doing here against the wall" said the negro coming p to jannie and forcing her to stand upon her feet." Crying because you got tocked away eh?"

" I was stolen away from general Mylette" said jannie sobbing.

" Stolen away from general Mylette---haw haw boys and girls ain,t this yyer fun? "I wished ofend you kead, and that I wasgwine that ar way with you. Tell youcouldn't I make em laugh. but how is it---dis yer whole lot gwine to morrow? who took yer kead?"

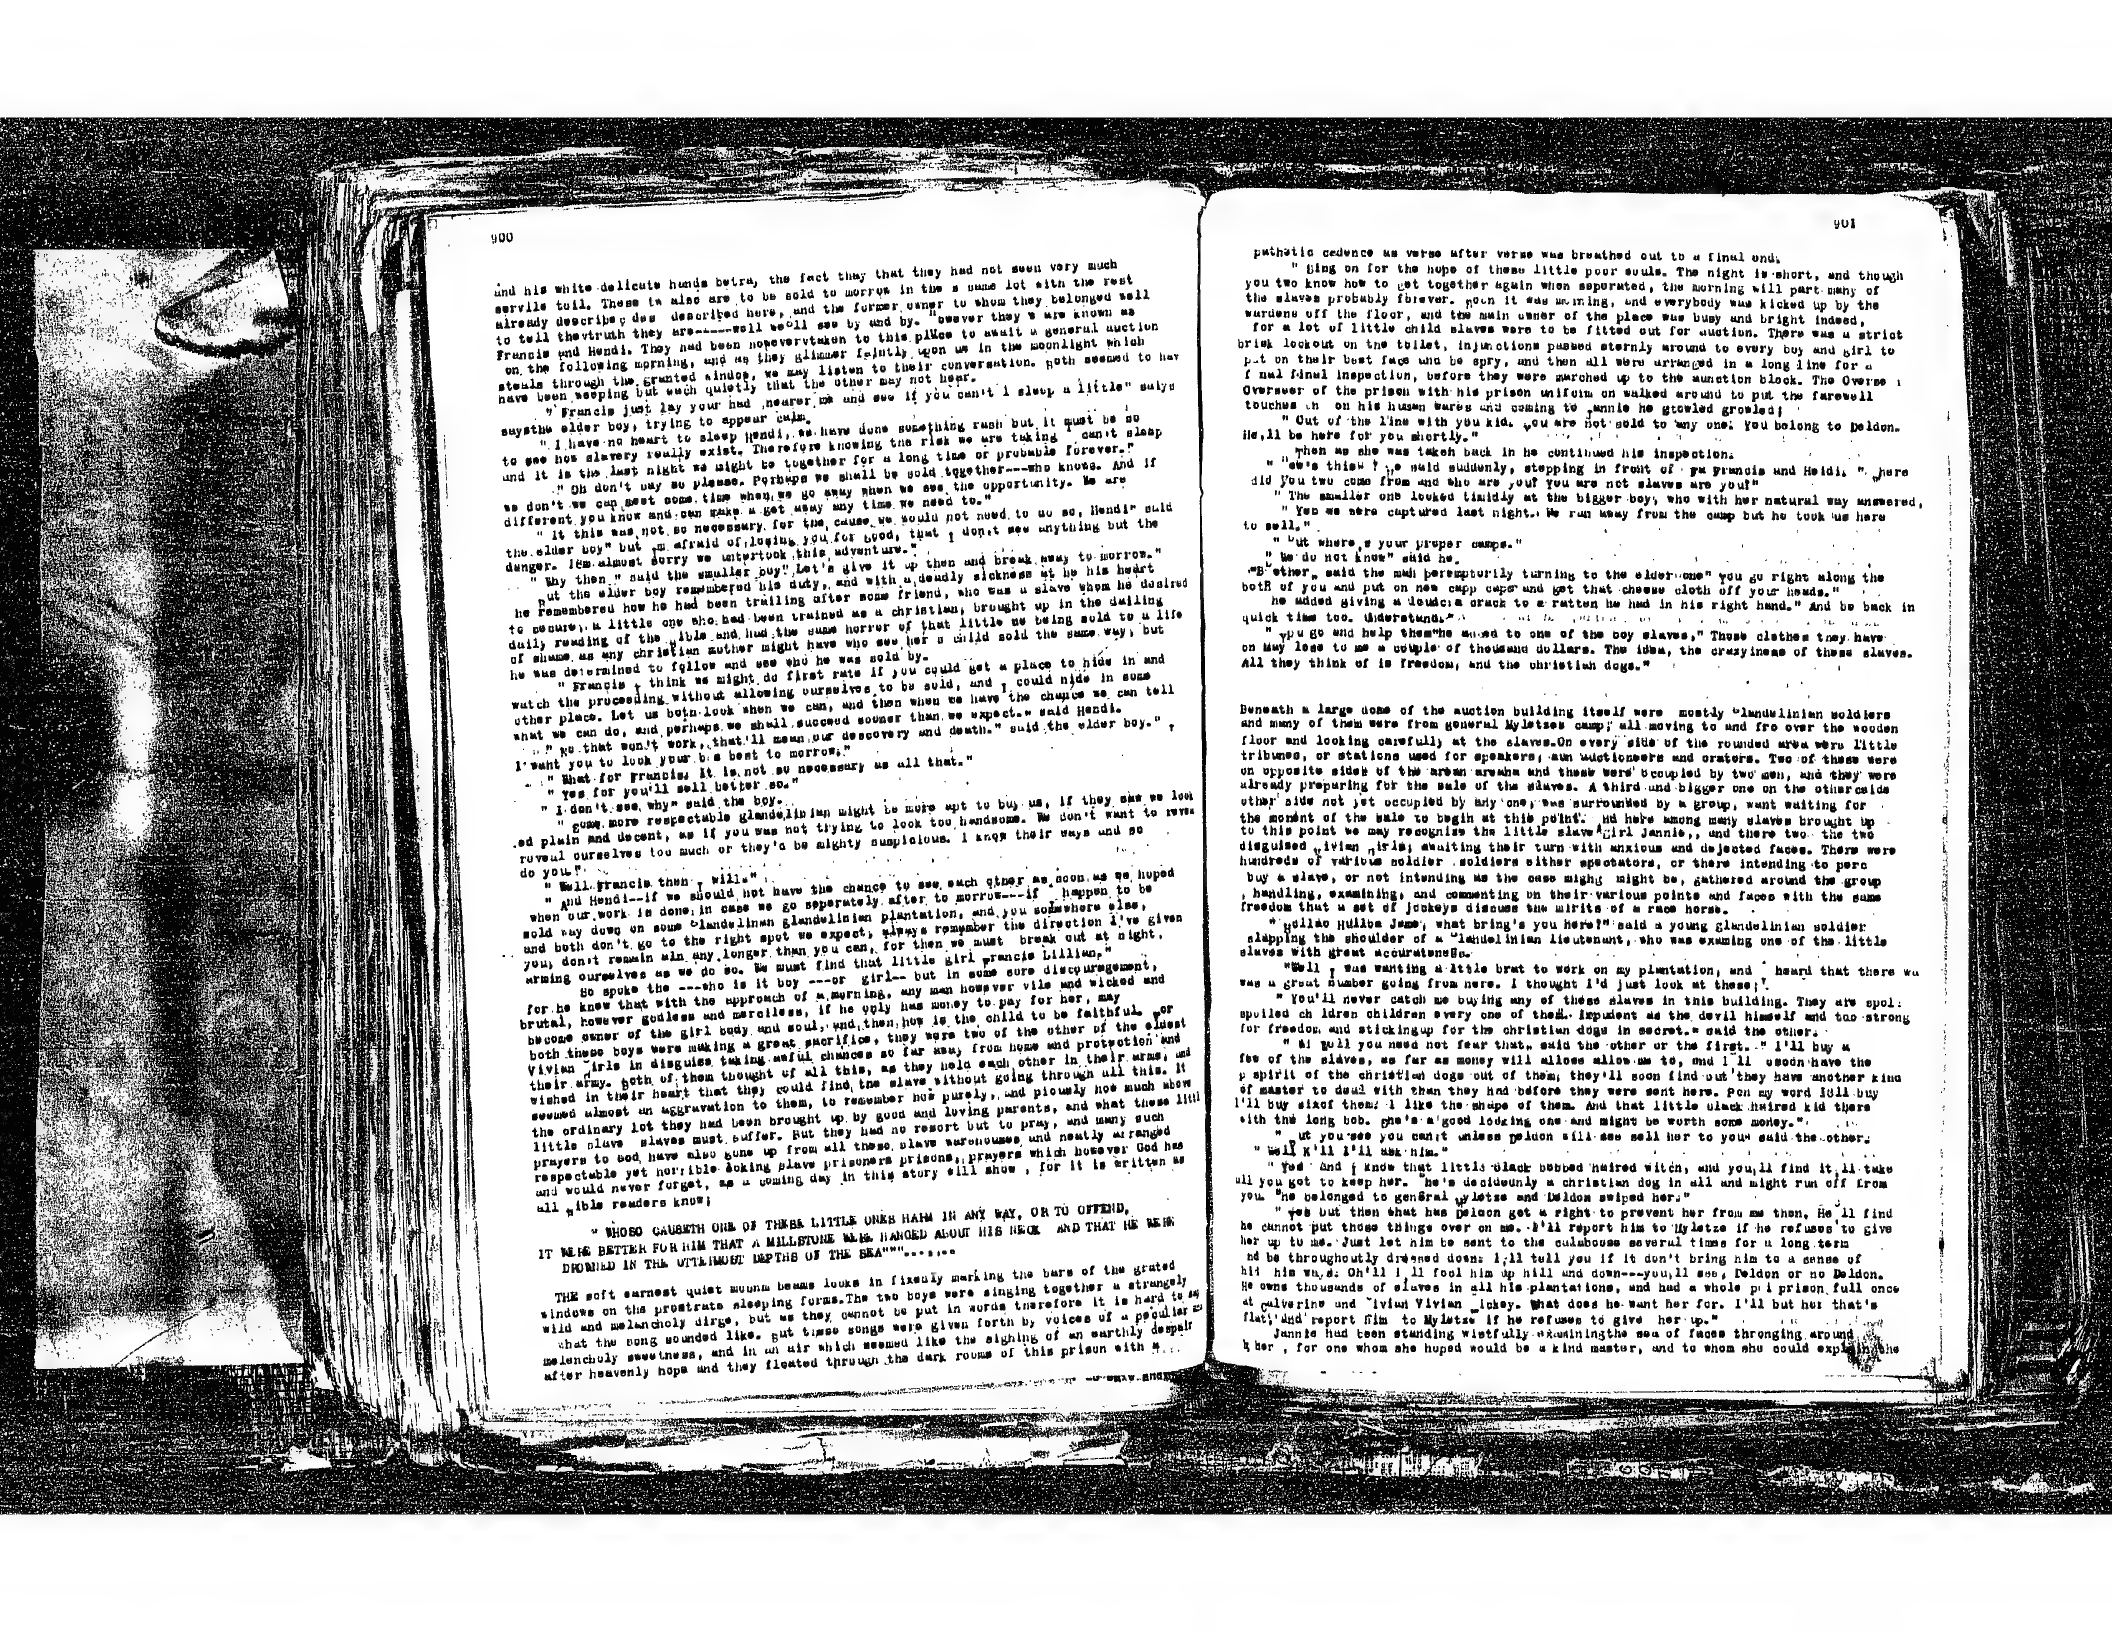
" Please let me alone you niggar" said jannie fiercely and trying to scratch him.

" Lad now boys and girls, dis yer's one of ye white little slave devils kind o' cream color, ye know scented" said he grabbing jannie roughly by the arm." Oh Lor' she'd do for a wild cat. Lor she'd keep a whole den of wild catmounts agwine---she would."

" I say leave me alone, can't you you black faced coon." screamed Jannie enraged. I'l I'll tear your eyes out."

" or now, how touchy she is, you little white catmount. Look at her now trying to bite me will ye." andthe ner negro warden gave aludicious imitation of a wild cat" Here is her airs and graces. Ye has been taken good care of I bet."

" Yes" said jannie" I have a master that'll get youhall for stealing me."



" Law no only think" said the warden" The little sprite that you is."

" I'm no me slass slave. I'm free. I belong to general Mylette" said Jannie proudly.

" Lor you did but not now. You belong to Deodin De lden. gpects they's gwine to trade ye off with a bt of others" or maybe Deldon will keep you."said the negro with a provoking grin."

Jannie enraged at this taught strove furiously to get free of him, and the uprear soon brought the main warden at the door.

" what now you slaves,---order or e order" he said coming in and flourishing a large whip. All the slaves fled in every direction, except Jannie, and seeing her defiance the warden turned upon her, and distributing a few kicks and cuffs without much inquiry, and then went leaving general orders for all to be " Good boys and girl girls" and go to sleep and them left the apartment. After this scene you can now take a peep atall the little slaves in generals. They were stretched in various attitudes over the floor all being numberless little sleeping forms of every nationality and light or dark complex ion, and of all childish ages, lying now as it seemed asleep. Here can be seen many fine bright little girls of ten and eleven or eight and so on of years, who were to be self and seperated from brother or sister to morrow, many of whom cried themselves to sleep when no one had been looking at them. Here some poor little boys, whose thin arms and callous fingers tell of hard toil, a waiting also to to be sold to morrow, as cast off articles, for what can be got for them, and some hundreds of others, all stretched around them. But in a corner lying apart from the rest, were two unsually looking boy slaves of a more interesting appearance than common. One of these is a respectably dressed Spanish looking boy between nine and ten y ars of age, with soft eyes and a sad but pleasing physiognomy. He had on his head a high raised j kind of cam cap made of cheese cloth of the first quality, and and his clothing is neatly fitted, and of good material, showing that he had been provided for with a careful hand at least it appeared to be. By his side and nestling close to him, was a yound younger boy, perhaps his brother. but he had a fairer complexion, though his likeness to his brother could not hardly be distinguished. ut he has the same soft dark eye, with lon er lashes, and his curling hair is of a luxuriant golde golden hue. He is also dressed with great neatness and his white delicate hands betra, the fact thay that they had not seen very much servile toil. These ta also are to be sold to morrow in the s same lot with the rest already describe, des described here, and the former owner to whom they belonged tell to tell thetruth they are------well we'll see by and by. "owever they w are known as Francis and Hendi. They had been nopevertaken to this pllce to await a general auction on the following morning, and as they glimmer faintly upon us in the moonlight which steals through the grated window, we may listen to their conversation. both seemed to hav have been weeping but each quietly that the other may not hear.

" Francis just lay your head nearer me and see if you can't sleep a little" saidye saysthe elder boy, trying to appear calm.

" I have no heart to sleep Hendi, as here done something rash but it must be so to see how slavery really exist. Therefore knowing the risk we are taking can't sleep and it is the last night we might be together for a long time or probable forever."

" Oh don't say so please. Perhaps we shall be sold together---who knows. And if we don't we can meet some time when we go away when we see the opportunity. We are different you know and can make a get away any time we need to."

" it this was not so necessary for the cause we would not need to do so, Hendi" said the elder boy" but am afraid of losing you for good, that i don,t see anything but the danger. I'm almost sorry we undertook this adventure."

" Why then " said the smaller boy" Let's give it up then and break away to morrow."

" put the elder boy remembered his duty, and with a deadly sickness at he his heart he remembered how he had been trailing after some friend, who was a slave whom he desired to secure, a little one who had been trained as a christian, brought up in the dailing daily reading of the bible and had the same horror of that little ne being sold to a life of shame, as any christian mother might have who see her a child sold the same way; but he was determined to follow and see who he was sold by.

" Francis , think we might do first rate if you could get a place to hide in and watch the proceeding without allowing ourselves to be sold, and i could hide in some other place. Let us both look when we can, and then when we have the chance we can tell what we can do, and perhaps we shall succeed sooner than we expect." said Hendi.

" " no that won't work, that'll mean our descovery and death." said the elder boy." I want you to look your b.s best to morrow."

" " What for Francis, it is not so necessary as all that."

" " yes for you'll sell better so."

" I don't see why" said the boy.

" some more respectable glandelinian might be more apt to buy us, if they saw we look ed plain and decent, as if you was not trying to look too handsome. We don't want to reve reveal ourselves too much or they'e be mighty suspicious. I know their ways and so do you."

" Well Francis then , will."

" and Hendi--if we should not have the chance to see each other as soon as we hoped when our work is done, in case we go seperately after to morrow---if happen to be sold way down on some Glandelinan glandelinian plantation, and you somewhere else, and both don't go to the right spot we expect, always remember the direction i've given you, don;t remain aln any longer than you can, for then we must break out at night, arming ourselves as we do so. We must find that little girl Francis Lillian."

So spoke the ---she is it boy ---or girl-- but in some sore discouragement, for he knew that with the approach of morning, any man however vile and wicked and brutal, however goulless and merciless, if he only has money to pay for her, may become owner of the girl body and soul, and then how is the child to be faithful or both these boys were making a great sacrifice, they were two of the other of the almost Vivian girls in disguise taking awful chances so far away from home and protection and their army. both of them thought of all this, as they held each other in their arms, and wished in their heart that they could find the slave without going through all this. It seemed almost an aggravation to them, to remember hus purely, and piously how much above the ordinary lot they had been brought up by good and loving parents, and what these litll little slave slaves must suffer. But they had no resort but to pray, and many such prayers to god have also gone up from all these slave warehouses and neatly arranged respectable yet horrible looking slave prisoners prisons, prayers which however God has and would never forget, as a coming day in this story will show , for it is written as all bible readers know;

" WHOSO CAUSETH ONE OF THESE LITTLE ONES HARM IN ANY WAY, OR TO OFFEND, IT WERE BETTER FOR HIM THAT A MILLSTONE WERE HANGED ABOUT HIS NECK AND THAT HE WERE DROWNED IN THE OTTERMOST DEPTHS OF THE SEA""...

THE soft earnest quiet moonn beams looks in fixedly marking the bars of the grated windows on the prostrate sleeping forms. The two boys were singing together a strangely wild and melancholy dirge, but as they cannot be put in words therefore it is hard to say what the song sounded like. but these songs were given forth by voices of a peculiar melancholy sweetness, and in an air which seemed like the sighing of an earthly despair after heavenly hope and they floated through the dark rooms of this prison with a pathetic cadence as verse after verse was breathed out to a final end.

" Sing on for the hope of these little poor souls. The night is short, and though you two know how to get together again when seperated, the morning will part many of the slaves probably forever. soon it was morning, and everybody was kicked up by the wardens off the floor, and the main owner of the place was busy and bright indeed, for a lot of little child slaves were to be fitted out for auction. There was a strict brisk lookout on the toilet, injunctions passed sternly around to every boy and girl to put on their best face and be spry, and then all were arranged in a long line for a final final inspection, before they were marched up to the auction block. The Overse Overseer of the prison with his prison uniform on walked around to put the farewell touches on on his human wares and coming to jannie he growled growled;

" Out of the line with you kid, you are not sold to any one; You belong to Deldon. He,ll be here for you shortly."

Then as she was taken back in he continued his inspection.

" "ee's this ? " he said suddenly, stepping in front of pa Francis and Heidi. " here did you two come from and who are you? you are not slaves are you?"

" The smaller one looked timidly at the bigger boy, who with her natural way answered,

" Yes we were captured last night. We run away from the camp but he took us here to sell."

" "ut where,s your proper camps."

" he do not know" said he.

"Bother, said the man peremptorily turning to the elder one" you go right along the both of you and put on new capp caps and get that cheese cloth off your heads."

he added giving a double crack to a ratten he had in his right hand." And be back in quick time too. Understand."

" you go and help them"he added to one of the boy slaves." Those clothes they have on may lose to me a couple of thousand dollars. The idea, the crazyiness of these slaves. All they think of is freedom, and the christian dogs."

Beneath a large dome of the auction building itself were mostly Glandelinian soldiers and many of them were from general Mylatzes camp; all moving to and fro over the wooden floor and looking carefully at the slaves. On every side of the rounded area were little tribunes, or stations used for speakers, an auctioneers and orators. Two of these were on opposite sides of the arean arena and these were occupied by two men, and they were already preparing for the sale of the slaves. A third and bigger one on the otherside other side not yet occupied by any one, was surrounded by a group, want waiting for the moment of the sale to begin at this point. Hd here among many slaves brought up to this point we may recognise the little slave girl Jannie,, and there two the two disguised vivian girls; awaiting their turn with anxious and dejected faces. There were hundreds of various soldier soldiers either spectators, or there intending to perc buy a slave, or not intending as the case might might be, gathered around the group handling, examining, and commenting on their various points and faces with the same freedom that a set of jockeys discuss the merits of a race horse.

" Hallo Hullbe Jems, what bring's you here?" said a young glandelinian soldier slapping the shoulder of a "landelinian lieutenant, who was examing one of the little slaves with great accurateness.

"Well I was wanting a little brat to work on my plantation, and heard that there wa was a great number going from here. I thought I'd just look at these;".

" You'll never catch me buying any of these slaves in this building. They are spoi spoiled ch ldren children every one of them. Impudent as the devil himself and too strong for freedom and stickingup for the christian dogs in secret." said the other.

" Al pull you need not fear that, said the other or the first." I'll buy a few of the slaves, as far as money will allows allow me to, and I'll useon have the p spirit of the christian dogs out of them, they'll soon find out they have another kind of master to deal with than they had before they were sent here. Pon my word Ill buy I'll buy sixof them; I like the shape of them. And that little black haired kid there with the long bob. she's a good looking one and might be worth some money."

" ut you see you can;t unless Deldon sill see sell her to you" said the other.

" Well K'll I'll ask him."

" Yes And I know that little black bobbed haired witch, and you,ll find it,ll take all you got to keep her. She's decidedly a christian dog in all and might run off from you. "he belonged to general Mylatze and Deldon swiped her."

" yes but then that has Deldon got a right to prevent her from me then, He'll find he cannot put those things over on me. I'll report him to Mylatze if he refuses to give her up to me. Just let him be sent to the culabouse several times for a long term nd be throughoutly dressed down; I,ll tell you if it don't bring him to a sense of hi his wn.s. Oh'll I,ll fool him up hill and down---you,ll see, Deldon or no Deldon. He owns thousands of slaves in all his plantations, and had a whole pri prison full once at Culverine and Vivian Vivian Vickey. What does he want her for. I'll but her that's flat! and report him to Mylatze if he refuses to give her up."

Jannie had been standing wistfully examining the sea of faces thronging around her, for one whom she hoped would be a kind master, and to whom she could explain the

the whole circumstances to. And if the reader should ever be under the necessary or necessity, of selecting out of thousands of uniformed men most of them from some other and dangerous Glandelinian army, one who was to become your absolute own owner and disposer, you would perhaps realize as poor little Jannie did, how few there were that you would feel at all comfortable in being sent over to.Poor little Jannie indeed saw an enormous number of Glandelinian soldiers, but they were all great burly gruff wicked men with nothing but a scowling expression on their faces, ---or little chirping dried lo king citizens, long favored lunk, hard men, and every variety of stumbed looking common place soldiers and officers, and goofy looking soldiers with glasses too big for their eyes, all these who would pick up a little slave child, as one picks up chips and rubbish, putting them into the fire or a basket with equal unconcern, according to their convenience, but he saw no one whom he she could recognize as a soldier belonging to gen eral general Myletze, and who could recognize her and denounce her kidnapper.

A little before the sale commenced, a tall broad muscular man in a uniform but not that of a soldier but a general, elbowed his way roughly and violently through the crowd as if they were not there, and coming up to the group began to look over them as a very particular lover would examine a ring he wished to buy for his sweetheart.

At the moment Jannie saw him approaching, she felt an immediate and revolting horror of him, that increased more and more as he came nearer. He was of gigantic strength and his large round head, large light gray eyes, with their large eye prunes, were rather not very comfortable to look at, and he had a face that as I believe mentioned some where before puts the reader well in mind of an ugly bulldog ready to devour a cat, and his large course looking mouth was distended with about a pint full of bread and meat which he was chewing like a dragon with an unusual hunger tearing at his vitals, and the sound of which could be heard some distance.

His hands were immensely large, hairy and sunburned, freckled, but very clean though garnished with unusually long nails, but in a clean condition also. This man proceeded to a very free personal examination of the lot. He seized some boys one at a tim time by the jaw, and pulled open their mouths to inspect their teeth, made them strip up their sleeve, to show their muscle turned them around, made them jump and spring, to show their paces.

" Where were you raised and to whom you belonged?" he added briefly to the last boy while investigation him.

" In northern Glandelinia Master" said the boy, looking about as if for deliverance.

" What have you done down there?"

" Worked in a factory a rubber mill." said the boy.

" Likely story" said the other" won't do none of you are worth your weight of gold" and to their joy he passed on. He paused a moment before Jannie, then spittingthe refuse of the food he still had in his mouth in her face told her sternly to " Get out of the line you belong to me and are not for sale" and then giving a contemptuous " Humph" he walked on in a manner as if he already owned the whole pla e place and every one who was there.Again he stopped before the two supposed beautiful boy slaves. He looked at the two very closely, scratched his head, again looked, hesitated and then stretched his neck almost putting his ugly mug into their faces . They knew him at once and would have said something but as he could not recognize them though he almost did they thought it best to keep still. He then put out his heavy dirty hand, and dr de the younger boy toward him, passed it over his neck and bust; felt her his arms looked at her teeth, and then pussed him violently back against her companion, whose patient face showed the suffering the elder had been going through, at every motion of the hedious man whom they knew as well as know my own father. The next little one who was examanied was frightened and began to cry.

" Stop that you Cramps" said the salesman"Do wimperinghere---the sale is going to begin.If you whip whimper you'll be lashed."

and accordingly the sale commenced. The man who wanted to buy Jannie was frustrated even by the salesman but others were knocked off to him at a good sum, and others went to soldiers and other bidders. Jannie then stood upon the block hoping to be bought to escape the hedious Peldon, and she gave a few anxious looks around, but all seemed mingled in a common inaistinct noise---the clatter of other salesman crying off his own sales, the quick fire of bids, and almost in a moment came the final thump of another hammer, and hoping more strongly to be sold Jannie looked pleadingly at the salesman but he pushed her from the block, saying " you belong to Delson already. Myletze sold you to him---and the tall bull dog seized her roughly by the arm, pushing her to one side and saying in a harsh voice" Stand there you sprite.If you go up there again I'll kill you."

Poor Jannie hardly realized anything, but still the bidding went on, the rattling clattering, now one place, and then another. Again and again at different places a slave is sold, down goes the hammer---Francis is sold. She goes down from the block, stops looks wistfully back--her sister stretches her hands toard her. She looks with agony in the face of the man who had bought her--a respectable middle aged Glandelinian soldier whom she recognizes as one belonging to Myletzes army, whom Jannie did not see.

" Oh master do please buy my little brother."

" I'll do what I can but I'm afraid the others will bid higher than I can" said the soldier, looking with painful interest, as the younger brother mounted the block, and seemed to look to look around him with a frightened and timid glance.

The blood flushes painfully in her otherw otherwise colorless cheek, as she realizes the exact sacrifice she is making, and the chances she is taking, her eye has a defiant fire, and her elder sister almost groaned to see that she looked more and more beautiful than she ever saw her before, and felt sure she and her sister were almost takin taking a rash chance in the whole thing, and felt like giving it up. but she was strong willed and therefore held firm, knowing if something went too far she could create a scene in a an moment as no one knew she was secretly armed. The auctioneer however observed his advantage, and started at once, and bids rose high in rapid succession.

" I,ll do anything that is within my power" said the benevolent looking soldier belonging to Myletze's army army, and he pressed in and joined in with the bids. After about a few minutes of bidding, the others ran far beyond his purse. He soon was silent the auctioneer grew warmer and shouted higher and higher, but though there were hundreds bidding, they gradually dropped off. It soon was a contest now between the aristocratic old man who had wanted to buy Jannie despite she being Deldons, and Deldon was now aga again his adversary. The citizen bids for many turns contemptuously mea measuring his foe, but soon it is evident Deldon far has the advantage over him, not only in purse but in stubbornesb as well, and the controversary lasted for fully fifteen minutes to the thrill of all who beheld it, the hammer falls,---Deldon got the little girl, but not what he thinks he is. so od hel help Him and not her.

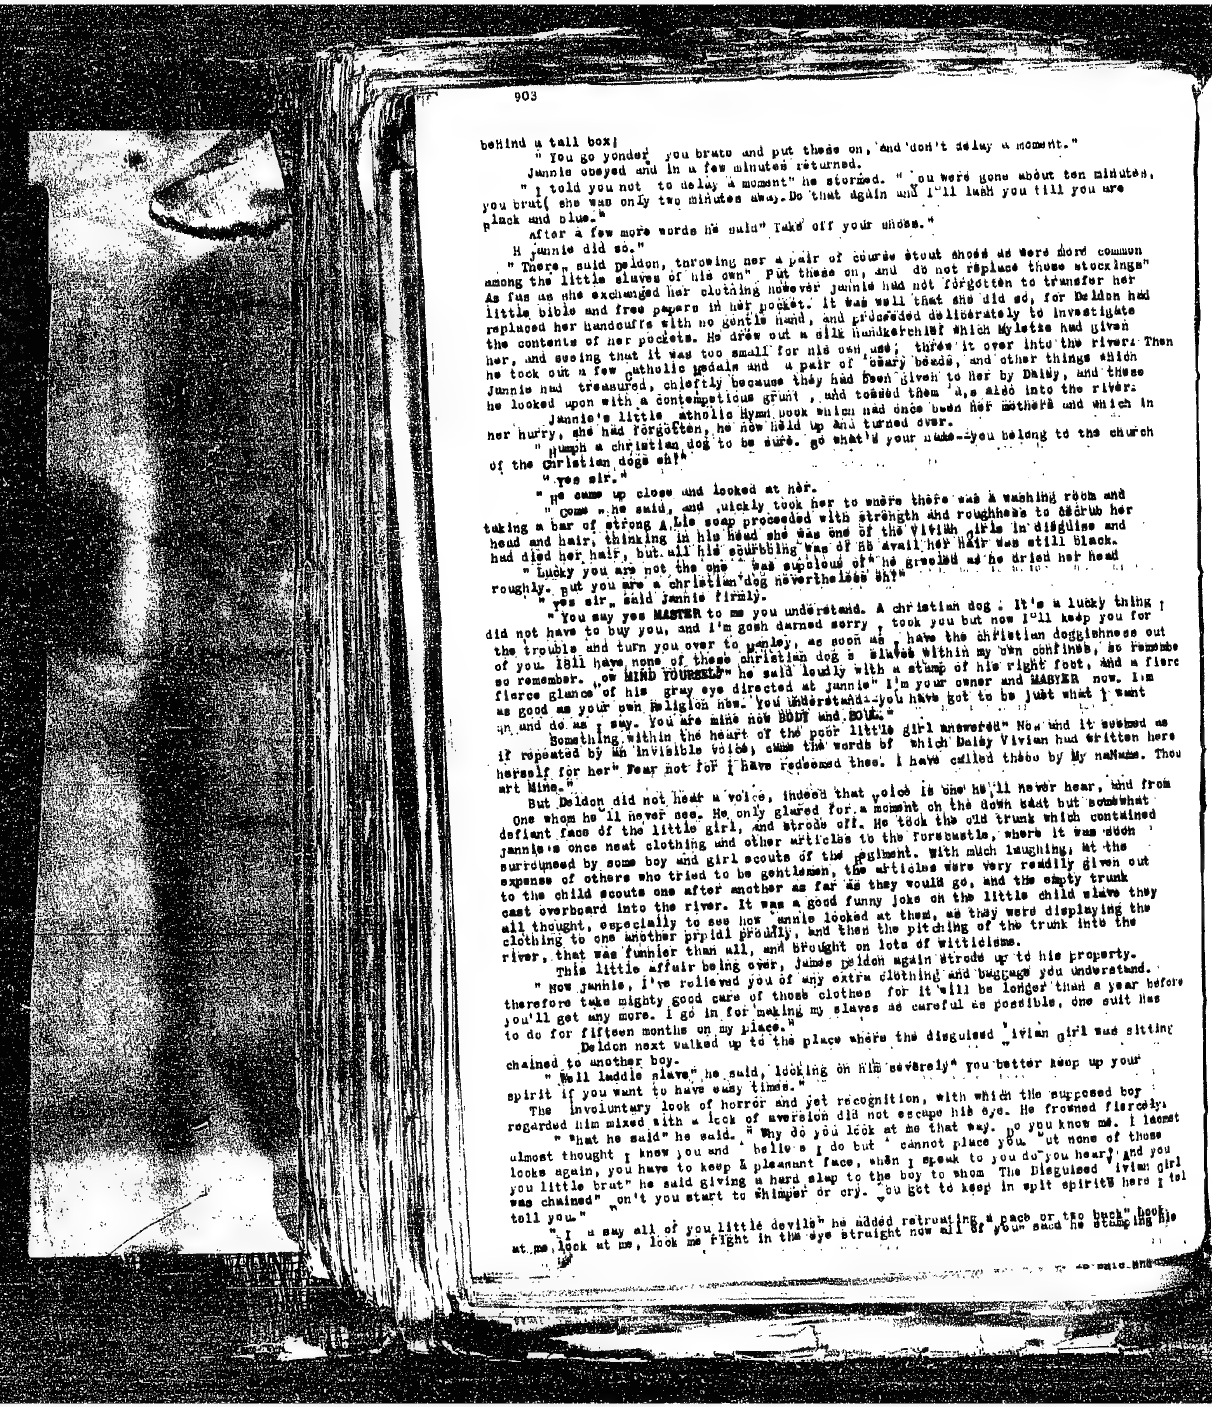
Realizing her would be master is Deldon her old time enemy at the Bell-Well-pell Well child slave prison at Vivian lokey, she decided to bid her own time for she knew she had to be careful. he p is pushed along in the same lot with poor Jannie; and others and though it was her own wilful sacrifice yet she could not help weeping as she went.

The good soldier of Myletzes army was sorry, and he took a good long look at what he felt sure was Jannie in Deldons possession; and he followed a certain distance and then was sure. He decided to get back to the army without delay and report the case to Myletz at once so as to have Deldon stopped before he got too far with her.

Many saw to day, brother brothers and sisters crying. And a sad scene it is but what will come of it. that ' the writer will sby in favor of " Child Slavery of this kind is these words of the great Paymaster to whom even these Glandelinians would have made up their account in a future day---" WHEN HE MAKETH INQUISITION FOR BLOOD, HE FORGETTETH NOT THE CRY OF THEM THE HUMBLE."

" Thou art of purer eyes than to behold evil and canst not look upon iniquity, wherefore lookest thou upon them that deal treacherously, and holdest thy tongue, when the wicked devoureth the man that is more righteous than he?"---Habb IS.

It is now the month of June 1913. If a person would wish to take the chances to go travel ing even during this useful way you would observe on the upper portion of a long boat loaded down with soldiers and slaves, little Jannie, small chains on her wrists; chains on her feet, and a weight more heavier than iron lay upon her little heart. all hope of freedom had faded from her,--sky moon, and star, all had passed by her for many days since leaving Myletzes army, as the trees and banks were now passing, to return no more. The free life in Myletzes army, with friendly little slaves, and good sensible Glandelinian soldiers, and indulgent owners, Myletzes headquarters, his friendly ways, the golden head of Lillian and Daisy, with their saint like eyes, the proud gay, handsome, seemingly careless, yet ever kind general Isaac Myletze, hours of ease and indulgent leisure all gone, and in place for her there of what still be the future.



It is indeed one of the bitterest appurtenances of slavery of the children, that of little sos, sympathetic, and assimilative after requiring in a re fine glandelinia itary army, the taste and feelings indeed that forms the atmosphere of such an army is not less liable to become the little son slave of the wicked and most brutal just as a chair or table or other furniture, which one decorated a beautiful home or mansion, come at last battered and and defaced to the bar room of some filthy tavern, or some low haunt of vulgar debauchery. The great difference however is that the table and chair cannot feel, but the little child slaves can, for even a legal enactment that they shall be taken reputed, adjudged in law, to be a chattel personal cannot blot out her little o soul with its own little world of memories, hopes love,s fears, and desires.

Deldon who had really stolen Jannie, had purchased slaves from one place after n another during his months trip down the Cedernine river toard P Phelantonburg to the number of eighteen, and driven them handcuffed in twos and threes, down to a Glandelinian sur transport called the Heidi turn Turn which lay at the levee at Glandorn waiting for a regiment of soldiers to join Hanleys army near Phea Phelantonu Phelantonburg ready for a trip up the Cedernine Creek or river. Having placed them fairly on board, and the boat being off, he came around with a proud air and an air of efficiency which ever was his way, to take a review of them all. Stopping opposite to Jannie, who had been stolen from Myletzes army in her best slave clothing, he briefly expressed himself as follows;

" Stand up kid."

" Jannie stood up for there was danger in refusing.

" Take off your clothes" and as Jannie encumbered by the fetters proceeded to do it, he assisted her, by pulling at her dress with no gentle hand. He then turned to a large trunk which he had brought p, and taking from it a pair of old coats and a old dress he said liberating the childs hands from the chains, and pointing to a recess behind a tall box]

" You go yonder you brute and put these on, and don't delay a moment."

Jannie obeyed and in a few minutes returned.

" I told you not to delay a moment" he stormed. " you were gone about ten minutes, you brut(she was only two minutes away. Do that again and I'll lash you till you are black and blue."

after a few more words he said" Take off your shoes."

H Jannie did so."

" There" said Deldon, throwing her a pair of coarse stout shoes as were dord common among the little slaves of his own" Put these on, and do not replace those stockings" As fas as she exchanged her clothing however jannie had not forgotten to transfer her little bible and free papers in her pocket. It was well that she did so, for Deldon had replaced her handcuffs with no gentle hand, and proceeded deliberately to investigate the contents of her pockets. He drew out a silk handkerchief which Mylette had given her, and seeing that it was too small for his own use, threw it over into the river. Then he took out a few catholic medals and a pair of rosary beads, and other things which Jannie had treasured, chiefly because they had been given to her by Daisy, and these he looked upon with a contemptious grunt , and tossed them in, s also into the river.

Jannie's little catholic Hymn book which had once been her mothers and which in her hurry, she had forgotten, he now held up and turned over.

" Humph a christian dog to be sure. go what'd your name--you belong to the church of the christian dogs eh?"

" yes sir."

" He came up close and looked at her.

" Come " he said, and quickly took her to where there was a washing room and taking a bar of strong A.lle soap proceeded with strenght and roughness to scrub her head and hair, thinking in his head she was one of the Vivian girls in disguise and had died her hair, but all his scurbbing was of no avail her hair was still black.

" Lucky you are not the one " was capolous of" he growled as he dried her head roughly. but you are a christian dog nevertheless eh?"

" yes sir, said Jannie firmly.

" You say yes MASTER to me you understand. A christian dog . It's a lucky thing I did not have to buy you, and I'm gosh darned sorry , took you but now I'll keep you for the trouble and turn you over to Manley, as soon as , have the christian doggishness out of you. Ill have none of these christian dog s slaves within my own confines, so remembe so remember. " BE MIND YOURSELF" he said loudly with a stamp of his right foot, and a fierc fierce glance of his gray eye directed at jannie" I'm your owner and MASTER now. I'm as good as your own Religion now. You understand--you have got to be just what I want un and do as I say. You are mine now BODY and SOUL."

Something within the heart of the poor little girl answered" No, and it seemed as if repeated by an invisible voice, came the words of which Daisy Vivian had written here herself for her" Fear not for I have redeemed thee. I have called thee by My name. Thou art Mine."

But Deldon did not hear a voice, indeed that voice is one he'll never hear, and from one whom he'll never see. He only glared for a moment on the down cast but somewhat defiant face of the little girl, and strode off. He took the old trunk which contained jannie's once neat clothing and other articles to the forecastle, where it was soon surrounded by some boy and girl scouts of the regiment. With much laughing, at the expense of others who tried to be gentlemen, the articles were very readily given out to the child scouts one after another as far as they would go, and the empty trunk cast overboard into the river. It was a good funny joke on the little child slave they all thought, especially to see how jannie looked at them, as they were displaying the clothing to one another prpidl proudly, and then the pitching of the trunk into the river, that was funnier than all, and brought on lots of wittiesms.

This little affair being over, James Deldon again strode up to his property.

" Now jannie, I've relieved you of any extra clothing and baggage you understand. therefore take mighty good care of those clothes for it will be longer than a year before you'll get any more. I go in for making my slaves as careful as possible, one suit has to do for fifteen months on my place."

Deldon next walked up to the place where the disguised vivian girl was sitting chained to another boy.

" Well laddie slave" he said, looking on him severely" you better keep up your spirit if you want to have easy times."

The involuntary look of horror and yet recognition, with which the supposed boy regarded him mixed with a look of aversion did not escape his eye. He frowned fiercely.

" what he said" he said. " Why do you look at me that way. do you know me. I almost almost thought I knew you and ' belle s I do but ' cannot place you. ut none of those looks again, you have to keep a pleasant face, when I speak to you do you hear, and you you little brut" he said giving a hard slap to the boy to whom The Disguised vivian girl was chained" on't you start to whimper or cry. you got to keep in spit spirit here I tel tell you."

" I say all of you little devils" he added retreating a pace or two back" look at me, look at me, look me right in the eye straight now all of you" said he stamping his foot at every pause. nd as if they were fascinated, every one were forced to look toard the gray blue eye of James Deldon.

" ow " said he drawing a long ugly looking revolver. " Do you see this gun. Look at its muzzle. Well this gun has shot down many a slave who refused to do my orders. I've never seen the little slave yet I could not bring down to death with one shot, when he tried to run run off., said he aiming at something on the opposite shore and hitting it on the mark apprently without aiming. I " I don't keep none of the so called fellows known as overseers, I am the overseer of all, and I tell you everything you do is closely watched. Every one of you devils have got to toe the mark, I tell you, straight, the moment I speak. That's the way to speak or keep in with me. Don't think I,ll no any whipping, beating and the like , no I tell you honestly , don't..I kill the first one who disobeys me. you won't find no soft spot in me nowhere. See now that you be careful and obey everything I say for I own you body and souls, and I do not show any mercy."

The children involuntarily drew in their breaths, and the whole gang sat with down-cast dejected eyes or faces. Meanwhile Deldon turned on his heel, and marched up to the stern of the boat to look at the scenery as the boat went on.

" That is the way I do with all the slaves who belong to me" he said to a soldier, who had stood by him during his speech." It is my system to bring as rough as possible, just let them know what to se expect and then they,ll be careful."

" Indeed" said the soldier, looking upon him curiously.

" Yes indeed." I,m not a gentleman child slave owner, with such ti things as lily fingers, to go and make it too easy for them as if they were my own kids. just take a look at this old revolver now, look at this old gun. I tell you sir, I have brought down any target with one shot, and I have come out good pr (practicing on everything I want to shoot at--fell of it. Ain't it a good one. No one ever escapes me alive."

The stranger looked at the gun in question and said;

" is a great gun indeed, and I suppose" he added" practice has made you a good shot at it."

" Why yes , may say so" said Deldon with a he hearty laugh. " And there is no soft spot in me either. I tell you no slave ever puts one, t anything over on me. no slave ever gets round me, neither with squalling or sou soft soap that's a fact."

" you have a fine lot of slaves there."

" They are all good ones good ones. There's that jannie, and she is said to be something uncommon. I did not need to pay anything for her for , took her away, as she formerly belonged to Manley and Manley said , could keep her as my own if only got her away from Mylette for him. The others , bought. I ratyer say they are somewhat delicate and sickly but , shall put them through for what they are worth, they may last a year or two. I don't go for saving child slaves and , put them to a cruel death for the least offense. Use up, buy more, that is my way, it makes you less trouble, and I,m quite sure it,ll bring me a rich bank roul roll in the end. " and Deldon spit into the water not caring upon whom it might land below.

" and how long do your little slaves generally last?" said the soldier.

" Well that is hard telling. It depends on their constitution, my treatement of them and upon whom I favor more. Stout little slaves may last six seven or eight years, thrashy ones get worked up to death in two or three months. I used to when , first starte started, have considerable trouble fussing about with them, and trying to make them hold out, getting a doctor for them when they are prostrated from overwork, or sick and the like, and giving them clothing and blankets and comfortable quarters and what not, but it was of no use, I lost money on them, got into trouble with the government over it, and it saxx was heaps of trouble. I ha had thousands of slaves in a big place which I owned in vivian Hickey now besieged by the christian dogs, but theybsere gone because of the seige. you see I just put them straight through on the hardest work I have sick or well, injured, or crippled. I have a few who are not even in their right mind because of their suffering. when one slave is dead or two, or when I kill one for punishment or trying to run away, I buy more to replace them, and I find it comes cheaper and easier in every way."

The soldier turned away and slowly seated himself beside a lieutenant adter saluting the latter who had been listening to the conversation with repressed uneasiness.

" I am from Manleys command, said the lieutenant " but , must say just the same that you must not take that man to be any specimen of human beings, said he.

" I should hope not sir" said the young soldier withspirit.

" He is a mean low brutal fellow, and he stole one child from Mylette" said the other.

" nd yet the laws of our country allows men of his character to hold any number of little human beings of other nations subject to his absolute will, without even a shadow of the slightest protection, and low as he is, there are many more like him, or even worse."

" Well" said the other" the number of good kind masters are one out of a thousand, but yet there are many considerate and humane men in Mylettes army."

" granted, said the lieutenant" but in my opinion it is our own commanders who are responsible for all the brutality and outrage wrought by these wretches, and if it was not that the christian armies are worsted so repeatedly the whole system of child slavery could not keep foothold for a single hour. If there were no planters and owners and traders except such as that one" said he pointing with his finger to Deldon who stood with his back to them" the whole horror would go to smash like a trainwreck. It is clandelinia that licenses and protects his brutality."

" you certainly have a very high opinion of our government" said to the young soldier with a smile" but I advise you not to talk so loud lieutenant-------as there are other soldiers and officers on board this ship who might resent your speech. you had better wait untill we get to a more refine spot where no one will overhear bawhile we buy, and there you may abuse every one to their hearts contents."

The the young lieutenant colored and smiled, and the two were soon busy at a game of cards. Meanwhile another conversation was going on on the upper part of the boat between. The disguised Vivian girl and another little girl slave with whom she thowas confined. As was natural they were exchanging with each other some particulars of their history.

"Who did you belong to?" said the disguised girl to Jannie ; herself

" I belonged to general Mylstze, perhaps you've been in his army?"

" no I have never seen it. Was he good to you?" said the Vivian girl.

" yes."

" Ah why did he sell you."?

" He did not sell me. Deldon stole me away from the camp and he gave me my freedom papers."

" Had you known he was in camp?"

" no. "He took me so quick one night I did not even have time to scream for help. Oh dear me." said Jannie covering her face with her hands. it I is a natural impulse in every little slave when they hear a tale of distress of think of something to say by way of consolation. The disguised Vivian girl who happened to be Violet, wanted to say, something, but what could she find words to say. As by a common consent they both avoided with fear and dread, all mention of the horrible man who was now their master, though of course the Vivian girl could escape if she desired to but she was bound to see the adventure through. And there is trust in religion even in the darkest hour. All Abbiennis people are catholics, and therefore so was Violet and her sisters. Jannie had been as written educated very good, taught by Mylstze and other good masters to read or write, though she of her own accord dilig t diligently took her the study of the bible, yet would it not try the faith of the best of christians, to find themselves abandoned, apparently of god, in the grasp of our ruthless violen e. May if poor Jannie only knew the future for to relieve the sensitive heart of the reader, Jannie was to see herself in the christian lines before another two months are up, though long enough to wait poor child. Yet how much more must it shake the faith of christs poor little slaves, weak in knowledgement and tender in years.

The big boat moved on, fric freighted with its weight of sorrow--up the turbid current of the Cedarnine river, through the ab rupt tortuous windings of the stream; and sad little eyes gazed wearily on the red clay banks topped above with a wall of trees as they glided by. In the dreary sameness. six times during the long trip of that month of May till the sixth of June the boat was repeatedly attacked by masked christian artillery on shore, and once pursued but got through safely, and once was detained when news came to the boat by wireless that the boat should wait a couple of days as a tremendous battle was raging between Phelantenburg and Darglas Lane.

Finally the boat stopped at Phelantenburg which was now in possession of the victorious Clandelinian army under Manley, and Deldon with his party, following the Regiment of soldiers disembarked.....!!!

Before they could come to Deldons property they had to go through the Clandelinian camp and as Deldon loaded his slaves into a covered wagon the soldiers warned him to look out for the christian armies, which though worsted in the battle would not move from the grounds near at Phelantenburg but were preparing for an investment. Therefore the slaves went onward. On the sea of the wagon was Deldon, and Jannie and Violet, still fettered together, while the others were stowed away with some baggage inside the wagon, while a party of cavalry men on horseback trained behind so as to watch that no slave attempted to run away. Deldons slave plantation lay a great way off. To avoid running into the christian camps which he learned was under the dreaded Vivian rulers he betook himself to a wild forsaken road, now winding through dreary pine barrn barrens, where the wind whispered mournfully, and now over log causeways, through long pine and Calverinian cypress swamps, the doleful trees rising out of the slym slimy spongy ground hanging with long wreaths of funeral black moss, while ever and anon they passed along side the road a deep and dangerous mud bog, or stretches of impassable quicksand and ever anon the loathesome form of some small serpent was seen sliding among broken stumps and shattered branches, that lay here and there rotting in the water. Once overhead the soldiers looked up suspiciously and saw a large slenglomeneun creature flying back and forth and fearing an attack warned Deldon who said; " do not arouse it and it won't touch you. It is excited by your gray uniforms."

It was however disconsolate enough, this kind of riding through a swamp to the soldiers, who with well relied weapons, and well appointed horse, followed the lonely way, but wilder and more dreary to the poor slaves enthralled, whom every weary movement of the wagon bore further and fo further from all that a child would love and pray for. No one of these soldiers thought, for they witnessed the sunken and dejected expression on the little faces, and the wistful patient weariness with which these and eyes rested on object after object that quickly passed them in their sad long journey. Dandi Deldon drove on however, apprently well pleased, occas ionally looking at his foot way, and keeping to the middle of the road so as to avoid driving horse and all into one of the treacherious black bottomless bogs that sometimes was nearly a mile wide and miles long. suddenly one of the slaves not thinking began a hymn one of the well known hymns of " Heaus Take me to Thee when Deldon roared;

" shut up you little devil. Do you think any one wants to hear any of your infernal hymns. ? I say no singing on this wagon. no music allos allowed on my plantation. I say you slaves" he added as he turned back and caught a glance at the dispirited faces behind him." Look pleasant please or I'll kill drake and he made a motion as to dedraw out his gun out his gun. The child slaves looked at each other, and the order was repeat ed with a smart crack of the whip, which the driver carried in his hands; but even then there was no smiles, and if there had been, no wail of despair, no word or impassioned prayer, could have had such a depth of woe in them as the very appearance of their little faces. As if the poor little innocent hearts, threatened, with a life of horror, imprisoned imprisoned, could have only taken refuge in any sanctuary of music music they could have found there a language in which to breathe their prayers to god. The There was prayer in their very faces however, which Deldon could not see or hear. He only tried to force them to keep up their spirit.

" Well my little black haired devil" said he turning to Jannie, and laying his hand on her shoulder" we are almost there."

" When Deldon raved scolded and stormed, Jannie was more than terrified, but when he laid his hand on her, and spoke as he now did, she s felt as if he was an adder trying to fascinate her before he struck. The expression of his wicked eyes made her sick at her very soul, and her flesh to creep. Involuntarily she clung closer to the di g disguised Vivian girl by her side, as if she were her protecting sister.

" you did not ever belong to me before did you" he said taking hold of her small round arm with his coarse ugly fingers.

" no Master said jannie; trembling and looking down

Well you,ll not find me a hard master if you are a good girl" he went on to say. you should not be so frightened, I dont mean to work you so very hard, and if you obey me and be a good little girl, and not act like a rebel, and be no more a little christian dog you'll have fine times with me. only remember you must be a good good little girl."

It was at this time that the enclosure of the slave plantation rose to view. The estate had formerly belonged to some christian of opulence and taste, who had bestowed as much at attention to the adornment of his grounds as his money had allowed, but Deldon being the richer had made it a perfect paradise in spite of his wickedness and harshness. The former owner previous to the beginning of the war had entered the army and therefore it had been taken over by Deldon who used it as he did everything else as an implement for money making but kept it in good order nevertheless, though the fact is this place was in an impassable swamp for in the rear no one could get in or out. Yet the place had the appearance of an open within a swamp, and before the main house was a smooth-shaven lawn dotted thickly here and there with ornamental shrubs. Along the edge of the driveways were great rows of wildsweet jessamines and honeysuckles, and not far off were large gardens, and then a big field bordered on the rear by bogs of immense size all thickly grown with all crops known on the market.

Near by was a large den conservatory, filled with flowers for as wicked as he was nevertheless Deldon had a love for sweetness and beauty which unlike of others, though he made his slaves keep them all in order to suit his taste. The wagon rolled up a flower lined gravel walk under a row of great cypress trees whose graceful forms and thick foliage and moss seemed to be the only ti things that b e broke the finenese of the scenery, and beyond further in the swamp was darkeness and mystery.

The house was large and handsome. It was built in a manner common among northern Abbiennians, a wide veranda of two storied running round every part of the house, into which every outer door opened, the lower tiers being supported by brick pillars.

But despite the beauty the whole swamp around looked desolate and uncomfortable and foul smells came from the stagnant waters and bogs.

On the rear of the house and the long rows of barns adjoining it, was a long and impassable bog two miles across and many miles it seemed long, and near it on the ground above bits of board, straw, old decayed barrels, corn cobs, and boxes lay in all directions, and to show them the impossibility of getting away from him Deldon brought them to the edge of the big bottomless swamp.

" See what you would get if you tried to run across this black soft ground" said he throwing an empty barrel of considerable weight, and watching with grim satisfaction its slow disappearance under the muck and then turning to Jannie and her companions " You see what would happen to you if you would try to run off when you do not know this swamp. These bogs are deep to the very bowels of the earth, and also in case you do succeed in getting away from me. I have big dogs raised to track runaway slaves, and they are so fierce they would rather eat you up than get their supper. So mind yourself. you'll never escape from here, none of you. Now mind what I tell you. How now jake "he said to a ragged boy slave who had no hair and who seemed officious in his attentions." How has things been going here since I been away?"

" All right Master."

" And you minded what I told you before I we went away?"

" Yes sir."

There were as soon many other boy and girl slaves on hi his plantation, and Weldon had treated them in sagaveness and brutality as a bulldog does a cat, and by long practice and hardness and cruelty brought them so low down that they were much like himself in savagery. It is a common scene that a child slave if degraded is more cruel when degraded than a slaveolinia when they do not know any better, that is to say the mind of the little slaves has been crushed and debased by their hardships, and therefore does not pity thouse when they are new. It is more true of any race of slaves, for a degraded slave is a tyrant also if they can get the chance to be one.

And Weldon like many potentants we might have read of in history, governed his slaves and his plantation by a sort of resolution of forces. His slaves which he had left here were divided into two classes, and fiercely hated each other, and the milder plantation hands one and all cordially handed the prim principal ones, and by playing off therefore one against another, they were pretty sure through one or the other of the three parties to get fully informed of whatever occured occured on the place. No one I believe ever lived without social intercourse, and Weldon had encouraged his principaled slaves of elder ages to a kind of course of his own, a familiarity o. however at any moment to bring trouble for one of the others, for one on the slightest provocation always took vengeance on the other.

As these two boys stood there and as more came up they seemed an apt illustration of the fact that brutal men can make children lower than even the lowest animal.

Their course features, their eyes rolling e enviously at each other, their barbarious accent, their ragged garments fluttering in the wind showed what they were and what they did.

" here you Jake" said Weldon" take all these boy slaves down to the proper quarters, and here is a special girl slave I got for you to use for your own self" " said he as he seperated the Vivian girl from Jannie, and pushed the former toward him" I promised to bring you a assistant you know."

" Violet gave a sudden start, and drawing back suddenly said to Jannie-

"Keep up your cou e courage. I won't forget you----"

" "ere no secret whispering among you two" said Weldon threatening to pull out his pistol" Come black hair" he said to Jannie" you go in here with me."

Jannie reluctantly followed her new master to the quarters. The quarters was in a little sort of a glen in a part of the plantation far off from the house and close to the impassable bogland. The quarters looked neat enough but it was close to the mud hole which has a forbading air, but the interior was not so refined. Poor Jannie has been comforting herself with the thought of a cottage or house, rude indeed, but one which she hoped she could make neat and clean, and where she might have a place to hide her little bible, and a place to be alone out of her working hours.

She looked into several, they were more rude shells of large sizes, without any such thing as a piece of furniture, not even sta straw but just the bare floor, which was of large broad timbers.

" Which of these will be mine" she thought to herself as soon had the satisfaction of being tossed into one. It was late late in the evening when the many sad and weary occupants of these large shanties or sheds came flocking home mboys and girls, in soiled and tattered garments or half naked, or naked entirely, surly and uncomfortable and not, and they were in no mood moud to even speak to each other. The whole place was alive with no invinle invisible sounds, hoarse guttural noises coming from the swamps. Yet the slaves had to cook and make up their own meals, for only a little fish or cake or dried corn bread was to connist of their meal and water to drink. From the earliest day dawn of the day they had been in the fields, pressed to work under the driving lash of the overseers which Weldon lyingly said he did not have, for now it was in the very heat and hurry of the early summer season, and no hands was therefore left untried to press every one as far as possible.

" "rue" said the negligent lounger" Tending crops is not hard work."

Maybe not, but is that all they do. Isn,t it something else.?

If that was all the trouble maybe it would not have been very much inconvenience but then there is other chores they have to do such as clean the houses, and make their own food, -----well any big list of jobs that can be named, and try to do it all within eighteen hours of toil and not forget one. and yet the worse torture of the slave inquisition is also produced drop by drop. and drop after drop, failing moment after moment with quick but monotonous succession on the same spot, and work in it self if likes and desired for is not hard, but it can become so by being pre pressed, hour after hour with unrelenting and unvarying sameness, without even the consciousness of free will to take from it its tediousness. Jannie looked in vain among the huge gang of little slaves as they poured along for friendly companionable faces. He saw only sullent scowling boys, and feeble discouraged girls, or girls that were not girls---- the strong pshing away the weak---the gross unrestricted animal selfishness of even little human beings, of whom nothing good is expected and desired, and who treated in every way likes rats and mice, had sunk as nearly to their level as it was po possible for the little human beings to do so. To a very la late hour in the night the sound of the grindin grinding and other work was heard, for these kind of mills were few in number, compared with the grinders, and the weary and feeble ones were driven back by the strong, and came on last in their turn.

" O ho " said the boy called jack coming up to jannie, and throwing down a bag of corn and grain in front of her" hat is your name little snip?"

" jannie" said the litle girl.

" Well Jannie you are my worker now. " you grind this corn, and get my supper baked on time do you hear."

" I ain't your slave, and I won,t be" said the little girl with the sharp sudden courage of despair" you go away and leave me alone."

" I'll kick you in the sides then" said the boy, raising his boot threateningly.

" You may kill me if you choose you bad boy---the sooner I die the beter better. I wish I had died long ago, then I would not have to come here."

" I say you ake, if you go spoilingthe hands, I'll tell Master on you" said another of the boys who was busy at the mill, from which he was violently driven two or three ofthe tired little girls, who had been waiting long to grind their corn."

" Yes and I&ll tell him you won't let the girls come to the mills" you old devil" said another of the boys." You just mind your own business, or I&ll go over there and knock you down."

" Jannie was hungry, very hungry from the effects of her days journey and almost faint from want of food.

" There you sprite" said Jake,s assistant throwing to her another course bag, which contained a peck of corn and barley" that you sprite, grab, and take care of it.---you won't get no more of that for two weeks."

And poor little jannie waited untill a late hour to get a place at the mills , and then moved by the utter tearfulness of two other little girls, whom he saw trying to grind their own corn, there he grou she grounded for them, put together the decaying brands of the fire, where many had baked cakes before them, and then went about getting her own supper. It indeed was a new kind of work there----- need of charity as small as it was, but it w k. woke an answering touch in their hearts, an expre sion expression of childish kindness came over their hard saddened faces, they mixed her cake for them for her, and tended its bem baking, and Jannie sat down by the li h light of the fire, and then looking around to make sure no overseers were around took out her bible----for she sure has need of s some comfort.

" "hat isthat" said one of the girls.

" A bible" said Jannie.

" good Lord, I never saw one since I was three years old and now Im ten."

" Where were you raised and born?" said Jannie with interest.

" In America."

" Was you raised in the united tes States."?

" Yes and well raised too, never ex e expected to be stolen this way from my parents and taken here." said the girl sighing.

" Yes and what is that book good for anyway?"said the ot ler girl other girl scornful scornfully."

" Why it is a holy bible."

" good Lord, better not let Weldon see it. and what is it anyhow but a lot of thrash."

" o tell" said the other girl who first spoke." Don't you believe in the bible."?

" I used to believe in it but no more. but here there is nothing else but the crack ing of the whip and lot of waring. If there is a god what that book says why don't he deliver us. Why don't he make those old christian dogs win."?

" Read a small piece of it any way please" said the first girl curiously seeing Jannie pouring over it attentively. Jannie slowly read:

" come unto me all ye that labor and are burdened and are heavy laden, and ywill give you rest."

" They do sound like good words at that" said the first girl." But who says them in that book?"

" God hi himself in the gos" said jannie.

" Aw that's all thrash, I won't believe it," said the other girl unearingly." There is no truth in it. "

" ut the other girl was not so hardened yet by her suffering and she said:

" I would give anything to know where I can find him. I would go and beg h him to deliver us all. and it appears, I should never get rested again or see my folks, for, freedom is never coming to us. Just see how the christians got licked in the big battle just passed. And my flesh is fairly sore all over, and I tremble all over, every day and one of the overseers always yelling cursing and swearing at me, cause I don't work faster, and get everything done as fast as he wants us to, and often it is most midnight before I can get my supper, and then it appears like I just about shut my ears and go to sleep, when I heard the shote fired as a signal to get up, and at it again in the morning. Many of us usually die before a month is past not from work but because we don't get no sleep, and proper food. If I could only find the Lord, I would tell him.

" He is here, He is everywhere" said jannie.

Both of the girls laug laughed heartily at these words.

" Gosh we are not crazy like that to believe such things. I know the Lord ain't here at all" said one of them" It ain't no use talking any further though. " We have just got to lie down, and sleep while we can."

The two girls went off to their cabins, and poor heart broken Jannie sat alone by the smouldering fire, that flickered up ready in her little face. The silver fair crescent moon rose in the black sky, and seemed to look down calmly calmly and silently, as God looks on the scenes of misery and oppression------looked calmly on the lone little black haired little girl, as she sat, with her arms aside, and her bible on her knee.

" Yes indeed, the question is " IS GOD HERE!" Ah indeed how can it be possible for the untaught heart to keep its faith, unswerving in the face of dire misrule, when in the power of wicked brutal wicked slandeliniana, and palpable unrebuked injustice. In that simple little heart raged a very fierce conflict, the crushing sense of great wrong , the foreshadowing of a whole life of future misery and heartbreaking sorrow, the wreck of all past hopes, mournfully tossing in the souls sight, like dead corpse of mother, father and sisters and brothers, and friend, rising from the dark wave, and surging in the face of the half drowned seaman. Ah it was hard here to believe and hold fast the great pass word of Christian faith that " God is, and is al a always the Rewarder of them that diligently seek h Him!"

Poor Jannie disconsolate rose and staggered into the cabin that had been select ed for her. The floor of it was already strewn with weary sleepers, and worse than that there was a foul air in the place that repelled her, but the heavy night dews were chill ly even, though otherwise it was very warm, and she was weary and heartsick, and wrapp ing about her a tattered blanket, which formed her only bed clothing, she stretched herself on the floor, and fell asleep. Then came a dream to her, and in the dream there came a gentle childish voice near her ear, then she appeared to be sitting by the banks of a small stream on a moss y mossy seat, and Daisy Vivian, with her serious eyes bent down downard was reading to her from the bible, and she dreamed that she read;;;;

" When thou passeth through the waters, I will be with thee, and the rivers, they shall not overflow thee, when thou walketh throughthe fire, though shalt not be burned, neither shall the flame kindle upon thee; For I am the Lord thy God, the the Holy one of the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour."

gGradually the words seemed to melt and fade, as in a devine music, the child raised her deep eyes, and fixed them lovingly on her, and rays of a warmpth and comfort seemed to go from them to her heart, and as if wafted on the music, she seemed to rod ride away on a horse with shining wings, from which flakes and showers of spangled gogold fell off like a blizzard of stars, and she was gone.....

Jenie awoke. Indeed the question is------" Was it a dream? Well let it pass for one. But one shall say that there are many sweet creatures of heaven, which in life so yearned to comfort and console the distressed was forbidden of God to assume a good ministery after death?

It is a beautiful belief
That ever around our head,
Are hovering on angels wings,
The spirits of the dead.

And behold, the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter, and on the side of the oppressors there was, " WICKED POWER", but they had no comforter."Eccl. Ivil

It took but a very short time to get jannie to be familiar with all that was to be hoped for and feared in her new way of life. She was an expert worker in whatever she undertook, and was both from habit and principal, prompt and faithful, quiet and preaceful in her disposition, she hoped by unremitting diligence to avert from herself a portion of the evils of her sad conditions. She saw even now enough of abuse and misery to make her sick and weary, she saw when a child took so sick she could not work, or if the same happened to a boy, the penan penalty was a beating till they were dead;but she determined to toil on, with religious patience, on commiting herself to Him that judgeth righteously, not without hope that some way of escape might yet be opened to her. And one thing that made her feel better was that rumors was that the christian army though beaten in the battle of Phelantonburg was hanging onto its position like a bulldog hangs onto its victim and that Manley was afraid to press the slight advantage he had gained.if she only knew where that christian army was she would run off in the night?

Deldon took silent note of Jannie's availability. He rated her as a first class hand, and yet he felt a secret dislike to her---and a little fear also, the native antipathy of what a bad man feels of a good, he saw plainly as was often the case, when ever his brutality and violence fell on the helpless, Jannie quickly took notice of it and was not afraid to tell him of it in as strong words as she could assume and with her black eyes flashing, for so subtile is the atmosphere of opinion tht that it also will make itself felt without words, and the opinion of any Islave might annoy a wicked master, but Jannie was a little spitfire. And Jannie in many various ways manifested a tenderest feeling for all her fellow sufferers, strange and new to them,

WHICH was watched with a jealious eye by Deldon. He so swore at himself for ever taking her from Mylatze, and felt he would give anything to have left her there. As for Manley he had refused to take her back, saying he wanted no more slaves for his camp like her.He had taken Jannie with a view of eventually making her a sort of little house keeper, with whom he might at times intrust his business affairs and the like in short or long absenses, and in his view the first ,second, and third requisite for that was hard work but not so hard as outside. But she preferred to be out in the fields with the rest, and therefore Deldon made up his mind that as Jannie was not wa what he desired, he would bide his time, and when the f opportunity presented itself sell her to ou some glandelinism general in Manleys command, probably to John Manley the chief himself and not his father or brothers.

That next morning the fourth of June, when all the small hands were mustered for the field for an extra rush work, Jannie noticed with surprise, a new comer among them, whose strange appearance excited her attentionand the attention of all the rest.

It was a boy, about ten years of age, and elenderly formed, with remarkly looking delicate hands a nd feet, and dressed in neat and respectable garments. By the very very appearance of his face, he might have been a slave more favored than the others, and it was a face that once seen could never be forgotten,------one of those that at a glance, s e seemed to convey, to us an idea of a wild, painful, and yet strange history.

His forehead was high, and his eye brows were marked with beautiful clearness. His straight well formed nose, his finely cu cut mouth, and the graceful contour of his head and neck, showed that he was a beautiful boy, but his face showed an expression of proud and bitter endurance and self sacrifice and sorrow and pity of all who suffered. His complexion was fresh,, her features a his features sharp and his whole form emaciated. But his eyes was the most remarkable feature, so large, so heavily blue, overshadowed by long golden lashes, and so defiantly wildly despairing. Indeed there was a fierce pride and defiance in every line of his face, in every curve of the flexible lip, in every motion of his body, but in his m eye, was a deep suspicious something an expression, as to contrast fearfully with the scorn and pride expressed by his whole demeanor.

Where he came from, or who he was Jannie did not know. The first he did know he was walking by her side, erect and proud, in the dim dawn of the morning, not even to the gangs was he known, for there was much looking and turning of heads, and one said;

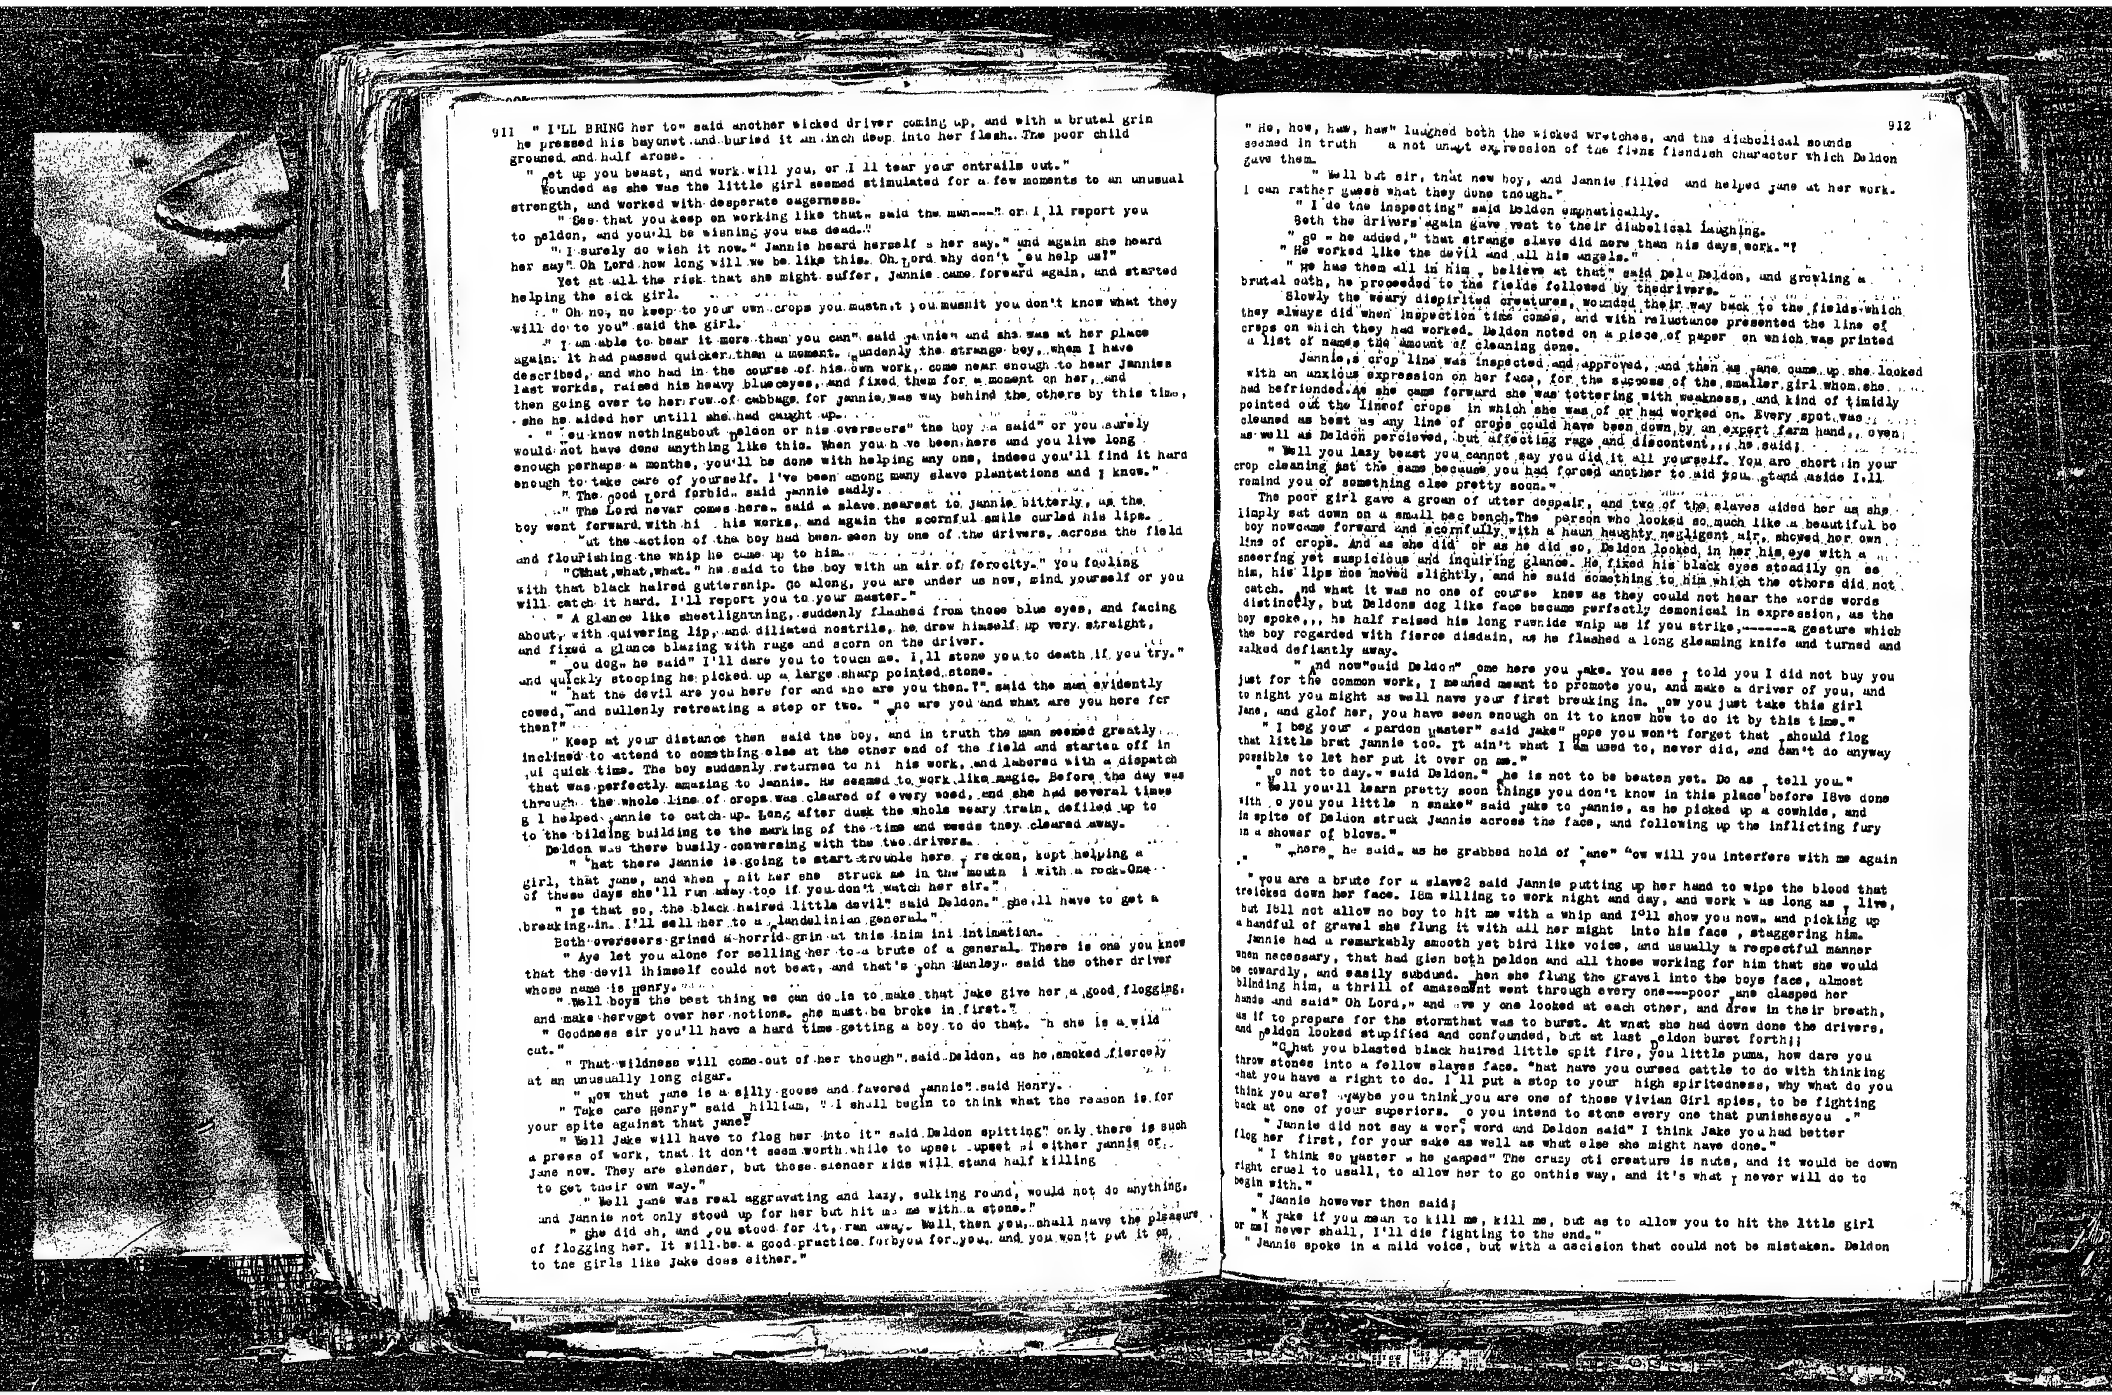
" Who is he " wonder?"

" He,he,he, said another whisperingly to a companion" I hope he is a christian boy scout spy in disguise."

"B ut why does he work"?

" Maybe he ll change his mind when he gets a good cutting p at ng at night like the rest of us."

" Id be glad if he shoot the old monster of a Deldon I'll be bound" said another.



The boy took no notice of these words but walked on with the same expression of angry scorn, as if he heard nothing. Jannie had before now always lived among refined and cultivated masters, and she felt strangely from the boys air and bearing, that he was no real slave, but was a disguised boy or girl scout, but how or why could he have chosen these degrading circumstances to spy on the slave masters, she could not tell. The boy also to her surprise and sometimes to her uneasiness always kept her within his sight, always looked at her, but never spoke, all the way to the field, but she noticed he kept close to her side.

Jannie was soon busy at her work, but as the boy was at a very little distance from her, he often glanced an eye to him, to see how he did the work.and she saw at a glance that a strange adriotness and handiness made the task for him a much easiervone, than it proved to be. He picked and cleaned the ground about the crops very fast and very clean with the hoe without cutting a leafe of a plant, but with an air of scorn as if he dispised both the work, and the disgrace and humiliation of the circumstances in which he might have willfully placed himself. In the courses of the day, Jannie was working close to a little girl about a year younger than herself, one who had been brought in the same lot with herself. She showed evidence of unusual suffering , and Jannie often heard her praying, as she wavered, and trembled, and once or t ice twice shaded her eyes with her arm, and seemed about to fall down. Jannie silently as she came nearer and nearer to her, went out of the line of crosp and started helping her at her own work.

" Oh fon,t don't be so fofoolish Jannie,please" saif said the girl surprised and horrified" it will get you into serious trouble."

" Just then one of the overseers came up. He seemed to have a special opite against the little sick girl, and flourishing hi his whip said in angry brutal tones" What are you doing here jannie---helping this little snipe. T'Over to your own crop line get. do you here!" and with the words, he kicked the little sick girl, in the back with his heavy cowhide shoe, and struck jannie across the face with his whip.

Jannie p enraged picked up a stone and threw it with great force stricking the overseer in the mouth, and as many of the slaves became witnessing the overseer retreated cursing and swearing, while Jannie resumed her task, but the other little girl who was kicked had fainted from the violence of the kick.

" I'LL BRING her to" said another wicked driver coming up, and with a brutal grin he pressed his bayonet and buried it an inch deep into her flesh. The poor child groaned and half arose.

" et up you beast, and work will you, or I ll tear your entrails out."

Wounded as she was the little girl seemed stimulated for a few moments to an unusual strength, and worked with desperate eagerness.

" See that you keep on working like that" said the man---" or I ll report you to Peldon, and you'll be wishing you was dead."

" I surely do wish it now." Jannie heard herself a her say." and again she heard her say" Oh Lord how long will we be like this. Oh Lord why don't ou help us!"

Yet at all the risk that she might suffer, Jannie came forward again, and started helping the sick girl.

" Oh no, no keep to your own crops you mustn't you mustn't you don't know what they will do to you" said the girl.

" I am able to bear it more than you can" said Jannie and she was at her place again. It had passed quicker than a moment. Suddenly the strange boy, whom I have described, and who had in the course of his own work, come near enough to hear Jannies last words, raised his heavy blue eyes, and fixed them for a moment on her, and then going over to her row of cabbage, for Jannie was way behind the others by this time, she he aided her until she had caught up.

" ou know nothing about Peldon or his overseers" the boy a said" or you surely would not have done anything like this. When you have been here and you live long enough perhaps a months, you'll be done with helping any one, indeed you'll find it hard enough to take care of yourself. I've been among many slave plantations and I know."

" The good Lord forbid" said Jannie sadly.

" The Lord never comes here" said a slave nearest to Jannie bitterly, as the boy went forward with hi his works, and again the scornful smile curled his lips.

But the action of the boy had been seen by one of the drivers, across the field and flourishing the whip he came up to him.

" What, what, what." he said to the boy with an air of ferocity." you fooling with that black haired gutter snip. Go along, you are under us now, mind yourself or you will catch it hard. I'll report you to your master."

" A glance like sheet lightning, suddenly flashed from those blue eyes, and facing about, with quivering lip, and dilated nostrils, he drew himself up very straight, and fixed a glance blazing with rage and scorn on the driver.

" ou dog" he said" I'll dare you to touch me. I ll stone you to death if you try." and quickly stooping he picked up a large sharp pointed stone.

" hat the devil are you here for and who are you then?" said the man evidently cowed, and sullenly retreating a step or two. " ho are you and what are you here for then?"

" Keep at your distance then said the boy, and in truth the man seemed greatly inclined to attend to something else at the other end of the field and started off in quick time. The boy suddenly returned to hi his work, and labored with a dispatch that was perfectly amazing to Jannie. He seemed to work like magic. Before the day was through the whole line of crops was cleared of every weed, and she had several times g l helped Jannie to catch up. Long after dusk the whole weary train, defiled up to the bilding building to the marking of the time and weeds they cleared away.

Peldon was there busily conversing with the two drivers.

" hat there Jannie is going to start trouble here I reckon, kept helping a girl, that Jane, and when I hit her she struck me in the mouth I with a rock. One of these days she'll run away too if you don't watch her sir."

" Is that so, the black haired little devil" said Peldon." she'll have to get a breaking in. I'll sell her to a Landellinian general."

Both overseers grined a horrid grin at this in mi intimation.

" Aye let you alone for selling her to a brute of a general. There is one you know that the devil himself could not beat, and that's John Manley" said the other driver whose name is Henry.

" Well boys the best thing we can do is to make that Jake give her a good flogging, and make her get over her notions. She must be broke in first."

" Goodness sir you'll have a hard time getting a boy to do that. h she is a wild cat."

" That wildness will come out of her though" said Peldon, as he smoked fiercely at an unusually long cigar.

" ow that Jane is a silly goose and favored Jannie" said Henry.

" Take care Henry" said hilliam, " I shall begin to think what the reason is for your spite against that Jane"

" Well Jake will have to flog her into it" said Peldon spitting" only there is such a press of work, that it don't seem worth while to upset upset ei either Jannie or Jane now. They are slender, but these slender kids will stand half killing to get their own way."

" Well Jane was real aggravating and lazy, sulking round, would not do anything, and Jannie not only stood up for her but hit me with a stone."

" she did eh, and you stood for it, ran away. Well then you shall have the pleasure of flogging her. It will be a good practice for you for you, and you won't put it on to the girls like Jake does either."

" He, how, haw, haw" laughed both the wicked wretches, and the diabolical sounds seemed in truth a not unapt expression of the fiend fiendish character which Peldon gave them.

" Well but sir, that new boy, and Jannie filled and helped Jane at her work. I can rather guess what they done enough."

" I do the inspecting" said Peldon emphatically.

Both the drivers again gave vent to their diabolical laughing.

" so " he added," that strange slave did more than his days work."

" He worked like the devil and all his angels."

" e has them all in him I believe at that" said pale Peldon, and growling a brutal oath, he proceeded to the fields followed by the drivers.

Slowly the weary dispirited creatures, wounded their way back to the fields which they always did when inspection time comes, and with reluctance presented the line of crops on which they had worked. Peldon noted on a piece of paper on which was printed a list of names the amount of cleaning done.

Jannie,s crop line was inspected and approved, and then as Jane came up she looked with an anxious expression on her face, for the success of the smaller girl whom she had befriended. As she came forward she was tottering with weakness, and kind of timidly pointed out the line of crops in which she was of or had worked on. Every spot was cleaned as best as any line of crops could have been down by an expert farm hand,, even as well as Peldon perceived, but affecting rage and discontent,,, he said;

" Well you lazy beast you cannot say you did it all yourself. You are short in your crop cleaning but the same because you had forced another to aid you. stand aside I.ll remind you of something else pretty soon."

The poor girl gave a groan of utter despair, and two of the slaves aided her as she limply sat down on a small bac bench. The person who looked so much like a beautiful bo boy now came forward and scornfully with a haun haughty negligent air, showed her own line of crops. And as she did or as he did so, Peldon looked in her his eye with a sneering yet suspicious and inquiring glance. He fixed his black eyes steadily on se him, his lips moe moved slightly, and he said something to him which the others did not catch. And what it was no one of course knew as they could not hear the words words distinctly, but Peldons dog like face became perfectly demonical in expression, as the boy spoke,,, he half raised his long rawhide whip as if you strike,------a gesture which the boy regarded with fierce disdain, as he flashed a long gleaming knife and turned and walked defiantly away.

" And now" said Peldon" come here you Jake. You see I told you I did not buy you just for the common work, I meaned meant to promote you, and make a driver of you, and to night you might as well have your first breaking in. ow you just take this girl Jane, and glof her, you have seen enough on it to know how to do it by this time."

" I beg your pardon master" said Jake" ope you won't forget that should flog that little brat Jannie too. It ain't what I am used to, never did, and can't do anyway possible to let her put it over on me."

" o not to day." said Peldon." he is not to be beaten yet. Do as I tell you."

" Well you'll learn pretty soon things you don't know in this place before I've done with o you you little n snake" said Jake to Jannie, as he picked up a cowhide, and in spite of Peldon struck Jannie across the face, and following up the inflicting fury in a shower of blows."

" nore" he said" as he grabbed hold of Jane" ow will you interfere with me again ."

" you are a brute to a slave2 said Jannie putting up her hand to wipe the blood that trickled down her face. I am willing to work night and day, and work as long as I live, but I'll not allow no boy to hit me with a whip and I'll show you now. and picking up a handful of gravel she flung it with all her might into his face , staggering him.

Jannie had a remarkably smooth yet bird like voice, and usually a respectful manner when necessary, that had given both peldon and all those working for him that she would be cowardly, and easily subdued. hen she flung the gravel into the boys face, almost blinding him, a thrill of amazement went through every one---poor Jane clasped her hands and said" Oh Lord," and ev y one looked at each other, and drew in their breath, as if to prepare for the storm that was to burst. At what she had down done the drivers, and Peldon looked stupified and confounded, but at last Peldon burst forth;;

" hat you blasted black haired little spit fire, you little puma, how dare you throw stones into a fellow slaves face. "hat have you cursed cattle to do with thinking that you have a right to do. I'll put a stop to your high spiritedness, why what do you think you are? maybe you think you are one of those Vivian Girl spies, to be fighting back at one of your superiors. o you intend to stone every one that punishes you ."

" Jannie did not say a wor word and Peldon said" I think Jake you had better flog her first, for your sake as well as what else she might have done."

" I think so master " he gasped" The crazy oti creature is mute, and it would be down right cruel to usall, to allow her to go on this way, and it's what I never will do to begin with."

" Jannie however then said;

" K Jake if you mean to kill me, kill me, but as to allow you to hit the little girl or me I never shall, I'll die fighting to the end."

" Jannie spoke in a mild voice, but with a decision that could not be mistaken. Peldon

Deldon shook withanger, his grey blue eyes glared fiercely, and with his passion his features ndoed became like that of an enraged bulldog, but like that kind of animal that plays with his meat before he devours it, he kept back with his strong impulse to proceed to immediate violence against her and said fiercely;

"Well here is a little wild cat; let loose among us from the woods, a little puma in human form, an amazon, and no less, to talk to us about what she will do. powerful little wild beast she must be. Here you little devil in black hair, you make believe wild cat, don't you know, can sell you to one of the worse Clandelinian Generals there is alive in anlo's army, a general worse than anley himself. And did you not hear you little snipe that the bible says" " Servants obey your master." " Ain't I your master. Ain't you mine, now even body and soul. Did I not risk my very life, to get you away from general Myletzes army, and to use for what ever is inside your cursed little body. ain't you mine?"He said giving the little girl a violent kick, with his heavy boot." Tell me."

In the very depths of physical suffering, bowed by brutal oppression, this question seemed to pass a gleam of joy, and defiance and triumph through jannie's little soul. she suddenly stretched herself up, and looking earnestly into his face, while the tears and blood that flowed down her face mingled, she exclaimed defiantly;

" o, no I8m not even yours, sir, you stole me, you are a thief and if Myletze knows it you will be in trouble. you have not bought me, tnat is why I defy you. And Myletze he bought me instead, and paid the general who sold him to be y me to him more than ten thousand dollars--no matter, you don't own me."

"I don't" said Deldon with a sneer. " We will see. We will see. If I don't some one else will. you defy me because I cannot dare have you flogged flogged. Here you two big drivers, give this jane such as a flogging as she won't ever get over in a month. I,ll sell you to general Manley, to jannie.

Two gigantic clandelinians now laid hold of poor jane, with fiendish exultantions in their wicked faces, and they indeed almost formed an apt power of darkness. The poor little girl screamed with impr ippre apprehension and struggled, and kicked and bit, but she was carried away awdy, while all the rest rose as by a general impulse and followed as Jane wa was carried away .

A VIEW BEFORE GAUTAMALA. A GRAND PANORAMA OF ACTIVITIES. CASAPLANIA MOUNTAIN. THE TROOPS IN MAIN ACTION AT HIS CROSSROADS. A LONG LINE OF WAGON TRAINS ATTACKED AND FIRED ON BY ABBIEANNIAN CAVALRY.. TELEGRAPH COMMUNICATIONS RESTORED UNDER HEAVY AND DISASTEROUS FIRING. THE ENTIRE CLANDELINIAN ARMY IN LINE OF ACTION. THE GRAY LINE CROSSING AND SHATTERING THE PURPLE. THE SOLDIER ON THE BLOODY, SLIPPERY LINE DURING THE BATTLE. CAPTOR AND A PRISONER. SOME INDEPENDENT SKIRMISHES.. FIGHTING FOR A LARGE APPLE AND PEACH ORCHID. A BLOODY LINE OF BATTLE. UNDER A TERRIBLE ARTILLERY FIRE. DANGEROUS FOOT BEHIND THE HORSE.

BEFORE CASAPLANIA. GENERAL TUPPO ANDORA KILLED. THE ABBIEANNIANS AFTER FIERCE FIGHTING FORCED TO ABANDON MANGFIED AND PINK RIDGE. PRIVATION OF THE CLANDELINIAN TROOPS DURING A GREAT PART OF THIS LONG BATTLE. A DESPERATE ASSAULT UPON THE ABBIEANNIAN LINES, AND THE PROBABLE MAIN ACTIONS OF THE BATTLE. RACE FOR THE ANGELINE RUN AT DAWN. A HORRIBLE MARCH IN A DARK AND STORMY NIGHT. ONE OF THE MOST WILD SPECTACLES OF THE WAR. AN ARMY OF GRAY PHANTOMS! PROFANITY AND BLASPHEMY IN THE DARKNESS. THE RETREAT OF ABBIEANNIANS

There was probably no one in the world who had ever had the opportunity to gaze upon such a grand and magnificent scene as that which was spread out before the vision from the summit of Guatemala ridge that bright sunny June day, 1918. Where ever you could look, from front to rear, from left to right, the valleys stretched away in wide expanse of beautifully colored fields, and orchard and groves, and forests. And the very air people seem with the perfume of all various of spring flowers and of grasses, fresh pine and of fruits and with the incense of burning of dry dead leaves. As above one could see large fleecy clouds floated across the blue expanse of sky, intercepting here and there the bright sunshine and mottling the very landscape with alternate patches of light and shade which chased each other from field to field, across hill look and stream. And through this fine setting of scenery in northern Angelinia one passed an unusually excellent panorama. If one looked down from the heights he could observe something like an army following like the long winding of a snake the undulations of numerous knolls and hills and dale. In a sinuous and serpentine course this long line of gray, was tipped with shining steel, and through its whole length a long serpent like flash of light would dart out and then be lost to view. Here and there at regular orderly intervals a yellow guidon fluttered with the familiar devices belonging to the general commanders, while the progress of the supreme chief general and his staff of general and other officers, followed by their retainers and escort to recruit their strength at frequent intervals. Similar banners with different colors and emblazoned with the child slave pictures, as mentioned before, as well as various other flags, denoted the places of corps commanders, while with these emblems in the Clandelinian national colors told of the presence of divisions and brigade commanders enabling the practiced eye to recognize the size and also some considerable distance as far as the devices could be observed or discerned. Between and among these lines and columns of gray, as far as the eye could reach floated the spirited clandelinian national colors, each marking the regimental organization, so far did they ascend below the point of observation, that regiments appeared like companies, and companies like squads. Of course the men of each division, there were hundreds of civilians followed the ranks of artillery, the bright brass of the cannons glittering with the dull color of the steel bayonets. And then away in the background and alongside of the marching army rising and falling with hill and valley, outlined against the bright green of the field and wood of the clear blue sky the long wagon trains stretched out, the white canvas covering seeming in the far distance like the sails of ships at sea.

And far to the front bounding the entire southern and northeastern horizon rose the majestic cappelain mountain ridge, and its adjacent peaks as if planted there by the nationals to stay the steps of the onward pressing gray hosts, bidding them to go thus far and no further. But already at their very base countless thousands of white puffs of smoke rose in defiance from the rifles of the clandelinian advance, while high overhead at Guatemala waved the many tell tale flags that bore the great the directions of the great war chief to the troops now opening the conflict.

On June the 4th, the army reached big Pine Creek an intersection of two railroad lines lying almost at the foot of Guatemala mountain. It was to be famous and to be the scene of a remarkable occurrence. In order to break the Worcester and Pandora railroad and preventing the christians from reinforcing their army, opposing Beppo Evans's advance general glendorn sent twenty thousand men to this point then far in the interior of the Nationals. They moved forward persuing dP ferunt roads and in accordance with their prearranged plans came together at the Crosscroads close by at one was a at which was a big Abbiesannian camp. Watching an opportunity they dashed it into the camp drove out the nationals and set everything on fire.

(1912
915

During the engagement one of the squads watching an opportunity stole a light Abbiesannian freight train and made off at the utmost speed in the direction of Abercrombie. Their intention was to burn all the small and large bridges after passing over them but hot persuit was made by another train, and they were unable to even accomplish their purpose. They soon consumed all the coal and water aberd the tender and found the engine otherwise becoming us useless, and when near Abercrombie the dari daring "landelinians found themselves obliged to jump from the railrway engine and seek concealment in the woods. The Abbiesanniane hunted them down however and hung or shot them all.

Near By - and grandly towering upward to a magnificent height, rose the hilll known as Quirmula, it being a formidable ridge, nearly six miles long, and probably one thousand feet above the level of the sea(smelling bee) Believed to be a sort of an extinct volcano it might be better described as a long single eminence with out a single break or depression. To the northwest lay Omaplanla and to the north straigh straight Felc Falcons Nest, w ich had two straight almost conical peaks connected with Gautemala and each other by heavily timbered ridges. Indeed it was the most perfect of all natural fortifications the armies under laner Mylatze ever had expected to encounter, and as they soon discovered the Abbiesannians made the most of the very advantages it afforded. Their line from Guatemala and other points to Falcon's Nest was generally semi-circular the very longest being presented to the Glandelinian troops. From base to peak these overlooking ridges bristled with many hundreds of big batteries, and swarmed with men so numerous you would have thought that some na / nation of men had taken root there. All the way up on the sides were series upon series of long lines of battle-pits and deadly rifle pits, from on the peaks were the long range batteries. Their elevation gave them a full bird's eye view of the very Glandelinian skirmish and main battle lines and their flags could be seen waving defian defiantly from peak to peak. Signalling every movement of their assailants.

While everything transpiring in the Taddelinian army was diecit " distinctly noted by them their own movements were concealed by the heavy timber which veiled their lines.

Therefore a partial explanation for this was found in the fact that the Glandelinia signal officers had first deliberated the enemy today and also could read their flags almost as readily as they themselves. It was not improbable however that the Abbiesannians were equally quick witted and acquired much excellent information in a similar way... The Abbiesannian line was gradually developed by the long surges of Glandelinian skirmishers, those of Caudonia troops occupying the left near the sixth flank of Quirmula, Tamaliles riflemen [illegible] and other divisions and ledgers divisi division joining them on the extreme right. Then came Thomas Adelheid with the army of Zimmermannians in front of Falcon's Nest and th the intervals between that and Quirmula. Beadro la, under Pido Ridge. Before the close of the day the long skirmish lines had felt the steel along the entire front of nearly thirty miles, and therefore hundreds of thousands of rifle shots were being exchanged from behind rocks crests and bushes, while here and there a battery threw a shower of experimental shells. The Gland ins General Mylatze Himself rode to the front, while a few of i his generals and his orderly. Then he dismounted, and seated himself upon a large stump near the railroad tracks of the Mt. Hollester and Pandora railroad. General van Alph Glot had just taken from his pocket a strange light piece of piece of wire, apparently larger than a hair of a horse. This he could have been seen splicing to the telegraph wire which dangled from a pole near by and then attach it to his pocket instrument, not larger than an ordinary candy box. Seating himself beside the general he began tapping the delicate little key, the general listening.
A half an hour then passed general Oster Glot bent his ear close to the minia miniature sounder, and his lips moved as he gave Mylatze the answering message.
The latter rose made a gesture, then mounted his horse and rode away.

A few moments afterward he told the War Corres correspondent that the general had reported satisfactory progress to headquarters at Vanity Fair city, recieving in return an answer, expressing the greatest satisfaction and also conveying warm congratulation ...

Later in the evening a daring Glandelinian cavarly squadron raced up in strong column Immediately l up to the foot of Gautemala and drew the fire of a number of the Abbia Abbiesannian batteries on the summit. h The cavarly men saved their standards defiantly and then backed away without a loss of a man or horse, while the vast Glandelinian army cheered until the hills all around ranged and echoed withthe with the sound.. The yells and cheers indeed were frightfully obse perating to the Nationals ; and their skirmish line opened a spiteful fire all along the stretch which was a vidiously returned, night alone putting an end to the noisy but unusually harmless conflict for so great a extent.Later a line of wagon trains about a Hundred Had been attacked and under fire, and a few decoyed, while all type telegraph communication communication were restored, though many of the workers were killed or wounded by fire under ambush. up to this time however the entire army of the rebels had been engaged with the Nationals at only one time but at period intervals and though the conflicts were serried and scattered it nevertheless covered a very extended front. At Centennal the Abbiesannians under Nerd made the first decided stand, on obliging Lener Mylatze to bring into full use all the means at his disposal, and the roles of cannon and explosions could be heard at Angelinia Agathia yet more than three hundred miles northwest of the battle. Here the whole line of rebels sent into action and into long lines of battle, shoulder to shoulder and from the tenth of July until the fall of Heidi, in July there was never a day but every division, brigade and regiment was under severe fire, and attacking, or being attacked on a long line front. It was of every day occurrence and sometimes at night too, and once in a while the main line of action could be ten miles long, and a picture of a single day's great battle-front would be found a faithful portraiture of that was transpiring along the entire front of the Glandelina glandelinian army, and each day of that full month of action differed from occasion when the grand quarter country action rose to the dignity of a general and fierce battle all along the line.

Though every day of fight the conflicts were remarkably severe all the troops were not engaged in a similar degree, but at times a large part of the army was vigorously employed and occupied in desultory fighting along a five or six mile front while other sections would be carelessly employed. Then again these conditions would be reversed, but on the whole the experience of these commands would and could be regarded as balancing fairly at the end of the month's campaign, honors and losses being impartially. Yet the chief battle gave no lesser to each severe on both the north and the south in the desperate civil war like in the late years' conflicts, and there was as much action as many battles decided and as many soldiers used do know throughout that fabled War. Therefore during [illegible] a tradesdale battle indeed.
[illegible] during the battle however even during the first three days the line of army either thin, or thick but always long, and lasting more than twenty thousand a day sometimes, pushed the line of purple and red steadily backward southward Guatemal. and up the sides of Guatemala mountain. It was day against man, all equally as brave, equally self reliant, equally as determined and stubbornly resisting, equally fervent in his endeavor. Though sometimes within the space of even half a mile more than twenty thousand would be engaged in fierce action at both sides yet rarely did either side more than a half a dozen of the other were frequently but one, often none at all, sometimes only able to locate his position and the position of friend by the [illegible] and line of smoke. Part of the style of such fighting was [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] Yet rarely, and very rare but a short distance between fire and often even between the [illegible] range, constantly in each [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and often often more than one hundred thousand men were brought into [illegible] to bear fight within a [illegible] distance of [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] thousand pieces of artillery within the same distance. A line of the soldiers in gray on a quiet and fitting day, [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] of ground, but generally many thousands of soldiers would break swiftly from [illegible] from rock to rock, tree to tree, and from other points of hidden projection [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

or the the christian side would raise his cap on a stick or ramor ramrod to draw the others fire, while a comrade tookthe opportiune moment to spot the enemy who happened to take the bait. Often the attackers of the defenders would be obliged to leave shelter before they had the time to "warm their holes" as they often expressed it to make a sudden dash upon the enemy, for the purpose of securing more ground, and sometimes it was their opponents who stirred them out in turn, and made them take a hurried trip to the rear. And at times having located the enemy's position during the day, they would then make a mad night dash, noiselessly, without firing a gun, taking the purple coat, or the gray coat back to the lines as a prisoner.

Occasionally the gray would keep his prisoner with him in his rifle pit until he was relieved and could take him into camp. In such cases the two would quarrel most heartily, both fighting vehemently with words the while and threatening death to the other with the direst calamities, and yet the gray coat losing no moment to take a crack at his captive relatives and friends. And if the gray line happened to make itself particularly annoying to the purple or the same side with the purple to the gray, and being the casualties, it generally did this on long extensive grounds daily, the Abbiesnnians then would sweep the ground with a terrific tempest of grape and canister, shell, and shrapnel shrapnel proving a most equally terrific return fire from the Glandelinian artillery. Thus usually brought to a quiet term for a while both the skirmish lines and the delights of the rifle pits would remain under cover until the artillery duel was over when they again would fire a blaze away at each other with more spirit than before, and kept it a good and hard.

A storming assault at any portion of the battle line would have the same effect. No matter how severe the volley of skirmishing might be, it could speedily die away under the effects of the rushing shell and grape and canister fire send down to cut away an assault, and so soon as the assault was repulsed and there was no indication of another for the time being the firing of skirmishers could recommence with redoubled vigor, regardless of protection or possible result.

At night fall of just before dawn when the crack of the sentinel could be sufficiently discerned without attracting the attention of the natives soldiers, the skirmishers would be followed by others of their comrades. This long range skirmishing kept up every day with many hundreds of thousands indescribly shocked and every night the new soldiers would bring provision and ammunition to last a day and they in turn would enter upon a round of existence upon as have been described and though so many would be in action along a ten to twenty mile line, and though during the whole day over three hundred million shots might have been fired, each the loss in killed or wounded.

Such the most common fighting incident to the general of the skirmish line, and his which is usually, or unusually familiar to the battle ary, not only known in lower Mylotse, but any Glandelinian army is a c devilion Glandelinian sharpshooter or who may be found in any regiment, company, squad or division of skirmishers in the the army, and he was according to the views of the Glandelinian devil vagabond. No matter where he was, or no matter there he was he kept his conduct his part of the campaign destroy after his own fashion and usually just like and when and how he p pleased.

Always the first skirmish line usually long field with what we call in the army a telescopic sight, and then crawling up to within a cap double of hundreds of prof provisions and a full grade of hundreds he could find a Glandelinian location dig a hole hold deep enough to stand in without exposing his head and stay there firing without a single moments pause and reason twelve until his rations up the ammunition were fully exhausted. Then at night fall he would go to the rear for a fresh supply, only to return and resume his murderous work. He had a crack-- or dead shot, and that he hit all not live to tell it he had a terror to the best of the Abbiesnnian commoners whose guns he had frequently silenced. The greatest effort ever imagined had been made to kill or capture him but without success.

As serious as a conflict might be there were many strange and most comical incident incidents even where death stared every man in the face, and when soldiers on both sides were usually shot down during only this skirmish firing at the rate of twenty eight, to thirty thousand per day. The skirmishers of various divisions and of corps armies Ninth Corps one day came upon a long apple and peach orchard in their front. indeed their mouthswatered for the rare fruit but it was sure death to even walk to the trees though only a few yards off. But some of the Glandelinians by slow and most tedious efforth dragged themselves upon their bellies untill they reached the much desired goal, then flopped over upon their backs and brought down the apples or peached by throwing sticks or stones into the trees. The Abbiesnnians pured a poured a hot fire through the orchards; and succeeded in killing quite a lot and crippling and seriously wounding many others.

Sometimes the Abbiesnnians would charge in a body to drive the rebels back from the orchards and then those who were not driven back were taken prisoners, and then both sides would hotly exchange opinions with references to the war.. The avaerage of the Glandelinian soldiers compared in many ways with the Natinals in intelligence and discernment but some of the views of the Abbiesnnians were extremely hostile and crude and saw only one cause for the conflict;

"If you do not like war why do you Glandelinians keep up child slavery for."

It was also a remarkable fact in this story that the bitterness of the Abbiesnnians insordance and his views on the conduct of the war were equally strange. One Glandelinian war correspondent expressed discontent frequently heard from the prisoners that "Mylotse General leader Mylotse of The Monleys did not fight their battles fairly that Mylotse had offered to fight Mylotse often person or champion of different places but Mylotse did not dare to take it up and only fight by flanking him. But Mylotse will soon get to where he will not be able to flank. More, not more, and then he will have to fight; and More will like him to fight."

Absent pertible life, on the skirmish lines [illegible] of the dead and dead forth a few hours before the battle terrain country, had been killed and others of the gallent skirmish line crawled painfully back, were borne tenderly by stretcher bearers to the rear, [illegible] existence, or perish miserably in the hospitalions [illegible]

The main line of battle was built usually from four to six hundred yards in rear of the bloody skirmishing, indeed the distance usually depended greatly upon the conformation of the ground, and was always strongly entrenched all of these Glandelinians were expert at the use of the spade as they were of the rifle or pistol and [illegible] to erect fairly good protection [illegible] earth, and [illegible] the height of three to four feet. Sometimes higher, and pedestals with [illegible] feet, more frequently a great amount of [illegible] were seen to be placed upon the parapet, the ends resting upon [illegible] and to the ground to [illegible]

And the spaces between the head logs and the parapet permitted the troops to [illegible] their rifles at the enemy with [illegible] exposure of themselves, while the skids provided safety for the [illegible] to remain there without [illegible] any injury to be the men in the event of [illegible] by cannon ball, or shell. Immediately behind these works the troops would erect their shelter tents. On account of the continue firing from the Abbiesnnian rifle pits where they were not allowed to leave their quarters they were kept continually on the ground ready to move forward at any moment to support the long skirmish line, in an assault upon the Nationals or to resist an assault [illegible]

The officers did not permit muskets in any kind, and even camp fires were forbidden because of the fear of [illegible] fires and the latter regulation was as was however a dead letter except in very [illegible] where the men themselves would actually see the necessity of immediate danger. Officers and men [illegible] their staff of life, and they knew there was no better than [illegible] Thus started the interesting event that was to be called into battle line just as his coffee pot was beginning to bubble.

[illegible] night the men in the line of battle rested very lightly with their arms at their sides [illegible] never undressed, firing on the skirmish line always very noisy, and at times becoming like a general battle, continuing even all night, and frequently [illegible] unusual activities, the pretend the Nationals [illegible] provoked a lively fusillade, causing the troops on the main line to fall into ranks at once, ready for their [illegible] that night. Also at early dawn, during and after daylight.

Even when it ceased the battle was the time of battle. Hidden perhaps from the sight of the enemy were often numerous men on the skirmish lines; for it caught nearly all the bullets that overshot the skirmishers. One of the Glandelinian war correspondents whose name did Davidson Caldwell, And whose Alsace negspaper distributor of the Glandelinia city paper could long remember his experience. experience. He was seated just within a light barricade of earth built to protect his field desk, with him one of his enemy, when a rifle ball flew over, nipped a piece of skin from his head, whether [illegible] his writing pen from his hand, another [illegible] in his boot, another cut a lean in his ink bottle, and one more went through his hat, like a mourning last souls day was amusing to first, saw him throw his hand upon the injured spot, then dash down out of sight and hear him express himself in language not authorized by the Book of Common Prayer.

Sometimes at night the Abbiesnnians would open a general fire with his batteries and then the action would be really hot and exciting. On the summits of the ridges there would fin all along the edge undulating lightning like flashes, and the noise would reverberate until it sounded like a continuous thunder roll that, made up its mind to never stop; then tremendous upsear of salvoes and echoes which seemed to make every end of the nearest hill and mountain and valley yell and thunder its answer back in ten fold violence; and the shells with its stabbing flashes would burst at the most awkward moments and at unexpected places with earsplitting detonations; while the solid shot whi whistled like a screaming hurricane through the trees, frequently tearing off huge branches, sending down a shower of leaves that almost covered the soldiers like a snow fall and making it very uncomfortable and dangerous for them indeed. And to make it more thrilling these "Excellent Missiles" were eccentric enough and their ways past in finding out. In one case there came an elongated shot" which in our American civil war the Union soldiers would call a "Lamp Post" struck the ground at the foot of a tree not as large in width as itself this happening in front of the tent belonging to general Mylotze himself and where all his staff officers were congregating, stated at the time. The shot glanced and followed the tree struck about forty feet upward tearing off the bark and finally first cutting away a large limb and then splitting the tree, which in its fall completely wrecked the tent, and injured a number of the occupents, as well and chief figures Lemar Mylotze handsome hat and destroyed his eye; a certain kind of decoration which we generally call a "Black Eye" Rush Eye" The next shot came down another tree which fell upon a Mule, adjoining, breaking the leg of the mother general and injuring otherwise many others and killed an orderly, and breaking the arm of a private who was standing on guard, and sending him hobbling across the field, like a spinning wheel.

However these slight drawbacks did not disturb the spirits of the Glandelinia soldiers. They defiantly gathered in large knots near their color lines, playing card games, discussing the campaign, and prophesying as to the next movement. And in every regiment was some one who had seen somebody who had heard someone from headquarters say that according to latest attack upon the Abbisannian position would be made. Indeed there was no kind of newspaper no intelligence whatever from the outside world but surmise and imagination amply supplied by the delfeony. Usually canards more or less plausable were often set afloat, seemingly without pay foundation but they had the first merit of being false, that, in a measure, if it happened or was to be a tale of a disaster, it happened to these Christian deeds, or it had occured out in Calverinia, or down in Angelinia States. It was never seen the Glandelinian troops, [illegible] and confidence of the Glandelinia army under Mylotze that there was, never had been from any part of itself, a general Dargin swept over them the left, of Beppo Evangelism far as ever might have had a severe battle, the might have lost two or three hundred thousand men, yet the story was passed over as not of very important, it would not effect or affect the general result, and the commands which had, therefore, come to grief, would make for, it to morrow, or the day after and like the Christian armies to a finish. But after every story, probable or improbable had been told and commented upon, and after the men had exhausted the rideau, with reference to the immediate future, all would agree that no one knew anything about it, not even the Christian peggies. Fertile subjects for discussions at these veritable camp fires were the occurrences on the skirmish lines, lines the men who had just come in leading off narrating off with remarkable vividness and more vigor of expression than could be permitted in these pages, every incident of the days [illegible] and between deeds the good and also the bad traits of those who had been killed were discussed with the most remarkable freedom and the old adage de mortuis nil nisi bonum, was lost at utter defiance, and the like. As if, as sometimes happened and too frequently the soldier had been killed near the skirmish line, while just lacking up, it was unanimously voted that he was a "big fool", and it served him right "there was opportunities enough for a man to allow himself to be killed while in the strict line of duty, without poking around where he had no business whatever. Not that these Glandelinians were heartless about their fellow comrades but they regarded death as a necessary and familiar incident to soldiering, and they therefore had schooled into the habit of putting the best face upon their surroundings, and it would surely have been a spiritless army indeed if the troops would go into mourning over every comrade lost...

At frequent intervals, in the line of battle on little spurs, were redoubts, occupied by the field batteries. These were favorable opportunities for reconnoitering the Abbisannian lines positions and the like. Often a corps commander with his staff, and the many division and brigade and other commanders, came to such places on this kind of an errand, and their presence invariably attracted a large number of soldiers who were always curious to know the meaning of such of such a gathering. And such an unusual throng could not fail to attract the attention of the enemy, and this Abbisannian batteries would open a fierce fire of shell grape and canister, and at times high explosives, driving all but the gunners to shelter and making the scene a volcano of flame and dandin din.

A laughable circumstance occured at one time at one such time in the vinicity of Lee Coste lloss Fifthh Fifteenth Manguboo Battery. A large auto truck loaded with buckets, boxes, and into intrenching tools belonging to the glandelinian [illegible] Pioneer corps was covered with elder child slaves curiously looking on, when with a frightful shriek a solid shot plumped into the vehicle, and there was a tremendous eruption of boxes, buckets, picks, spades and slaves as if they had been vomited out of a volcano. The frightened child slaves all girls reached solid ground even before the buckets and tools ceased to fly in all directions and lit out for the rear of the glandelinian position at an astonishing gait for ten year old childfen.

Artillery duels of severe and savage character were of daily and nightly occurred, and always splendid practice was done by both sides. Dalderias first Manguboo battery of Mantoda Guns was particularly efficient, having gunners whose fire was as true to the mark as that of the best rifle men. And the range of these splendid guns was marvelous. [illegible] between this glandelinian battery and one of the Abbisannian batteries guns belonging to [illegible] corps the former pitched shells entirely over Cautalam Cautamala mountain and hit the top of the Falcons Nest while the latter barely reached the summit. [illegible]

A well known figure to general inspection was that of Frankie Jose [illegible] a skillful [illegible] of the glandelinian Golden Magazine who was often on the ground during [illegible] and frequently under dangerous fire, but his work [illegible] little established to [illegible] desired. He [illegible] the ground and position and then filled in [illegible] from memory when and where he could work with less strain upon his [illegible]

A hail of shot and shell mingled with torrents of rain fell daily for almost three weeks from the time the army went into line before Cautamala. On account of the [illegible] the roads became quagmires, and the movement of artillery and supply trains was all but impossible. The effect upon the men almost without proper shelter and subsisting on short rations of hard tack, pork and coffee was indeed most depressing. Our [illegible] were not [illegible] suffered to lag and there was continuous almost [illegible] [illegible] artillery fire all along the line with [illegible] artillery fire. All of these, in fact, the excitement of the conflict had a tendency for suffering from inclement weather and illy provisioned as the men were, inaction would have started a plague and death among the soldiers would have started by the wholesale, while action was health and vigor and kept the spirits of the men up. On the 12th of June a general gathering was seen on the summit of Mount Cautamala. The glandelinian forces within sight of this battle [illegible] it is to be a big party to be [illegible] their lines opened a general and terrific artillery fire all along the line with [illegible] shells, almost annihilating the columns on the instant and hurling an avalanche of rocks and fragments of trees to [illegible] down the steep slopes to their very feet. A few [illegible] the Abbisannian [illegible] and the [illegible] Mylotze [illegible] who managed to read the [illegible] said that general Lupo Turpo Emperor had been killed on their side during the [illegible] and about twenty thousand christian cavalry annihilated.

[illegible] was also a brigadier in the Fourth Army Corps of Abbisannia's state [illegible] by the Abbisannian [illegible] that time that Mylotze missile was fired [illegible] by General Mylotze in person, with a full knowledge of his identity and of his character. But it was an absurb statement to [illegible] manifestly [illegible] to [illegible] at the time. There was much [illegible] between [illegible] [illegible] and [illegible] Fifteenth Quarter battery of the Twenty Fifth Zaggabo Corps. The point in issue however was above property settled, the general [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] by [illegible] to the claim of a thirty belonging to General Melemeide [illegible] First Corps [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] troops were within short musket range. Then the Abbiesinnians opened fire, along a eighteen mile front, and a hundred gaps made in the long surges of the Landellinian columns by the National artillery itself could be seen more than six miles off. But the Landellinian soldiers manfully struggled on toward the upper slopes, and encountered works of long stone walls, conn cotton looms and earth and also of rocks and t stones behind which could be seen the countless numbers of soldiers in purple and red. From behind these positions leaped a very hell of flame from small arms, and batteries from right and left poured in an infilading fire of grape and canister, while others hurled hand-grenades, and sticks of explosives and ni nitro glycerine, a murderous fire that no human flesh and blood could stand.

The Landellinians were compelled to retreat. But this kind of charge was repeated by redoubled numbers, the scene was again a reverse but this time it told, the line of Abbiesinnians was suddenly galled by advancing small machine guns on the left and the gray wave though suffering again the same loss passed over the works, and drove the still stubbornly resisting Abbiesinnians sternly onward.

To the left of Lee castelloes division of assault was general Burgins which was the extreme left of the army. The latter command during a castelloes bloody and desperate assault overlapped the Abbiesinnian front, and eighteen brigades made a splendid charge, gaining the Abbiesinnian rever under a tremendous fire of shell and grape that threatened to destroy all the troops engaging a Mangebon and a Limmer manniac corps entire, and compelling the Abbiesinnians who were forced to release all these prisoners to re-arrange the lines with considerable loss of ground, great loss in killed, and wounded, and a large number of their own men taken prisoners by the very Mangebons and Limmerians themselves who were liberated by their comrades during the assault. Adgiaheids and others were equally successful on the right and as another result of the operations of that morning, the Abbiesinnians assaulted fiercely and by overwhelming numbers, and fiercely as shelled by six hundred Landellinian batteries were forced to abandon Mansfield and Pine ridge crowning in a portion of their forces to Falcons Nest and there giving forth a still more fierce resistance and repelling one big charge after another. This with fanatical and the sophorting, heavily timbered ridges, became the new Abbiesinnian line which was also semi-circular, its convexity again being presented to the Landellinian army, but never stopping the guns were firing.

The next day June the 15th a further advance was made, a fierce engagement raged with one million guns the fiercest fire-engagement of the campaign, on the other, severe battles of one kind or another in one day combined and as a consequence the Abbiesinnians were forced to abandon Guatamala ridge.

The Landellinians under Hooker, Archibald, Perrin, and Timberline made six fierce attempts to capture Falcons nest, but it might as well have been to try and capture a volcano when it is trying to destroy cities, for a hundred miles from its base, Hendrix was killed, Archie mortally wounded, and Perrin lost his horse while more men fell than rain on a house top during a thunderstorm and the noise was terrific.

The position of the Abbiesinnians was now as follows. Falcons Nest and Guatamala mount ains, their heavily timbered flanks and ridges being effectually covered the small town of Marie, garrison protected the railroads behind the mountains and covered all the avenues to the Arombrae Run, and other rivers. During these days of fierce engagements the rain again descended in torrents, flooding the country, rendering the roads worse than before, if it were possible, and drenching the, urging and counter surging battle lines to the skin and almost drowning the wounded who had fallen beneath everywhere, stealthily creeping these discouragements the Landellinian armies were pushed up under the coverest fire places against Guatamala, fighting each hour, perilous and Leo castelloes making the greater progress and hemming the enemy with their long range batteries.

During the night of the 17th skirmishing continued in a general way, the monotony being at times relieved by heavy artillery duelling until the 18th when a very general and determined assault was made upon the Abbiesinnian positions. This was the first, severest engagement thus far in the campaign to Malaga, army was now assigned the task of gaining a secure foothold at the brow in the mountains a point which marked the distinction between little Guatamala and big Guatamala and the crest of this attack fell upon general Baldwins division of the 9th Twentieth corps. The remainder of this command and Burgins seventeenth corps supported the movement while elsewhere other series of divisions were ready. Early after breakfast the troops were formed for the attack, concealed as much as possible by the timber. At seven o'clock three guns upon a small rise of ground near the left gave the signal for the advance and Baldwins assaulting columns extending for ten miles in serried lines dashed from in under cover like the sudden appearance of a mighty gray wave.

As soon as the troops emerged from their shelter the Abbiesinnian batteries opened upon them with grape and canister, and over their heads the Landellinian gunners poured answering volleys miles long shattering the woods in the National positions above with the explosions of shells.

The very ground and the hills shook with the tremendous concussions and every known missile of death hurtled through the air. On and on went the long gray lines at a keen run, passing beyond the rifle pits of their own skirmishers and entering upon the border land of the valley of the shades of death: shells tore chasms in their lines, hurled debris of rocks and earth about them but still on they pressed at a rapid pace, firing scarcely a shot, reserving all their energies for the supreme effort. They ran over the rifle pits of the Abbiesinnian skirmish lines without a thought of the fleeing occupants. Their goal was six hundred yards further on and upward. And then from the line of earth which held a hundred feet, seemed storm of lead which united with the volleys of artillery on either flank, bore down: countless thousands [illegible] at every pace of the irresistible advance men dropped by hundreds, mangled or dead. None stopped to help their friends, looking neither to the right or the left, they [illegible] bought their way with the rifle up the big gaps until continually short, shortening the line, but resolutely pressing on, the only instinct left alive was that of destruction. [illegible]

And now they came upon a long line of artificial entrenchments in front of the enemy's position reaching up the steep ascent of the foothill of Guatamala mountain. Hordines could be perceived behind these obstructions were more fresh troops in heavy formation than iron or steel, the men yelling like fiends [illegible] through, climbing over or under the entangled [illegible] top and twisted vines as best they could. It came slow and painful work and hundreds every minute fell to rise no more, and now from front and flank came a terrific fire of bullets, [illegible] than before, and every missile that the Abbiesinnian artillery could throw. The lines were irresistably crushed, and the rush of the blue shelter on the ground scattered, afterwards falling back and occupying the [illegible] of the battlefield to gather up the wounded.

Brief despatches between Generals Black Brooks and Pendrine and Alfredson with Gratterdon. The result was indeed another chapter in the lesson of war which with the Landellinian army from Schefal to private was speedily learning, for the direct assault upon newly fortified lines [illegible] became memory almost a history of the past as all [illegible] were founded upon the old traditions of warfare. In the days of [illegible] when a dense surging column might [illegible] with great impunity, but with [illegible] was soon borne down by sheer force of numbers and hosts of brave men [illegible] in offensive fire improved small arms of long range, [illegible] with [illegible] rifling shell, grape and canister rendered it [illegible] when [illegible] of veterans [illegible] Wonder the experiments.

All by [illegible] the Landellinian army to [illegible] the Abbiesinnian army to [illegible] fully efficient [illegible] how to [illegible] of heroism, statesmanship prepared [illegible] of [illegible] plan [illegible] to prevent success, the forces almost that such constant bloody fighting [illegible] with [illegible] every [illegible] they were [illegible] would [illegible] [illegible] could [illegible] [illegible] fair [illegible] at some critical [illegible] when [illegible] offensive [illegible] [illegible] absolute [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] that the [illegible] might [illegible] fully successful, arguing that strength of positions [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]

And now general Ismer Mylstre was fully convinced of the fruitless effort of his attempt to capture such an impregnable position as guatulma and guatul and also o of utamala in front and also of relocos Nest and therefore he again planned and carried into effect his peculiar tarist of "flanking" which as I will say in other words was always accomplished successfully by means of, brains, such which many another Glandelinian commander had failed to reach without a great loss of life Not that the frequent manoeuvres were bloodless for be it, but nevertheless he always managed to reduce the loss of life to a considerable extent, and saved his army from the usual loss of life. Manley and the other Glandilinian generals experienced in the battles he and they were fighting [illegible]

He determined again to leave the railroad and break off from his railroad communications, and make a detour, placing himself on the Angeline, on river between Heidi town and Pelcons Nest, thus compelling his clever adversary to abandon his works in order to avoid being cut off from the National government. The wagon trains were filled with hard bread and hard tack, coffee, and ammunition, while therefore the rations foods delivered were to be reduced to the lowest limit to guard against absolute starvation, in the event of pending operations being protracted beyond the time that was hoped for. [illegible]

The army of Mangabeus under general Dargin occupied the extreme left, and was under orders to march first, having the greatest distance to travel. Pending its movement its trenches were occupied by strong bodies of dismounted cavalry armed with sight shooters and fourty fives and grenades and able to make as much noise as the infantry which had before occupied those lines. And also every kind of precaution was to be taken in order the movement could be kept that no secret of it could be gained by the Nationals occupying the opposing positions. The march was to begin the 30th of June, the day previous after the ending of the battle, and on this day the Nationals Had displayed a white flag and proposed a truce to permit the burial of the dead on either side who had already lain upon the field for nearly three days. But even this was refused lest in some manner the plan might be exposed. At eleven o'clock of the night made out for the great movement it was started.

Who of the Glandelinians who went on the march that night ever will forget the weirdness of the tremendous spectacle, and the strangeness of his sensations and experiences. The sleeping army was aroused without the note of the bugle, or even the roll of the drum, and thus secrecy was the watchword of the hour. The long lines of the artillery and wagon trains moved with muffled wheels. Then out into intense darkness advanced the big and silent hosts. And from the side of every road the moving column might be felt but it certainly could not be seen. The army extending for miles and also literally walked by faith. Each one of the men following in the steps of the one he believed to be far in advance of him. The very ground was sodden because the heavy rains and therefore gave no sound of marching feet or hoofs. And feet and wheels rapidly converted the roadways into seas of mud.

Now as soon as it could be done the long lines of Glandelinian troops began to string out in the darkness until they reached over four times their ordinary ground even in marching order. The ranks were not compact even though well dressed, and each man went as he pleased, each the head of the column moved faster, but the regiment met some obstacle and was forced to halt and therefore the soldiers in the rear not knowing what had happened began to close up on their very comrades in front, and many were the collisions into darkness [illegible]

Then suddenly despite orders to be quiet there broke out a sound that would make any person who might be close by in the darkness believe he stood on the brink of the bottomless pit. From many points was heard angry dialogue that is not seen in any book of good words, the men being forgetful of all injunctions to keep silence.

"Why the——don't you keep up you muff, what the—— are you running over me for you runaway horse?" Hold up your——ears and keep it out of my face and eyes——your eyes and so on with countless variations. Then through some reason or other one suddenly finds himself suddenly struck to the ground by the depth and consistency of that beautiful mud, and while making great efforts to pull himself out, those hurrying on from behind stumble over him in the darkness until a score or more men are piled on top of one another before the word "ease up" can be passed back. Oh the profanity and blasphemies and imprecations of that dreadful night marche. Indeed the purgatory divisions of the mother tongue stood revealed in all its elaborateness and comprehensiveness and yet reinforged as it was by copious selections from foreign languages it proved utterly inadequate for such an emergency. Oaths and dreadful blasps blasphemies and obscenes words of the last intricate construction construction and far reaching meaning were thrown in tumult tumult of sounds upon the midnight air with a continuity and vehemency vehemence which left not the slightest doubt as to the sincerity of the swearer or blasp blasphemer, he damned all things visible and invisible, known, unknown and unknowable. The Glandelinian government and the Nationals Nationals were alike relegated side by side to the grim gulf of the shades of the foever cursed; then too the swearer wished that Mylstre and Nero were both in the infernal regions" to fight it out there themselves" and further expressed the opinion and conviction that it would be comparative bliss to be there himself, nor was the swearing or blasphemies spasmodic as spasmodic or occasional but persistent and unanimous as is often heard among the fierce and wicked Glandelinian soldiers. Shortly after midnight an unusually great blaze of light burst from guatumala and a forest was was burning on its summit. Not by the nationals and then it was known that the nationals was also in motion toward the Angeline Ismer Mylstre had found as only a strategist can himself, Nero knew by intuition what the movement of his antagonist might be indeed, it was the step he himself would have taken if similiary situated, and he hastened to anticipate it.

Therefore there was no longer any reason for the marching Glandelinian army to try and conceal itself, nor was it even attempted, and now at intervals along the columns of Glandelinian troops blue rock, and green, white and yellow and pink lights were fired to guide their quickening steps. The scene therefore thus revealed, could never be imagined, and but faintly described even by Victor Hugo, could have revealed [illegible] revelled in the spectacle, pre might have sketched it and pulled it as a Dark Night in Hell.

The forested revealed against the [illegible] background of mountain and forest in broad relief in an instant hosts of gray uniformed men moving in ghostly gray uniforms hot whiting with promisich and [illegible] parade, or revies but pleading along very irregularly but each man as best he could for himself to do. They carried their guns in every possible position and the very faces were ghastly in the [illegible] unnatural trig tricolored glares. Here were countenances of dogged determination uncomplaining patience and hopeless weariness many were patient and bandages about about the face or head to cover wounds [illegible] limped painfully. At intervals from [illegible] elevations the glare of colored lights threw the distorted and exaggerated images of the moving hosts in bold relief against [illegible] gray phantoms marching as it seemed in air.

[illegible] They plodded on [illegible] yet rapidly along, passing by the Omar [illegible] Civilians, the Miss Gilestinians, and the Mangabeys, and others, the army of Glandelinians reached Dargins corps, the extreme left of the army. It was the early morning of the First of July 1886. Waiting and [illegible] long enough to make coffee [illegible] Mangabeys against [illegible] in open [illegible] in their [illegible] into the [illegible] troops against [illegible] [illegible] from their [illegible] into the [illegible] and fourteen miles from Guatul. The night march had been upwards of thirty seven miles but [illegible] progress of the troops was arrested, and the skirmishing was again employed [illegible]

The National army was immediately alarmed, Ismer Mylstre had therefore planned to deliver a blow while his Christian enemy was crossing the Angeline [illegible] and therefore he was forced to confess to a feeling of great disappointment on making the quick discovery that Nero had previously make made preparations to intercept him and had quickly constructed works on the south side of that stream and across it to bend it over the north and along the Chickadee Creek and now occupied them in force with every appearance of making a stand. The army of Guerlens held the right flank of the vast Glandelinian army extending along Chickadee Creek. Gallant and desperate charges were made frequently and in quick and endless succession, and considerable ground gained by Dargin, Logenia, Borger, and plain nightlingers divisions but at great loss as the Abbiesmnians resisted every ste step of ground though they were driven back from work to work. In the movement by centerlines division the latter command was led by general Adelaide Idi's 2d Ecuador Brigade under the very eye of the divisional commander. In this affair the Virginia suffered very severely, every one of its field officers being killed or wounded and their general disabled, while a colonel was killed by the concussion of an exploding shell. Not a bruise was found on his body nor was a drop of blood started.

July the second the Abbiesmnians themselves in most heavy masses and under cover of a tremendous cannon fire that threatened to destroy all in its wake like a raging tornado made a series of most vigivigorious and counter assaults but though the nationals made the most desperate and determined efforts to regain the works of which they had been dispossessed they were each time dri en back with a terrible number of men and officers and two gen generals slain and more frightful numbers wounded. At the first three charges, two while lines of attack a was completely annihilated, and the other lines of attack shot to pieces.

The only chapter of information recieved by the glandelinian troops from the outer worldds world,, during these violent and bloody operations was through the medium of captured papers found among Abbiesmnians prisoners known as the Angelinia Agathia Daily noise news and to these contained very much according what could be really called war news. However the fire eating class of A bbiesmnian editors was not yet extinct and little as to be found in their journals except boasting of the mni achievements of their own troops, and slanders at the expense of the rebels themselves. But the main knocking however was about manley, how his men were murdering women and children during every advance and comj committing outrages never known in history since it began. But one issue of the Angelinia Agathia News dated June the 28th spoke very contemptuously of general John Manley in particular and of his sensible glandelinian general who, should be fighting on the patriotic side, instead of leading the armies of the rebellion and in profit prophesying that the courage of Marleyn army would soon disappear when the cowardly of Jimmie Vivians or his brother would dashed in their movements as they hurriedly would, in breaking the railroad in possession of the Glandelinian armies and cut off all the supplies for Manley and his " CONTEMPTIBLES".

He that is so Manley attributed his spirit in battle to plentiful pot-projections of brandy and that " Monchima " that his courage was that of a " Cowardly Cat" that with a glorious battle by always running from the " Christian Dog " who chases cowardly puppy into kitchen; if he pinches to eat a " Christian Dog " in person face to face, why does he not fight Governor Vivian in a glass bath space, and leave the armies to settle it out afterwards in the style they see both the abandonment of Cathmandu mountain by Hero was refered to as a fine exhibition of " of " strag strategy which would lead the army under Lanner Mylstan to certain destruction. In the papers, the writers gathered, all glandelinian generals except Beppo Nevans; Lanner Mylstan, Leonia Melbourne Lehelly Lords-Gargerbo and Josiphs Jamin, of unusual cruel cruelty and in humanity. The Angelinia Agathia Daily News went that on one occasion when Federals troops surrounded a Cambridge, crowded with women and children a flag of truce was displayed by the Federal garrison after a severe skirmish, and the question was asked by one of the generals present " What do you want?"

" We wish to surrender to save the lives of the women and children of the town"

" No, with your surrender we cannot let you have quarter but to destroy all before us. fight on as we give no quarter"

Lying on the opposite bank of the deep and beautiful Magdalene Run creek, purple and gray again confronted each other. The army of Langhorne had forked its way down the Glandelinian creek to its mouth and the opposing Greenbrian valley with the Glandelinia merchants stream, while general Manley's lightly manned made a judgement on the river further to the left, a regular army preparing lines for a general battle at this point. The tactical history of this campaign by which Lanner Mylstan again forced his Christian adversary to retreat do not necessary to this narrative as it may take too much paper. The next problem was to force a passage across the stream which was opposed by all of Manley's ground army.

CHAPTER SIXTY.

The[illegible]

THERE THE LINE OF BATTLE ON THE ANGELINE RUN. A BLOODY MARK MARCH.
DESTRUCTION OF ABRAHAMIAN HILLS. MANLY'S MASTERLY RETREAT. IN IS SUPERSEDED BY VIVIANANA AND SENT TO RICHMOND. A GRAND AND BLOODY CONFLICT. GENERAL FABRINE WOUNDED. A FAMOUS MANDANOS DIVISION COMPLIMENTED BY GENERAL MYLSTER. THE COMMANDER, VERSUS, ANDREWS. THE BATTLE OF LOST TOWN AND BLIND. THE BATTLE OVER MYLSTERS RIGHT. THE TROOPS FIGHTING ON BOTH SIDES OF TOWN RUNS. THE MANDANOS DIVISIONS DESTROYED. CAPTURE OF BOTH GLANDELINIAN AND ABRAHAMMIAN DIVISIONS. A GLANDELIAN GENERAL CAPTURED. FIERCE HAND TO HAND FIGHTING. DEATH OF GENERAL HARDSOUTH. JOSEPH ANDREW COMMANDS. THE ABRAHAMIANS TO BE DESTROYED. OTHER INCIDENTS OF THE BATTLE.

THE BATTLE ON THE THIRD DAY. THE ABRAHAMMIAN DIVISION. A BITTER AND DESPERATE STRUGGLE. CAPTURE OF THE SEVENTEENTH MANDANOS DIVISION, AND DEATH OF THE BRAVE GENERAL. DARKIN SUCCEEDED BY HOWARDSON IN THE COMMAND OF THE ARMY OF THE MANDANOS. BITTER FEELINGS AMONG THE TROOPS OVER MANLEY AND HIS WICKED MINIONS AND THEIR MASSACRES MASSACRES. THE REASONS OF LANNER MYLSTER, AND THE RAISING GLANDELINIAN GENERALS AND WHAT THEY DID.

[illegible] lying on the opposite banks of the beautiful Angelinia run, the river in its former condition was now [illegible] portion of the army of the [illegible] which action in which action [illegible] the [illegible] were very bloody, a couple of days had been spent in [illegible] army and [illegible] the army of Manley had assigned to its old [illegible] from one point to another until the Glandelinian artillery from [illegible] a fire of shot and shell that swept down everything within range. [illegible] on the morning of the 14th of July, on a very hot day the army of Langhorne [illegible] a new [illegible] artillery, and severely attacks elsewhere marched forward and carried works at ten different points but was [illegible] at the twenty-first [illegible] [illegible] from [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] than the bayonets or the Nationals or their dangerous bowie-knives were the Clandelinii Clandelinian forces learned that the Abbiesannian government had withdrawn Pero, not that he was considered an insufficient commander but that he was needed very badly by Emperor Vivian elsewhere, and therefore general Vivianunna was appointed in his place and he took command with the army which had so long opposed him and also added to it his own and general Hansonia's ulce. Pero was afine strategist and had so conducted his retreat sopractically to lose nothing from Lumbeau Creek to Weld Except the territory he had been obliged to abandon and the men killed, wounded, or captured in the severe actions, he had scarcely lost a straggler, or do such of his equipage not succeeded in checking the much dreaded loner Mattze and his "Vandal Cohorts"

("4927

but he was a fighter, and as he had to be withdrawn the Abbiesannian government needed another good soldier who You could fight, and keep his face to the march and therefore none can found who could equal general Mary be except Vivianna Angelinia Agathia when they recided in that city expressed themselves in various ways pertinent and otherwise, but the climax was reached when an old guarian colonel remarked that he could prove that he was really general Vivianunnas son and that he could that there was no better christian general outside of concentinian Aranburg that fought under the Abbiesannian flag, and that if you had him down if he got a up again he would fight once with ten fold fury every time, to kill him before the fight was over, no matter how often you had him down if he got a

This anecdote carries all that such an exhibition of nerve was good evidence of the fighting qualities of the new commander. However this may be general Mattze was doubtless satisfied that the change of commanders betokened more vigorious measures, and made his dispositions accordingly, sending notice of the fact to every part of his big army and notifying his subordinates to be prepared at all times for sharp and unexpected battle as Vivianunna was a man who struck and does not retract. He then thinking it was necessary telegraphed Bengo Prime to come and join him.

The troops greeted the news of Vivianunnas appointment with as much an intelligent as the officers and generals and expressed great satisfaction with the appointment regarding general Francis Vivianunna as a cool headed fellow, brave, and a man who must be watched at all corners of the " Gith"

July 20th the Clandelinian army encamped on Mount Imidi which is one of the Mannahuse overlying the left flank on the flat of the Evangeline St Clare. The Abbiesannian army lay encamped for the night without great precaution which made it appear that Vivianunna was not such a fighting as he was to be. The attack was renewed the next day, and was kept up with little intermission the time almost at the point of the bayonet but the resistance of the Nationals this time was almost a record breaker in these operations several officers of which broke under the nightmare, and seventeen lost life, thousands out of seven) and twenty five generals, killed and wounded- an extremely large proportion of its strength while the loss of the nationals was a record breaker for being small.

It was on the first of these the days of battle on the Evangeline St Clare road, July 20th that general Francis Vivianunna received a wound which not only retired him from active service altogether, but deprived him of the opportunity of winning great personal distinction, besides it was indirectly the cause of immense loss to the Clandelinian army. Had he not been wounded in all human probabilities he and some would have fallen into his hands that day, the bloody battle which has fought on that memorable day would have no place in this story, and many others would have been spared a gory fate that befell them under the general Vivianunna division holding the extreme right of the army under Lap, cattelin advanced in splendid order in the face of a withering fire that never ceased nor slackened in intensity, driving before it a strong force of Conventinians and whimsio Abyssinians and captured trenches occupied by Minkie Abyssinians and Angelinians from southern Calvania.

The general had left his horse at the foot of the slight rise of ground and ascended the slope during the remain remainder of the terrific charge with his men to lead them on to final victory, and which was then occupied by the Triparigenians which were strongly posted on the eminence the key to the position of the National army during this battle of Evangeline St Clare road. It was evident to him that he was well on the flank of the Abbiesannians and he was making his disposition to take quick advantage of the opportunity, when as he and his long tyck line of charge reached the summit, the Abbiesannians who concealed thereon suddenly rose like a wave and poured in a fire which all but destroyed half or more by the whole line of attack. His side Colonel Gesumunn received a score of bullets through his body and was instantly killed, the general fell pierced in the thigh was a rifle ball and was at once removed to the rear. during the confusion incident to this untward disaster and the assignment of another officer to the command of what was left of the shattered line of charge, a strong division of Vivianunnas infantry under general double Day federal was hurried to the support of the line on the summit, and the magnificent opportunity was lost these Abbiesannians somber charge during a late and all but destroyed the Clandelinian charge and killed the new general and thirty other officers

General Vanderlinca injury was so serious that indeed he had hard work to save his l leg from the army surgeons who seemed determined to amputate off, but he was indeed ful of unusual vigour for a Clandelinian general and stoutly insisted that he could not allow it to be done. Seven days later he was sent to his home in a train carrying a truce flag to Clandelinia City and thus ended his service in the battle fields

Mention may be made of this fourteenth division of the eighteenth and seventeenth Corps in the preceding battle recalling somewhat some of its strange phenomenal history and the unusual order of its commanders. Gutherian great generals who led it from first to last and of all which fatal during each charge, two were members of the Clandelinian Ku Klux Klan or organization, one of this number holding at different times the portfolios of this office, and its treasury department of these generals all commanders except Tamerlinca. This command first under general Tamerlin all throughout and on brave Clandelinian soldiers as can be imagined was the Fourth Division of the original Army of the Mongahela States as that body can now be constituted and consisted at the time of battle most roundly. In that desperate battle on Evangeline St Clare road it sustained heavier casualties than any part, and its list of killed and wounded was one of fifth of the casualties of the entire army, seventy eight divisions of Armyof the Mongahela in all as this division lost. Tamerlinca and drove the Nationals before by and Richford Creek crossed general Lotze made the occasion for assuming a congratulatory order wherein he said

The title of the "Fighting Mongahela division" was at Evangeline St Clare road has been burnished with additional splendor and it is unfortunate indeed that it lost so gallant a commander as General Francis Tamerline? Shortly before this the division was ordered due east the southern portion of the field of battle and won great renown. [illegible] following [illegible] copy of this order in the hands of general Vivianunna and which can be seen [illegible] the estimation in which he held ge general Mylotzes command

HEADQUARTERS [illegible] DIVISION, [illegible] ARMY CORPS
ARMY OF THE MONGAHELA
MYLETZES MAIN ARMY, IN NORTHERN ANGELINIA,

Brigadier general Vanderhuyp Commanding 4th Mongahela Division, 4th Army Corps

Dear sir. Permit me through you to convey to the officers and men of your division an expression of my deepest regret that the sad necessities of battle at this time should deprive your command of good commander as General Francis Tamerline. Our divisions were first to move across the [illegible] and through storm of fire and destruction we have been side by side [illegible] and I feel as if we were [illegible] as if he was my own son. I need not say to you that I sincerely sympathize with personal an and official respect for I hope I have convinced you in person [illegible] the other of five generals who led his division on occasion after occasion that no officers could have been more valorous and strategic and their important duties than they have ever been during this campaign and countercall, and absence of their having been away from their posts of honor and command has kept and predicted a [illegible] and brilliants fortune. Indeed with very few exceptions your division of [illegible] or its [illegible] behavior in camp on guard, or the march and in battle reflect great honor and I regret on [illegible] and this encounter to be placed to your credit. Again hearty thanks and I assure you that I did [illegible] the charge and hope for the event that will bring us together again. With sentiments of the highest respect your friend and brother in [illegible]

[illegible] Major general in chief."

Tamerlinca division was a part of the army and also with which general Gargin marched across the Chickamoo Creek in his effort to reach the rear of the Abbiesannian line near Marietta creek. It participated in the first charge of this battle with great gallentry and in spite of the right wing being wiped out in which Tamerline was wounded continued on with its onarge at the other section, but the charge was disasterious all along the line and it sustained great loss. General Brutalton was the first to take command in Tamerlinos stead and he recieved a wound in the lung and he was immediately relieved of his command. He was taken to the rear and died shortly afterwards. He was an officer of tried courage, and a man of fine personal traits and never with adherents as other Dandelinian generals have who serve under the Manleys and other wicked generals serving in the western drama of war. General Dr the line was succeeded by general [illegible] Lomboli of Omaria and the divis ion division reinforced went forward in the third charge retaining the same numerical dest designation from then afterward during the action after the line carried a portio portion of the works several of the old brigades were transferred to other commands which were hard pressed by the Abbiesnnians and their place was taken by the Marian Division also a magnificent body of men of the fourteenth Corps of Mangaboos formerly commanded by the same general who now was their division general. These troops joined by the 32th Zimmermannian Brigade which belonged to the fourteenth division from the beginning also was added and the charge was taken [illegible]

[illegible] General Campbell was an officer of superior ability, great personal courage and determination, and a man of irascible temper. It was [illegible] due generally to the resistance of the Nationals in battle to say that his [illegible] ability was in large measure also due to [illegible] to other causes especially the was question of child slavery while his [illegible] were hardly bestowed undeservedly.

But he were the loss when his rage was [illegible] it was indeed something frightful. upon one occasion he called a [illegible] regimental commander subsequent for uttering child slave within his lines whom it was not permitted under certain conditions and as he did not have [illegible] of the United Mantinos entered in an absolute way and he would not have [illegible] to free the whites entirely and send them on passage from Nolde city to Angelinia Agathia to be set free by other United National Government and have a bail and chain put on him and [illegible] slave holder! Maybe he would doubtless have experienced this punishment and lost his slaves had he not deserted the army and taken the slaves with him and thereby made his way to Manley and join him joined him. In another instance a wealthy child slave owner and planter of Prepa living in the Vincetti [illegible] Dandelinian [illegible] swamp came to General Gomboli and applied for a permit to ship a large quantity of crops to the army under Manley. This [illegible] was granted [illegible] a firm [illegible] officers of no small rank who stood accused of conniving with National owners also to place [illegible] and the request was [illegible] made by the head [illegible] of the swamp concerned child slaves. Gomboli was a man of [illegible] incorruptible integrity.

" You can ship your crops sir" said he addressing the citizen" under the regulation of the gargoylian Treasury department, [illegible] the crops, [illegible] grown by your own hand also. You must furnish proof of loyalty and subscribe to the oath of allegiance."

" But general" was the response [illegible] crops [illegible] were of child slaves in the swamp [illegible] [illegible] of my crop in government [illegible]

" What swamp sir" angrily asked general Gomboli.

" Near Heldi [illegible] sir"

The enraged general ordered the Dandelitian to proceed no further [illegible] you dirty [illegible] infamous [illegible] under [illegible] Europe [illegible] you come here to ask [illegible] and take under the [illegible] Dandelinia and [illegible] cruelty to children and to keep children [illegible] dangerous swamps infested by the most dangerous and [illegible] HEADQUARTERS [illegible] [illegible]

" But general [illegible]

This was the last [illegible] The enraged general had the fellow speedily ejected in a fashion that would discredit the most [illegible] moving picture. And the end was not yet. General Gomboli sent for his engineer officers [illegible] Captain [illegible] said he [illegible] citizen had made this [illegible] and [illegible] money to let me ship his crops to Manley. [illegible] and as we cannot hold this place without [illegible] swamp for us would [illegible] a good position to assist the Nationals [illegible] all the slaves to me. I'll ship them at once under a flag of truce to the Nationals. I'm fighting for my Country and [illegible] not to uphold child slavery. No wonder the whole Cause we are fighting for is cursed. And slaves in a dangerous swamp."

Forty eight hours later for the battle of the Evangeline St [illegible] road the plantation of the [illegible] rebel citizen just about ten miles from the city was razed to the ground, the children were enroute to Angelinia Agathia and a battery of artillery planted on the ruins of what shortly before was one of the biggest plantation in a swamp. In the charge that he had received a wound not fired by an Angelinian but by the rebel citizen himself and he was brought back to the rear where he died not long afterward, while the citizen was caught and hung as an assassin as an assassin

General Waldro Natcher succeeded to the command. He decided to lead on the charge and in doing so was was instantly killed. Then general Caldwell became command and now an emergency arose calling for additional force, a requisition upon general Caldwell's part of the charge, and his mortally wounded before the works he he captured was the end of the business. One best known general in command of the Mangaboos was general Francis Dargin. He was a tall man of most commanding appearance stoutly and compactly built and so admirably proportioned that neither his height nor weight left any unpleasant impression, of fair complexion, with blue eyes beaming with sympathy and good nature, wearing a short beard, somewhat inclined to wh in intense black and though a Dandelinian he was an magnificant specimen of the ideal Spanish type. He was a man of the most indomina indomitable resolution and great personal courage. In the saddle or on foot while directing the movements of al his command, he was decided, severe and exacting, but he knew how to be very affable and in a social way was a most admirable gentleman.

In all the engagements he fought he attracted special attention by his wise dispositions and distinguished himself in a most marked manner. The recommendation for his promotion to the grade of lieutenant general was made by General Maletze by telegraph. The appointment was made by the Dandelinian government immediately and it seemed as if all but Manley joined with their great captian in the verdict that he "The promotion was ever more fairly made, nor more honestly earned."

The next day indeed was one of sorrow and disaster though later the awful disaster was absolutely retrieved but probably for the Dandelinian side in general it may be that the sorrow will always endure endure as long as patriotism and he heroism are honored.

It may take a whole lot of words to repeat how general Vivianna made his his brilliant assault--- how he thwarted up the Dandelinian right wing, how the gallant general Frank Gerdrude, fell, and how general Pargins inspiring presence and that of his officers were assurabes of final victory, but I will have to take it out of the narrative such as this however imperfect it, and there were many men com non-combatants of both sides who were eye witnesses who witnessed the personal heroism of the individuals of both sides.

After the action of July the 23th the army of Mangaboos was moved further to the right [illegible] of the left as was formely, in order to keep pace with the Abbiesnnian lines which were being extended in that direction and making well school unusual demonstrations, and at that time there was considerable cannonading which had grown in intensity. The fourteenth Division of the eighteenth corps of Mangaboos commanded by general Gibsonia held the extreme left of this portion of the Dandelinian army. The troops had worked hard that night in under artillery fire, entrenching their position and so urgent was their necessity and that of every man that the flank and rear were picketed in park by the headquarters guard who were among the very first upon whom fell the attack of the Abbiesnnians late the next morning.

Early in the morning of July 24th general Gibsonias front line was advanced to a considerable distance, meeting with little opposition, and inasmuch as it was said the Abbiesnnians were abandoning the positions in general guegans front, general Maletze concluded that Heldi [illegible] was being yielded to him without further struggle.

He was speed especially undeceived. General Vivianna had merely shifted his army in order to make a desperate and successful attack upon a quarter of the vast Dandelinian army. [illegible] was scarcely expected.

About seven thirty o'clock in the morning, unusually heavy firing in the rear of the here hospital name near general Gibsonia headquarters gave warning of what was really to occur. By treat and most desperate efforts the many ambulances carrying of outwinding the sick and the wounded, about four thousand, five hundred in number, were driven under fire to the safest places to be found, the right and front just behind the general line of battle. The headquarters wagons followed their movement being speedily hastened in great confusion and excitement by the advance of the Abbiesnnian skirmishers, closely supported by a full line of battle extending as far as [illegible] could reach, moving swiftly over the ground just so quickly vacated enveloping the flank and rear of Gebsinons troops and reaching as far as Dodgers Sixteenth and Seventeenth Corps. As a matter of fact, according to the story, by reason of the, inclination of the long assault ing line of Lavender and Dodgers cummuns sustained the first attack. His troops were marching down the road in column through a branch of a swamp to connect with the Twenty Fourth Corps. They at once halted faced the Abbiesnnians, and delivered a fire which withered two lines of the Nationals, and che checked the onset almost on the instant.

General general pargin was poorly prepared to met the assault, h e his rear being presented to the Abbiesnnians, and the attack fell upon him with the most dreadful force. He was fortunate however in having on the left and right of his line two divisions of Scoudlers and Mangaboos formerly commended by Tamerline noted for its thorough discipline and incomparable esprit de corps. These troops already under fire were ordered, to the reverse of their main line of works, to occupy the side hereto presented to the Abbiesnnian army.

This movement was successfully accomplished except by the Thirtiethnieth N Mangaboo Corps which with a two hundred gun battery was captured after a heroic and desperate fight. The Mangaboos were unsulted in front and rear and also upon the flank, and large portions of the command repeatedly moved over their own works, from side to sidett repel the attack. So rapid and fierce t were the movements and so much was also crowded into a few hours that it would be utterly impossible to gain an entirely correct idea of the consequences of the events. Cool headed man who were upon the ground vary as much as three hours in timing signal oir curmstances with which they said to be personally connected but nevertheless discrepnancies of this nature were by no means peculiar to this battle, where the foes of both sides fought probably closer together than any conflict in the war.

The works of the Mangaboos were charged by six separate divisions of winkle and Munchkin Abyssinkillians in succession. General Organ the first was drivenoff with terrific loss but taking away with it however as prisoners, the Thirtieth Mangaboo [illegible] Corps as before mentioned. General Hansonias g rge followed in one of the most magnificent charges of the war, which led to the most desperate fighting of this line of battle but was finally repulsed with their chief commander killed. The other attacks were likewise unsuccessful and was made by general francis gsmiths divisions and was almost the same in violence as Hansonias.

Hans Hansonias assault was most courageous and persistent in the highest dregree degree and very severe. His troops actually reached the works of the very Mangaboos but so fierce was the Glandelinian rifle fire that they were unable to surmount them and fell in regiments for every volley. And the two contending lines wr were only seperated by high but thin earthworks, less than shoulder high, and the fighting became desperate, promiscuous and savage. Mustkes clashed against musket, and bayonets were used wickedly and murderously, and the many color bearers of both sides flaunted their standards in face of each other.

[illegible] the Fifteenth Corps of the Mangaboo Division, general pargin commanding sp sprank to the reverse of th of their works, they were confronted by the fourty Fourth Abyssinkillian infantry division of Concentinians whose commander general Hendro Frigley, waved his light hat as he led the charge. General pargin wad was determined to capt re the Abbiennian general as soon as possible. A young Abbiennian soldier by Frigley's side and by this direction as the rebel soldiers plainly observed fired six shots at Dargin but without effect. Meanwhile the fierce Abyssinkillians despite the fire of the rebels moving them down in plateons for every volley advanced nearer and nearer and Dargin discovered that, instead of thinking of being repulsed, they meant fight in bitter earnest. fourteen colon bearers of this ne Abyssinkillian division were shot down in rapid successions.

When the last fell the fiercely contending lines were at such close quarters that the flag was quickly torn from his dying grasp by a Mangaboo colonel who in turn was shot dead by an Abbiennian soldier who regained the flag right at the works under the faces of the rebels.

The Abyssinkillians were now at the very foot of the Glandelinian works, and to deliver a fire upon them with effect it was necessary for the Glandelinians to hold their muskets over the works almost perpendicularly. Dargin daringly jumped upon upon the parapet and leveled a pistol at Frigley ordering him to surrender, but the latter only shook his head defiantly and urged his men to make a final dash. He foolishly came nearer however until he was fairly against the works. Then general Dargin watching his opportunity leaned over the parapet, fastened his grasp upon the collar of Frigleys coat and with the aid of a lieutenant close by dragged him struggling desperately inside within a few minutes every Abyssinkilian soldier who was not killed or lying upon the field, wounded upon the field was either on the retreat or a prisoner. General Frigleys wound was severe however and he died a few days later.

Meanwhile the battle raged elsewhere on the lines of the Mangaboo division with much greater fury. Six times during as many desperate abbiennian charges the Nationale fell dead or wounded as fast as the leaves are torn from the trees dur in during an autumn storm but six times they came close and six times the colors of every Abyssinkillian or Abbiennian regiment and there were hundreds that were displ di displayed defiantly within a the reach of the hands of the Glandelinians we who were surprised beyond measure at the desperate courage of the nationals.

The F 44th Donaldsian Division all but reached the works and drove the Glandelinians back a distance of several yards dosing in the attempt more than one half their number from a single volley of maketry and grape and canister all along the line.

Four thousand soldiers of the Glandelinians, and as many of the Abyssinkillians Abyssin Abyssinkillians died together in a most desperate merciless struggle on top of the very defenses. Colonel [illegible] of the same Abby Abyssinkillians division with a few comrades made a successful attempt to crossthe works in the center and captured a Glandelinian general, a captian and two lieutenants and more than their own number of privates but was killed as he retreated with them, and they were retaken by the equally desperate Glandelinians.

A Mangabbo jumped upon the works on the right, swinging his long gun over his head singing" All Glandelinia Forever " March and died with the unfinished words upon his lps. lips. General Daniel jones commanding the 54 division of Glandelinians of the Nineteenth Corps of Abyssinkillians who wounded and while being carried from the battlefield on a litter was killed by a shell, and all those accompanying him were killed or wounded. On the right side of Glandelinian fred Mason [illegible] insite of the 22th Mangabbo regiment also of the Mangabbo division fought through the battle. He was a sharpshooter, and here advanced with his cordiuth leading and for him. Three of these fellows were killed on his side. A gallant Glandelinian signal corps officer in his station in the top of a high oak tree overlooking the old town was forced to make A precipitate precipitate retreat as his observatory being demolished by a bombshell.

The fighting of this bloody order by the Abyssinkillians was the occasion of the death of the brave Glandelinian general Gerardus Hunsonia [illegible] mistly believed by misconcaption between our and our own troops that fatal morning. General Hendrude was riding with his staff and the [illegible] part Hendrude was riding with his staff and there were a number of officers and thousands of men of the fourteenth Mangaboo who had been wounded by the terrific storm of the day before. Among themwas General Hendrude [illegible] [illegible] General Hendrude and his staff to whom he spoke [illegible] Hendrude had [illegible] him and his command upon their good conduct the day previous. Then some time later the behind his own lines for disposition [illegible] the Victoria of General Dodge's corps. There he passed in full view of many of the troops in the Glandelinian corps of the several Glandelinian divisions. He was a man of fine appearance, about [illegible] his commanding presence [illegible] his Glandelinian [illegible] [illegible] his staff [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] and an instinct to avenge the death of his commander and his best friend at that... he spurred his high stronger strong charger to its utmost speed and dashed along the line of his troops somewhat disordered in many places, restoring confidence everywhere by his gallant bearing and sharp assuring words.whether or not he did shriek the words which some have attributed to him" Herdrage, revenge his death." is not to be proved here, but nevertheless his action spoke them, even if his lips lipx lips had been silent. What general Manley was in the west, that was general Jack Brooke at Heidl. Indeed his presence itself was an assurance of the bringing victory out of almost defeat and of a tru triumph shortly to be wrenched from a strong determined christian foe who already believed himself the victor.

Meantime the gaps in the main line of the Glandelinian army between the nineteenth and seventeenth corps into which the gallant Herdrude rode meeting his death, had been occupied, the first troops to arrive being the big A Counties and Amercencian divisions the fiercest landelinian fighters there is.

Thiese commands were fortunate armed with dangerous fourty two cart. ourtridge repeating rifles and battalions of machine and field artillery, and meeting the Abbiesannian charge on a long front it opened a murderous fire of minnie and grape and canister tearing the Abbiesannian line of charge down to the very level of the ground. as it delivered the first roaring volley the left of the Abbiesannian line bent forward, the right melted into fragments, the survivors almost halting, as if to avoid the deadly charge or discharge, and then rushed forward with redoutled redoubled speed oly only to be speedily annihilated.

The remainder of this portion of the Abbiesannian wave of onslaught attempted to reach and bear down the Mic-collestinian troops before they could reload their pieces. But rapidly as lever could be moved and trigger drawn, the Mic-collestinians and Amerdencians never ceased their terrible fire, and the red and purple lines annihilated in front , staggered, halted, and then fell back only to go down like rain as they fell back leaving behind them many of their shattered battlefie f battleflags and a small number of prisoners.

The placing of this division of mic-collestinians and others was in obedience to the last orders of general Herdrude ever gave, but their execution came too late to save the life of the gallent general. From this moment on to the bloody end, although before repeated Abbiesannian charges the Glandelinian troops swayed backwards in places and the troops at times found it necessary to fight from both sides of their work works the general strength of the position was ensured and the possibility of any overwhelming disaster averted.

The battle raged most fiercely throughout the whole day without a moments pause not only in front of the Mangaboo divisions but along isner Mylettes whole line and the Abbiesannians made some charges that broke all records for violent attacks.

How Dargins divisions fared has already been told. Englunge division of the same corps had just as serious and as bloody a conflict. They occupied a portion of the left flank of the " Falcons Nest" which was the key to the Glandelinian position and only held it against fifteen fierce charges by the most desperate courage and suffered fearful losses in men and officers. At times they were all but cut off from the remainder of the Glandelinian army and assailed on all sides. General Alton one of the commanders of the First F Brid Brigade was shot twice through the face and was reported as dead but he recovered in time to engage in the march as far as Angelinia Agathia. A large portion of the Simmermannian line was dislodged six times from its position but each time made gallent counter charges, and each time regained the lost ground.

At night fall the Abbiesannians drew off, crushed and dispirited. His loss dur during this day according to the best Glandelinian authorities was not less than 10,500,000 killed and wounded and prisoners. Dargins division of the Fourteenth Corps took three hundred,thousand six hundred and twenty seven prisoners, including an Abyssinkillan crack regiment, with all its field and company officers, and seven standards of colors. Mylettes loss was three million, t hree hundred and fift, five thousand and twenty one men, and of this number Dargin Dargins division lostone hundred and fourty two thousand men, and the Mangaboo division alone lost two hundred thousand, one hundred and sixty four.

The Fourteenth Mangaboo Division of the Mangaboo Corps in the engagement of July 24th the Big of pargins Main Grand division was captured bodily.

At the beginning of the battle the skirmishers of this division were driven in about eight oclock in the morning. The division it self occupying the trenches was ordered by its general H. M. Dundrey to withhold fire until the word of command. The long line of Abbiesannians charged forward ,yelling like Indians and kepton until they had nearly come within easy reach of the works about thirty to fourty yards. Then the Glandelinians opened a murderous fire, and the assaulting wave swayed back nearly or seemingly annihilated. A second, third, fourth, fifth, sixt sixth, and seventh charge was successfully repulsed with the same dreadful slaughter; men going down in whole regiments at every volley, and this time a large part of force had advanced so near that the men could neither go further nor retreat, they hugged the ground, giving and taking a severe fire, which continued for an hour,

They then suddenly rose to their feet and made a sudden rush flung themselves over the works and attacked the Glandelinians as fiercely as theycouldthey could. General Dundrey now hadattacking his men in his very rifle pits found himself twice the numer number of their own men and was jeopardized. He had employed his entire force making it difficult to spare men to fight these Abbiesannians who had flung themselves inside his works. Before he was able to dispose of them, the Abbiesannians had gained the rear of his main line, and he was attacked most fiercely from that direction as well as from the front. In order to protect the rear, some of Dundreys men fixed bayonets andfought the Abbiesannians within their works compelling them to stand between themselves and the" enemy"thus silencing the di fire from that quarter, while the Mangaboos continued the battle.

At this juncture many of the Glandelinians were slain and finding themselves to outnumber the Glandelinians the Abbiesannians within the works further emboldened by the persistence of their own troops in front, fought on harder than ever. General Dundrey killed and disarmed four of them, when he was surrounded by National soldiers one of whom was his own son, all who pointed their guns at him, demanding his surrender.

He nevertheless saw that his works to his rear were in possession of the attackers whereupon he determined to call upon his men to move by the flank and cut their way out. The battle then became a bloody melee. A rebel colonel seized a gun from one of his men and fired at every man within his range untill he was killed, while an Abbiesannian lieutenant fired at general Dundrey the ball passing by his ear. One of the Glandelinian color sere sergeants who had planted his colors in theground shot the Angelinian lieutenant on the moment but was himself killed by general Dundreys f son. Another soldier took up the colors and faluted it defiantly into the faces of the nearest Abbiesannians, and then two pinkies attempted to snatch them away from him but he held them with a most firm grasp..A moment later,, an Abbiesannian struck him over the headwith his gun, prostrating him upon the works andsecuring his flag, only to be killed by another Glandelinian and the flag recovered. Six times the flag changed hands and six times the captor and the loser was killed, while in the meanwhile afree fight with clubbed gun, and bayonets, raged on all sides..

The whole Mangaboo division under general Dundrey was enti eventiely surrounded, and with it two brigades of Simmermannians of the Eighteenth Corps who had been sent to its assistance. The ammunition of these commands was now utterly exhausted, and to surrender was the only way to escape annihilation. Yeilding themselves prisoners the Mangaboo divisions were marched within the Abbiesannian lines the captors being in part the very Abbiesanniand Abbiesannians who had flung themselves over into the works. Elsewhere a whole Abbiesannian division was captured in the same way after a most desperate fight,, General general Dargin from a rise of ground had seen the defense defense of the Glandelinian flag during the bitter struggle just des dribed . He saw the ones who had borne it with such conspicious courage at the very risk of their lives lives and that the soldiers only parted with it when to retain it longer was impossible after having done all that could be expected of human courage and valor to defend it.

When the flag came into possesion of the Abbiesannians a fragment had been torn from it by the storm of bubullets.

During the battle the center of Mylettes line was the hardest hit. and during the fiercest part of the conflict a portion of the line wavered and broke.It was then that general Mylettes himself assumed command at this point and by his courage and that personal magg magnetism which gave him so much power with his troops succeeded in restoring confidence and saved the day and perhaps the army. In this he was nobly aided by the other generals.

Yet general Dargin himself kept his own part of the line from being destroyed and notwithstanding all this he was desired elsewhere by the Glandelinian government and sent with a another army to go to aid Manley who had all he could do to hold his own with the Vivians. Although pargin was never a commander of the Western troops yet he was sent there, and his former command was given to general Howardine who was a perfect tranger to Dargins army, of whom they knew nothing. General Howardine was never a favorite with the army of Mylettes, even though he was a brave man, and I may be satisfied to say had he been in command during the battle of Heidl on the 22,23,24,th of July 1913 the result might have been far different.

General Mylettes made a complaint about this change and this is what he wrote of Reppio Evans;

" We believe the honest sentiment of or Glandelinia Country should have to admit that they did the cause a bitter blowby taking pargin away from my army, for he could have done us much better if he had remained at the front. The campaign without him I'll bet no matter how hard I'll fight will never be a success without him. Even now in the south, many are declaring the war for Glandelinia a " Bloody failure" and from this many of the bravest of the Glandelinian generals have almost lost heart.

CHAPTER - I SIXTY ONE.

STILL MYLETZE RANKED AWAY... A OTHER GREAT BLADE, MARCH MADE BY THE CLANDELINIAN ARMY, AND ALSO A SHARP BATTLE AT BOTHEMIER JUNCTION. WHAT A DECADE OF BOTHEMIER SAID OF THE " GREAT WAR TROUBLE BETWEEN TWO CLANDELINIAN CHURCHES, ONE OF WHICH BEFORE. AN OLD GENERAL, HIS DEATH... APOCRYPHIC ANECDOTE. HOW HE STOOD UP FOR THE YOUNGER CLANDELINIAN SOLDIERS A DOMESTIC LIFE... VERY IMPORTANT MOVEMENTS. RIEDI IS OUTFLANKED A FAIRLY WON. GREAT IMPORTANCE OF THE CLANDELINIAN VICTORY. CONGRATULATIONS OF THE CLANDELINIAN KING, AND GENERAL BEPPO-EVANS. SHARP SHARP CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN GENERAL IZNER MYLETZE AND VIVIANDEAD. A BREATHING SPELL. ALVERTINE OF A CLANDELINIAN SOLDIER WHO RETURNED TO THE FIGHT. OF JOINS THE MILITARY MEDICAL CORPS. ON THE TRACKS OF VIVIANDEAD MAIDS.

BARBONIA'S FALL, CLANDELINIAN TROOPS AT BIG ADELBERID AND BOTTERMIER LIKEWISE AFTER VERY SEVERE CONFLICTS. THE BLOODY BATTLE AT BOTTERMIER. A MOST GLORIOUS STRUGGLE. MYLETZES MESSAGE AND BEPPO EVANS ANSWER. THE BLOODY ASSAULT REPULSED. GENERAL MYLETZES CONGRATULATORY ORDER. AN IMMENSE ARMY OF SOLDIERS. A GREAT HERO AT BOTTERMIER. PATRIOTIC WORDS OF MYLETZES BROTHER. THE FATHER OF A CLANDELINIAN SOLDIER SEARCHES FOR HIS DEAD BOY. MEETING WITH GENERAL BEPPO EVANS. VIVIANDEAD A RAISING THE HIGHOLLEMIER AND PANDORA RAILROAD. HIS ORDERS TO BURGHEIER. THE ARMIES WHOSE DEFIANCE IS A RECORD BREAKER. MYLETZE IN PURSUIT. DEATH OF GENERAL CAILINVILLE. MYLETZE ADVANCE TO MOVE STRAIGHT NORTHWARD. REORGANIZATION OF THE EAST ARMY. ORDERS FOR THE GENERAL MARCH TOWARD ANGELINIA AGATHIA.....

UPON the close of the three days battle at Heidl of July 20 to 23 and 24 the Abdelbenion armies drew back into his entrenchments at that town. The next day a truce was declared to admit of either army burying its dead. For ten days thereafter while both sides busily buried the many dead either in long trenches, or in bogs and quick sands or by burning, a great part of the clandelinian army was engaged in burning burning burning the dies, and twisting the rails of several railroads, going west,east, and noth... his task however was to a movement of the left flank or by the left flank to reach the only railroad remaining open to Heidl town, that Heidl Tarr, that lay northwest the Mic-Hollester and Pandora. As usual the rapid march which was the main incident of the plan, fell to the lot of the survivors of the Hungabee division.

As soon as it was quite dark enough on the night of July the 25th,... this command moved slowl, and silently, out of its long line of works, and marched south and west around Heidl town then co south to head a meadow gooncle which lay almost due west from the point of departure. The movement however took almost the entire night, and probably the distance covered was about thirty miles.

Immediat l upon taking up the new line the troops entrenched. and indeed it was nothing short of remarkable how quickly and completely this kind of work was performed. Frequently a brigade, or a regiment or a company would pick up any kind of solidly constructed fence so clean that nothing was left to mark the place where it had been and carry the rails to use for their own purpose, throwing them down to serve a sort of portoon across an impassable bog for the soldiers to march across, or as a sort of protection when they had advanced as far as possible.

Often the same rails or bobwires sufficed for half a dozen different lines being carried forward when ever an advance was made...

But the Hungabee army found itself in serious trouble as early as early as the dawn of the 26th, and sharp skirmishing and bitter fighting continued without pause throughout the whole day, at times rising to the fury of a regular and bloody engagement. The next day was one of most bitter fighting, general glorats fourteenth and fifteenth corps taking the brunt of the work, and successfully withstand seventeen most vigorious and headlong charges, supported by man, batteries of cannon. General Glorats lost upward of fifty, five thousand men in slain and two hundred in wounded and captured, and a dn "lightlinger. and podger and "onalder grander who sent reinforcements at a critical moment sustained considerable loss but not quite so heavy. The casualties of the Artlee tuleamians were not less than a hundred thousand....general owardine said of this engagement(, maybe he was right or maybe he was wrong)

" I wish to give expression of my high gratification with the conduct of the troops engaged in thirdbattle of Meadon Nuncle. I never saw better in battle. The General co manding the fifteenth and seventeenth and also two other corps and ten brigades was indefatigable, and the success of the day is as much to his credit as to any other Clandelinian General, for he thrashed the " Christian dogs, soundly.....

Elsewhere during this battle Mylletzes whole line concentrated to the left and right of Meadon Nuncle was engaged and the battle was very severe. both sides both sides strove to beat the other making many magnificent charges and the coming of night practically closed the comflict. Mylletze stated that in the battle totally he had lost 2,000,000 men in killed and wounded, not counting the prisoners,.....

the Abbleannians about 10,000 was killed and wounded, and a millio in prisoners, besides ten generals who were killed, or captured.civilians had forced the fighting around Meadow Munkle at fearful cost to himself, but he was ahead, beginning to show Myletze that he was endeavoring to be his equal for the battle ended as a complet complete draw with a slight advantage on his side.

An Abbleannian paper said;" If general Vivianonna keeps on in this way of fighting, Myletze's army will be wiped out in ten days, and Myletze will never be able to gain admission o into," his own city" of Angelinia Agathia, there he was born and now which he is hostile to.

put the Nationals had also lost severely, although better able to afford it. Another Angelinia Agathia paper printed the following;

" One one asked an " American" if the " Landlord Abbleannian war was over. "No" said he " I still see no reason why Abbleannia would not win when her cause is just as Holy as god's....."

This piece of sentence was credicted to an American paper--a familiarexperiment with newspaper men of fifteen nations when they conceot a report and yet do not desire to be held responsible for it. Sharp skirmishing and fierce artillery duels fought with scores of thousands of cannonading with noise that was great enough to put the worse volcanoes to shame were of daily occurance occurance until August the th when an unusual and most successful turning to a disasterous repulse of an assault was made upon vivianonnas left. The Fourty Second, and Tenth corps under gener general West was the assaulting column extending its line of attack for ten miles and the Mangaboo divisions, and the Twelvth Corps of Scouldiers and Whimsies, added by the Pinchkins and Crowleywogs advanced its seried lines to the support.

The latter command though extended as far as it was necessary moved promptly at the mokent designated, but general West failed to move because of the fact that his first line of troops extending over six miles in which there were 300,000 men met a fire from the Christian redoubts of grape canister and bullets that all but wiped it out in thirty minutes, andthe gen Seventeenth corps coming p on the right of the assault was subjected to a severe enfila ing fire, that mowed down at one discharge half of the column and forced the surf survivors to retire in panic and confusion. At first at other points the attack was successful, but the Nationals came back in a counter attack and retook their lost positions. The attack was repuls e repeated in redoubled violen violence in the afternoon, and was again repulsed.At one point of this second assault long lines of Glandelinians stretching for sixteen miles through a forest and a portion of a swamp hundreds of thousands strong had gone through half way when they met a severe fire from the Abbleannian position that was concealed and only fifty thousand were able to come back and more then hald half of them were wounded more or less severely.

In these assault the Glandelinian loss was two million in killed and killed kill a killed and wounded. The dreadful affair resulted in general Pikcnellian resigning the command of the left grand division, an event of great moment in Izner Myletzes army in as much as it was the first and only serious disagreement between the general in chief, and a subordinate, during the entire Angelinia Agathia campaign.

It may be promised that at the time of this unfortunate occurace the understanding in the army of Myleta 's was that the responsibility, of the difficulty, rested upon general Pik.picknellian. One war correspondent who was in Myletzes army, and who happened to be a Mexican, was in a position to know the feeling in the highest places in bhat that portio, of Izner Myletzes army, and his journal said under the date of August the 15th later after the battle.;

" General Francis Schalder was in his assault to reach and hold the railroad south of Helai town. General picknellian was under orders to report to Schalder, but because the latter in the early part of the war had been engaged in many child massacres and other horrors at Manleys orders, picknellian raised many objections. While these two Glandelinian generals were quarreling, the assault of the divisions was stoutly resisted by the " Christian National Army" and compelled to retire after sustaining losses never heard of during assault cbefore."

This was the statement made at the time in the Eighteenth and nineteenth Corps. But the details could never be ascertained as a result of the battle of Meadow Runkle.General Myletze in his report of the campaign said;

" I ordered generalWest to make a bold attack upon the christian position near the Mic-Mollester and Pancrin railroad and General Schalderwas to support him.while I ordered general picknellian to report to him for duty.Not liking the general became he was accused of taking part early in the war of the terrible " Reign of Terror in Norma Catherine, and in many ot other places afterwards, he at once del denied General Scalders rights to command him. I wrote to general picknellian, " From the statements made by yourself and General Schalderto day, my decision is that as he ranks you as a s man of general I do not see why you did not wish to s support him in the battle at Meadow P. Munkle. No one has proved that he allowed a man to massacre children so why do o you judge him rashly. The movement against the enemy to begin to morrow are so important that the orders of the superior on that flank must therefore be obeyed as regt superior and military orders regardless of his character or reputation and of his past, and not in the nature of co cooperation. I did hope there would be no necessity for my making this decision but it is better for us all that no question of rank or charater and of the past should occur in actual battle. The Meadow Runkle Road mus be gained to morrow if it even costs half of costs half of your command. I regard the loss of time this afternoon as equal to the loss of two million men. "

The same day general Myletze wrote to general Peppo Evans, general Picknellians immediate superior;

" Yesterday, general picknellian raised the question of general Schlauders past and reputation. I went in person and could find no proofs that general Schalder ever had committed such deeds as it is rumored of. General picknellian asked to be relieved of command. I declined and ordered him to go on to day and execute the plan prescribed for yesterday for connection with and under the command of general Schalder."

To general general Peppo Evans answered;

" I regret that general Mik picknellian has been compelled to take the course he has chosen, and as I too know general Schalder and picknellian too I know the latter intends to offer his resignation as soon as he can properly do so, so I recommend that his application be granted."

general Izner Myletze then notified general Picknellian thus;

" If you intend to resign because you believe general Schalder is not a man fit for your company and that he had been guilty of the destruction of many children all over Western Calverinia you committ the mistake of substituting your own individual opin ion over law and military usage. Whatever man he might have been he was placed to command a division in my army and the special assignment of general Schalder to the command of the seperate army and department shows that he enjoys the confidence of the Glandelinian king, and as he incurred the jealiousy of Manley and his generals it is a proof to me that h Schalder had no part in the deeds you suspect him of. But if you wish to r resign, wait a week or two, and allege some other serious reason, one that will stand for us the test of time. Your future is surely too precious to be staked on a mistake. And I again ask you not to disregard the a friendly advice of all my generals and myself as well as Peppo Evans, for you cannot mistrust or friendly feelings toard you."

General Picknellian persisted however, and therefore was relieved and shortly afterward a afterwards was assigned to the command of an army perating in the south. The whole trouble had come in this way , general picknellian had been ordered to take a paition on the rear of general Schalders line of battle, and support him. A question of the generals character and past followed. Picknellian said that rank made no difference to him in the operations then pending, that he was there to support the Glandelinian assault by order of general Myletze, and as Schalder was in charge of the movement he held himself wholy subject to his orders, but that the man had been in the early days of the war, raiding All kinds of Catholic Churches in Calverinia in the west, that he had taken part of the worse of macca massacres of children, and so on and that he did not see any reasons why he should fight with him against a Christian enemy that should punish him for his crimes. General Myletze met general Pikcnellian sometime after the charge had been repulsed, and said to him that he thought he was wrong in the opinion of the man. Picknellian replied that he waived all questions of rank for the purposes of the contemplated movement and was awaiting to orders with from Schalder but did not wish to seek his company. General myletze rode on to Schalders Schalders headquarters. On that night he sent a letter to general Picknellian saying that his consent to obey Schalders orders was not enough, that he must acknowledge that general Schalder Schalder was not guilty of the deeds suspected of him, that he or his army had never molested any one not opposing him, and that he must acknowledge him innocent. General Picknellian persisted his suspicion and asked to be relieved. General Myletze then reluctantly replied that he could not allow any one foreign from his command without the consolation of general Mic-Mollester the main general of all. Therefore by the advice of general Mic- Mollester Johnston, Picknellian concluded to waive the question as to Schalders reputation and past until the end of the campaign.

It was supposed that would have settled the matter for good and all but b on that night to his complete astonishment he recieved a letter from Peppo Evans saying that he (Peppo Evans) understood from Mic-Mollester Johnston that he that le Bikcnellian intended to offer his resignation toward the end of the Angelinia Agathia campaign that he did not trust general Schuldars. If so he might fairly say, that for him alone the campaign was already to be closed, and that he must resign. Bicknellian brought this letter before Hyletze and said;

" Yesterday when I ask you to relieve me of command on a question of general Schuldars repur reputation you wrote that I could not do so without dishonor unless I prove to you his character. Now Beppo Evans writ s otherwise. On this plain evidence of either your or his unfriendliness, I conclude that I can never be of no further su service under your commands, and respectfully asked to be immediately relieved."

While the operations around Heidi City were at in full progress, and also while the bloody battle of Meadow Punkle was raging, one of the foreign war corres pondents in general Vivianannus army was called to Meadow Punkle, twenty miles to the east of Heidi City. Here he found in an Abbieannian internment hospital camp an old Glandelinian general who had been picked up in the battle field, general Williania prostrated with sixteen severe and mortally mortal wounds.

The unfortunate general was already on the point of breathing his last and could converse only with the greatest difficulty. It was a sorrowful meeting for the war correspondent was the general son generals son. The two were warmly attatched although fighting on opposite sides, and both realized that in life they could not meet agag again. Twenty six hours later the old general breathed his last... The war war correspondent can never halt his pen now without paying a great tribute to the memory memory of this noble Glandelinian soldier, and if he had been a Christia Christian he could have been of the stuff as the martyrs and saints of old who illumine the dark pages of history with gleams of brightness. born in Glandelinia city and though a Glandelinian he inherited from his better Glandelinian ancestors a stern ideas of right and unflinching de votion to duty as it always came to him.

Although reared amid the awful and corrupting influences and unspeakable horrors of child slavery, he concieved the dreadful scene not only to be a dreadful and foul blot upon the Glandelinian nation, but a sin against God and Humanity beyond record, and unwilling that his children should be subjected to the wicked and demorilizing influences of this dreadful kind of slavery, he abandoned a fine position in Angelinia Agathia(Glandelinia) as the head of the State cover nership n and tried in all appeals and the like to gain the grant for the freedom of the child slaves. He then went to Calverinia and assumed the work of trying to free as many slaves as it was within his power.

The reason for his moving from the state of Glandelinia was soon known throughout the Glandelinian nation but his opposition to the child slavery and its effects did not lead him into anything rash. But he denounced the system as a moral crime and an internation wrong as all slaves had belonged to ever, nation he ever could list, but like many of the others he believed it to be no hedged about by the Glandelinian constitutional compact that none could rightfully seek its overthrow in a rightful manner except by moral agitation.. He however discerned the true import of the big storm already rising. He had lived through and listened to to angrythreats of the Glandelinian War Loras and among the Gland linian states had heard disol disunion preached in his own native state. Then general Bicknell had made his crazy raid near Jennie Wren Town and besieged the city, extreme Glandelinian generals had said that the opposition of the Abbieannian government to the invasion of southern Angelinia glut would be just cause for secession and bloody war, andEmperor Vivian had startled the country with the vehement declaration not to born of fanaticism but founded upon the inexorable logic of Christ's degrees, " whatsoever you do to the least of these my children, you do it unto me. This nation known as Glandelinia a southern part of Abbieannia cannot,endure permentantly unless child slaves are free, and to free them we must at the cost of a long and bloody war . .

As it is, with Abbieannia and Glandelinia warring agaist each, other and as the con---flictwas the same or is the same and nothing else but like the civil war between the north and southern sections of the United States, the situation was;

"A HOUSE DIVIDED AGAIST ITSELFCANNOT STAND."

Pe Probably one thin that could never be forgotten by any one who would have ever heard him was a oration delivered by general Izner Hyletze himself ,at when the day of the battle of Delight's junction was coming close. He pleaded for conservation and brotherly toleration, and a settlement of the child slave question then at issue through through the developement of ideas and better fellowship rather than a resort to war passions and dreadful massacres. His peroration was indeed one of the most most materly pieces of rhetoric ever known for any one to give, but onl, a part of it can be given herel;

" Before me here at " North Bend" (Delight's Junction) I see too two mighty hosts of armies. One is the national and the other is the insurgent one prtion of which I command, and which Hanley takes charge of in general. One bears the banner " God Free the child sla slaves if we cannot."The other" Let's go to the devil rather than allow the slaves to be free. I fight on the Glandelinia side but both sides are my brothers, my bent friends, here am I and mine own, and yet for the sake of the flag I love best I must fight for Glandelinia. Yet why should I have to raise my sword against the Nationals just because Hanley does. Why should my army have to discharge their fatal volleys into the breasts of the Nationals to settle the child slave question.? Forbid it Almighty God, if may be, but lfnot work out thy Thy Mighty Degrees with us of both sides, th Thy feeble inst ktruments of war, and let the side which proves its in the right be the victor."

At a later day in other parts of Calverinia, while the war was inprogress and he wore the uniform of his commission, when the question of child slavery just coming to be discussed he wrote resolutions of all kinds advocating that policy purely as a war measure, these resolutions being adopted only by his own army in mass meetings without a dissenting voice, and do dispassionate and convencying were they that they attained a very wide publicity. Even though the oration came from the enemy side, yet the Angelinia Agathia Daily Times referred t to them as the lost logical and convincing statement of any case that had ever been presented prt tet and that it was a bad shame that Hyletze for the character he had should chcose to take part with a foe whose cause was wicked, and more greatly in the wrong than any yet ever known. Their se. salient pints points showing the spirit of that day curiously blended radical war spree agressiveness ith conservativene conver conservative polic plitical ideas are here given by the Angelinia Agathia Daily times..

1 .The integrity of our blood bought National Government, one and indivisible and Holy with the Support of the Heighcous Catholic Church to which religion the Nation only belongs and to other, must and shall be maintained even if it has to ride through perdition in so doing..

2. A full proc prosecution of the war consummates with all the resources of the the loyal northern portions of the nation, including the states of Angelinia, Abyssinkie and so on(Glandelinia left ot) till the last vestigate of the wicked rebellion is completed, wiped out to the last and the majesty of Righteous law vindicated and fully entablished.

3... Settle the question whether slaves who are all children only and no one else shall shall have the freedom that they are entitled to or whether we shall have to wipe out the retellious states in so doing, and also whether we shall have a government to administer to the right purpose before we are compelled to divert attention from the great matter of these horrors at hand to the question what dilitary parties shall administer to it and how to administer to it.

While the states of Glandelinia and her Provi Provinces remained loyal to the Authorities and Kingdom of Abbieannia we the Authorities of Abbieannia backed by our just king and Emperor Short Angelic Vivian, and supported by the pleads of " and no matter how wicked may have been some of her generals or how terrible were the thenavr massacres committed by the armies, when Glandelinia returns to her allegiance we pledge her forgiveness and return of her own rights. But since she is a forced bloody war born without proper cause, by the he horrors of slavery, and by every means of evil than can be known and viciously mobbing thouse who by the Royal Authorities were more than Glandelinia entitled to all the immunities and privileges of citizens, by wantonly seizing property and funds of the nation, by stealing pet depts property and funds of all loyal citizens who attempt to rescue child slaves or buy their freedom, by refusing to allow the evacuation of Orleney unless it surrendered, by bombarding and reducing it when the surrender was refused , by publicly declaring her purpose by force of arms to even destroy the main principle of the Holy Nation, and by setting up a wicked government of her own within the veryterritory of Abbieannia, we of the Abbieannian govern ment are now giving her all s the war she wants, and will continue to do so until she is subdued to her proper allegiance or until she is wiped out. We are for weakening her by cutting off all her resources, confiscating her property,child slaves not de epted, and by every means known ti civilized warfare, reducing her to her proper loyalt, and until she acknowledges that child slaves shal, shall be forever free, and that those having children shall having parents shall be forwith freed. to as so far, can be returned to their own relatives. As the rebels have freely employed elder boy and girl slaves as rebel scouts, and also in making their forts, we approve the policy of arming freed child slaves to secure the freedom of their former slaves. For is it the intention of the Abbieannian government to really " Free the slaves" by fighting for them" We must end the war by freeing the slaves by the aid of our large bodies of " MIGHT RIGHTS."

Not indeed this is anticipating. Soon after the organization of the Great rebel army mentioned, Hyletze was given command of others order him, and joyfully accepted the charge regarding it not only as a sacred duty for his own cause, but a high privilige to be enabled to go where he might, to fight it out in his own way with the Nationals and prevent his army from drifting into the general tide of disaster and demoralization. In camp he visited the hospital and tent of the private, writing letters for those who were notable to write, and cheering the downcast and admonishing the erring. On the march the great general was ever watchful for the crippled, wounded and infirm, and daily left his saddle to allow such a one to ride for a time. The exposures of campaigning however had no effect upon his powerful frame, he was a good swordsman a boxer that could lick every prize fighter facing him in one round and was at the bedside of every officer who breathed his last after receiving mortal wounds. For all he did he was known by both sides as a " Christian general" fighting on the wrong side. He had warned his men and officers of an awful penalty awaiting them if they ever allowed their men to do harm to any National child in any way, and that no child slaves were to be put to work within his army, and so on, and that all child slaves picked up within his line of advance should be forwith given their papers of enlistment as a boy or girl scout, in which so doing would bring their freedom as a Glandelinian citizen.

The only army that ever did done this was Hyletzee or Reppo Evers.

He always watched over the younger soldiers as if they were his own boys, his care of the younger soldiers being solicitous and touching. And he never lost an iota of his dignity of character, his sense of duty or his kindly affection for those about him. More than once he personally rebuked an officer of highest rank for using toward Glandelinian boy or girl scouts language that would not be tolerated elsewhere in the field.

The remainder of July was marked with unceasing and bloody activity. Under date of the 27th the whole whole army was shelled fiercely all day and all night most spitefully and fear fiercely, and the soldiers were got too near the artillery lines were killed. The fire of the Abblemnian artillery was more active than in the early days of the camp campaign, and the Abblemnians having heavier guns that the Rebels had had it pretty much all his own way which was a surprise to Hyletze indeed, for the shell fire consited immense destruction.

A body, of the Abblemnians raided a portion of the Rio-Hollester and Pandora Railroad again and orders had been issued limiting rations, and instructing the men to save their ammunition as far as possible. Then General Bargin demonstrated heavily upon the National line to aid Schalauer, who was fiercely attacked on the right for six days in succession of fierce assaults and artillery storms. On the 29th demonstrated again, but Schalauer was not able to reach his own position which he had lost to the foe, and later the battle was suddenly quieted by a tremendous all night rain and thunderstorm that broke all records for a storms of that character. The next morning as soon as it ceased the lines on both sides opened a brisk fire brisk fire again. Then a division of five hundred thousand men moved forward to storm the Abblemnian positions at Bargain County and in that assault lost over over over one hundred thousand men wounded, and seven, five thousand killed, and eight thousand eight hundred and fifty mortally wounded, and seven thousand seven hundred and sixty two missing---in all 191,612. So terrific was the results of this charge that Hyletze not desire too bloody an action just yet did not resume the struggle which lasted only, half an hour.

On July the 31th the left wing of the army commenced a movement against the railroad line from Meandow puncle toward Orflis town. All artillery and wagon trains that could be moved without arr attracting atr attention were sent early in the day in the direction to be persued, and as soon as night fellthe guns from the front followed with muffled wheels. A long strong skirmish line of two million men in an extent of twenty miles was left in the pits, with instructions to keep up sufficient firing to enduce the belief that the ordinary force of insurgents was present, and all the other troops silently, left the works through it took half the night for thisto be accomplished though this was quick enough for so large an army almost a miracle. The march and changing of positions was continued until daybreak, which found them thirteen miles to the north and east. Coffee was hastily made and as hastily swallowed, and another sixteen miles added to the distance. The remainder of the day was was given to rest which was sadly needed.

Next day August the First the troops marched eighteen miles, and found the enemy concentrated in all his strength at Red Cross Station. The Nationals however did not fight and retreated without a battle, and the Glandelinians therefore gained a secure footing on the railroad, the Glandelinians setting to work with a will to destroy it, boring hundreds of the mounds of tons of ties, and twisting and melting the rails to such an extent as to utterly preclude the possibility of their use again by the Nationals. The following day, August August the second a further march of sixteen miles was made but not without frequent fighting at many different spots at least a hundred small battles in one day, with a loss of nearly 10,000 men each on both sides combined, and early the next morning the Abblemnian army was again encountered on Phelan Creek near the town of of Gennemann. The Glandelinians then assaulted the Abblemnian lines evidently hoping to catch them before they could get well straightened out for severe action, but were repulsed with dreadful loss.

The battle was general all day, in a thickly dense woods, and both sides sustained losses that were remarkably severe for even armies of this size. August the third a stouter engagement was fought, but resulting in general Abblemnian making, a slow retreat the following night. One third of Hyletzee army had been engaged, and his losses for that division was severe, and among the prisoners taken was General Melderf whose columns of Abblemnians captured the eighteenth Hampshire Division during the battle of Heidi, and the greater part of his division with him. That night thousands upon thousands of most heavy, explosions were heard in the direction of Heidi town, twenty miles and a half distant, leading to the conclusion that general bargin was making an attack, but the next morning Abblemnian prisoners brought in by the Gurgellian forces reported that the noise was caused by Vifiamma blowing up his ammunition trains and in consequence of the raids and final battles on the railroad he had been compelled to abandon the city.

Then it was that general Hylet e sent to the government of Glandelinia his announcement of his first great victory, which contained this sentence.

" We have captured city of Heidi in fierce fight. The victory was most glorious. The Nationals are retreating northward."

Immediately upon the occupation of Heidi City general Hyletze issued orders proclaiming a rest in the campaign until more troops reached him, and ordering the army, into camp for a rest, and reorganization for the continuance of the campaign. It was planned that the Glandelinian army was to be grouped in and about Heidi town, the Army of Hungaboo at Meadow puncle and the remainder in the city of Heidi. This movement began August the 7th and proved to be a remarkable event of the campaign. Yet it rather almost resembled the retreat of a defeated army, than the victorious march of the conquerors. As the head of the long column turned toward the city of Heidi, Vivianmmas army was but a short distance behind it, and his cavalry strong in numbers beyond comparison was unusually active. It was necessary therefore that the long trains of artillery, and supply wagons should precede the troops.

A heavy rain had been falling all day, in continual series of thunderstorms of remarkable violence in loudness of thunder, and what with the unsurpassable mud in the roads, and the consequent miserable condition of the animals consequence upon long service and ill feeding, it was from the starting point of seven in the morning, until eleven at night before the long straight train often attacked by cavalry was straightened out and the troops began to move. The march indeed was exceedingly most painful. Even the soldiers did not get the worse of it. Four times Hyletzee horse almost sank in a bog, and the general looked like some creature formed of mud than a splendid Glandelinian general and his horse like likewise.

For a few minutes at a time the men plodded along as well as was possible in the intense darkness and blinding rain and flashing of lightning, then a forced halt would occur, for five minutes, sometimes for an hour and a half caused by a portion of the wagon train stalling or breaking down, or because some man sank up to their waists in mud and had to be pulled out, while again as formerly the air was defiled defiled by the storm of blasphemies and curses set up.

Occasionally a wagon, either irretrievably wrecked or mired in a mud bog or its team utterly worn out was either thrown to one side, or left in the bog, and set on fire. At one moment general Hyletzee horse startled by the light of such a conflagration made a sudden leap, and the rider almost asleep in the saddle through sheer exhaustion, was awakened by his men pulling him out of the deep mud.

After a march of this kind for ten miles a halt was called, and the wearied troops prepared such food and took such rest as the " Beautiful Weather" would permit. Once utree fell upon a body, of soldiers when split in two by lightning and caused great excitement.

During the day, a further hard march of six miles was accomplished after double work and heavy, and camp established at Meadow puncle. That evening general orders were read to the troops by every, officer in the big army, communicating the following paper:

Royal Palace of Glandelinia.
Glandelinia state, Vanity Fair City.

The full thanks are rendered by the King of Glandelinia to Major General Hyletze and the gallant generals officers and soldiers of his command before Heidi City for the distinguished ability and perseverance displayed at the early part of the " Angelinia Australian" campaign in northern Glinia State, which under the efforts of said great general and Levine favor has resulted in the capture of said Heidi from the Nationals. The marches, blood, battles, ever, day, the series of sieges and other military operations that have proved the best part of the campaign will always render Hyletze's army famous and have entitled those who have taken part to the applause and thanks of the Glandelinian Confederate States of Abblemnia.

King Glandlin.
Emperor of Glandelinia.....22x

" Holder Point, orthern "l Angelinia state. August the 4th...

Major General Myletze, my partner.

I have just recieved your message announcing, the capture of Heidi city. In honor of your great vi victory, I have ordered a long, salute of men, guns and rifles to be fired, with shotted shotted guns from every battery. The salute will te fired within an hour after you have recieved this message.

General phillium P Beppo Evans.
Major general."

And now the troops fully organized the import of their brilliant but wearisome and bloody three months campaigning so far and learned with what joy the news of their victory was recieved at home they gave way, to an unusual jubileo. The thousands of brass and martial bands, which had been silent all the long way, from the Aronbongo Run to Heidi city, now were allowed to play their most exultant airs, and the men viewed the instruments in making noise,expressive of the greatest joy. All were happy and laughing, from the commander in chief to the humblest private in the Glandellinian ranks, and even the ray bray of the half starved horse seemed rather an and melodious an it added to the din.

Better yet the railroad ine was again in full repair, after having been grandly disturbed by the Nationals, and presently, the troops enjoyed the experieve experience of abundant rations and frequent mails.

At this time y the urgent request of general Mic- ollester ,hanton general Dargin was ordered by Myletze to relieve general Schuldar who had taken been taken ill and but on reaching his command however, Dargin was so fully convinced d of penal dara recovery and of his ability and determination to aid Myletze in his c campaign that he sent no further, but telegraphed Myletze Myletze that it was not necessary to relieve Schuldar as he was doing fairly spll. Accordingly Schuldar was able to retain his command instead of men necessarily going home to get well, and Dargin rejoined his own command. Myletze was glad the Schuldar was well again as he did not wish to see him loseehis command even for a few weeks.

While the army was resting in the vinicity of Heidi city general Myletze did what no other Glandellinian victor ever would be good enough to do and which gained him great respect even from the christian armies, he tasked himself in preparing for the progress of the campaign, and as a necessary incident to the campaign and a success, he demanded that the entire population of Heidi city to be removed, the people being given the permission under full protection of going north or south, as they might prefer. To those electing to go north, he proferred what rations he could spare, and transportations for themselves and their effects, those who decided to exodus south he would remove with their goods, to Coogan Village thirty miles distant and place them under the protection of the national military authorities. But Glandellinian citizens with slaves in their possession were not allowed to go from the city at all not even if they so desired unless the, turned over to the army the slaves as enlisted as boy or girl scouts and with papers acknowledging so.

This determination to sent the people of of out of Heidi city, caused an angry written correspondence between generals Myletze and Vivianna in the course ofwhich the later dealt in much florid rhetoric and exposed himself to the most cruel work- the words of Myletzen pen. The letter ran as follows;

" You the Glandellinian general Izner Adelaheid Headrick Myletze, Commander of Glandellinian army.

Your intentions and orders of th depopulation of said city, of Heidi in an unprecedented measure and while not on such a wicked course as any done by the Glandellinian generals commanding in the western theatre of war is nevertheless ingenious cruelty in one way, and though your acts do not compare with all the others committed by Manley which is the worse in any dark history of war yet in the name of God and humanity I protest to it nevertheless. You might be known as a Christian general but nevertheless you fight and strategize, on the wrong side and as you do Ill fight you to the death. Better die a thousand deaths than submit to allow the Glandellinian country to win its freedom for a wicked cause and to sustain child slavery which you claim you are opposed to and yet for which you fight, and therefore good day.

General Vivianna.

At first Myletze did not know what to make of the whole , did not see where he had done any wrong whatever, for he purposed to put the deported inhabitants of the captured city into the hands of proper people where they would be nicely protected and from Glandellinian of other cities, and therefore to defended his course in a letter not a reply and undignified it was on an occasion necessary to appeal to other reasons when modern examples were so handy, and instanced numerous cases ending;

" You defended Heidi strongly but did you ever find out whether I attacked the city, of Heidi so close to town that ever, one of my bombshells, bullets and high explosives and grape and canister went into the habitations of the women and children! and why appeal to adjutant God in such a sacrilegious manner when Manley in the midst midst of peace and prosperity, has himself glanced this nation into a dark and cruel war. I have no responsibility, for it at all."

The civil authorities of Heidi city also sought to secure a revocation of the order, and instanced some very sad pitiable cases of distress which would follow its enforcement one for instance of the women and children in danger of encounte encountering some bodies of dangerous Ghurian gurdes and other troops which massacre every child they la, their hands on. Gotham General Myletze replied in these terms;

" My orders was not designated to meet the conditions of the case, but to prepare for the future st tyles in which hundreds and hundreds of millions of people outside of Heidi city should have have a deep interest. And outside of my army and that of Beppo Evans I can furnish full secure proofs that there are no other Glandellinian armies in sight. Therefore the people who are deported are in no danger with general Vivianna are so near. Those of the people who are afraid may therefor therefore seek refuge in my army and may call on me for anything, even if they are of the government thatvis opposed to Glandellinia. Then will I share with them my last ration and watch with you to shield your homes and families against danger from every quarter quarter in case other Glandellinian armies not having generals like my elf in command. That is fair and square. What I do is a necessity for should I and Vivianna meet in a general battle of great violence in this neighborhood and the people are not moved from Heidi then what happens will not be my fault."

Even while general Myletzes brain was very busy with these matters and his plans for the progress of the campaign he found time to give friendly and kindly thought to the most unfortunate men of his own and other Glandellinian armies who had fallen into the hands of the Abblesonians.

A large flag of truce station was established at Meadow Monkie and such of the National prisoners as had not been sent south or west, were dulivered to general Vivianna in an exchange for an equal number of Glandellinian prisoners. But general Myletzes unusual kindness of heart for a Glandellinian general found its most eloquent expression in the consideration he gave to alleviating the distress of the unhappy child slave wretches which later he found held by wicked Glandellinian masters in an almost impassable swamp tward which he had extended hi l his lines.

He had learned their condition from the few Angelinian captives who were so fortunate as to have been in the swamp and saw the places, and first notified ... notified general Vivianna of the fact stating in this letter;

" Though we are enemies fighting on opposite sides, I'll prove to you I'm fighting only for my country, and flag by this;

At Calhornias Swamp a flag of truce will be established in which it will be allowed by your soldiers to raid said child slave plantation in the swamp and to take away to your lines all slaves thus found. Glandellinian soldiers will be allowed if necessary to help in this awe, and to these wicked slave masters if they s also ther will be no quarter give no quarter given."

Myletze.

This was carried out to a T and the Abblesonian sanitary commission forwarded means to bring them out, but before this could be done, the wicked masters had removed the slaves to keep them falling either into the hands of Myletzes or Vivianias army as the rascals had been warned of it by some Glandellinian soldiers who were not with Myletze and who had just come from Manleys to buy some of these slaves Th The slave masters declared rather than allow the slaves to go free, or be taken by either the Glandellinian or christian army they would throw the children into the deep bogs of mud and quick sands.

During the breathing spell which followed the battle of Heidi the adjutant was sent a brief leave accompanied with a hint from general Stumbell, to get back as quickly as you can or you may lose some good excitement, however nothing, came, was noticed with the many incidents and of such an unusual nature, that some of it will be given in this narrative, although it might be obtained somewhat more of the personality of the actor than he ever had intended to go through at the outset... Apart of this adjutants mission at the south was to procure commissions for a large number of merit from non-commissioned officers for whose promotion the casualties of the campaign had made a good opportunity...

Visiting the office of the main general he made known his errand and presented the necessary recommendations, at those in charge did not receive him with great cordiality, apparently resenting the irregular mode method of dealing with the matter department instead of observing the common red tape channels prescribed by military etiquette. Therefore! in this strait the adjutant called upon governer Colls of Glandelinia State, and at his office presented his case, where upon that unusually great hearted Glandelinian official, who was ever a very warm hearted friend of the Glandelinian soldier was now doubly glad to have an opportunity for rewarding in some great measure well deserving son of general Hylatzer great Glandelinian army which had already rendered such distinguishing service for the Glandelinian cause, cause made the crooked path straighter than usual, and ordered the immediate issuance of the commissions so greatly desired.....

Evening Vanity Fair city June the 1th 1913. on his return to the front, the adjutant learned that the railroad was a forbidden way for Glandelinian soldiers, pere mptory orders for their safty's sake requiring them to go forward, if at all in large marching columns, and all rolling stock being absolutely necessary for the trans portation of all kinds of army supplies. He was unfortunate however as to have a personal acquaintance with the commander of the district, who though an Angelinian kindly provided him with a railroad pass to Angeline junction provided he would disguise himself in said passage, and which was as far as his authority extended.

After two days traveling through dangerous territory, the adjutant general at last reached Angeline junction, and was greatly disconcerted to learn that no one who could give a satisfactory account of himself were allowed to pass even into that that town under any pretext however or whatever, and that all Angelinian transient officers and men were required to report to the local military authorities for assignment to provisional commands then being organized for the defense of that portion of the glandelinian adjutant wandered about the city disconnelately, delaying compliance with the printed orders, which stared him in the face no matter where he turned, are hoping to find some way out of the difficulty. No experience is so hard for any soldier, as to be in this glandelinian officer's place, and find himself far away from his own command, in a hostile country, and city, to be in danger of being forced to do duty with enemy troops to avoid detection especially when the latter are of a hap hazard cause up for the occasion character, and his memory reverts inverted to his experience when as a private in the early he attended an Crowley, at the start of the war, and made to do do duty, with a pick and spade in the trenches as hostile to his own country, because he was a prisoner.

While his mind was thus occupied with painful thoughts of the past, and uncertain misgivings as to the future the adjutants eye fell upon a long, low build ing with a sign board over the entrance which read "Abblesonian Military TELEGRAPH DEPARTMENT BUILDING. HANDOVER

GEORGE PEDRO, SUPT. "

The odd name was an anglicism of Hungarian name with glad surprise adjud for it to that of his old friend the telegraph operator at home, who had joined the Nationals as soon as the war began. George Pedro was fortunately present and alone at the time, and in answer to questions gladly gave a startling account of the affairs at the front. General Vivianemma had interposed his army between that of Hylatzer and Vivianemma which was marching down the Nic-Hollister and Pandora railroad directly upon Angeline Junction, he had applied to Hylatzer for what course Hylatzer would pursue, but to this application had failed to receive any reply, and as a result uncertainty, to stop him in his all devastating career could not be found.

However for, but Glandelinian construction trains were running north from Glandelinia state, and they with great zeal and promptness, rallied all soldiers reaching that city from the south were being detained organized for local defense, and to be distributed to east points on the road as might require their services.

George Pedro then gave the adjutant such encouragement he would assist him to reclaim his Glandelinian command at the earliest possible opportunity, and in the meantime guarantee his safety both as an officer and Glandelinian soldier. It would be absolutely necessary for him to be under his Glandelinian uniform and equipments fortified with the belief of a number of the Angelinian Telegraph Repair Corps. One strip of them was the other way, but the adjutant readily consented, and what with the friendly offices of George Pedro and the companionship of the members of the cor corps was had been done I day and sufficient confusion to get from fighting, on the first place he found himself more pleasantly situated than he had ever expected, in an enemy country..

At length came a day, of relief release from all uncertainty. At noon on the 10th of August the adjutant mounted the top of a long box car loaded with artillery and ammunition bound for Angelina Agatula. He was very tearing the britainia A.E.T.... Abblesonian Military, telegraph, and it was per he tore a through pass to Angelina Agatula over the head of George Pedro certifying to his connection with that corps, and ordering all trains to transport him at full pleasure. For fear of danger at every spot the train ran slowly, and carefully, , and yet darkness came before one third the distance had been accomplished. Then came up an insanely violent thunderstorm accompanied with a hurricane of wind, torrent of rain mixed with big hail stones and sureplitting thunder and blinding flashes of lightning which continued without pause all night,, completely drenching the unhappy traveler. In places the tracks ran through long tnu tunnels, and long cuts in the mountain slopes where the water came down from the mountain sides not in floods exactly but in undations per flood per second, making necessary a very firm grip upon the brakemans footway, to avoid being swept away entirely notwithstanding the good and ready Niagara Falls bath.

On the 11th by virtue of his passes pass the adjutant boarded a long Glandelinia repair train(six hundred cars, and four double headers to pull them) and ran to the Angeline pun piver where through the efforts of the Rebels themselves the tracks had been torn up aways and nearly the whole train was ditched with ernormous damage and the adjutant though he found himself wallowing in the river before he knew it with a few box cars around him he was not injured in the least, except hi his feelings.

The bridge also had been destroyed by the rebels to prevent the advance of general vivienemma and then with a companion, a genuine telegraph repairer, he crossed the stream by swimming. On the other side another train road was discovered, and finally they secured a train which conveyed them to the gunbeam Creek, and here too the train was mysteriously wrecked, and all bridges were gone, and this time a scow was brought into use but grounded on quicksand under a foot of water and the two barely got out of the boy by means to hurling ropes to the tree on shore with a noose and then working their way over these with the ends tied to the rapidly disappearing scow.

On the other side was found an engine and tender which had been cut off from a burned train by a Glandelinian raid. The engineer was alone the fireman having deserted, and his joy was great at thinking he had found three b purple coated frl friends, with something in their canteens and haversacks, instead of gray coated enemies seeking his life enemies seeking his life...

His engine however was cold, and almost out of wood but there was fortunately a lot of water in the tank.. The Abblesonian telegraph Orders were produced and the engineer readily consented to go anywhere, if the nes necessary fuel coulube had, whereupon the three chopped up an sufficient wood from fallen timber and scattered railroad ties to fill the tender, then got up steam and started southeastward.....

On the evening of August the 15th the party reached Bottenmier. Vivianemma attack had been made but three days before, and everything was in confusion. All the red tape belonging to the subsistance and ordinance departments had gone down in the general wreck, a thousand general and big fires wer burning for many miles, and the adjutant found it necessary to issue without the formality of a requisition, food arms and ammunition to a squad of fifteen hundred men belonging l belonging to Glandelinian commands further down the road, who attatched themselves to him on learni learning who he really was and his destination. This regiment followed the railroad south, marching on foot.

Night overtook them about midway between Bottenmier and Big Heidiwhere they went into bivouac, positng a strong line of pickets, and refraining from making camp fires, lest the nationals might be lurking about.In the morning the journey was resumed and in due time all reaches their various regiments..

The railroad between Bottenmier and Big Heidi a distance of sixty miles has been entirely destroyed by the Nationals. Every tie hundreds upon hundreds of thousand of piles of them tacked high were burned, and every rail melted and twisted by the cuts in the roads were filled with heavy trees felled from the side of the road and the wrecks of many engines and coun less thousands of cars given to the flames after their supplies had been removed to the Abblesonian wagon trains.

At Bottenmier the adjutantmet some of his best friends of the 77 Mungaboo regiment, and other regiments among whom was Captian John Rica Richard Temerline general purgins aide from whom he derived a good description of the bloody battle which had been so lately fought...

The Abblesonian army had slowly but gradually passed around Heidi City and on toard Adelaheid with general Hansonia in the lead who made great raids, and who had moved forward with the intention of destroying the Nic-Tollestinia and Pandora Railroad in lsner Hylatze's rear hoping him to be forced to either retreat northward or southward.

The first blow was struck at Big Adelaheid on the morning of August the 4t, 14th. This post was garrisoned by a portion of the consolidated Sixteenth, Fourteenth Fifteenth, and Nineteenth, and also the Twenty Third Omarian Veterani divisions , supported by the Fourteenth, and Fifteenth corps of the Fourth division of general Caldwins army. and the Seventeenth corps.

These large commands being two million five hundred thousand strong made a most vigori ous stand for seventeen hours repelli ng the attack fiercely and desperately from every quarter, but the attacking attacking Abbleannians were strong in forces, and destroyed these divisions, and Corps almost bodily and captured the remainder, a mere handfull, somewhat a farther west guarding the high water tank a short distance from the bust of Nelcons Neste anecfrom the bust of cenemen hill was posted general murmers whole army of four divisions. The commander of this division of the army, general Davidsonia murmer on hearing the first of the scattering shots of the enemy's advance upon adelaheid, formed his line supported by artillery, threw out the longest triple line of skirmishers and pi pushed forward to learn what the noise meant, especially when it grew to a general firing the like he had never heard before.

He advanced within a mile and a half of Big Adelaheid, when a heavy attack of inner inmeasureable force and fury was made upon his left and right flank, by a greatly superior force. He formed ine of battle and the Abbleannians charged upon his whole front fourteen times during the day sustaining dreadful losses but could not disperse general murmers line or even break it.

A few Regiments of Abbleannians managed to crossthe works however but were captured with all their officers and standards, among them the Colonel Johnstonia Dete a young man of most unusual intelegence and bravery. He was at once taken before general Dargin and sharply questioned respecting the position and character of the attackers, the strength of the main Abbleanniun army attacking elsewhere, and using his own language he had the hardest work inventing lies fast enough to answer t one questions, and keep fromrevealing the facts..

The general assured Dete that his personal respects should be respected, and though he did not believe it at first, as in other Glandelinian armies the prisoners taken in battle are robbed of all the clothing they wear, and forced to wear the Glandelinian uniform in exchange, he was surprised to find out the promise from Dargin was true, and that prisoners taken by Myletzes army were treated more like prisoners of war, and not like dogs as usual in Manleys army who send the prisoners to the worse places that can be found.

From Big Adelaheid the Abbleannians yelling the Battle cry" Freedom for Child Slaves" pressed further southward, being resisted for miles, every mile being a chernel hell of slaughter and fighting, and the Abbleannians only halted when n they halted in front of ottenmier where Myletze had thrown out his main line of battle.

At that point were stored vast supplies of subsistence and ammunition indispensable to the existence of the Glandelinian army,. To Mylet e the loss of this important post meant a most disasterious ending to a hitherto successful campaign while to Vivianna its acquisition promished means of or for prosecuting offensive operations and help for him to make it possible for the absolute ruin of his Gland linian enemy.

Neither the movement nor its urpoce purpose escaped the shrewd and ever watchful In l nner Myletze he saw the one and devined the other. First he gave orders to all his generals, and the next day Vivianna was awakened early in the morning by a tremendous assault upon his whole line, by ernormous masses of men that seemed to swell against his front like the ocean tossed upon land by a cyclone, and for nearly three hours the desperate assault broke his line right and left and swept him ten miles from the field with losses too terrible to relate, while the smoke of battle made the fields and plains look as if a forest fire was on.

While this assault was ma e with such evident success general Mylet e Myletze hastened to the Adelaheid Station from whose summit he first Viewed the assulting waves hurlit hurling themselves against Viviannas line then he decided to convey messages to Felcons Nest, and thence to itte Rottenmier by the flags of his signal Corps, and he therefore in structed the Commanding officer at the latter place to g call general Herdruge and Fegeral from Grome town to his assistance. He also said;

" We have so far carried the works and drove Vivienna vivienanna from the field for ten miles, but if he recovers from the attack and rallys and gains ground to come in all force for if you do not leave the place immediately you'll be trapped,"

General Herdruge a part of Myletzes command under him was at Rottenmier w the whole con tonsisting of Fourteen divisions, and batteries of long range and field artillery, and a brigade commanded by General ourte. Therefore he moved off from Grome during the time he recieved the message bringing with him a brigade of Loyal Calverinians which increased the number of thiscommand to about " 20,000,000 men. Every one of these Glandelinians were armed with what was known in the civial vicil war of this country with a rifle more like the Henry Rifle but of a fourth five shot magazine, and when these troops deployed themselves in line the rapidity and efdectiveness of these guns told fearfully upon the counter charging waves of Rallied Abbleannians at urious times during the reaction of the battle which followed and the Abbleannians were staggered?

But none of the Glandelinians in the whole of Myletzes army carried any other rifle but this, and had they the comparatively the slo slow firing muzzle loading guns like others did they would have been unable to cope withthe defense masses of the rallied Abbleannians in their long lines of desperate deapst desperate counter counter-assaults which came in successions of waves. one after the other for every repulse. Every time the wave of Abbleannians would rush up though miles long, they would melt to fragments and the survivors recoil. The moral influence of these dangerous firearms was just as great as their destructive power, for the Abbleannians had great r dread of them, speeking of it as a gun the devil loaded up for the Glandelinians, and which they fired off for the whole day, without once reloading. The army ofMyletzes had bought these rifles from Glandelinian munition shops at of their own pay at a cost of one hundred and eighty fives dollars per gun, more than four months pay. Another portion of Myletzes troops came by a long train of cars mostly freight, and it may be believed that their safe arrival at ottenmier was only due to the facts that so few men were visible that it might have been that the Abbi annians supposed the train to be loaded with supplies, and overconfident of their ability of capturing the town permitted it to runinto the depot under the protection of the forts. The train bearing the third division of Federals division ran off the track soon after leaving Grome and did not reach the town of Rottenmier untill after the battle.

General federals two other divisions left the cars about two oclock in the afternoon and at once formed in line to the left to meet the attack of the Nationals that had broke a portion of the other rebel line at this quarter earlier in the day. The enemy was then even withinrifle range, and though advancing in a perfect wedge kept up a spattering fire of great severity. General federals aide annoyed by the incessant zi- zip-zip of bullets, and anx ious to be employed asked his chief whether it would not be advisable to carry the ammunition from the train into the position.

The general was not apprehensive of serious trouble though the battle was very severe and did not think it necessary, but left the matter to the discretion of his side saying"It's up to you, do as you please about it."

General corner then at once detailed a sufficient amber of men and carried out his suggestion. And indeed the action was providential----it was but a few hours befo before before the ammunitionwas sorely needed, its absense might have caused a great disaster, and changed the entire campaign.

Shortly after two oclock when the first assault upon Federal had been crushed general Myletze stood upon the summit of Felcons Nest anxious for tidings from Rottenmier, for from there he could see the whole line of battle stretching for miles as far as view would permit. He could see at one time one purple line for the same extent, and four men deep move forward swiftly like some immense wave, come close and then part of it melt away, and disappear in smoke, and then recoil. recoil. Ten times Myletze saw this scene, and every time it was repeated tenfold and the noise to his ears was like a hurricane way up there?

At the time of the tenth attack made by the Abbleannians general Federal and staff stood at the signal station at Rottenmier. By his side were two signal officers transmitting the message of hiscommander. The flag fluttered to right and left, slowly spelled out the words----" Federal is"------"

At this moment the Abbleannians occupying the fields further beyond and to the south discharged ten batteries of artillery, with about a hundred guns each, and the volleys of so many shells made a terrific din that smook the ground even though most of them exploded above. A shell cut away the flag staff in the hands of its bearer and the message was not completed.Before a new flag could be procured, the smoke rising from the batteries of both sides, and from so many muskets along the opposing infantry lines spread a most impenetrable pall between FelconN Felcons Nest and otten Rottenmier. Indeed what must have been Isner Myletzes anxiety at Felcon's Nest." He felt sure of his own army for it had crushed eack every assault made upon it and taken the Abbleannian works once more but what about Federal" ? " Feaeral is"--- what should have been the remainder of the message? Was Federal at ottenmier, or was he not? Was he living or dead, or was he captured and his whole division?"

Rottenmier was a small town cleft by the railroad lines. The works all around were rifle pits and low breat breastwork-like forts. General ortes brigade brigades occupied that on the west, general Federal that on the north south, and east.At the outer limit of the town lay the i mense e ware houses with their immense stores of supplies, upon which so much depended.

About four oclock in the afternoon during a lull in the battle at this point a flag of truce came in bearing the following letterg

" Seige ofRottenmier, August the 14th $ 0, Clocl 4.O.Clock P.M.1913.

Commanding officer of Glandelinian force Rottenmier

Sir I have succeeded in placing all the Abbleannain troops under my command in such positions that you are already absolutely surrounded, and to avoid needless bloodshed bloodshed I call upon you to surrender your forces immediately and unconditionally. The only time left for you to decide will be the time it takes for you to write the answer and it comes to me. Should you acede to this you will be treated as the most honerable prisoners of war. But if not you'll recieve no quarter.

I have the honor to be, very respectfully yours,

General Francis Hansonia.

Major general commanding forces of Abbleannia."

At this moment the Abbieanniens not less than fifteen million in number and extending in a line of only ten miles surrounded Federals army and the town on three sides. Thei their immense columns all prep prepared for the charge were in plain sight on the east, south, and north, and a strong force of Concentinians and Winkles and Munchkins were moving up the hill from the north and batteries of artillery to the south also but on slopes of forested hills were in position.

General Federal Johnston which is his name was a man of tall size and stoute and his every pound of flesh and blood was that as great a hero as any on the o opposite side... His eye flashed as if it was lighted with a Promethean spark and his chest swelled with angry defiance defiance and derision together to the threat the hedious threat implied in the summons to surrender?

GeneralT_ourte " said he " answer this. D"

Drawing from his pocket a small order book which he olny had general Tourte seated himself upon a box and wrote as follows, general federal at once dictating and directing the placing of his forces;

" HEADQUARTERS OF FOURTY FOURTH DIVISION, EIGHTEENTH ARMY CORPS
4.10 P.P.M. AUGUST THE FOURTEENTH. 1913.

Major general Francis Hansonia. Abbieannia army, etc.

Your unusual communication demanding surrender of my commands, I therefore acknowledge recierte of, and respectfully reply that we are prepared for the " NEEDLESS SHEDDING OF BLOOD," when ever it is agreeable to you. If you want my position why not come and take it. I am very respectfully,

Your's Truely
General Federal Johnston. Divisional commander, of Myletzen Army."

The assault was resumed at once------so soon indeed that it seemed as if the very Abbieannians did not wish to wait the return of their flag of truce. The artillery on the eslopes on the south extending for miles opened a steady and vigorious fire ,until it appeared as if the forests on the slope and summits were afire, and a long seemingly endless wave of Winkles and Munchkins and also Abbieannians and Angelinians probably 10,000,000men and extending for only seven miles but many men deep endeavored to scale the hill from the north. This force was speedily covered with the " Henry" rifles of the Glandelinians, and after making three desperate charges in which they al up almost reached the works in spite of their great losses, the Abbieannians found themselves unable to advance further or retreat and therefore lay down behind the other side of the works, and tried to get at their enemies at a close quarters and soo soon the battle flags of both sides were waveing together an odd sight indeed while an attempt was made with the fury of desperation by both sides to disp ace the displace these flags.

The principal attack however came from the west and south, general Hincennines Appieannian columns advancing up the slopes tward the fortifications and assailting general courtes divisions with great vigor. The latter made a most desperate and spirited resistance, but the exterior line of rifle pits though strongly defendee by the large body of glendelinian troops was too badly exposed to be held by any force, and so many Glandelinians fell per volley that feuring annihilation general ourte ordered them to fall back, and occupy the fort, while the Omarians and the Zimmermannians went into the interior line of rifle pits immediately in front of i of it and upon the right and left. General mourte was severely wounded by a fragment of a shell, and a bullet while directing the retreat but d spite the protests of his officers retained his command...

This position was charged most furiously by the A Abbieannians, in solid columns seven different times. The first assault was repulsed without great difficulty and with dreadful losses to the Abbieannians, and sparce of half an hour elapsed be fore the attempt was again repeated the intervain being occupied with incessant musketry and artilery firing. The fort however was strongly constructed, but there was a weak point about the left of it the most exposed portion of the work.

Fortunately, a large number of bales of hay cotton and other matter were and these were used to close the gap. The bales were repeatedly set on fire by exploding shells making it necessary for a small portion of the troops to cease fighting and smoother another the flames by rolling the bales overyand over.

It was during the severest of the fight during the sixth assault which was made with unusual intensity that general Federal johnston fell, painfully but not dangerously wounded.

In front and to the west of the fort was an old barn which served as a vantage ground for the Glandelinian sharpshooters which had been driven out by the advance of the Abbieannians a number which then occupied the place itself and who had almost succeeded in silencing ten of the pieces of artillery which bore upon their very lines. Forty two gunners had been killed atb their posts and seventy five wounded, and therefore the artillery men had been compelled to resort to various methods of loa , loading the pieces with the least possible exposure. One while lying upon his front under the gun gun running home a cartridge, was wounded in both hands. So thick was the tempest of bullets also along the whole ten mile length of fighting that the gabions were cut to pieces releasing the earth, which had furnished a slight protection, and leaves of trees were cut down by thousands, and traps cut and charred as if by knives and sabres and daggers. At length the one gun which bore upon the barn became useless. A shell hit it demolishing it comple ely and killing and wounding every one of the gunners, and ten other men standing about fourty paces away.

The situation was most perilous in the extreme. Calling general Federal Johnston to the spot, general Tourte indicated the position of the Abbieannian sharpshooters and the useless condition of the piece of artillery, which he suggested should be replaced with one from another face of the fort. General Federal rose on tip toe to view the ground in front, and while in this position a rifle ball struck him in the right arm, while the fragment of a shell carried away the top of his hair.

Stunned by the shock, the gallent commander fell into the arms of his aide, who seated him upon a tree stump in an interior corner of the fort. Then general Tourte a no less gallent soldier than his chief at once at his request succeeded to the command and then directing the defense at one point fell mortally wounded.

But in the meantime general Federal johnston made also dispositions before he fell. The disabled gun was replaced by a fresh piece which did murderous execution but this was only after laborious effort amid soul sickening scenes.

Dead and wounded men were strewn very thick in the way to the embrasure and scores upon scores were laid asside as tenderly as was possible f before the task could be accomplished. The general also dispatched his aide who took course Tourtes place to ask reinforcements from general Myletze, who elsewhere on the battleline was no less seriously if not more fiercely engaged. This aide having entering the places during the night was not aware that a long footpath extended extended across the cut from summit to summit and from plain to meadow, and therefore he made a very dangerous journey under a severe cross fire, down one hill and up the other, happily returning in safty, closely followed by general Francis Hannia with his eighteenth Augusteo corps known as the " GRAY DEVILS." This command in making moving across the railroad cut once entered and dispatched a large detachment of the Nationals engaged in an attempt to turn the supply warehouses.

Many hundreds of thousands of muskets were now so hot with rapid and incessant firing that they were well nigh useless, and ammunition for the whole command in the fort was becoming somewhat low. In this crisis the defenders of the fort were counted off in relays, one half to fire at a time, at once saving ammunition and giving opportunity for the guns to cool somewhat somewhat. At one time an officer who was a colonel gave the command to one of the relays;

" Cease firing."

The lion hearted general Federal Johnston appeared apparently insensible from the pain of his wounds heard the words, and thinking they meant surrender, he rose to his feet with a bound, the exertion causing the blood to flow afresh from his wounds, bathing his face with the crimson tide as he thundered; " NO SURRENDER! REMEMBER NAKA. WE WILL HOLD ROTTENNIA TILL THE LAST MAN".

Indeed he was a gallent glandelinian soldier, a glorious hero for his clan, but all the soldiers fighting under him were all such men heroes, and there was no thought of surrender by their officers or the men. Well might Lyner Myletze say; " I know General Federal Johnston. So long as he lives Rottenmier is safe."

The Abbieannians after being repulsed in the seventh assault were now about to make a most desperate effort, and their preparations were to be plainly seen while their artillery was more vigiourley vigorously in action. The Glandelinian troops short of ammunition were ordered to fix bayonets to repel an onset after at close quarters, while those still supplied were to reload their " Henry" rifles and reserve their fire for an opportune moment. The many pieces of artillery had been silent for some time for want of ammunition but a brave Glandelinian soldier had succeeded in making the perilous journey across the railroad cut, except by the Abbieannian artillery, and returned with a wagon train of canister, though twelve of the riders and drivers had been killed and fourteen horses wounded.

These dispositions were made no e too soon, for the Abbieannians over greater in numbers was abroad, advancing to the charge. Night was coming on and Myletzne right would soon be coming o and thundering upon their heels. Rottenmier must last fall now or never. Therefore filled with the energy of desperation and almost determination, the Abbieannian columns came on roaring and howling with their yells, and as they neared the works the pieces of artillery ceased, charged fired their contents full in their faces, while the troops poured into them a storm of bullets that [illegible] the whole line of assault. The whole Abbeannian line was cracked anew, and disheartened gave up the attempt and fell back just as night closed upon the scene. The reinforcements and ammunition had arrived at a critical time. General Vivianna left behind him two million two hundred and thirty one thousand dead, and sixteen million wounded, and four hundred and eleven thousand five prisoners. General Hyletzen, including Dumb Federal johnstone losses was seven million men in killed and wounded. General Hyletze however was so pleased with the stirring defense of 'ottenmier that he issued a general order as follows;

" The generals commanding will themselves of the full opportunity, in the handsome defense made of ottenmier the illustrate indeed the most important principal of war the war, that all fortified posts should always be defended to the last regardless of the relative numbers of the enemy, attacking or attacked.

b The thanks of this army are therefore due and are therefore given to general Federal Johnston, [illegible] who died in defending his post, and all the other generals and men for their determined and gallant defense of 'ottenmier town, and it has made a very good example to illustrate the importance in preparing in time, and meeting the grave danger when present, boldly, manfully, and well. Also commanders and garrisons of all other posts along our railroad are hereby instructed that under any conditions they must hold their posts to the last grade, and to the last man sure that the very time gained is [illegible] and most necessary to their comrades at the front." In the action at Bettenmier fell general Francis Buster Brown a high officer of the 17th Mangabee corps. This gallant young soldier in the full vigor of early manhood and with all the livelyness and enthusiasm of youth was not surpassed by any of the heroes band in cool courage and steady determination.

Though not mortally wounded he nevertheless recieved injuries that are severe enough, and he fell in the very heat of the action, pierced by two bullets, --one of which entered his foot, and the other his left arm just a little above the elbow lodging within the soft muscles muscles, the other passing through the foot three inches below the ankle near the instep and made its exit through the calf. This put him out of commission for nearly four months.

And recovery did not come at once to the gallant soldier who had commenced with Hyletzen in the greatest of all wars for a glandelirian army that ever existed yet since the war began. And for many hours after the bloody battle was over, he lingered in agony [illegible] lovingly administered to by a comrade and friend who scarcely left his side. Not a single complaint was uttered by the wounded general, he answered all the questions that were asked of him, sometimes rationally at others in a careless manner which indicated that his mind was wandering wandering. He spoke of his comrades who were dead or wounded and when asked on to himself said that he was " all rights and that he would fight it through.

He inquired of the comrade who sat by his side,,, whether general Bargur of Bargin was attending him, and referring to the old army doctors. Then he thought himself to be at home, surrounded by his parents, brothers sisters, wife and children, and frequently called for his brother Colonel Anderton Brown who had fallen at the same battle but in Hyletzes army. At last after a week had passed he began to slowly recover from the effects of his wounds, but it was evident he could never return to his old command for a long time to come.

Even though it is in the glandelirian army, we the readers could do no wrong to respect and admire the soldiers under Hyletze or Peppo Evans for the spirit of the men of these armies are different than those of other great glandelirian generals and therefore the spirit of these armies may be discerned, in the words of general Richard Kingorine of General Vivianna command of christian origin who in a touching letter to his parents said;

" For the glandelirian armies under Hyletze their cause is worthy of the great sacrifice, and would to God will that he was a chief officers of all the glandelirian armies and would turn [illegible] out of the glandelirian service altogether. Then there would be no more [illegible] bottom of our like in [illegible] the [illegible]

All of the glandelirian generals who met the cried of not served truly in the line of duty, ever, one being brave and efficient and most excellent. Indeed Anderton Brown [illegible] brother to whom the wounded general referred in his [illegible] of Delipian was a lieutenant colonel in the 20th Christian Corps. It during the counter charge of [illegible] Hyletzes left wing that this young officer, temporarily in command of his division led it in a gallant and most successful charge upon the Abbeannian line. He fell at the christian works, wild all through the left lung. And though he was a Glandelirian he received better respect and better care from he ever [illegible] them with the attention [illegible] that the rest of the wounded could not have [illegible] and he [illegible]. [illegible] To noble soldiery character character he added high moral qualities which commanded the respect of all those under his command and his loss threw his command into panic and almost caused a disaster which almost lost to Hyletze the battle. And without being in any sense inclined to cant(indeed he made no professions to being the tent of officers within the ordinary [illegible] meaning of the word;;) he was both in word and deed, and an example of true manila manliness. Without moral blemish to himself his conduct was a wholesome restraint upon those of his comrades who were inclined to axe excesses which almost ranked the soldiers of [illegible] Manleys army, while upon occasions when he deemed it necessary, he would drop a word of warning or reproof or admonition, but with so much unaffected sincerity, and kindly personal interest, that it could not be taken amiss.

At one time he said;

" Let us not at all be guilty guilty of any conduct which is relative to that of Manleys wicked soldiers, and which would make us all blush to have the whole world know. This gallant young Glandelinian officer was held in such high esteem by not only his division but all other glandelinian and even generals and officers of all all rank that they made up a heavy purse, and erected over his grave grave a high handsome monument. Among the devices borne therein or thereon were the unfurled Glandelinian Insurgent Flag and a generals sword, while out suitable inscriptions inscriptions told the story of his death and summed up his virtues as a brave and worthy glandelinian soldier.

Then his remains were within another weeks time interred at his boyhoods home before the campaign was resumed, in the presence of a vast, large and deeply affected assemblage of neighbors and friends. The Glandelinian priest pronounced a long discourse or discourse, and his old gray headed father, an ardent Glandelinian and a life long friend of Izner Hyletze himself brought from his own home a handsome silken Glandelinian flag, and wrapped it about the funeral casket, and buried it in the ground beneath him.

The aged father of these two noble glandelinian generals early in the war had enlisted as a private in the 4th Mangabee regiment and about a year afterwards, was wounded and up the wound refused to heal fast enough because of his old age was respectfully discharged from the service. Soon after his s two sons had fallen in front of ottenmier one wounded, and the other dead,,, the sorrowing parent visited the Christian army first to learn of his dead son first, and in order if possible to recover the body of his son. Seeking the Abbeannian regiment to which possessed the body of the dead Glandelinian officer, he lost his way among the numerous numerous roads and turn up battle field, but presently he came to a cit, of tents and stood before me which hung grand National Flag flag, where sat a tall man of thirty years of age with a full board, and wearing what appeared to be the uniform of an Angelinian colonel. The poor old man addressed him, confessing who he was stating his errand, and naming the, Abbeannian regiment he sought. Fearing because he was a glandelinian he would be refused the poor old man looked bewildered and great allen but the officer rose from his camp chair, walked with him a long distance, and then brought him to a tall tent over which door a grape was creeping hanging.

Before he entered the tent in which his son was lying he asked of a soldier who was standing on guard;

" Who was that colonel?"

" That was not a colonel" said the guard almost laughing at the question. " That is general Francis Vivianna."

That a great Abbeannian general, his mind burdened with the plans and anxieties of a mighty and yet failing military movement against his adversary Izner Hyletze would and could so simply and unaffected, enter into sympathy with a plain old man of the enemy, and to assist him to do the last and sad duties duties for the remains of a fallen glandelinian officer was of most than usual and pathetic interest. Therefore though still fighting against him general Vivianna was even enshrined in the heart of not only that poor old glandelinian father, and sorrow stricken mother, but also in Hyletzes and the whole glandelirian army as one to be loved and as well honored honored, and when the time soon came when Vivianna no more was there to oppose him Hyletze said;

" I and Vivianna fought each other in bloody battles, and quarreled over the ways of our methods of warefare but I swear before Heaven and dear Earth that I was always his best friend, and that it was the greatest misfortune that we had to oppose [illegible] each other. I'd give anything if Manley had been there himself instead of Vivianna as I'd like more than anything to beat up the " old butcher".

Therefore it might be said that because of the good nature of the commander, and the character of his ennormour army, that for a long while good luck was with them."

Hyletzes brother declared that the best Glandelirian army intitles to more victories than [illegible] was that over which Hyletze commanded.

After his repulse at Bettenmier general Vivianna made a long detour and effected a lodgement on the railroad further north, but unexpected ly encountered an [illegible] portion of Peppo Evans army at Holt [illegible] tion and attacked it routing untill it retreated to a strong hold in which it repulsed the Borgen of the Abblearnians with a loss to themselves in fatmen almost a massacre. Then besieging the place he demanded the surrender of the army, and wrote-

" To general Beppo Evans"

I fully demand the surrender of your post immediately. I'll receive said assault with my whole army to morrow and if the post happenns to be carried by assault no prisoners will be taken."

General Vivianna.
Abblearnian army."

This unusual threat failed to intimidate the Glandelinian general who answered by return letter in as few wordsas these.-

" To general Beppo Evans."

Glandelinian army.

" According to the truth that I do not allow my army tocommit the horrors and atrocities that are done by other Glandelinian armies yourthreat at the concluding paragraph surprises me greatly, but I will answer to your demmons of surrender thus; As you see, if the place is carried by assault no prisoners will be taken, I will say this--I don't see why for any reason I would not be able to hold the position. If you desire the position I beg of you most graciously to come and take it."

Beppo John Evans.
Glandelinian army.

Indeed this heroic defience might have been in itself a victory. General Vivianna made no further attempt upon the post for fear Bjletze hearing the sound of battle in a new quarter might using upon him in the rear, and therefore continued up the railroad, destroying most of the track for nearly a hundred miles, and all the bridges over every creek, especially where they crossed over pick mands and other bogs, almost as far as Arenburgs RunBesides this damage he destroyed about six hundred locomotives valued at $4c0,000 each, and thousands upon thousands of cars loaded with subsistent stores and ammunition and all these ammunition cars made a noise like as if all the territory was trying to thunder at the heavens with an earsplitting in hoard and felt at Angelinia Agathia some three hundred miles away, so that windows were out, and furniture danced and acted queerly throughout every room of ever, house.

And so complete was the work of destruction that the Glandelinian garri noon at Heidi city was completely isolated for nearly two months.And the first train from the south, after this $1,456,456,789 raid did not arrived untill October October the 15th.

As soon as Vivianna began this movement turning and destroying everything before him and making fires whose light and smoke clouds, day or night could be seen for fifty miles Izner Bjletze left the first grand division to besiege the city of Heidi and with the remainder of the army, depleted by casualty, to less than 60,000,000 seated southwest after him. The storm cloud always a long a coame, and the troops seemingly seemingly engaged in a most hopeless undertaking, were consumed with the greatest anxiety. And it is not difficult now to discern, that even in the early stages of the pursuit, General Izner Bjletze was paving the way for the final and bloodiest part of the Angelinia Agathia campaign. He had telegraphed to general Mic-Hollester Johnston, and also Beppo Evans that it would be an utter impossibility, to protect the roads, now that Vivianna, Monsonia, and the sons of Eajeror vivian, and the whole batch of dangerous Abbleamnian cavarly" armies were turned loose, like as made destructive" Tornadoes" without home of habitation, and asked permission to permission to make the march toard Dorothy Gale city first, pre leaving to make the whole of Abbleamnia" scream for help".

But the whole glandelinian army was without newspapers or letters and the general did not take the men fall into his confidence. Their only information therefore was only, obtained, or infeered from what they could actually see, and therefore any under the circumstances the outlook for the army was anything but encouraging indeed.. And what in the world did it mean?Why was it that were ever leaving behind the very territory that had been conquered at such a loss of life and treasure to both sides? They were marching southwest and their " Christian enemy" was between them and the Aronburgs Run Run River. Would Vivianna run over Beppo Evans, at Holt Junction or pass around him, and cross the stream, before they could be overtaken him? Were the plains of southern Calverinia, and the Hills of northern Angelinia Angelinia to become Bloody battlefields..?

Were the armies of better Glandelinian soldiers in Calverinia state to be devastated as had been those of northern Angelinia belonging to the Nationals? Had Mic-Hollester Johnston been defeated before Vivian pickey. Was a part of Hannibal or Eajeror Vivians a victorious army flo following close upon the heels of Izner Bjletze army. Would the terrible resistence to the " Rebellion of the Glandelinian states" prove successful after all, and had all the trail of Glandelinia patriot blood from Vi Vanity Fair city,("landelinia state) to Heidi(Angelinia) been made in vain? Such were the gloomy thoughts which filled the minds of the travel worn and half starved glandelinian troops during that apparently hol hopeless and postponeless march.

Augustthe "5th 25th the big Glandelinian army passed through Grone junction and here met a small party of Glandelinians whom had deserted the Abblearnians and who were received back into their ranks after being prisoners for days. The region was rich in all kinds of valuable supplies, and for a few days the soldiers were again well fed. It was in this neighborhood that during a battle with the van of Vivian Abblearnian army that General Carlinville was killed. This gallent Glandelinian general was commanding the Fourteenth Glandelinian Corps. Although stricken with the severe wounds, yet he insisted upon accompanying his command untill he fell dead. The joltings of the cart and silence caused him so much intense pain that it became necessary to carry him upon a litter and he almost died upon the hands of his men, those who bore him, when they discovered that death was no no near, having barely time to halt and place the wounded general on a bed in a little farm house where he was given under the care of " Christ Diana" before he breathed his last...

October the 20th the army reached Heidiville, where the pursuit of general Vivianna ceased.It was Heidi, where Bjletze It was near this place where general Izner Bjletze recieved from general Mic-Hollester Johnston full permission to march upon Angelinia Agathia for with an order to wait untill he recieved reinforcements together with a hopeful encouraging letter from the King of Glandelinia, and he immediately perfected his new main and masterly plans for the capaign of the two widely seperated commands, one under him and the other under Beppo Evans.

While reorganizing his own immediate army at Heidi city, he was also directing a similar effort at Holt Junction. The mission of the one was to annihilate the war supporting resources of the " National Cause", that of the other, to mae possible the mission by drawing away the only enemy which was to be dreaded.How completely successful were these great and brilliant plans, no history could have ever recorded. But the Glandelinian troops throughwhose efforts all the success was achieved were just now in utter ignorance of these designs, and the great results which depended upon them. Yet with earnestfidelity to the cause, and unshaken confidence in their great commander they cheerfully devoted themselves to the new and unknown task set before them...

INDEED the events during the early part of the month of August 1913..... and the first ten days in the month had been stirring enough, but probably th it was nothing compared to what was coming. The Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad which had been completed, wrecked by the armies of the Nationals was repaired from Evangeline Corners to Heidi City where the bulk bulk of general Izner Bjletzes army was assembling while awaiting for the promished reinforcements..

Every train going south was loaded to its utmost capticity with the wounded and sick or crippled, with surplus artillery, and in fact almost everything that the men could not or were not allowed to carry upon their backs, and the wonder that trains loaded thus with Glandelinians got through the hostile Christian country in id is indeed a miracle.And returning trains which were strongly guarded and which had about a hundred ammo armoured cars attatached brought troops and only the most needed ac articles------hard bread, and crackers, pork, coffee, coffees, and ammunition and some stores of sugarand the men on board these trains said it took them a " HELL " of a time to get through the hostile territory and that one of their supply trains was overtaken by the " Aronburs Limited " filled with Abblearnian soldiers and taken.It was evident ever to those in the ranks that some very impor tant if not desperate undertaking was at hand.

The acuteness of their perception and correctness of conclusion were surprising Infld destination of the army was to be either northeast, or west, to attack the Vivians, or northwest to move again toard Angelinian Agathia. And this was settling the matter almost as definitely as the General himself could ever do for he had said since the beginning of this Angelinia Agathia Campaign that very often he had more in his mind than he could control .The army was now thoroughly reorganized for the continuation of the campaign. The fourt fourth, First division and the nineth nineteenth and twenty, First Corps had been sent northward to assist general Lee, to capture if possible, of General Vivianna.General Izner Bjletzes immediate army of Glandelinians now consisted of many divisions over hundreds of generals every, division having good corps and fourteen generals, and the army itself was divided into four wings commanded by general Tamerline, and Durgin as chief officers and the rest commanded by officers and generals of each rank as befitted their ability.The infantry, numbered about 8?,000,000 and in addition there was a cavarly force of five million five hundred thousand and sixt, six men, and about fifteen thousand pieces of artillery. The grand total was about over eight, seven million men. And the hoped for reinforcements was still expected but as yet had not arrived. Yet while the work of reorganization was going on, the Glendelinians were busy with their tanks for there were many months ahead of the regular international activity of the bloody campaign preventing disbursements at the regular intervals of a month or so. And indeed payment might as well have been postponed for the army had little use for the almighty money, though the wages were liberal enough at a rate of fourty per month for the lowest private. For there were no merchants in the vicinity, and also the rapid movements of the army made the war risks of the sutler so hazardous that he had retired from business many months before.

The most exciting incident of the day was the final preparations while awaiting the arrival of the reinforcements. Most of the other States of Angelinia Province kept good watch upon every railroad line that was there, and therefore most of the troops that could be expected to arrive were upon the southern branch of the Mic-hollester and Pandora railroad, and ever these had the most exciting time to get through.

The indignation of Mylotzen army was intense, and there were hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of Glendelinians who would never outlive their contempt and hatred of the C Angelinians of that State for their interference in their purpose but nothing could be done as war is war and things have to be expected in war no matter whether they like it or not. The Scouldier regiment coming in on one train had a stirring time of it, having been attacked by Angelinians several times for a hundred miles.

Part 2 of

CHAPTER SIXTY ONE....

[illegible] this and similar posts would [illegible] forlorned by midnight dances which always ended [illegible] soldiers imaginary foes. But that night a merry party of mangaboo Glandelirian soldiers gather d in gathered in lower and upper rooms of this fort which also served as the office of several Glandelirian generals. They shared their quarters with the post telegraph operator whose instruments were on what we may say, is an improvised table. Outside a severe thunderstorm raged with all its fury, the rain descending in sheeted torrents driven by a terrific hurricane of wind, within the fort was an and furious. The mangaboo soldiers--- were indeed is no fitting word to make these kind of Glandelirians---were indulging in the unusual amusement of a stag-dance and therefore when the ord came to " swing partners" the " gentleman" grasped the fingers of the one with a piece of cloth tied about his left arm, to designate him as a lady.

Also the figures of the dance were accompanied with the melancholy thrumming of an old fashioned banjo in the hands of a Glandelirian officer who was claimed to be a musician. This officer by the way before the war began was a great slave ac auctioneer about finally engaged in becoming an owner of as many [illegible] as he was able to buy the highest earning ambition of the Glandelirians of those bloody days. Three Three years ago before the war started he was chief owner of a great great great plantations. Uncle of the [illegible] main great plantations in one of the biggest cities in Southern Calvelonia and had as many as about fifteen hundred slaves under his command. When he entered the army he had [illegible] of what masters they had had [illegible] bette. Now with in possession with. but to return to the fort---while the sport was at its height the telegraph telegraph operator called a soldier pulled handed to the a [illegible] the soldier a dispatch [illegible] (the last received)

Commanding officers of the posts

[illegible]
[illegible]
[illegible]

smoke and the sounds of explosions made it seem as if there was going to be an eruption. And with the approach of morning it could have been doubtful where whether there was even ten buildings remaining in the city, except in the very outskirts. General Ulmer Myletze had determined to render the place utterly incapable of any more service to the national armies and with this purpose in view all the inhabitants had been sent out weeks before. If it had been general Manley he would not have given time for the people to even escape. He and Myletze are two different kind of men however. The Twenty First Corps which had garrisoned Heidi while the remainder of the army was pursuing Vivianonda southward, were the last to leave the city,,, and as they marched out,,,, the fine brass band of the 23th Bangaboom played " All glandelinia Forever" and preedom forever." he man took of the words wedded to the music and high above the roaring flames, the crashing of loud explosion above the noise of falling walls,, above the fierce crackling of mille millions of small arm cartridges in the burning buildings rose the triumphant refrain------ "ALL GLANDELINIA FOREVER"

Indeed for the picturesqueness and suggestiveness, the scene indeed you are indeed was one never to f be forgotten by those who would have ever withessed it.....

THE glandelinian army was now fairly out of Heidi town and on its way northward. It was a remarkable body of men,(considering its record breaking size) the like of which the world had never seen in its long existance, and probably may nev never see as long as it exists.

It now amounted up to 160,000,000 in round numbers(providing they are round there)------ it was an army of grand veterans who had already served for more than a ye year at their profession but who have never been under any of the Manleys, and who had learned all that may have been worth knowing, at least far more than any of their general had ever known themselves(providing they know it yet)Their brilliant achievements could have gone down in any history,(according to it if any history could have been made of this unusual war, that the world never saw, and never wishes to see) and it was worth while for any grand artist or poet and scenes for photograph ers and painters. Their calendar contained scarcely a day that did not already commem ate some more or less important battle as alreadydescribed, and skirmish and march.

Every regiment had been severely reduced by the v cus l casualties of constant service to less than one third it's numerical strength at the outset. He was a fortunate colonel indeed who had five hundred men remaining out of the round 10,000 men(10,000 making a Regiment in the glandelinian or Abbiennian army in round numbers)' he inlisted at home, thirty men made far more than an a verage company out of 1,000there were many hich which mustered less than a score.

A brigade did not parade a longer line than did one of its regiments when it went into service.

This big army of glandelinian veterans was also also full of young men and almost mere boys from eighteen to nineteenth years of age and even far younger and also consisting of men of old age. It was this army who could always be depended upon despite the age of the soldiers, always depended upon to carry their load, march all day and be ready for a frolic or battle when they went into rest orbivouac at night..Nearly all of them notwithstanding nearly twenty fours months of soldier, soldering were not too old to fight for men of fifty to eighty years of age had been sent home or to the military hospital. There were many soldiers among the glandelinian armies who were even too young to vote,and many a Regimental commander cannot twenty years of age, and the majority of line and staff officers, and even generals lacked a great deal of this advan ed age. ;ut they had been in service from the beginning, and what they did not know about campaigning was not worty inquiring into.

Each soldier was practically, a picked man but much had been the dreadful results of losses, that he may be said to have been the sole survivor of four men or fourteen men who had been sent out from vanity pair city(glandelinia) in 1912..... all but he having succumbed to disease or death on the battlefield, and so on.Also he had inherited all their very experiences and therefore added it to his own. e was also very ambitious and his el e lf confic confidence was unbounded.. and his careless swinging gait was the " imperon imc impersonation" of a determination to get where he intended to go and he'd like to see even ' heaven stop him" although he knew absolute ly nothing of his destination. of that he was careless and his confidence in the general in chief was such that he did not disturb himself on that cause. He was headin heading north instead of south, and that was ample assurance that Beppo Evans was tubby taking care of vivianonna---and that Manley was holding the Vivian emperor down, and preventing other christian armies from taking Vivian pickey, though in some sense he did not like the news reported from the results of the Battle at Headrick Junctioner cedurmine. But he went into action as unconcernedly as he took the road for a days march----or if not ordered into the conflict, he would sit one fence or lie down in the road,,, the image of peaceful contentment, within full hearing of a fierce conflict, apparently wholly indifferent as to the result

On the bloody skirmish line he frequently went forward whether he had recieved orders to do so or not, and never fell back untill commended o to, or forced to, unless it was beyond human endurance to remain. He gloried in his power, and believed that no effort or hardship was too great, no matter how he(blasphemed) about it.

He waded swamps, knew where dangerous bogs were even in the darkest night, made corduroy roads over them and got across before they had time to go under, and pulled wagons and cannons out of deep ruts from which the bottom had seemingly dropped. But ther was one thing the landelinian soldier of Mylatzes command did not know that in all this magnificent effort he was making immense drafts against his reserve en energy and that someday was sur to come when he would suddenly find himself far older than his years by reason thereof.

This big Glandelinian army which had been marching light from Angelina pun to Heidi Town was now simply reduced to what it had on, and that was not so very much as it only hadvlittle t at that. Indeed it would have made a very magnificent tableau for a " Bengare opera" on a stupendous scale indeed. What few tents had been smuggled as far north as Heidi City were now entirely discarded and only a few " flies" for the various headquarters, and one to each regiment regiment to shelter the field desks of the adjutant andthe quartermaster were retained. Mylatze himself had no tent. And a little furniture was supposed to be necessary to the last of the Glandelinian officers thus named but even then they generally reduced this in about the same proprution as everything else.therefore the greater part of their " office" was carried in breast pocket and also saddle bags making more room under the ' Fly" for comrades who other wise have been entirely shelterless.

Indeed this thing called a " fly" was a fair cover in fine beautiful weather, when shelter was not needed, but being open at both ends, it was a sorry makeshift in a terrific rainstorm. Each one of the soldiers was supposed to carry half a shelter tent which coni combined with the counterpart carried by a comrade w made reasonable protection for two but man of the men regarded them with much contempt.The avager average soldier cared only for a ba blanked and this he carried in a roll slung over his soldier the ends being tied closely together meeting under the opposite arm, and dround his back. A majority of the landelinians even discarded knapsacks knapsacks altogether those yet and those who yet clung to them carried only a shirt and a pair or two of socks . And each soldier had a hundred rounds of ammunition in his cartridge belt and one hundred and eighty more in his pockets. And his cooking utensil was Nothing but a mere piece of tin tin or a oyster can or a fruit can anything he could use down to even a past board box providing it will not burn and usually he made his coffee in his canteen to serve as a skillet or frying pan. His haversack contained a goodly sup ply of coffee, sugar and salt a very small fragment of salt prk or ham and three to ten days rations of hard bread, and crackers. This supply was habitually to last him about twenty days. Yet it as was expected he would skirmish around and depend pon the hostile country for such food as could be obtainable for that large fra tions fractions of the army rations of which which he was necessarily deperived.

It also may have been a matter of recod record that without a single known exception he was equal to the task, and proved to be such an excellent provider, that when he he reached the scene of the next battle he was in blo better flesh and spirit than when he lect Heidi City..and during the greater part of the march he ate nothing but raw potatoes or sweet potatoes and fresh beef and pork the former baked in the ashes ashes and the latter broiled upon the red embers of a wood fire, or held in the flame on the end of a ramrod making a very toothsome meal.

But even that grew tiresome after some time. Yet the soldiers outfitwas not as complete as he was desired to be without a deck of cards or smoking tobaco tobace or cigarettes and these were carried in the pockets so as to be convient convienent during any halt in theroad. frequent thumbing had so worn these treasured treasured pastebourds that it was in all instances an absolutely impossibility for any player to tell what card he held, o if so be , he took a hand with a party having a " deck" with which he was unacquainted . There were no newspapers, no circulating libraries, not even a tract in that desolate region.

To sum up no glandelinian army ever marched long distances without so much impedimentia and not completed itself so brilliantly or cheerfully to its conditions. The army marched in fourteen columns, the various corps persuing parallel roads.. These columns though stretching for many a mile were sometimes five, sometimes fifteen miles apart.Their combined front was from sixty to a hundred miles., for by day the skirmishers and the flankers of each immense corps spread out untill they met those of the corps next to them on either side, so that if anything unusual happened in any portion of the great army, information was almost immediately given to other commands. by night the position of the various columns could generally be distinguised by their many fires, which made the scene appear like the sky itself with the countless stars..

In front of each corps marched a large squadron of cavarly or mounted infantry.

Frequently these troops, with the aid of the infantry brigades or divisions at the hea head of the column were able to push aside a large body of the enemy without much trouble and ithout halting the column,, and it was only when crossing a stream where the passage was contested fiercely that anything like a general and extensive line of battle was formed.Each brigade in the column took itsturn in the advance and likewise each regiment in the brigade. A cavalry brigade under the dashing ah Ahlsand Ahnle had with a large number of light field guns moved on this flank or what ha the emergency require d.

The itinerrity of the march of the eighteenth Corps(whose movement this narrati e mainly follows) shows the distance traveled between Heidi City and the Next battlefield to have been one hundred and fifty six miles..The flight of any swift swift bird might make it might shorter but he would not make so many flank movements or circuitious routes.The actual march of this kind consumed about sixteen days.

Nine days were spent in crossing streams and bogs, everything where the passage was hotly cont ste n contested, or waiting for supporting columns. The army was hoped to reached the defenses of Mobbl by the Fourth of September but came there much earlier as we will soon observe/.....

On August the 30th the first day out of Heidi City the the Igteenth Eighteenth corps marched about sixteen miles and a half completing that stage of the jeun journey early in the morning, and devoting the remainder o the day to destroying the railroad.. The Sixteenth Corps moved down an opposite road to the left and still further on that direction, on seperate roads, were the High Seventeenth and Twenty Point Corps. The next day the columns marched more than twenty miles, and resumed the work of railroad wrecking and other devastation. On September the first twenty five more miles were left to the rear, and the troops encamped on the beautiful banks of a beautiful ste stream. This was a section of the country which the war had not disturbed untill this moment. It was literally a land of great beauty and well was it for the army that such was the case...

The three or four days rations of hard tack(or carpet tacks) which the men had placed in their haversacks were already exhausted exhausted most terribly indeed. and there was no assurance that more would be issued from the comm commissary train for many days to come indeed there is every reason to believe that even there would not be such an issue.

Therefore such an emergency emergency finally produced the forager. Indeed to indeed to general Isner Mylatzke army he was considered to be a sort of a development, indeed it was a " CREATION" and no history of this war ; am therefore writing can be complete without therefore recognizing the personality and characteristic characteristics of this queer type of the Glandelinian army under general Isner Heidi Mylatzs. The forager had abundant warrent for his being, especially whether the rationale like it or not. General Mylatzs had given him the personality, and therefore confirmed confirmed his duties but certainly no one could have been more surprised than the great general himself to see the fullfillness of this " creature, at his task and the org originality of his general methods.

Under general orders for subsisting the army upon the country as far as is necessary, regular foraging parties properly officered, secured every road on the flanks of every column, gathering horses and mules, and all farm animals from every farm or plantation to replace those which had given out on the march, together with grain and hay for the animals, and meat, meal and everything to grab hold of for the troops. These main supplies were turned over over to the commissary and quartermasters departments, for issue in the regular way, and yet the result was easily to be foreseen...

There was general dissatisfaction, for there were not enough hams, eggs, or chickens, or beef, or chickens, turkeys, ducks, hogs or molasses and other thing s for all. Those therefore who were chliged to put up with side meat were filled with indignation, and under color of the permit given by general Mylatzs, every regiment in the big Glandelinian army sent out an independent foraging party, whose duty it was to see that its particuoli command was f furnished with all the goods and delicacies the o hostile country afforded. These men were the most vehitorous in this Glandelinian army and in their keen competition to outdoe each other, and captur something that the others wou would surely convy, they took great risks and experienced many startling adventures..

When the forager left the Glandelinian column on the first day he made the exce lsion, he either went on foot, having just left the ranks,, or on some broken down horse or mule, which had been turned out from the wagon train utterly exhausted.
Therefore when he arived at the first farm house, he would look about for a fresh mount, and if it had to be had of him to be had, he would help himself despite the protest of the owner, if not, and some rival forager had not been there before him nine times outof twenty some child slave hiding in the place for refuge would be forced to direct him to the place where the stock was hidden in weed or swamp and if it so pleased him he may take only one, and if not the whole stock. Then he would would search the place for provisions, and soon have his animals and perhaps two or three others loaded down with pu poultry, meats, meal, sweet potatoes, honey, sorghum and frequently a jug or wine or applejack or other booze, or he would find a big wagon and load it with the aid of a few refugees and hitch together mules and horses most indiscriminately with such improvised harness as he could make out of old ropes, chains and leather straps. But indeed he had gone through the hardest kind of toil to secure what he did obtain.ed obtained.In all cases, which was its quite quite remarkable, many smoke houses, barns and houses and the like were found to be empty, and therefore on these times he had failed to find anything he wished o to secure. But just when he was about to abandon all hope of finding anything whatever, one of the officers would order a search to m be made under the houses or open anythingthat looks like an old grave and if the provisions which he had been vainly seeking were to be found thereon, for the anger provoked by his work and anxiety the Glandelinian forager then would set fire to everything within the premishes. In the most scarce circumstances were the folks found to be at home, for the majority were terrified beyond extreme by the horrible stories publ ned by all k kinds of Abbleennian ne newspapers, especially of the raging and rapacity of the dreaded " VANDAL Glandelinians " under the Mahleys and therefore had fled either taking with them what they could or destroying or hiding it, which ever came to be the best.

Where the premishes were abandoned the forager made a clean swe p, taking everything he had a use for and destroying by fire what he did not wish to keep, burning hay and hay barns he could not use and destroying haystacks and the like in the farm fields, breaking down fences, and destroying farm machinery and the like..and if the child slaves were found seeking refuge in these places which if rich or poor or poor if there were bleed hounds around the injury was therefore generally avenged by a general fire and blasting and ruining of the entire farm or plantation also plantation altogether.

Now where the forager from Abbleennian women and children he drove them out of their homes if he so desired, and if he also desired to do so he would be usually as courteous as circumstance admitted providing the women or c her children gave him any information he wished for.He therefore would pass the time with the old or young lady whatever she happened to be inquiring when she had last heard news from the old man ; son or brother and whether he was with the Vivian Emperors or some hconcentrilnian Aronburg, and usually winding up with asking her for supplies and the like with the excuse that he did not have anything to eat for days. Behind this excess of good nature for even this kind of Glandelinian it may be confessed especially if if he be a Scoudler he had no doubt something on the like of treachery or a selfish motive, as in ferocity a Scoudler is usually worse than any Glandelinia soldier in the army.

He is also a sly sort of a fellow, and having sestablished establishes a sense of good feeling between himself and his unsuspecting victim he often examined her or her children in an ohal innocent and insinuating way, therefore managing to obtain a great deal of information. He therefore would obtain what Christian army might have been close by; how recently their course of departure, and their probable designs and it then generalized the command.He also would learn all that was to be known of the other neighbors further down the road, whom he expected to " raid" the next day, and quantity and description of descriptions of the supplies, and where they were to b be found. o information under this head was usually yielded more willingly than under upon any other subject, for it is a curious trait of human nature that a man pr or woman who has been robbed or swindled in a trade, takes a keen enjoyment, perhaps disguised of otherwise in seeing his fellows made as miserable fully as himself.

In return for the information received, the forager would con compensate his informer with emotional narratives what of what he and his comrades had already done never failing to draw most strongly upon a vivid imagination as to what they expected to da do .

In taking supplies the foragers of Mylatzes army generally made an exception between the rich rich and the poor and what could to spared and what could not.His depredations were usually confined to the country on either side of the road traveled by his own column, and he would cover five or ten miles inter he untill he met the foulers of another corps, thus there men usually swept over a breadth of country from sixty to eighty miles, taking everything necessary and burning what had to be left behind especially placed abandoned by the rich.They also would often dodge pus their part their cavalry advance, and in many instances they dispersed and attacked the home guards who tried to protect property and homes and other materials.

Having loaded his horse or wagon as the case might be, the forager would head for the road upon which his own column was marching and by discret queries he could soon learn in what direction his regiment was at the time..If rear ward he outfitdin waited inside a large field untill it came along, if in front he endeavored to place his outfit in the wagon train as early as possible, in order to follow into camp. In this he was sometime disappointed, and his acquisitions, team supplies and all might be surprised by a small party of Abbleennian cavalry and confiscated and he himself have a narrow escape from being shot down or captured.but generally the forager knew whom to suspect, and when he hesitated to trust his wagon or horses within a night that is too conspicious, therefore he would conceal them near the road, and dispatch some one to the regiment for reinforcements. The needed helpsoon arrived, and a score of zealous chaps would d distributute the coveted articles and eatables among themselves in a themselves in a prompt and business like manner. You s would see one wing a cop couple of hens from the end of his gunn and trudge into camp, while others labored with the turkeys, and chickens, and jug of molasses or a barrel of honey or the " drink that makes you happy"Happy" sometimes a party of nationals either on foot, or on horseback would attempt to arrest the party of foragers or make a confistigation, and then the forager would an announce that he was a party of nationals in disguise and that he was purveying for the mess of general This-Or-That making or naming some one notsrous for illtemper and a full determination to fully stand up for what belonged to him. On some occasions this fiction generally saved the provisions providing the nationals were dumbells enough to believe the words.

I the author may retail one if the reader likes who was the most perfect type of the landelinian forager that ever served Mylstze in person. He would secure the provisions for him only and what he obtained surprised even the general himself. He was a tall well built fellow, with dark complexion, and a tufy tuft of black beard on his chin and long bobbed hair. He did duty as an orderly for the general and when ever rations became scarce, francis as his name was of his own motion, and from a real love of adventure, added to the duties of his position those of purveror of the mess to which his chief belonged.

Therefore as soon as the troops left camp the next morning he would strike out for a days excursion. It was his particular delight to bring in a fe fresh horse for his great chief almost daily, and truth requires the admission that he knew a good one when he saw it. And if the animal was particulary fine it was utilized at once, the one displaced b ing being regiated to the artillery or wagon train. Francis was often absent for a couple days at more for a couple of days or more, and when it came to be believed that he had fallen a victim to his venturesomeness he would surely bobup most unexpectedly with an unusually large and excellent supply of provisions, and sometimes two wagon loads of provisions which he secured from the rear of some christian camp also which he was nerve e o enough to raid.

In one of these excursions, francis was absent for an unusually long time for nearly a week. a short time before this about twenty of the foragers had been killed by the enemy's cavalry cavarly and their bodies left on the road, with cards pinned to their jackets reading" death to landelinian foragers" puking in connection with this incident it was believed francis was among those s who had been killed, and a noncorderly was placed in his stead. About midnight after a week g had passed, the ovoice of Francis was heard arousing the camp. Seen in the flickering light of the big camp fires he and his outfit presented a indescribably striking appearance.

He had sixty animals horses and mules strung together together with a motley assortment of improvised harness, made up of all sorts of co odds and ends of leather, rope and in iron chain. He bestrode one of the steeds and swayed in the saddle i with an excitement which was in some degree the exhilaration of victory, but in greater part the effect of " Happy Water"(Strong Drink)He had six immense wagons high at each end and low in the middle, similar to a big auto truck of our days loadedto the guards with everything you could think of except one and the latter was loaded to its utmost with the choicest of wines, and liquors, and by fortunate chance there was in the cargo a small box of glass goblets. Throughthe other wagons were sent onward into camp francis at once had the other wagon unloaded, with the boxes extenp orized a bar a bar and most grandly called upon all hands to walk up and take a drink.

It therefore may be curious to note that every man in the brigade at on a once awoke and ac epted the invation i invitation. but if they had been wanted for guard duty, or fatugue, it would have taken the sergeant major, an orderly sergeant, and a stout pair of boots to have awakened the very same men. Samples of the wine were sent to corps headquarters, and the general pronounced them excellent, at the same time declaring that a further supply would be appreciated. Therefore a fully suppl fully supply to fill a barrel was sent over, and then by the assistance of some men from a couple of neighboring regiments and also some other generals and many officers his stock was so exhaunted before daybreak, untill there were fully 10,000 men so drunk they did not know whether they were in camp or sailing in the sky.

no prank perpetrated by general piner yletze himself had a more serious side to it. one day when his orderly francis was gone longer than usual again, the general having lost six horses through fatigue or illness was out himself looking for an animal and therefore took a horse belonging to an Abbleminian athlete priest and as the priest protested Mylstze a said!

" can't help it Father. I must ha e the horse. I need it more than you do. Be thankful take nothing else from you."

" but" ree remonstrated the priest it's the only horse I got and therefore if I'm called anywhere, especially to a sick person or otherwise how am going to get there? "

" o matter what the situation may be it certainly does ot make any difference to me" said the general and he took the horse.

" but general, general yletze Mylstze and I are old friends though fighting onopposite sides, though I am not in the army but in the Service of God. Therefore if you won't leave me my horse, please at least give me your name and I can get an order from the general to have it restored to me."

" Oh yes if that will do you any good" said the general as he mounted the general horse. I'm Major General Isher Heidi Mylst e commander of the Olandelinian army operating in these parts. If you wish to have your horses give me a cow or something else in exchange then and you may keep him."

The priest had no cow or other animal, and therefore Mylstze rode of.

The second scene was at Granicle and then at the moment Mylstze turned into his a camp the raider Francis came in with two wagon full of supplies and six splendid horses. Therefore Mylstze accosted him -

" Lieutenant Francis since you brought me six good horses Iwill direct you to turn in one of the horses b for the one , took from Father Bleuter near Algove creek. "

" Lieutenant Francis who was entirely ignorant as to the horse of of Mylstzes own said was naturally surprised and said!

Why I secured seven horses from the same man and six of these are of them. When I took them he told me toglve you his compliments and tell you to go to the devil. If helie a priest I am a nun."

Mylstze quickl quickly had soldiers sent to the place and the " Priest" was brought before him.

"Later you sent me a very insulting messauge, but have you to say!"

" General I beg you pardon for an sending such a message, but you took the last horse I had had, and he made me angry to be raided in such a manner since one of your men took six belonging to me."

" Well rather the evidence seems that you did not speak as a priest would to any man I do not believe you are a priest. You will either yield your horse by signing your name down on this slip of paper or consider yourself under arrest."

The man did so sadly crestfallen and to add to his discomfort it became apparent to him that all the landelinian soldiers, among whom was one who knew him were having a great deal of f n at his expense, concerning something he knew nothing about. After some days the horse got away but not before thes animal had been used up and abandoned by the wayside. furthermore he proved to be a worthless disreputable beast at best, not of sufficient value to justify the trouble he had caused.

After some days one of the number told Mylstze that the man who was supposed to be a priest was a n aff landelinian officer in disguise, that he had played a prank on the general, and to save himself from further trouble and arrest for ours he had to write an explanatory note to general Mylstze, who however good naturedly took the joke and did not arrest him.

gon con after the approach of day the bugle sounds the reville and the sleeping army prepares itself for another days long marching. however the men in most cases if the hour of rising in unusually early turn out very unwillingly with many a grumble, half dressed, to roll call, and then gather in little knots to prepare the morning meal. one therefore nedsens the all but dead ashes of last nig ts nights camp fire, and piles on fuel wood, others take a bunch of centre canteens and go in search of water. Each man also makes his own pot of coffee. The coffee berries are laid inside a piece of clean cloth and smashed after blows of a musket butt on a stone and the delicious beverage is soon brewing in the old tin oyster can held over the fire at the end of a stick wire or ramrod. And if the foragers have been very successful the day before, sweet potatoes or onions are boiling in the ashes, and a piece of beef well roated is broiling upon the glowing embers . Meat thus cooked to all satisfied would satisfy the hungry of the veriest gourmand. According to the immediate contact with the fire imparted a delicious flavor, besides all the natural juices were retained therein.

If the country was barren, the basket of the rear was satisfied with " hardtack" and a fragment of dry bacon or a pot of beans si sizzled in the fire.

An hour or so later the bugle sounds the " assemblyw on the troops fall in on their color line, each regiment, brigade and division having its appointed place in the immense column, and all move in a most orderly way. Then the head of the column moves out promptly at the appointed hour and usually this is a coveted place in the line of march for the troops occupying this position have no interruption, except th the occasionaly delays necessary for gr brushing away the enemy in front, and they usually reach their stopping stopping stopping place for the night early in the evening or even before the sun had started to set. Those who happened to be in the rear are always less happily situated, for they must await the movement of the wagon train and fall in behind. It is generally noon, sometimes later, before they are able to move, and therefore this delay involves a corresponding lateness in reaching their camp camp ground. and fre quently they do not settle down untill nearly midnight, and sometimes even later.

Well in the advance is a large squadron of cavarly, or mounted infantry moving at a good pace. But they are argus-eyed, and frequently halt to ascertain the occasion of a suspicious circumstance, or what is the cue cause of the big fire over there! , or over in front, or on the left, or to reconnoitre the road... Two or three Regiments of cavarly well armed ride in advence, their reins held in the left hand, their repeating carbines or hen Henry rifles and automatic pistols resting across the pommel of the saddle or half out of their holsters, or held at the side muzzle downward, ready for instant calling to the shoulder.

A large squadron of the Abbleannians, alm also mounted is usually discovered , and the main body of the Glandelinian troopers are notified by disa disguised signals. down the road or across the fields the whole squadron charges at the full gallop, Entill well within range of the Nationals, when they break into a wild rush, urging their horses to the utmost speed, firing as they go. After reginting for several minutes the Abbleannians turn and retreat, untill he reaches his support, and then the Glandelinian advance is checked.

The Glandelinian skirmishers dismount, seek such shelter as the ground will afford, and keep up a very sharp fire along a ten mile stretch untill the infantry supports he hurry forward and seek the flanks of the Abbleannians. Meanwhile a number of Glandelinian artillery open fire down the road or in the field, over their heads. In an hour or two the " Enemy" vanishes. The Glandelinian troops resume their place in the column an ambulance drives rapidly forward, and recieves a load of hundreds of bleeding suffers sufferers, a three score of graves probably are dug in the road, a small stream, or a wide stream, a swamp, or the opposite side of a impassable bog, or a thick wood offers opportunity for a repetition of this kind of a scene.

These events though they are frequent do not disturb the main column. At the halt the men scatter to the side of the roads in immensely long lines three deep, some drop on their front, others deploy themselves in any way they choose, or reach into their haversacks and mud munch a piece of hard tack, while here and there little knots engage in some sort of a game. Presentl a general and his staff or a mounted officer passes b by and a running fire of interrogatories is dischargedj" how far is it sir to camp?" " what's up ahead?" What in the name of Neptune are we stopping here for?" " Is there a forest fire?" What bog is there before us and how deep is it?" followed by sarcastic remarks upon his appearance, p or possible errand, concluding with the inevitable injuction to" go to the devil." Happy the man however who under such circumstances,, can either by a soft answerturn away wrath, or keep his tongue to himself,for an impatient retort, or an indication of annoyance, while will provoke some keen remark that will pass from regiment to regiment, and follow him the length of the entire column no matter how fast he happens to speed his horse.

The Abbleannians in the front had therefore been brushed away though it took a hard "(brush to do it) by this time, and the column was again in motion, and the men plod along in a go as you please fashion. Conversation, quip and badinage interspersed with fragments of songs, and even school day recitations and the like enliven the hour. But there is no such place to learn character here as ... Every man no matter what or who he is whether he is a private or an officer is weighed by his comerds comrades and his true value ascertained..... His weakness maybbe concealed in society-here they stand fully revealed and usually much against his will or to his delight. Therefore any peculerity good or bad, physical, or mental is detected, and fastens upon him some significent appellation from which he cannot escape.

An unusually tall man goes by the name of " Skinny, Fence rail, walking stick, or long legs, or Lamrod and " Too much long follow" a short one by that of Stunch, Shorty, or top body, while one of square built is known as Chunky, Fatty or main purral."but traits of character are more readily regcc recognized than those of person. Here is" Newspaper" so called from his habit of interlarding his reflecti ions upon current eve events with quotations frombooks and newspapers. There is the Professor! Professor who at home might have been a school teacher and cross road debater or orator. But he co mits the unpardonable sin in the eyes of all his comrades:that of using a big word where a small one will answer equally well. He affects superior wisdom and the initial movement of a capa campaign imes much information as he needs to enable hiato tell about what the outcome will be whether it turns out so or not. Once he told his comrades while lookingat the sk, that " We are in for a severe thunderstorm." Two hours later the camp was just blessed by a twisting

"TORNADO THAT CARRIED ALL BEFORE IT"

But if he does not know just how things are, he knows how they should be whether it is right or wrong.whether his friends and comrades make jokes of him or believe him or not. In camp on sunday(There being no chaplain or religious preacher in any Glandelinian army) he will pretend that he is a p priest and securing an old book probably a novel or a Geography he will pretend to expound a passage of Scripture before a jeering and laughing audience, but is in no wise disconcerted at the pretended unfavorable reception given to his wicked blasphemous effort. Sometimes Sometimes he will force Glen Abbleannian prisoners to " Preach for the soldiers" which if he does not the " Professor will secure a thongs and threaten to hit him with it untill he yeilds and usually he yeilds.

" Grunty" whose life is a p perpetual torment to himself for he becomes a butt for the jeers and pranks of all his comrades, and if he goes out on a forage he keeps all for himself. To him nothing is as it should be, but everything is as it ought not to be. " HOG" cares only for himself. Never a cracker, or a piece of tobacc will he divide with a comrade, never will he give anythinghe secures during a raid, and a dying wounded man could scarcely hope for a drink of water from his canteen.

"Slouchy" never carried a blanket blanket, haversack, or overcoat, on the march but depended upon stealing one or both when he reached camp. He v never would wash his face, or take a bath or go swimming(maybe he was afraid of water as all such cases of Hobcosure) and was incl intolerably filty, and had not a single friend who would dare to sleep under the same blanket with him for fear of body lice or other vermin.....But these always are the exceptions for the great majority have been formed in other moulds. Amongthem is " Old Old Camp Pulley" generally a boy or an old man which the case case may be and who otherwise belies his name, but not by being quarrelsome or an overbearing brawler but the full personification of companionability, ever good natured. abounding in kindly deeds for his fellows.

Here too could b found the man who is known as " old reliable a slow but sure sort of fellow, usually older and more staid and likewise than most of his comrades. He has but little venturesomeness in his makeup but is ever one to be depended on. At the end of day he his always in camp and is one of the first to be ready for the march in the morning. He is never without a needle or a button, or piece of tape tobacco that can not be had elsewhere in the regiment, and is ever willing to do a kind turn for a comrade and make no fuss about it.

Here also may be found " Fire Cracker" a light hearted chap with a sharp tongue and a ready wit full of quaint conciets firing his jokes and repartees at his companions from one end of the day to the other.. one such man in any co company does better service in keeping his fellows in good health(so much does health depend upon animal spirits) than a hundred surgeons. He takes pride in keeping p up with the procession and no matter how many may be the stragglers on a hard days march he is always in his place...

Now the column descend from the highland into the immense swampy bottom which tells of the nearness of a formidable stream. A small but well equipped pine pioneer corps assisted by a large gang of child slaves has worked manfully to put the road in repair, but if there i is any crossing of this " Impassable Bog of mud" the whole van guard of t bthe army is compelled to lend a helping hand. Entire brigades even who whole divisions stack arms and tear down miles of rail fences, and carry them to make a strong corduroy road where the bog seems the narrowest, or fell trees by the roadside if rails are wanting. The heavy army wagons and trains quickly rumble across the poor animals suffering cruelly as their feet plung beneath the rails. But as soon as this one train of wagons is across and sometimes it is only twenty at that the extemporized road disappears in the soft ooze and a secon , and even a third, fourth, fifth and up to a hundred roadways are laid before all the wagon trains only are able to pass over the bog. But often the rails might part and large detatchments could be seen strugglingwith wagons or guns whose teams are caught in the quagmire and which are sunk in the mud often beyond recovery or rescue to go down forever, even though the soldiers strive to lift them out by main strength.

To attempt to cross a bottomless bog is sure a risk but the army too attempts it though it is a six days effort, though pontoons are placed at ten or twenty different places at the same time, and the roads are a as often sunk in and are to be repeated. Many a time a man is up to his neck in the bog before he is pulled out, and sometimes he can never be rescued, and have to keep on going down to find(Bottom) if he lives long enough to do so, and survives the smothering process.

Farther on is th the big river and other bogs, some of quick sand and others of pitch and mud. The skirmishers hundreds of thousands in number then are exchanging as many shots with as man of the " enemy " skirmishers on the other shore, and then a large number of cannon are hurried forward and pitch shells across but most of them go into the bog and furl eruptions of sad sand or mud upon soldiers of both sides. Then to attempt the corr cross the river a pontoon train is brought up and under the protection of this fire, the pontooners launch their canvas boats one after the other, and connect them, untill they reach the otherside.,,The skirmishers then rush across, in long lines and though they might be shot down in hundreds, they reached the other side, with the Glandelinian infantry close at their heels and after sharp fighting drive the Nationals from the river bank or into the swamp and then are compelled to rescue their enemies from the bogs with ropes and other devises and make them prisoners. Planking is then laid upon the boats, upon which the troops and trains pass over.

Then another week of dangerous and hard effort is made in crossing other bogs and quicksands and finally after some loss of life, and immense record breaking labor and the sinking of a thousand roads before the army is across more labor confronts them which though not of a danb dangerous nature yet is enough to c cause a lot of swearing and other" Beautiful words".On the other shore of he the last bog the ascent is steep, and the roadway is through thick, sticky clay and mud sometimes three feet deep. Hundreds of men while rending the air with shouts and curses apply themseles themselves to the wheels of the heavy wagons and guns, while the army teamester with just as much swearing and cursing cracks his whip, and urges forward his weary animals with the choc choicest oaths known to such a language that it was a blessing the horses could not understand them.

Nothing that ever fell upon human ear is to be likened to the complx conplexity and comprehensiveness of the " BEAUTIFUL" vocabulary of the Glandelinian army teamse teamster. Indeed he seems to know the pedigree and performances of the horse or mule and every detail of its anatomy and he unathematizes it from one end to the other, or shakes the air with l blasphemies, and imprecations or obscene words of every description giving a full bill of all particulars. He runs the gamut of oaths in every key, and then profanely apostrophizes himself because of his inability to express himself as he as vigoriously as he thinks circumstances justify.

So these days of laborous and perilous marching and work wears away. There is no halt made for the noonday meal. The men eatwas they march or when there is a stop because of the road being blocked, the provident soldier therefore limiting himself to the smallest part of his ration, untill in order to make his provision last untill a new issue is made, and the reckless eating untill all is gone, trusting to good fortune to provide for him on the morrow.

As evening comes on the steps of the men grow la ard laggard, and they drag themselves painfully along the dreary road. The jibs and the jokes which have been bandied from man to man had died out, and there is only sullent silence or profane and blasphemious complaint . Then the foragers rejoin the column, and their te treasures of eatables unloose the tongues of the men, and cause them to cry gleefully in anticipation of the feast to come with camp and night. Anon the military music strikes p a tremendous shout is raised, and the column then regains its bouyancy of spirt and swiftless of gaint..

At length the camping ground for the night is reached. And if the foragers had b been successful, the men would enjoy the real meal of the day. Turkeys, chicken, beaf and pr pork, vegetables of all descriptions, sorghum and honey make a toothsome ma meal and the severity of the labor gives to the men the heartiest of appetites.

CHAPTER SIXTY TWO.

A GRAND CAMP FIRE SCENE. SOLDIERS OF THE SINGING CORPS. ONE DEAD ENEMY AND HIS PICTURE. AN ANCEDOTE OF MYLETZE. ADVENTURE AT TURNER. ACIPHER DISPATCH. CROSSING THE MILLSTREAM. UNFRIENDLINESS AND FAITHLESSNESS SHOWN BY THE CHILD SLAVES. PASSAGE OF ANOTHER STREAM. A NEWSPAPER IN CAMP AT LAST. DESTRUCTION OF PROVISIONS AND FORAGE BY THE CHRISTIAN CITIZENS. THE ARMY ON THE POINT OF STARVATION. STILL TEARING UP THE RAILROAD. NEARING FLANDERS. WITHIN SOUNDS OF HEAVY FIRING. A SHARP AND BLOODY SKIRMISH ON THE OUTSKIRTS OF FLANDERS. HOW A VOLLEY OF SHELLS LOOKS IN MOTION. THE SEVEREST ARTILLERY FIRE YET OF MYLETZES ARMY. RUNNING PAST THE ENEMY'S BATTERIES. THE TROOPS WHILE UNDER FIRE STARVING. AN ELABORATE MEAL WELL WORTH MENTIONING HERE. A LONG STRING OF FORTS TAKE BY STORM. ARIVAL OF SUPPLIES AND MAIL. ONE GENERAL WHO DID NOT LIVE TO RECIEVE HIS LETTER. FLANDERS ENTERED. THE TROOPS IN HIGH CLOVER AT FLANDERS. A GENERAL AND HIS STAFF OFFICERS FIND PLEASANT ACQUAIN A ACQUANTAINCE AND COMFORTABLE QUARTERS. GENEROUS HOSPITALITY OF AN A ABBIEANNIAN ENEMY AND HIS SAD DEATH.

THE days march was soon over, and the men were therefore gathered in little knots about the camp fires which were as numerous as the stars in the Heavens, without any thought of what kind of weather it might be, whether hot or cold, and cooking thei their supper over the glowing embers.However throughout the whole Glandelinian army habit had b made this the main camping ground, besides the bright blaze especially in a dark and lonely woods is a great companionship.If any one of the said readers were to be just for sight seeing within Izner Myletzes camp(as it is the only kind of safe Glandelinian army to be with providing you are no spy) he would see the men variously engaged.

Many could be seen repairing garments,which had fallen to pieces through long or hard service or, many would be beating the sad and sand and dust of the march out of their shoes, or clean the mud off their uniforms and boots, and patch up as best as they can the stockings or socks which have been so badly worn worn out as to be very little protection to their blistered travel worn feet. Other cook a fragment of mea t or a potato for the mid daymeal on the merro , while not a few most industriously thumb a " deck of cards, or smoke cigarettes and the like...Euchre and sevenup. or every card game in the listare usually the favorite, but occasionally poker is played and the oldiers who have no chips, cut pieces of cardboard paper into round shapes or use grains of corn for chips..

The Glandelinian soldiers who dod not smoke cigars or cigarettes produce their pipes and tobaco, for in the whole Glandelinian army no matter how young the soldier was there could not be found one who did not smoke, and discuess the events of the of the day. In this symposium the forager who has been out on some raid that day occupies a conspicious position. or rather as we will call it he is the whole Gazette of the Glandelinian army...His rambles have led him among his comrades or those belonging to other commands traveling far idistant roads, and he knowns all about what other Glandelinian generals, and those of the Nationals are doing by ni his raid on Christian Newspaper offices and other places.This narrative and his encounters with citizens on the plantations he had visited, or other private places, he relates in a most graphic manner, the only in erruption teing an occasional quip intejected by a listener, and at times a profane reflection upon the very veracity of the narrator.

But amid all the running fire of sharp retort, there is rarely anything but good humor. The long thin skinned man, who could not take a joke, or who always wore a sullen scowling face, wore himself out with homesickeness, and was therefore discharged... and the quarrelsome camp bully deserted long ago or put into his proper place in a way that he had never expected.The conversation then turns upon the morrow----which way are we going, and what will be be doing when we get there, and whether we'll meet the " kn my Enemy" or not. It is a very curious commentary upon the practicle practical side of any system of education, that few soldiers in the Glandelinian ranks(and nearly all had attended any school he could go to) had any sufficiently clear recollection thathe did not know his geography to be able t to figure at their actual position. They really knew which way they were heading, northeast or east as the case might be, but their questioning as to where they were going was more out of impatience than mere ignorance or curiousity. Even the large rivers they crossed were conspicious enough landmarks to give all their bearings and who could find a soldier among Izner Myletzes army who could not at once tell the name of the swamp, the bog, the river, or any land mark or hill that he did not face correctly.

There was probably one man that might have not know anything about the Geography but if he was in Myletzes army he was e as easy to find as a pin lost in a quicksand.

This subject disposed of the boys would fill up the evening with such anecdote and song as grew naturally out of the conver a conversation but it was no song a man or woman of good clean character would care to listen to. There was less singing in the Glandelinian army than any other, and more wicked songs at that which would lead t the uniformed to believe. But in majority of cases in Myletzes army it was different, as his was generally a singing army. Then a song meeting would be held almost nightly in some quarter of the Regiment, and the songs sung were of many varities some of which " The Christian dogs will never see home" and " when shall we meet T the hounds" r order, but these soon outlived their usefullness as Myletzes never allowed the term"CHRISTIAN DOGS" in his own army, and neither did Beppo Evans.

They were too suggestive of more insults to the Nationals than Myletzes liked and the realities of active service in the face of the enemy was sufficient. Yet the Glandelinian soldiers did not take kindly to sons of any mournful nature, neither did such songs as " We are the last to come" or Goodby Glandelinia to hell with Abbiesannia" attain any great popularity in Myletzes army. What they liked best was rallying songs, songs for recruits or for veterans, songs of a jolly spirit giving nature, and long fast sweet tuned marches and fox troy trots and the like, and such as sad songs, and those kid kind about " Christian Dogs" was a sentiment which could be saftly sung a thousand miles in the rear or at the rear, but those who were at the front had learned the magnitude of their contractttt contract, and therefore they di did not care to do anyunecessary boasting.

A new love ditty with a taking le melody was favorably regarded, but what the soldiers really ached for and sang with a joyious abandon were comic songs of any kind which they could secure some such as" Why do ye wish to be free ye slaveiss" or " General vivian left his coat in Manleys headquarters." or such roystering verses as " The bold Butcher Manley" or " Manley carries the sword through his own l kindred" or as " Munley 's Body lies a Mouldering in the pit" and it was rarely that a really ribald song met with such favor. There was one young Glandelinian soldier or drummer boy a sadly illiterate but true hearted boy, and he furnished great amusement with his one solitary song, not exactly of a Religious pattern, but somethin something about " Emperor Vivians Daughters" which he sang daily and nightly for nearl nearly two years untill he was killed at Big Girl Knool. One of them was as-

The Vivian Goils have stolen my coils,
Oh far you well I'm going to sell.
Oh the Vivian Goils I'd love to sell,
Oh good by My Vivian Goils
For they wear too long the coils..

The vivian Goils said to be sisters,
But they fill my feet with too many blisters,
Oh if ihad they in my possession,
The Glandelinia would be Mighty in her su ccession.
The Vivian Goils give me too many b. blisters.

this song however was not to Myletzes liking either and therefore the lad had to watch that no officer was around when he gave vent to this song.But anecdote growing out of the events of the day was the usual pastime and every regiment could yeild sufficient to furnishe furnish themes for pet and scenes for painter or photographer and others.

These eningwhen the army was encamped a Glandelinian soldier displayed the picture of hise of a wo an and three beautiful little girls and one boy. He had taken it from an enemy dead on the field of battle near Delight's junction and had it ever since.

" To tell the truth" said he " it surely did make some effect on my. And he was a nice young feller too. Why he had the picture held up right before his eyes, when I bent over him taking his last message, and when he died he had just as natural and sweet a smile on his face as if he were alive. He gave the picture to me asking me to keep it untill I had a chance to give it to a Christian prisoner who I might know."

" Well " said a comrade" at least I'd keep the picture untill you find the right persons it belongs to. Don't allow it into the hands of any other Angolinian soldier. He might defraud the women and children."

Keeping that picture for a dead National" said another, was about the same thing that I was requested to do one day during the same battle you mention. I came across a dead christian soldier lying flat on his face and beside him was his comrade mortally wounded but still alive. I gave him some water at of my canteen and offered to bring him to camp, but before he died he turned over, took a pluck of tobaco out of his pock and offered it to me saying;

" You are the only good Glandelinian soldier ever known. Take this as a remem brance."

On the followingmorning the army moved forward untill it reached a little Creek called TurmerTurmer Turmer Spring and along its banks was a long line of National infantry formed up. not knowing whose army it was the Glandelinian forces camped there throwing up works while the generals went out to scout but on account of the nature of the land and not able to make any movement without being observed by the Nationals they returned to the lines. The ndx next day there was considerable skirmishing and some severe fighting, but the Glandelinians easily drove the Nationals from the n banks of the river. One of the Glandelinians easily drove the helpled a comrade bury a National on the banks with a cartridge buried between his tresh teeth. A bullet had hit him in the head and killed him, but he never fell over or moved a muscle, andthere he had been found dead on his knees behind a tall tree, his gun in one hand, his hand close up to his mouth, with the big part of the cartridge cartridge in his fingers and the paper he had bit off the end still between his teeth. The Glandelinians could not straighten him out and therefore they buried him in this position.

The Glandelinians had pressed on elsewhere and ran the Nationals out of their camp and one of the Glandelinians wentbinto a tent and found a National soldier apparently lying asleep. The Glandelinian shook him and hollered at him, but he did not answer, and then other Glandelinians coming on, they found the National was dead. He was shot in three places, and had crawled in their after he had been wounded, or he might have been killed while he was in there, for there had been the most awful stiff fighting in that camp, and all the tents, about a hundred thousand in number, had more than the same number of bullet holes in every tent.

In this camp Colonel Sanders was wounded, and general Colt was killed, While they were carrying the colonel out of the camp a shell exploded close by and killed him, those who were carrying him, and twelve others who were were not far off. He had been a fine officer, and a very nivnice man, and he was a high officer with a good commission and therefore it was a loss to the Glandelinian army.

The losses of both sides though very heavy was not given in this bloody skirmish which lasted four hours.

During this skirmish general Myletze had a peculiar adv adventure. It seemed that Myletze was inspecting a portion of this camp when the Abbiesannians were driven out when he came across an old Abbiesannian colu colonel who was wounded. He had an easy chance to have shot Myletzedown dead where he stood, and He had leveled his pistol at the general and as he hesitated Myletze said-

" You certainly surprise me that you do not shoot." Then seeing the man was wounded and almost helpless, he speedily disc disarmed him but instead of doing the National any harm that was expected he wished to take him into camp and allow his wounds to be attended to, and that when he recovered Myletze would send him back to the Nationals for exchange of a Glandelinian colu colonel.

" No" said the wounded cl colonel. "Cl am far beyond recovery as the wound is in my heart. I will not live leng."

But the colonel through a miracle of some kind did survive, and sometime after, when there was an exchange of prisoners, probably a month of or two after Mylet ze sent several men with a flag of truce and who would face him but the Colonel himself and fearing Myletze would not remember him said that he was the colonel who had attempted to shoot him, and that in all cases Myletze had spared his life and sent him to the camp and brought him through when he was on the point of death.

Myletze then said;

" You need never forget or fear that I forgot you old man. I remember you very well, especially my narrow escape."

Neither one was a bit ml malicious about it, and neither could lose the opportunity to joke about it either.

Later on the army was concentrated before a small villiage called Turmer. During this time one of the Glandelinian foragers had an experience probably that I or the reader would have been scared to death to have gone through. He went far out from the Glandelinian position, and when he was on his return there he found his division had shifted its position because of a slight engagement the morning before, the forager having been gon for about three days...He then was corralled at breastwork No I and put to work on the fortifications untill there was a big enough squad of men to be sent back to his own division. Well they soon got started, and went up the Prevost River to about as far as Heidito Bluff near Turmer villiage and they landded there about about seven oclock in the evening. There were a hundred other men besides the forager who belonged to Dargins Division, and he asked of a guard where it was. The guard told him the division was about seven miles seven miles on the right, and the forager therefore made up his mind to reach it tha that night if possible.They therefore walked along pretty briskly, and then it soon grew to be very dark, and finally the whole hundred came within sight of a number of camps, and the forager asked who lived or resided there, and the guard said it was general Izner Myletzes headquarters.

The forager then asked where general S Dargins headquarters and division was and the guard answered that the regiment was heading for it, and thefe therefore to go straight ahead, and do not waste time asking so many confounded questions.

Af er awhile they all saw numerous camp fires as thick as the cluster of stars in gh the sky during a clear night, and therefore they marched tward them, but they were still a good ways off for the camp fires seemed to be no nearer then when they started. Then the column marched into a large hollow where either the forager or his one hundred comrades could not see a thing, not even the camp fires, but supposed they were going in the going in the right direction nevertheless..Pretty soon they came to a good sized hill, and commenced climbing it.

If one of the soldiers had not started an unusual song, because he was a little " Happy " because of a littledrink this edventure would not need to be related here. He was singing at the top of his lungs a new song he had learned while out foraging, and he was just in the middle of the Chorus-

" The Christian dogs are coming along, coming along,

The Christian pons are coming along,

My fair Abbiesannia"

when a sudden glare of fire from numerous points seemed to absolutely jumped jump out of the sides of the hill above and on the summit as if it suddenly became alive with spouting molten lave, there was a sound like many muskets being fired and the bullets whistled about like a tempest of rain picking offnearly threequarters of the one hundred men before they knew what happened Killing and wounding them all.

The survivors including the forager and the singer who also survived turned to run, but the forager caught his foot into something, and he performed an unusual kind of a cartwheel act all the way down the hill.

The hill was pretty steep and his knapsack full of goodies taken in a mornings forage made him top heavy, and he rolled down hill end over end as if he wasthe spokes of some big wheel, and landed h kerchug in a ravine lined with brush. The other surviving boys were no where to be seen, and the forager certainly was scared. The bullets came raining through the brush now from both sides, and shells burst at intervals above the ravine, and a fire started among the forest and undergrou undergrowthabove.

Wh all the soldier lay all night under that dreadful convering fire in a cold sweat. The idea of him being Killed down there, all by himself, and his mother, or wife and children never to know what had become of Him, was indes indeed awful.. Onthe following morning he made up his mind to scout around a bit, but the guns began to crack and roar again on both sides with tenfold ferocity, and then artillery swelled to the din, and finally the Forager found that he was between the Glandelinia and National lines, and indeed the reader may imagine how close he did hug the ground. After several hours of severe activity the artillery of both sides let up, and then there were only a few rifle shots. The Forager studided the lay of the land, and finally got the point of the compass, and therefore made up his mind which way he ough ought to go to get into his own lines. Then finally he rose up on his knees, and cautiously lokedthrough the brush and distant trees, and on both sides of him he saw earthworks, and noticed that farther to the south, they went away from each other. So after some hesitation he decided to follow the ravine farther that way, and he did so ,but he crawled on his hands and knees and stopped for every five yards or s so for every time it seemed his head would show a little above the earthworks he would hear the loud cracking of rifles and the sign singing of bullets.

Every moment he had the fear he would be shot at and killed.

Then after an hour of this, he took another observation, and found that the works on his right, which he took c to be the Glandelinian side had run out, and that in that direction a thick woods stood before him part of it afire.

Then in desperation he took a white handkerchief out of his pcket, and therefore tied it on a stick stick, and made up his mind to surrender to the very first man h he met whether he was a Nationnal or a Glandelinian....So he marched along to the left and then tward the angle in the same direction but somewhat at right angles from the ravine, when he heard some one order him to halt--he being about a hundred and fift fifty yards off,------and therefore he waved his white flag.

It was a big squadron of cavarly, Mangaboo Dragoons, and (Thank Goodness) but he was glad to see they wore green gray uniforms and white trousers and not yellow trousers and purple coats.

Well when he finally told them his story and who he was, and showing his papers which permits him to be a Forager, the officer in charge of the squadron directed him to general Dargins d division. While on the wa way there, he came across a big camp camp where the men(zimmermannians) were at dinnerO---- it being tward noon now----and as the forager was hungry, having lost all in his haversack in his unusual descend descent down the hill, he asked for something to eat.... They told him to sit down with him, and while he was enjoying the meal with them they told about a desperate charge the " Nationals" had made on them the night before, and what terrific fighting it took to repulse the charge which lasted without a single pa place pause all night long.From the way they described it, the Forager knew why then that he had been between two fires..Then finally after traveling till near evening, he finally found his division. It seemed it had not been annoyed by any attack of the Nationals, nor had it moved up so as to complete the line of investment of Turmer Village but was well back in the rear, and to the left of the line, and the Forager, and his one hundred followers had gone clear around the left flank of general Dargins lines, and somehow got in between them and the Nat o Nationals.Then they got turned around, not knowing where they were, and marched right up in front of the rifle pits of both sides.

Out of the whole hundred that followed him only one of his comrades tuht thatnight came into camp all safe and without a scratch. The others were never heard of, and as he had seen so many of them fall before the first volleys, he felt dure sure that the rest had been shot and either killed outright or mortally wounded and had died somewhere in the thickets, where the the Forager spent such a misrable night.But for nearly three months that ground lay half way between the two lines, which were ever ablaze, it being a Vickburgs seige like but on a thousand times greater scale, and every point of the battle lines, appeared like so many volcanoes in violent eruption, with fires, great explosions, and lighting flashes of musketry and cannon night and day without a single pause, and thefe therefore for the forager there was no chance to go and look for the bodies of his comrades, besides the besides the underbrush was so thick and covered so much space, that they might h never have been found anyway.

During this seige, sometimes explosions were so great s that sides of hills crumbled down like avalanchesand the ground was badly torn up and many fearful charges of the most desperate character were made by both sides, and often either one or the other would get within the works of the other and fight desperately and savagely hand to hand only to be destroyed or driven back in the end.

There were some very curious circumstances in this turmer seige. General Mylstxe had a scout whose name was believed to have been purpo Henders. He was from Vanity Fair city, and an a f awful smart chap, but had too much sympathy for the cause of the Nationals against whom he had enlisted in the beginning. While Mylstze had general Francis Headricks army of Abbiesannians cooped up in Turmer Villiage, and while general Hansonia Fa Francis was out behind Jorden River in Mylstzes rear, and both parties were trying to agree upon a concentrated movement to smash Mylstzes besieging armies who was between them!

This Henders deserted and went to Francis's and some how or other got into his confidence and undertook to carry a dispatch through general Mylstzes lines to Headrick. He also took along a lot of torpedoes which were badly needed by a lot of Nationals in turmer Villiage. Somehow or other Mylstze knew all about the scene, as he was an unusually shrewd general, and when Francis or henders tried to get through the lines he was captured by the Glandelinian pickets, and taken to the general.

The officers had a hard job making out the dispatch but they finally read it as follows;

" The last letter I wrote to you was brought back to me by the messenger at last. Two hundred thousand rounds of ammunition will be sent. And it will be continued as the first arive. General Vivian is sending me a division of strong Corps, artillery and cavarly. When these reinforcements come I will advance to your assistance at once. Tell me which you think may be the best road to take, and how, where, and in what measure and position is the enemy encamped. ? Ho How strong isyour force, and what size it that is that of the enemy?"

Hanson general Hansonia Francis."

Well Hell Henders ammunition was replaced by false so as to be useless, and he was allowed to go into turmer Villiage with them and his dispatch. The next day he came back with an answer from Headricks and that gave way the whole plan. General Mylstze had found out where general Francis was to make his rear attack, and he fixed for him. The upshot was, that while he maintained the seige with the half of his army, he sent the part that was not active, tward Hansonia Francis, and after a severe battle in which nearly five hundred thousand fell on both sides smashed and routed him.

During this seige there was a conversation in the Glandelinian army between an Englishman who fought on their side, and a Glandelinian. The Englisy man could not speak the langa language of the Glandelinians very good, while the man he smoke to understood english only a little and could speak it in a broken way. He therefore said to his companion;

" Say boy you don't know how I came near to having the commsion of a adjutant general did you!"

" No" said the Glandelinian.

Well while we were lllying before Delight's Junction beforevthe eve of that great big fight, general Leonia Meldonia Picknell, then chief commander of the army of those parts came down to look after his pet hobby of securing as many child slaves as possible to use for fortification construction.I was chief clerk for general

Myletzes adjutant general then, but I did everything for him but write, and that evenning general Maldonia picknell came into the office when I was alone. He said to me;

" General Myletzes give a good account of you. How would you like to have a commission as adjutant of a Regiment that conducts the labors of child slaves.?"

It came so bluntly, and his voice was so kind that it took me off my feet. After a few minutes I said;

" General I am proud to have the confidence of general Myletzs and your self yourself but I can't take such a commission just now."

Of course the general looked as if he did not know what to make of it, and therefore Inwent on.

" General I am very gra grateful to you indeed, and I want to say that I am fully in sp sympathy with the purpose of directing the work of these slaves. But as you know I'm a foriegner, and as I started out in this war with my friends, to see it through, I'd rather not be with any slaves. If I can win a good commission serving with the soldiers, I will be more than glad of it. But if I cannot, I would rather serve with them as a private to the end."

The general did not speak for a few moments, and then he said in as good english as he could assume;

" Young man I respect your feelings, and I hope and believe you will gain your desire before the war is over. Now I will be here for a couple of months or probably only a few weeks, and if you know of any corporals or sergeants who would make good company officers, and take commissions with regiments that have child slaves under them let me know."

Well boys I remembered that, and most of the men in this regiment who recieved such commissions were appointed largely upon my recommendation. I had another good chance" he continued" Just after the battle we read of near Cedernine just past. You remember that division commanders were always instructed to report the names of young soldiers who had behaved themselves well in behaved themselves, for appointment as high comms commissioned officers. Well my name was sent in, but I would not accept. I started in to see this war through, and here I am."

" Now My keed, it does certainly seem strange how easy the sholu shoulder straps come to some of us, and how hard it ees for the reast of us." the speaker was his Glandelinian companion wearing the uniform and shoulder straps of a lieutenant.

" I was on guard duty, at general Myletzes Headquarters back of Delights Junction, and one day some of the boys made up their minds for a little of se sporte. So we went out to forage for a leedle wi whiskeey, and got a gallon, and put it away in a teent, ready for se night. Well it had to be that some of se escort of se company under se Captian Glotze smelted eet, and zy zay come and stole eet, and had se time of se deevils. Some of zem were se great quarrelsome chaps, and say had se one beeg fight. In the morning se general Dargin--heem being a fine soldier, and heem and sent zem to se guard house.

Now se say we didn't intend to l be left without our fun so we got another jug of whiskeey, and that night we had some rare sport. The generals wife had come down ze river that day, and was quartered wis heem at se teent, and she was disturbed by se great noise. However it was not long after I crawled in se teent, before I heard some ne thumping on se canca canvass on se outside, and then the general for I knew ze voice in a in se seecond say-

" Corporal of se guard--you see se corporal he sleep in se ten teent weeth me--corproal of the fuard. To morrow bring se drunken fools to me office. I'll teach zem a lesson. I'll teech zem not to get se drunk at theese time of se night."

Well keed, I surely was scesred. The general had intended to make me se colonel and he was might strick and I knew if he suspected I was drunk zat night, it was all day with se promished commission. You may believe me I did not sleep se wink zat night, but I did se powerful thinking, and made up se mind what I would do.

In the morning I got up early, and took a good drink to give me se nerve, and went straight to ze adjutant office, and as se good luck would have zem, there was the geeneral all by heemselve. I made my best salute and said ;

" Good morning general. I hope your Excesency is fine sis fine morning. And then I sus not giving heem se time to speek " General I desire to report sir, to make it se report as myself as being one of zem drunken fellows that kept you and ze wife awake up last night. I just made se jackass of my self sir, and I hope ze Excesency will eexcuse me sis once."

h The general looked at me just se once and then he begun to give se one beeg laugh, and then he said;

" Was zar anything like se beeg fight zas night?"

" Nor sir on your honor" I said.

" And are ze ze Mangaboo.?" he asked.

" By no means sir" I said. " My father was from Zimmermannia but I was born in se Calverinia."

And sen se general he laugh all over and sen said heem;

" It ees lucky for se that se was born in se Calverinia. I always noticed when se full blooded Mangaboo gets drunk he wants to make se fight. I do not want to interfere with any ones innocent amusements but I won't allow any one around se headquarters to fight . o to your quarters nir."

That was se last of it oe eet but se story he got out, and never have I recieved se commission zat."

h a Mean hile

Meanwhile the men were dropping grqdually away to their shelter tents and blankets each one seeking such spots as may suit his convience, preferably snug up agais a against the root of a tree. go little semblance is there of the permenent permenent camp during a seige with its color lne, its officers qamps or tents, and the avenues seperating the quarters of the various companies that the sergeant major has no little trouble to find the orderly sergeants, and they the men, when a midnight call is made for fatigue or picket duty. Then the camp fires spon die down, and envri environed by countless vifi vigilant sentinels the army sleeps upon another of its countless bivouacs.

Far along in the night an orderly from brigade headquarters rides swiftly into camp, and calls for the adjutant to whom he handse circular order directing the army to march in a certain direction at a designated hour on the following morning. The adjutant ack owledges the recep recipete receipet by writing his name on the back of the order, which the orderly akes takes to the next regiemtn regiment, untill all ha e have been notified. The men neither know or care anything about the incident, and the bugle sound in the morning in their only warnig, that another days advance is to began upon the beleagured town.

IT was a,ready alread the eighteenth of the month of ovember whether you believe it or not, and the city of urmer had falle , the nationals having re r retreated and therefore laner Myletz's army marched about eighteen miles, crossing a stream at which stood a large country wind or other kind of dll mill by means of pchteons. Here some extensive cootn and farm and other mills, and nearly a hundred big hay and grain elevators were destroyed by fire as the Glandelinians set the tom torch to everyting and made the grandest and biggest of all fires yet since the beginn beginning of their campaign so that at day the smoke could be seen for nearly a hundre hundred miles, and the light at night for more than two hundred.

On both sides of the stream for many a mile the road lay through rough low flat ground, sodden with re cent heavy fall rains, and the heavy wagon trains soon converted them into almost (bottomless abyesses of sd) entailing pon the upon the men severe labor in corduroying, and extricating artillery and wagon trains --work to which necessity had already accustomed them, and which was to be an almost daily experience henceforward to the close of the war, but on this occasion during such desperate work, and amid cursing and swearing, hidden Angelinians from many unkno unknown points would fire upon the Glandelinians causing them great trouble. ometimes a horse or a driver would be shot, or a bullet hit an ammunition box and explode a whole wagon. and the like. The Glandelinians would return the fire but to no avail. The next day the Glandelinian troops entered urmer Villiage, it being a beautiful Angelinian own own. There were a lot of male inhabatants to be seen who knowing the nature and character of Myletzes army did not think it necessary to abandon their homes. But the majority of them had gone in the National army and so many of the men had gone that one would believe that some drastic conscription had literally robbed the city of all its male inhabatants except the old and inferm, butthe real fac fact was that all had gone of their own will into the ranks, especaily allthose who could pesibly do any military service, whether, in the field, garrison or guarding prisoners, or such as home guards.

A few women occasionally peered cautiously from their windows but usually the they kept well hidden from sight,while the children especially the little girls hid under beds or cupboards. There were many child slaves who having been rescued by the h christian army had been abandoned by their deliverers at this town, and they were forced to turn out in all their numbers to be inspected by the Glandelinians.

It was remarkable at this conjucture that the Glandelinian army found among the brightest or the most ignorant of these enslaved children, had no friendlie friendliness for the Glandelinians, for they had been continually told that the dreaded " Rebels" were demons inhuman form not men, and that all Glandelinian armies massacre all children who were rescued and then retaken.

The slaves therefore did not even trust Myletzes men but their faith was also shaken by the abandonment of the National army from urmerville, and their home that the war on the side of the Nationals would bring them freedom from bondage was gone, and therefore many extravagent scenes were were witnessed. It was not an unusual occurance to see many children slaves rush into houses and hide in all possibl possible places, as the Glandelinian troops passed by, and hear them cry for aid from the women inhabatents of the town.

Nevertheless most of Myletzes men manifested an ardent anxiety to use the slaves for sole prposes during their campaign, and therefore an ultamultam was sent to the Mayor of the town that the slaves must be surrendered to the army or the town would be laid in ashes. and the slaves taken nevertheless by force. The Mayor answered that the responsibility as to the slaves was not p to him and that if the army so desired it was up to them to secure the slaves, and therefore thousands o of these poor little homeless little girls and boys for hun hunted at of all their hiding places, and as all slaves could be told or identified by their slave marks, or bobbed hair, and dress not one could escape, and therefore about 10,000 of them were taken from the town, an but were allowed to carry along what they possessed, and were placed in wagons trains behind each column of soldiers, and the army moved on. Going with Manley or others,child slaves were always made to trudge along, no matter whether they could walk as fast as the soldiers or not or no matter how tired they became, but here these child slaves recieved the surprise which they had not expected.

pplaced in army wagon, and no idea where they were going, except that they were with another Glandelinian army, they rode instead of walked, they were not treats treated as roughly as they expected, and had nothing to do as long as the army was on the march but ride, and during camping time at night slep in the wagons instead of on the ground like the soldiers.

This treatment however did not cheer them, they had hoped they would be freed by t the war wherever they might be, and that the National troops would adopt them or find their real parents. With a blind sorrow they accompanied the Glandelinian army during the journey, but recieving not even one third the hardships as the soldiers, and if some of them did get out of the wagon to walk they were soon placed back in being told they needed all their strength not for walking but for the work.

And my what " hard " work they certainly did. uring halts when the soldiers fearing attack needed works, the Glandelinians dug the trenches, while the slaves were instructed in the aid of helping soldiers put up tents and unhitch teams from wagons and of raising flags.

There was one remarkable trait about these little child slaves---their entire devotion to the soldiers of the Abbieannian armies. There was never a single instance no matter what place you find them where any one of these slaves, boy or girl, whether they were even drafted as girl or boy scouts in the retel army even ever betrayed a Abbieannien spy, straggler, or escpaing prisoner into the hands of the enemy, but on the other hand no matter what punishment they might recieve or what tort ture or death stared them in the face for so doing, they gave them every possible assistance, secreting them by da y, feeding them and assit assisting them on their journey by night or going along with them to insure their escape from the enemy camp.

Still more wonderful was the knowledge these little working babies had of all the military movements. Yet all these slaves no matter how dumb they looked had excellent intelligent, and their news were always reliable in every term, they never exaggerated and brought most of the disasters upon the enemy that befell them.

In countless instances the child slaves along Myletzes line of march through Northern Calverinia and Northern Angelinia had information in advance of his troops, and of their achievements long before seeing them, and hastily and secretly got into communition with men they knew were National spies and conveyed the news to them. It was believed that the slaves transmitted the news by elder slaves which were swift runners, trae traveling day or night, and therefore in all cases, neither Gertrude, Angeline, Jennie, Turner, Mildred Maxwell, Kornmann Marie, Jennie Richee, or Angeline Richee her sister and the Vivian Girls w re were never one third as dangerous to the Glandelinians as the very child slaves themselves.

The next four days after leaving Turner village the army though harassed and fired on for every step marched without a stop for fully fifty miles, reaching the Weber river. During this march there had been about a hundred small engagements with the retreating Nationals but hitherto the bodies of cavarly and mounted infantry in advance with occasional assistance from the leading brigade of a each column had been able to brush aside the enemy at every occasion, but here the passage of the stream was hotly disputed for a full day by a strong force of infantry, and art artillery on the opposite bank. Deserters and prisoners stated th that among the National troops were six hundred elder child slaves who had been put under arms to fig fight for their frredom against the Glandelinians. During the main Glandelinian attack the Nationals were forced back and a large amber of the slaves taken prisoner, but general Myletze at once ordered them to be liberated, shrewdly concluding, that he desired to y take no slaves who were in uniform within the Glandelinian camps and that they were better off where they were. Oh if Manley ould would have heard of this. Even to the surprise of the officers most of the slaves taken from the town were exchanged for Glandelinian soldiers held prisoners within the christian lines, another incident that would have made Manley go boiling mad.

On the twenty third and twenty fourth of November in rain and wet snow storms the opposing forces skirmished incessantly, and there was artillery firing day and night without pause. The next day a sharp engagement occured in which general Dargins division took the principal part. Under cover of its heavy fire three miles of high railroad trestlework through the swamp were destroyed, and one charge of the Nationals which was made fiercely on a ten mile front driven back with wholesale loss to both sides in dead and wounded. Later in the day under heavy fire a f crossing was effected at Turners ferry higher up the stream but after meeting with dreadful opposition. Again during the night after attempting to start a forest fire the Nationals retreated. Near this same point the troops came in possession of some late National newspapers containing the first information they had recieved from the outerworks in n a nearly three months. The ill looking pages imprinted upon good paper but now too dd was nevert eless a light shining in darkness. Loud voiced readers were called into requisition and the contents were listened to by thousands, who drowned the voice of the reader, ever and anon with exultant cheers, or howls of derision as the paragraphs pleased or displeased them. First and all important was the news that general Concentinian Aronburg was being placed in command of the Armies moving southward to the degensive defense of Angelinia Agathia, and that the mobolization camps at Dorothy Gale city and Angelinia Agathia were being fortified and reinforced and that Mombi villiage was being turned into a fortress. Referring to this the editor denounced the Glandelinian cause most bitterly for per itting Isner Myletze to move forward upon a " Holy City" and said that there was no longer hope from without, but that the National people much achieve the freedom of the child slaves if Abbieannia had to die to do so. It was a curious fact that among the means to this end was urged the forced freeing of millions of slaves by daring raids, and the like. This however would require time and the immediate emergency demanded that the people of Abbieannia men women, and even children, should rise against the Glandelinian invaders.

Other things were seen in the papers which no doubt inflamed the passon of the nation and which stung Isner Myletze. The papers contained many horrible things that occured(but they were no falsehoods) with reference to the great raid, as they termed Myl Myletzes destructive march, giving scandalous narratives of robbery rapine and murder also committed by the armines armies under the Manleys. The papers also spoke of Myletze as the great military raider, but as The Napeloen of Glandelinia, but pronun pronounced awful curses pon Manley and his vandal followers stating thus; Manley fig Myletze fights like a man but Manley needs big floods, and whole sale fires to destroy everything so that he can advanced with " Safty"

Throu The paper also a said as follows;

" Through the investigations of the Famious Gemini it was descr discovered that the disasterous fire and flood at Schloedertown and Perry ville and also at Heidi Junction were caused by Manleys orders, and caused the suspicion to fall upon Myletze. The levees of Lake Sellcia was leveled by explosions by men under the command of general Manley which flood all but wiped out the towns of Perryville and Schloeder town and many otyers witynthe loss of more than a million lives. Not only this but earlier inthe war flood and fire destroyed property in south eastern Calverinia Il Irientown being the prinicpal town destroyed and floods of an awful magnitude wiped out Heidi Junction, and destroyed proper y worth hundreds of millions of dollars, rendering a million o people homeless or more.

Manley blames this on Myletze and whr whether he or Manley is is guilty or not rest with the Almighty Himself"

In other columns were found other inflamaam inflammatory appeals from military and cival aurthority, calling pon the very inhabatants to harass the troops in every concievable way to fire upon them from behind every barn and stump, to bu burn bridges and fell heavy trees acrossthe road in their line of march, and to remove or destroy all provisions and forage in their track. Frantic efforts were made to comply with these requests, and the movement of the army from the river to its next destination required redoubled effort. The citizens however were too discreet to carry out the guerrilla warfare urged upon them, which while delaying the army in no great degree, would have made it necessary to hang a few of their carcasses from the trees lining the road. But the roads were blocked with felled trees almost the entire distance, and it therefore became necessary to send large working detatch ments and remaining child slaves from the marching column to assist the pinonner pione pin pioneer corps which under usual circumstances were able to keep the way sufficient ly clear to admit the passage of artillery and supply trains. Again through this same region so so complete was the destruction or removal of privisions that for many days the Glandelinian troops were obliged to subsist almost entirely upon peanuts and parched rice taken from the fields, the contents of the supply trains bein being well nigh exhausted.

ON THE twenty eight of nov mber and the 29th, the army marched fifty six miles each day, entering upon the region of flanders- Grandecallic, about eighty miles east of Jennie Turner captured recently from Manley by the Concentinian Aronburg general. Here the great pine and fir trees rose straight in air, nearly a hundred feet surmounted at the top by thick crows of brilliant green. But very few branches projected from the trunks and these were far from the ground.The trees where there were no roads or passageways or clearings were unusually thickly set some places as far as three to four feet apart, and the ground was remarkably thick with undergrow undergrowth,so that the troops could only march on the road, and therefore the wagon trains had to be between each division thus lengthening the column a great deal...

On the first o. December with six inches of snow on the ground over the old two feet fall of November the last, the army crossed the Blackberry creek, and en gaged in the same old task of destroying every railroad line it came across. This place of task afforded unusual opportunity for the most thorough and needed exercise of the destructive propensities of the Glandelinian troops. But the rail was of strong pattern like of ar days laid upon ties about six to eight inches in in thickness. But the ties were of pitch pine and burned readily, and it took some time to heat the steel rails to chee, heat but this was accomplished, and therefore they were readily wrapped around fence posts and trees, the men excersizing their fancy in the construction of steel " Doughnuts" of curious puttrons. patterns.

Particular attention was given here as at other points when the glandelinians destroyed railroads, to the glass insulators on the telegraph poles, or street lights in country towns. These were either broken with axes or sling shots, or bricks and stones, or thrown into the waters and impassable bogs and quick sands of the adjoin ing swamps, and therefore were not so readily replaced by the Nationals.

In fact the whole mechanical system of this portion of the state of Angelinia was an importation, and as soon as the Glandelinian armies drew a line between the north and south of this state, that moment it was hoped that the National armies from at least this eg state would go down to defeat.With northern mak markets closed to Ahb Angelinia Agathia by the Glandelinian invasion, railroads, cotton and other works and nearly everything in the way of machinery, fell into decay, scarcely e even a cog wheel could be replaced by Angelinian mechanics unless Myletze was driven out and the railroads reopne reopened.

The railroads running through this prtion of the state were wonderfully run down, and in many instances a train could have been heard at a very long distance from the creaking of the wheels because of the absence of oil. On the second day of December in a driving snow storm the army came to Mildred Maxwell town which had been a large prison pen for the safe keeping of the Glandelinian prisoners. The strong bodies of cavarly made a rapid mo ement upon the place hoping for tye chance to chans chanse to release their unfortunate comrades, but were dommayed to find they ha had b been cleverly removed and probably taken all the way North to Angelinia Agathia or still furthe r to Angelinia Agathia.December the 9th, the troops reached a point six miles of Flander-Aurundscallic having marching sixty three miles since the 3th. At this place the soldiers were greatly relieved to hear the guns of some other Glandelinian ar y and to learn from loyal citizens that the military had been sending up signal rockets nightly for many nights past in anticipation of the arival of the Glandelinian army.

Therefore it did not matter much at all that the principal obstructions an hos ile hostile army and strong fortifications, yet seperated one Glandelinian army from the other.The former felt that their success was now assured more than ever, and at the worse only a few days would pass untill the two would clasp hands.

The next day December the 10Th the march was rapidly resumed, general Dargin leadi leading the whole army. Here the troops ran hard up against the enemy at a point near a stone marking" Eight miles to plandere-Aurandercallic" At this place a long line of Abbieannian batteries and abatis and even miles had been planted in the road, and the cav rly exploded a few of them in passing along and then ran hard up against the batteries and were dispersed. General Mylezte was greatly enraged at this occurante and declared it was not to the purpose of war, but nevertheless he caused many Glandelinian prisoners to pass up and down in order to test the roads. Yet it was the opinion of one war correspondent in Mylezes army that these mines were placed not for the purpose of causing an unusual loss of life among the advancing soldiers but for the purpose to give notice of the advance of the van guard of Mylezes army their explosions serving as signals for the Nationals to open up with their heavy guns. This conclusion seemed more than reasonable from the fact that the g guns were placed in such a position as to sweep the full length of the road from both sides a sort of deadly cross fire, the Gl Abbieannian cannon being screened from sight of the Glandelinian cavarly and afantry by the heavy growth of trees and underbrush, and that a fire was opened imediately afte the explosion of the mines that made it utterly impossible for the army to advance.

The line of march had lay down a long bored sand road facing a wide clearing in the forest but lned on each side with live white oak trees whose large branches met o overhead forming a beautiful, beautifully arched avenue straight as a arrow.

The clearing which the troops came upon was more than six miles long and about a mile wide the full length.The Fourty Second Glandelinian Omarian Division was in front and as the adjutant and the old grizzled ge er general who was in command riding side by side at its head left the wooded avenue and entering the clearing a whole stream of shells rose from over the timer o far away in front. They had been evidently projected from a great distance for it the volley was falling f fast in its trajectory, and in a direct line for the division which had deployed in a long line of assault .

Usually these dangerous dsales were heard but not seen, and familarity with the sound of any of them had bred a certain degree of contemot contempt. But these shells were plainly visible from the instant they rose over the timber in front, and they held the gaze as did the glittering eye of the gray beard Ancient Mariner that of the wedding guest..They seemed to be charged with a sort pof of perschal message a message not at all desired. Their motion appeared to be very swift and deliberate, and they were so sure of their mark that there was no use of haste or trying to get out of the way. At first they were hundreds of small black blotches in the sky. They grew. At first they ure as large as a tea cup--as a plate-- as a wagon. Now their immensity filled the entire field of vision, shutting out trees and sky and they came with a series of most terrific earsplitting shrieks. The cries of a ghost could not have been half as bad. Will they explode before they come near enough to do any damage? Why in the world don't we flank off" to one side of the road, and give these demons clear right of way! There are no orders. Shall we dodge dodge an and allow the shrieking demons to pass over head rather than stand up straight and be a target for them!

Certainly if the office officers will only" dodge" first. But they do not and pride will not permit his companions--- when, shriek, shriek, shir shriek---the shells pass screaming over, very low down the noise loud and almost deafening. Thought has traveled far more rapidly than iron propelled by gunpowder. The danger is passed though a few moments later, there is an unusual concussion, an earthquake, a perfect shimmy dance and swing of the trees and brahces c branches, and somewhere a noise like a heavy thunder rool and eruptions of snow and earth and other debris rise in the air...

A m few minut s later the troops left in the road, formed line of battle through the timber on the left and right, and centres, andcdeployed double lines of skirmishers. This was scarcely don e when some one brought word that the volley of shells whose course had been noted, had played havoc with six brigades of men further back. Riding hastily back to the g road,some of the officers found three brigadier commanders, with five thousand men of the other brigades counting his own stretched out upon the ground Killed or wounded. The shells had exploded at the head of the three brigades, the center of the line, and the fragments had struck and wounded many of the men striking one of the generalsin the lower part of the ub abdomen: abdomen cutting him open altogether untill his entrails were hanging out. He had been instantly Killed. He was one of the noble officers who formed the nucleus of the brigade he commanded a most conscientious soldier as well as a man of excellent deportment, and an unpreachable personal character. He rose from the ranks to the grade of colonel, and finally became a bragidier general of the brigade in which he had enlisted as a private.

Near the point where the long lnes of troops had entered the timber and went into line of battle, was general lsner Mylezte himself. He ha had dismounted, and was a walking nervously up and down the side of the road his head bent over his breast, and his hands crossed behind him. He seemed intent pon his own thoughts and oblivious to the volleys of shell and shot which tore down the road and making great eruptions at many spots or upt uprooting giant trees every now and then and showering the waiting men with great blizzards of snow, debris, earth and clear. cluy.Those who saw him in this unusual situation thought that he was exposing himself without a y any necessity whatever, and heartily wished for the sake of all concerned that the " General in chief" would for the love of heaven seek a safer place under any conditions.

For ten hours the most immense lines of troops that ever formed since the war began moved over and across the clearing under as hot and accurate an artillery fire as they ever experienced, a cannonade from field pieces in action being added, which plowed immense gaps in their attacking lines, tore great trees up by the roots, made eruptions by hundreds among the charging columns, and hurled debris all over the them strewing every point with dead and wounded as thick as leaves on the trees in summer. Ten tremendous charges were made, in the face of this dreadful artillery fire, covered by Glandelinian batteries in unswe,r and as often the Abbieannians infantry and cavarly repulsed the onslaught, tearing p the glandelinian waves, wiping them out in scores of regiments and driving them back every time sometimes with the loss of every commander of a brigade, division, or regiment.

The main line during all this bloody action were posted in dense pine timber and the thousands of heavy missles from the thirty two pounder, and sixty four pounder, and centemeter and other guns from the permanent fortifications tore through the immense trees with the noise and havoc of a tornado hurling a hurricane of branches and splinters in all directions, and exploding everywhere making as many great eruptions, and terrible noise and filling the forest full of dense smoke that at times you could not see a hundred feet. It was very demoralizing the casualties were unusally heavy and with the approach of night, the eleven assault of the Glandelinians seemed slightly successfully made and all firing in some degree ceased.Then with night came a more novel experience.

The command under Dargin was ex ordered to extended to the right and reach the Razazu Creek preparatory to a complete investment of plandere-Aurandecallic. The only route was a narrow causeway built up through a immense almost impassable impassable swamp swarming in big bottomless dangerous mud bogs and other quagmires, parallal to and within plain sight throughout its whi whole length of the enemy's heavy works, about eight hundred yards distant. The troops at this point extended to a distance of ten miles , a million men in each mile being massed in the heavy timber in thick long columns and at the approaches to the causeway. They awaited the approach of darkness, when they were to pass over and in a hurry. Fortunately the moon which stood high in the sky and was near the full was obscured by heavy dark snow clouds, and big flakes came down at intervals.The moment came, the word was given, and the head of the column left its shelter, the troops marching in close order. They had made but a short distancewhen suddenly on the right and left, and in another direction seemingly down in the very bogs themselves which loomed black and forboding to the soldiers, rose apparently a shrill whistle which was repeated again and again, untill the sound was lost in the distance.It a was not really from the bogs but came from a deep river just some distance from the sea of quicksand and they were from the line of Abbi a Abbieannian picket boats signalling the movement back to the forts.

The response was prompt. The enemy's gunners had excellent range and a storm of shot and shell flew across the water and bogs, and over the causeway. The fierceness and suddenness of the attack, accelerated the pace of the troops to such a degree, that in the darkness and confusion; and tormented by the flood of mud hurled from the bogs by exploding shells and crashing shot that many were pushed over into the water or bogs and perished miserably, but in every case so far as heard from the men who recieved ot who came to grief recieved their baptism on the side of the causeway farthest from the enemy's batteries- an unanswerable argument showing the natural instinct of men to recede from gun powder rather than advance tward it.

About a thousand glandelinians perished in the bogs into which they had been thrown and 10,000 were killed by the shell and shot, and among the survivors there were more guns and drums abandoned that night, in this swamp than during all the previous six months of the Angelinia Agathin campaign so far.

THEN at some other part of the Glandelinian army later that night, where it was least expected came a dreadful Abbieannian assault in three succession of monsterous waves extending ten miles. The glandelinians though taken by surprise resisted most manfully and only he who s heart had been thrilled with great admiration in witnessing the impetuous courage of these glandelinians and their unyielding valor in the thickest of the fight can appreciate with what pride any one could recount the brilliant achievement which immortalized them. They resisted for two hours; the firing of guns and mi musketry lighting the swamp and woods as bright as day, and drove the Glande Abbieannians back with fearful losses.

Then the glandelinians launched fo ward forward fierce counter attacks into a region swarming with fierce fighting enemies, mocing to the attack, and fighting their way desperately to answer the cry for succor which came to them from the bonon noble army so suddenly surprised by the Abbieannian gun fire. The glandelinian steel next flashed among the long lins of Abbieannian works, and there with the most daut daintless courage they breasted for two hours again the enemys destructive fire, and though repulsed with great loss again strove with might and main to share with their other comardues comrades the glories of a victory that which no soldier can boast a prouder. Six times they grappled desperately with the Abbieannians behind his works, hurling him back dismayed and broken only to be repulsed in return, but marking its puth by the great number of fallen comrades, and moving through that lighted inferno of gun and artillery fire they again triumphed over superior numbers at the left of the swamp, and fighting their way from there to the left, under the murderous artillery fire that swept doen whole regiments at every discharge with a tenacity and constancy that found no parallel they labored forward, fought, and suffered, through the broiling heat of fires started among tree tops by the battle, untill at last they planted their colors upon the topmost heights of the first line of works.

Elsewhere the glandelinians remendered themselves memorable through all time for the terrible struggle they so heriocally maintained under discouraging disasters, and saddest of all reflections the loss of their exemplary soldier and popular leader general Alson their matchless courage turning defeat into a gr glorious victory.

The daring of a desperate Abbieannian inthrusting his legon legions against the utta ke attackers, exposed everything in the Glandelinian front, and through the swamp the Glandelinians boldly surmoun ed every obstacle, beat down all opposition and drove the Abbieannians behind their shelter.

But such experiences as these, such desperate night fighting, with such dreadful losses which will not be known untill later were the severest strains upon the nerves, and put descipline to a hard test. These troops would stand comparatively unconcerned amid a torrent of shot and shell when so pos posted as to fight back. But like the first column marching into the swamp with bogs on both sides of the road, to take a sudden severe fire, on unknown treacherous ground, in the darkness of night, without opportunity to defend themselves, or advance or retreat, was a very different matter indeed. pecember the 10th the investment of 'landers-Aurandecaillo was almost complete. The extreme right, general purgins divisions rested on the stream, sixteen miles from the city. Near that point were standing a forest of high pine trees which antedated the memory and legends of the oldest inhabatant.Their great branches as large as the trunk o trunks of trees in the northern part of ar country spread so widlyaidely that a good sized regiment might form a line of battle beneath them... from their boughs drooped graceful festoons of moss. just beyond flashes the billows of Mic-pollester Run River, its river surf falling upon the ear distantly and hoarsely. Under the moonlight the scene was yet more impressive. it might have been the picture so beautifully described by Longfellow-.!!!!!!

The murmuring pines bearded with moss, and in garments green, indistinct in the twilight, Stand like Druids of old with voices sad and prophetic, Stand like hurples hoar, with beards that rest on their bosoms Loud from its rocky caverns the deep voiced neighboring oc Ocean Speaks and in accents disconsolate answers the wail of the forest.

For many days the whole of Myletzes army had been almost reduced to starvation. The rations in the supply wagons were exhausted, and in compliance with orders d from the Abbieannian authorities, the citizens had either removed or destroyed all the provisions and forage along the line of march for more than a week past. In this strait the army, officers and men alike, subsisted upon immature goobers(peas, (peanuts) dug out of the sand hills, whose sterility yeilded nothing better, and rice gathered from some of the swamps, beaten out and parched. Even this poor makeshift for food soon failed as the army massed close around Flanders Aurandecaillo and the hunger of the men was heightened bytrecollections of the good living the bhad indi indulged in but a few days before; when in the region of sweep sweet potatoes, pigs an and beeves. The mules and horses were worse off---they either had no corn at all, or the little doled at; including oats was stolen from their trou he and nose bags by hungry soldiers.

At this period of general suffering, increased also by the cold weather and snow storms Myletzes faithful forager succeeded in securing a few provisions by one of his raids, a couple of hogs, a solitary onion, and something like " HAPPY WATER" in a canteen. Just as this tempting repast hadcbeen spread out upon an empty hard tack box, and a war correspondent and a mess messmate were seating t emselves for a square meal another Glandelinian forager appeared in sight/.He was approaching and astride of an undersized mule, with a dear mother-l'ves come home to die expression in its eye; and absence of flesh made its anatomy resemble a wind-racked"pri prairie parle " prairieSchooner. even the man himself seemed as if he had but every friend in the whole world, and when hailed he looked around about him with a glad surprise. He joyiously accepted an invitation to dinner, and though the two have eaten many a sumptious meal at each others tables ever since they have never met p n such occasions without adopting and taking resolutions setting forth that upon such their best dinner was eaten on the banks of an unknown river that cold December day, in the heart of a hostile country. It is such an episode as this in any army that makes the heart of the soldier throb, and the water dim his vison vision. On the Thirteenth of December general Hendrox and Burgins supported by Leo Costellioes divisions made its assault upon all the fortifications surrounding Flanders, and took also the fortified works which blocked the two streams near by. Unmindful of the many great belching guns of these formidable fortresses, the rattling volleys of musktry mill millions in number and miles long, the entangling abatis and chevaux-de frise the interlacing wires that ensnared their footsteps, the thousands of exploding mines these gallent columns rushed on, and though mowed down everywhere along the line of assault by scores of thousands, a few hours had only passed when the Glandelinian flagiflying over the ramparts told the story that the fortresses and works of the Abbieannians were in the possession of the Glandelinians.

Then the supply boats which had been gathering below to succor the famishingarmies pushed their way up, and were recieved with the most tremendous cheers, while soldiers of both sides, who had never seen such o each other before, grashed hands as if they were all brothers toge her.together.

And now the supplies were distributed in lavish profusion, and collasped stoma has assumed proper proportions. Here, too, heavy mails of all kinds were received, and all the Glandelinian soldiers made happy by all the letters and articles from home were grateful indeed. put there were countless letters which found no owners. Every one on many occasion were addressed to comrades who were particularly dear to the writers of the letters. Most of them had a ro ance romance--who of the men and w boys who had not, wir whether Glandelinians or Christians. put these poor fellows fell in the bloody conflicts around Flander-Aurandecallio, and it was the sad duty of their fellow companions to return the letters to the anx ious maidens at home and with it give the sad tidings of thedeath of these bved mes loved ones. No matter what kind of a war it is, no matter what sides they fight on, God pity, the mothers, wives, sweethearts, and children whose heavy et eye lids were held up by dreadful anxiety through those eaury months, when no tidings came, and hallow in their hearts the memory of those who died.

The Glandelinians were now in constant and fierce action, pushing forward most steadily against Flanders-Aurandecullio. All the heavy guns belonging to the army were put into position and when all was in readiness for bombardment, general Mylstze made a demand for the surrender of the city, enclosing a copy stating, " Should I be forced to make an assault, I shall feel justified in resorting resorting to the harshest measures, and shall make no effort whatever to restrain my army, burning to avenge the wrong, which they attatch all Abbieannian cities and armies which have been so prominent in dragging the Glandelinian Country into a most desperate and bloody war."

The demand was insultingly refused, and seige operations were prosecuted most vigoriously. On the night of December the 21th all the three quarters of the forward part of inner Mylstzes army was well up in front of the last lines of Abbieannian works general Dargins divisions succeeding in advancing within four hundred yards of the main Abbieannian fortifications immediately, outside of the city making its approach under a general and most severe fire of artillery and musketry. Next morning the main line of attack was further advanced, when the works were found to be deserted, the Abbieannians having retreated across the Mic-pollester Run river, and moving north ward. The war correspondents in the Glandelinian armies were the first to ride into the city and down to the river front. Two miles below lay a long string of dark hulks which an Abbieannian citizen said were Abbieannian gunboats---the soldiers of the Glandelinian army believing them at first to be Glandelinian vessels. The Glandelinian flag was flying very soon from nearly a hundred prominent buildings, and the Abbieannian war craft defiantly fired a volley of effective shots that ruined some of the buildings and set others afire, and killed many soldiers in the streets.

A battery of Centembers were brought to the river front and returned the fire for a short time but with little effect. A few minutes later a blaze of flame leaped from the distance and there was a terrific eruption as of a volcano disemboweling itself, followed by a dull yet most tremendous roar thatswayed the buildings in the city, broke out all glas windows which showered into the street and threw many soldiers flat on their backs. The Nationals had blown up their military stores to prevent them getting into possession of the wicked Glandelinians.

General Mylstze three days afterwards wrote to the King of Glandelinia,

" I have advanced so far in my campaign that I have recapu recaptured the city of Flanders Aurandecullio, with one hundred and fifty thousand big and small guns, a whole Arsenal and plenty of ammunition, and also all provisions to feed my army for a year, and load up my wagon trains. I estimate the damage to this prtion of Angelinia Stats so far as I have advanced, according to the big flood and fire disasters also produced by the Manleys, and their glandelinian general at a hundred billion dollars, at least two hundred hundred and fifty billions has innur d innured t to my advantage, and the remainder is simply waste and destruction. This may seem a hard species of warfare warfare, but it brings the sad realities of cruel war home to those who are more responsible for the outbreak of the war and its attendant calamities than we glandelinians are.....As to the cause we know better." Mylstze.

The King of Glandelinia made reply and said;;;

" Many thanks for your brave and glorious victories. When you were about leaving Vivian Hickey for your campaign I felt very anxious and fearful as to the outcome, yet since you were successful in your undertuking, the honor of the victory is all yours, and we hope to e see the war soon in our favor. I also congratulate you and all the brave officers and men under your great command on the successful termination of your most brilliant campaign which I hope will soon come. No one who I knew ever doubted the result, and when apprehensions as to your safty were expressed by many other of the generals, I assured h them that with the armies you had, and with you in command of it, there was no danger but that you would soon make a good success of it. Your your great campaign will always stand out as the greatest one of this greatest of all warm... some days after entering Flanders- Aurandecullio the troops were shocked and somewhat dishearted to learn of the glorious victory won by the Nationals under the Viviane at Evangeline St clare, and of the almost total destruction of the vast Glandelinian army under Federal. The army of Dargins had particular reason to feel bad about the disaster to Federals divisions which bore so gallent a part in the bloody action, and one thing was the report of the Nationals counter charging and capturing the salient pint of Manleys main line with over a billion prisoners, and that half an he half un hour later under cover of a forest fire started by the battle, the shattered remnants of Manleys army were in full retreat.

One cead account in Mylstzes army was that of general pargin who never recieved a letter. Whether his friends or wife had died or abandoned him for loss it could not be said but he did not recieve anything in the mail which he had expected so strongly since he started with Mylstze on the campaign.

At Flanders-Aurandecullio, all of the Glandelinian troops lived lived at high pressure, and throughout the whole city their short stay indeed was a great merry makin making. Most of the male and female inhabatants of the city were mostly formal and distant and even hostile but in some cases there were men and women in the city who did make ample amends and who were generally cordial not that they were for the Glande linian cause, but because they knew the character of Mylstzes army and therefore did not think it wise or safe to be too harsh a with it. In most cases each little knot of soldiers of this grand Glandelinian army made frien friendship with ladies fair or not, glad to entertain and be entertained, with cards dance song, and the like. The poor Abbieannian soldier fleeing before the Nemesis persuing might well say in the words attributed to him near Jennie Sumer Town that the Christian cau e causes seemed or was lost... One song was made thus;;;

The enemy's feet are trampling thy land,
Abbieannia, my Abbieannia.
They devastate thy country on every hand.
Abbieannia my Abbieannia.
How can we have faith in all our cause
When Glandelinian hands give us such awful loss an
And Nationa girls obeyfor fear because.
Abbieannia my Abbieannia.

They steal and massacre our children for beaf,
Abbieannia my Abbieannia
Fromall devastation thou art come to grief,
Abbieannia my Abbieannia
Thy children fair are destroyed along,
With rape and horror massacre and wrong,
Who is the day for all goes strong,
Abbieannia my Abbieannia.

It does no good though tears in full sway,
Abbieannia my Abbieannia
With fires dreadful floods to destroyaway,
Abbieannia my Abbieannia
With the true hope of the help from above,
The brightness of thy Native love,
To make the enemy as docile like thou the dove,
Abbieannia, my Abbieannia..

Among these people of Flanders-Aurandecullio was one who came unusually dear to an English war correspondent servinig in the Glandelinian army and also a number of his companions man, of whom learned of his tragic death with deep sorrow. In looking about for a sheltering roof asthe weather was bitterly cold and more than a foot o of snow on the ground, as the unfortunate army was almost without tent, the young English war correspondent who was also a lieutenant in the Glandeli an army happened to observe a large house standing somewhat back from the main street, near the out- skirts of the city(providing the city does wear skirts) when he observed still further that the door was open he boldly entered. The first rok room that he stepped ito into was just what he wanted, and his field desk was speedily set up in the middle and his pair of army blankets and knapsack and also his valise deposited on the floor in a corder. A large well filled book case stood at one side, and I in this he was surprised out of his very wits to find about two volumes describing the war of the two nations so far as it raged and every incident correct and at the proper date day month and the like, with the first volume of this in his hand, and a good cigar between his lips(it was taken from an adjoining side table, he was the picture of contentment when he heard the sounds of soft foot steps and looking up saw standing close to him a little girl with her brother, and both were looking at him in surprise and a little fear.

" Oh" said the little girl kind of timidly" you Glandelinians do not murder little girls and boys as they say do you."

Before he could answer the mother of the two suddenly appeared and she said; " I see you Glandelinians do not even intend to wait for in itations when you are in a conquered city do you. I suppose the rule is to the victor belongs the spoils. And also you'll take away my children ; pr sume as we mothers cannot help ourselves."

This in a tone which was a refined sneer.

Beg pardon, madam, was the response, as the cigar was laid aside" I did not find any one at home as the door stood open, and therefore thought the place was vacated. It is winter and the army is without tents or provisions, and therefore must seek shelter in a captured city no doubt, and yet I promish you I and the whole army will disturb you and the inhabatants as little as possible. No we Glandelinians are under Myletzes army and do not care to commit the same outrages as those under the Manleys and their Confederates. And any room ill be acceptable, and I will offer myself to your convien ence as soon as possible. Perhaps your having an offi er of the Glandelinian army as a lodger may insure you against other in rusions, and your children will not be taken from you, or tormented in any way. Not knowing any one would have been here I have taken the liberty to examine your book case, and with your permission will be glad to make use of it during my stay."

glancing at the volume in the hands of her unbidden guest, the lady said while the two children s anding close by her looked on;

" Ah a early formed history of this war so far as it had progressed, written by my own husband who is servinig with General Concentinian Aronburg. Is that history a favorite of yours."

" Yes indeed madam, for I have been in this campaign and have seen other actions of the war though really I am not a Glandelinian."

" Indeed I can see that from your features. Are you Scotch, Irish, ir English?"

" I cannot say as to that, madam. I was born inDublin but there seems to be no doubts as to whether the town is Irish or Scotch. But It is not so fai fair a city Madam as some of the places are in this country. It's to bad the Child Slave question cannot be settled without this war."

Thereupon followed a conversation in which it was thereby made known that the lady was a Calverinian, and had known her guests father when he came to Abbieannia on a tour(now dead) beyond the " Great - Seas" a most friendly feeling therefore at once arose between the two and a lasting friendship was established.

SOMEwhat later in the day the ladys husband reached home, in the fill uniform of a majomd the woman at once introduced the young Glandelinian(Irish officer) with an expa expla ation of the friendly tie a existing bet oen him and the wife, . He was most cordial from the moment and even without any kind of a intri introduction he was somewhat disposed to a spirit of gentelmanly toleration, based upon the idea as he expressed it, that to " To the victor belongs the spils spoils, and then claming that as long as he came from Concentinian Aronburgs army he decied that he along had not been worsted by any" Glandelinian skunk" and was for making the young officer his prisoner- but the kindly interest of his wife led him f nally finally to thec the utmost cordiality of word, and act.,,, and therefore the two, one waring, the purple, and the greenish gray became true friends.

He had understood that Myletzes Glandelinian army came through very light, and therefore asked would his guest w be willing to accept such needed furnishing, as his wardrobe would supply? and accept such a loan of mney money as would be acceptable untill he couldsupply himself through the customary channels.

This colonel was then about sixty sixty years of age, an Abbieannian Regimental Commander and also a large land holder, but the disasters of war, and the exorb itant exactions of the Abbieannian Aurthorities had left him but little of his previous ample fortune. He had had four children three boysand one girl, but some time early in the war the two children had been stolen by some Glandelinians belonging to general Manleys army, and this adding to his misfortune, besides the death of his wife and mother and futher was enough to cause any one to be a misanthrope or cynic. Yet despite his melancholy he had warm attatchments as this acquaintance amo amply amplty amply testified, and his regard when once so throughoutly won was far deeper in every war way than that f common to men who are on familiar terms with everybody, character and the character and nature of his army, and therefore got from this colonel considerable respect for this Glandelinian general and he said;

He spokeabout Isner Myletze with the young officer, who told him the generals

" I have heard much about general Isner Myletze, but could not believe it at first, as we all known the many other Glandelinian generals w om every women and child fears more than the most dangerous of all serpents."

Of studious habits, and co siderable culture he had surrounded himself with everything that couldseemingly make life enjoyable. His pictures mostly of little children were in large and small frames unusually decorated, and his books were the choicest. He was a writer of no mean ability, and many gems of great stories came from his pen, and especially the record of the war which he kept in the two o volumnes, and which also found their way into the columns of the leading Abbieannian Newspapers throughout every town and city in the whole loyal and disloyal part of the nation.

Soon the time came for this young war correspondent to leave Flanders-Aurandecullic with his command of correspondents and news paper men, and the regreet of parting was indeed mutual. During the remeinder of the c ampaign at last as far up till the beginning of the seige of porothy Gale an irregular but frequent correspondence as was maintained between colonel Holt and his former Glandelinian guest, when the latter was surprised to recieve from Colonel Holt a letter written from Angelinia Agathia reeu requesting a meeting in that city. The summons therefore was answered in person by the next train the correspondent being granted a weeks forlough so he could go there, and Colonel was Holt was found with his wife at a private boarding house.

He said he had been wounded in the battle near Mic-Whirther, and therefore wa was sent home from the army and he was therefore brought home at Angelinia Agathia. The friend to whom he appealed urgently for assistance ming then following Myletze on his campaign left him with money to supply him, promishing to aid him as soon as it was his opportunity to do so again. A few days later he found or learned from an An Angelinian news paper, that Colonel holt had died, and that the widow returning to her southern home with his remains and her two children was set upon by some Glandelinians belonging to general Manleys army,, and his lifeless remains dismembered, her two children murdered brutally before her eyes, and she her self herself disgracefully insulted and raped.The published account said that the report was an absolute truth, and the wri er and war correspondent took the paper and readi requesting an interview with general Myletzeswas allowed to see the great Chieftian. The general accepted him, and the young officer showed him the news to which the general replied;

" It is sad enough my lad, but it is nothing compared what that beast has done in the past and will do in the future. I am fighting on the side of my own country and to h uphold my flag, but I'm not a afraid to say that with such generals like Manley disgracing his own flag by such acts, will cause the defeat and ruin ou of our nation in the long run. Let us he sorry that such a fate overtook the poor widow of her and her two children, and not grudge them their eternal rest.

As the war correspondent halted during the march, the portrait of Holt and his two children was ov always alwa s before him recalling to mind the lines penned by the poor fellow at the field desk of the former in Flanders-Aurandecullic, at Christmas day 1913 alas how sadly suggestive, when it is to be read in connections with the circumstances of his unhappy death..

CHAPTER SIXTY THREE.

THE ARMY MOVES INTO THE PROVINCE OF ANGELLINA VINE. A STRANGE TRIP DOWN THE MIC-HOLLESTER RUN RIVER. AN UNCOMFORTABLE PASSAGE. LANDING AT MADGE EVANS. FLOUNDERING IN THE MUD NEAR JENNIE TURNER AN INCIDENT ON THE MIC-HOLLESTER RUN. SWIMMING AND WADING THE SAME RIVER. A HEALTH WRECKING EX PERIENCE UNDER FIRE, ALWAYS HERE ON CALLED BY GENERAL MYLETZE " THE BOWLING ALLEY OF HELL". OCCUPATION OF JENNIE TURNER MARCHING THROUGH , BLAZING FOREST FIR. AND SOME EXPERIENCE ON THAT ACCOUNT. APPROACH TO BIPPO EVANS TOWN. A LINE OF CAVALRY DRAWS SEVERE FIRE, PASSAGE OF THE MIC-HOLLESTER RUN RIVER. GENERAL DARGINE ARMY THE FIRST TO ENTER BIPPO EVANS TOWN. THE FOURTEEN CORPS A TRIFLE TOO LATE.. A GLANDELINIA REGIMENT LOSES ITS FLAG.

The capture of Flanders-Aurandecallic was the first b s best achie vement of lzner Myletzes campaign. But so closely did the successes follow after one another and so intimately blended were the consequences of these great movements, that the great march may be said to have been nothing every day but either skirmishing or actual fighting, but was devoid so far despite the sizes of the armies from such severe battl s battles had has had been previously raging in the west, and that so far Myletzes greatest actionswas atand around Heidi own. Town(On a night gown)It had been decided by general lzner Myletze that his army should now move into the Country or Prp Province of Angelina Vine to not only contin e the cam a campaign against Angelinia Agathie, but also to simultaneously operate against Imperor Viviana communications.....The itinerary of this campaign shows that it occupied upwards of over half a year, begging before the big Beginning before the Big Cedernine struggle in the west between the Viviana, and Manleys and had invole invol e involved so far a bloody march of five hundred and fifty miles so far before reaching Flanders-Aurandecallic.

Beppo Evans also was moving northwest northwestward but in a different column and further off and he had not hardly met with any opposition like Myletze did and had advanced six hundred and seventy miles further, and still reported to Myletze in a letter recently addressed to him;

" The greatest mystery to me is why no christian army opposes me."

But for either of these two armies the figures had looked common place, though it was a great undertaking, the roads at most points having been contemptiously and continually bad in all stages; the army had worked hard and desperately to cross" impassable bogs" the t o two armies had never traveled worse, and the weather with bug slight exception was horrible beyond descriptions beyond des cription, .In summer rain falling almost incss incessantly, and now with winter," record breaking cold waves, and blinding blizzard and windstorms of remarkable intensity ,hich surprised even the very people of those regions who declared it was the worse winter for fifty years.

A blizzard raging at a snowfall a foot per day occured usually t ree times a week, and twice already came blizzards of two days duration where snow fell three to four feet every six hours blinding the army which had to camp anyplace under shelter of the woods untill the cyclone had passed, with fear of trees being blown down upon them at every roar of the wind.

After leaving Flanders-Aurandecallic, a snow storm set in, but the army had its orders to advance and therefore proceeded. A portion of the army in the blinding storm mad made its movement from the city by land, crossing the Mic-Hollester Run River by pontoons and traversing the low ground l ing near the coast line of the river while another part was transported by water to North Bend. Cro s Crossing the land on he ground caused great sensations which the soldiers will never forget. At places where the snow appeared an inch deep, the soldier went in up to his neck, and where it appeared deeper he would trip on a rock or s root of a tree and go head first into a sno drift with his comrades fulling all on top of him. Other occurances were of the most comical style, such as a soldier stepping into a bog, and being pulled out, to step into a narrow strip of land where it descended into a little hole where he sank up to his chin in snow. All this looked comical to the war correspondent but again there was a tumult of words which I do not wish to mention here as they are not respectful enough to even imagine.

And it is most difficult to say which of the two sections of Myletzes army had the worse end of the bargain, the one floundering for days and days in bottomless mud hidden by deep snow, or sinking up to his neck in snow, or the other on the river churned and thumped about in rickety vessels on water, the ships of which every now and then being stopped by cakes of ice, and the ice holding the whole fleet at ba, for hours untill some means was furnished to smash the ice to fragments. As it was both agreed that they never before during the whole cul campaign ever experience such misery.

On the Morning of January the sixth, maybe later,, general Dargine divisions marched from Flanders- urandecallic to Turner Inlet, on a m small branch of the Mic-Hollester Run River eighteen miles, in the face of a terrific gale and blindin blinding snow and sleet, with the temperature sturing them in the face as it were with a 20 below se zero mark if not lower,.There with the blinding storm increasing and with the wind attaining a rate of only (Only) eighty four miles an hour and hurledwreckage of tree trees in all directions bout them the troops embarked, each brigade taking passage on river transport streamers steamers . l each of the ships were large enough to hold a full brigade, and there were about six hundred of theseehuge ships, all being str steamers buturned like war frigates carrying several hundred large guns apiece. Of coured there were not very good accomadtions below, except for the crew of these ships; andtherefore mostof the soldiers were compelled to remain on deck" " our o out of doors in the " beautifulweather" as they expressedcit, as best us could be.. oon after hecthe vessel got nder way followed by the rest of the fleet, and yet it was not long before the trouble ne began. Thoughthe river was somewhat ice covered there was an unusually heavy sea of waves, and shut with that, with the cold below zero winds und n ands so thick you could not see fifty feet uhead of you, and the heavy deckload of guns,xuc anchors and the like the cruz old ships pitched about not exactly at a terrible rate, but as if they were some monsterous creatures cruzed with " Mdonshine."

Nearly o all of the soldiers, not leaving out being cold, and derable were dreadfully sea sick if sea sickness can be termed with a rough trip on the river, and either too cold or without strength to hold on to anything, they tumbled from one side o of the vessel to the other, with its very crazy motion, being so th thumped and cunded poa pounded that nearly all of them werec sore with bruises for many days afterard, and thousands suffered from exposure and severe colds following this " Nice River Trip"

The scene was distressing enough, but had its great comicalities,,, and too many to be written here...In the working of the ship, the officers of the deck frequently called out the steady, which served as a direction to the man at the po pioist wheel she echoed the steady as he piled the spokes of his heml helm.The untutored sons of the land, ignorant of the meaning of the words, took them to be most s sarcastic injuctions addressed to themselves to stand up straight ch while the decks were wobbling fourty five degrees port and stairboard in as many seconds, and they replied with elaborate profunity and blasphemy between the many gulps which signalized the sickening commotu commotion beneath their waistbands.

Soon after dark Clarton Roadeas reached(providing it was a head) und anchor cust, but the vessels continued to roll wildly all night, making sleep impos ible for thecore; half frozen and weary men. In the morning the fleet started to steam into the River port of Madge Evanses City and it took the army nearly two da s more to be disembarked, thanking God that they had escaped from an experience com p r compared with w ich plain soldiery on land was heaven ly happiness.

Madge Evans City was a beautiful city or town, extremely half Spanish and half Inglish English in every respect. The houses most of them either of Spanish or even the style of those seen in cities of the United States were high or low, covering considerable ground and composed on all sides with great spacious verandas. The Fortifications were garrisoned by general Federals Glandelinian Corps all the dressed Umarians, well uniformed, well armed, and in a high state of discipline. Large numbers of hard worked child slaves were in the vinicity, working even in this bitter cold weather on the fortifications. In the harbor lay many small ships displaying the flags of all nations and among them flying the English English Flag were a large number of Angelinian war craft captured by the Rebels lying very low in the half frozen water.

January the 1st1914 the troops marched out of Madge Evans and after making about ten miles ran into a large body of Nationals encamped about two miles further off. He was driven without much difficulty however, the Glandelinians capturing the whole camp and all its supplies, and after penetrating the country fifteen miles and a half through these deep snow and facing severe cold weather, the army halted at Nelso, the army again being on the Mic-Hollester and Pandorax Railroad, to await the arival of that prtion portion of the Glandelinian army which was marching " overland" or to be more exact wading through snow, water, and mud from Flanders Aurandecallic. They were within sight of the town of Jennie Turner capture from the Manley army early in the war , and scouts coming in stated that the city was fortified completely that and that the town was still in possession of the Nationals, and that the army was immense probably double the size of Myletzes.Myletze however decided to move p as near the town as possible but his scouts learned that a few days before large numbers of recruits, and even other men and home guards, and mobolised troops from Dorothy Gale city had been recieved by the army there. The knowledge of this army occassioned much feeling among the Glandelinian soldiers, who wondered whose command that army was, and whether it still was a part of Concentinian Aronburgs army or general Vivianannas.

And the fact that no one of the scouts could not ascertain who commanded the National army were also the cause of other complication. Myletze though he was not cared did not want to take any chances. For all of his brigades or divisions had been depleted by the casualties of battle below their minimum strength, and these access ions were not sufficiently numerous to bring them up to the standard to meet so large a National army when especially the commander was not known. If it was Vivianana Myletze would right away give him battle no mattervhot large his army was, but if it was Sladerlinca, Kindernine, Charles Brown, or Roswell Guster Johnston or still More Concentinian Aronburg then he would have to watch his step. Myletzes also had been recieving recruits during his march but these had not beenenough to fill up all the companies, it was plain that all the re iments and brigades must secure the the necessary number. so far as memory goes, the officers whose duty it was to make the appointment very properly filled up the companies and regiments having the most worthy worthy and capable recruits to be advanced. every regiment Regiment has had its " pob tailed " companies and from these came cries of partiality and favoritism.

TTherefore until the twenty first of January the troops lay in fathomless snow, in almost insecure tents, and the army went through experiences much like Washington did at Valley Forge, except that there were a hundred thousand times are men to suffer than there there were in them, facing daily the worst and most storms and cold waves they had ever experienced. The cold waves came with intensified windsblowing at a rate at times to carry away small trees and Heaven only can say how the army suffered or how many grew sick or died of exposure. and the immense Abbieannian army though ignorant of Mylettes presence was immediately in front, and Mylette had started to destroy all communications with the purpose to prevent the Abbieannian generals from knowing his presence, and then on the 20th the troops under cover of darkness broke camp and set out in earnest for the interior of the State of Angelina Vine, while the cavarly " who advanced mostly now alon side tyeir horses stayed in the rear to keep an eye on the " enemy so " that he might not follow in case he learns who confronted him. but as Mylette stat started to advance it encountered another body of Abbieannians who hotly contested every foot of ground on a line of thirty miles of extent, there being hundreds of bloody skirmishes, but fortunately the sun again shone out, and thoughthe weather was bitterly cold the wind went down the snow hardened somewhat, and the spirits of the men arose so that on the whole despite the tenacious resistance every day, favorable progress was made...

Notwithstand the discomforts of the " Beautiful Voyage" from Flanders-Aurandecallio to Madge- Evans upon the armies whose movements had been so well noted, had caused to remember with gratitude the officers and men on the big ships who made every effort to ease as much as possible its unpleasantness. Hence in recognition of the kind treatment the adjutant on board of his com rades and himself addressed the offi cers of the ships a letter of grateful acknowledgement. The last mail received at Madge Evans previously to the great Glandelinian army taking p its march to the interior of the state of Angeline vine brought the fiowi fi following reply:

" Glandelinian war fleet of Steamers;
Port Home, Mic-Pollester Harbor;
Feb 9th 1914....."

Dear Sir; Your favor of the 10th of Jan. enclosing a card of gratefulness to the officers of the vessels of this fleet had been duely recieved and will say in reply that we would say we too feel grateful to know that our endeavorsthroughout all that fearful winter storm has made your recent trip from Flanders-Aurandecallioto to Madge Evans as endurable as it were possible. Our vee vessels not being fitted for t e services in which we were then engaged, especially through such a storm, and their accomadations quite limited, it was not in our power to offer you such quarter s as we wished nor such as you had deserved. But nevertheless the knowledge that our efforts were appreciated is very agreeable, and we are happy to have the friendship of a portion of that army of glandelinia whose glorious progress we have watched with all the interest that is possible, while we too have been quite bus, transporting glandelinian armies of their commanders from one point to another. Be assured that we shall watch your future steps with renewed interest, and may be we may be permitted to hope that some day we'll capture some National papers and learn that Angelinia Agathia is in general Mylettes possession so that all sources and communications with the beslegers at Vivian Wickey, and the National armies will be entirely cut off,and "mperor vivian forced to grant Glandelinia her proper freedom to carry on child slavery as we see fit. but however that may be the officers of every one of the steamersthat conveyed the army will have no dispute as to precedence on the contrary our toasts at all timeshall we " All Glandelinia forver"

F. B Bennis, Acting Admiral."""

Indeed the same mail happened to bring the following personal letter, which is quite a quaint to show that at times friendly relations frequently sprang up even between Glandelinian soldiers, and Abbieannians especially of Mylettes anyway; it was written by Francis Holt an ardent supporter of the nationals, the same Colonel Holt who whose sad and unhappy death in Angelinia Agathia when he was wounded at the battle of Mic-Whirther had been narrated in a proceeding chapter, " Flanders Aurandecallio.

January the 18th, 1914.

My Dear sir, my wife and children are truely rejo rejoiced to learn that your vessel escaped the peril of that dangerous river. We were all very anxious on your account, knowing the blizard blizzard you set out in. We greatly miss your company and though we are on opposite sight s both fighting for a cause we think is right kindly give general Mylettes my best regards.

Believe me very truely your friend. Colonel Holt.

In the same pacgae with this letter was be penned by an old lady residing in a beautiful country home on Angeline Rum River in the rear of Jennie turner. It was just after the seige of Jennie turner by Hanson Viviane army early, in the war that the fortunes of war made a Glandelinian soldier for a time the occupant of her own house. She was one a widow with three young daughters, one thirteen, the other fount fourteen and the last twelve one of whom was recieving her education in an Catholic Heim seminary to become a nun in Abbieannia state. and had barely reached home before all the big rivers was closed to travel and all railroads almost every one shut down at the outbreak of the big war.

Three sons were with the Abbieannian army in the western threatre of war. Nothing had been h urdfrom them for more than six or seven months and the anxiety of the poor woman and her daughters was pitiable. All the farm hands had gone off to war and the family was without anything they needed bad but refined and righteous. In this struity it was the privilege of the Glandelinian soldier to relieve their immediate necessities during his short stay and they were profuse in their expressions of gratitude, and soon after the time passed of the battles at Cedarhills and Evangelin St Claire wrote of their efforts to re-eastublish their broken fortunes, and the sad nes news that the three boys had fallen on the bloody western battlefields.

Friendship formed under such circumstances were not uncomon uncomon for Angelinian and Glandelinian soldiers, especially of Mylettes army and were sometimes marked by incidents as romantic as ever written by any novelist.

Memory recurs at the moment near to that same plantation not far from Jennie turner City and to the bright eyed dare devil Vivian Girl princesses, the dear creatures, whose nature was so strange that all the goodness shown to them could never spoil them, yet bitter little nationals Nationals that they were and such little spies and scrappers that all Glandelinian boy scouts and girl scouts run at their their presence. Now at times they delighted when passing close to a column of Glandelinian cavarly to persuade a tune so that the Glandelinian soldiers would hear them sing sing " All Child slaves shall be free" and how loudly and exultantly their voices would ring out in " The Flag of God, and " Abbieannia forever".

Being not less little girls however, they did not repel the unusual attentions of an old glandelinian soldier, and they and this man in gray spent many happy hours over the chess board, over a deck of cards, and at all musical instruments for young as they are what musical instruments could you find that Violet and her sisters could not play as good as any musician. The girls were not to be greatly blamed for so amusing themselves. Their Father was with Consentinian Aronburg Near Vivian Wickey, and there was then no mails to bring tidings from him and they dared to stay here to see how the seige of Jennie turner should turn out.

One afternoon the Vivian Girls wished to go outside the lines to visit or scout the rebel works. After being at a certain distance they met the rebel soldier who proposed to escort them and his company being gladly accepted they rode out on horse back and then in the early evening started on the return. At the picket line of the the Glandelinian camp the soldier gave the country sign and was cautioned to be careful that the Glandelinian or pat loyal cavarly did not capture him or the girls. But he was so engrossed with his seven fair little child companions that he gave little head to the advice. Their destination two miles beyond was soon reached. The horses were hitched to a fence and Violet and her sisters entered a house near the plantation where all were cordially recieved. An hour later one of the Vivian Girls was loitering with one of th her friends near the gate, when suddenly she looked up the road and shouted excitedly to her escort!

" Oh Here are a body of rebeler Glandelinian soldiers coming."

The soldier noticed it was true and Violet sounded the alarm and she and her sisters did not lose a moment in reaching their horses. A hurried glance revealed a dense cloud of dust and inthe wrong direction for friends. They thought themselves drawn into a trap by the old soldier, and they put their foot into the stirrup determined to make a desperate ride for liberty.

But before the last of the girls could reach the saddle, the old soldier was by her side.

" Don't go without me" he exclaimed; to him she never looked more bewitching than at that moment and therefore the Glandelinian soldier could not overcome his anxiety for her safty which stood revealed in her tear dimmed eyes and quivering lips. To get on to the saddle and ass sasist her in front of him took but a moment and urging their horse to the utmost speed the two flew down the road the heard the direction the other girls had gone. They were none too soon--the enemy a hundred in number were but a few hundred yards behind. Faster and faster flew pursuers and pursued, the latter losing out in the race, until at a turn in the road, the little girl was dell ated to meet her sisters at the head of the advance guard of a body of Abbieannian cavarly. A hurried explanation was immediately given, and a moment later a brigade of gallent troopers dashed by, and a rattling volley from their carbines left no doubt in sure that the pursuit was checked. The soldier and his fair companions soon passed through the picket lines in safty, and now to this day the the Vivian Girls holds him in grateful remembrance for having saved her a their struggling sister from capture, if not death. Doubtless the only reason of her not being fired on by the rebel cavarly was the fact that the cavarly recognized the colonel as their own officer though it did not stop the persuitbin the least, think ing he was making a mistake or that she had taken him prisoner was was racing away wi th him as a sheilds a few weeks later orders came for the troops to abandon the seige of Jennie purmer, while the Glandelinian army later was sent to aid Mylatze in the Jnguagement of the attempt to move against Angelinia Agathina.

The old soldier delayed his departure until the last of his comrades had gon gone, and a large body of Abbleannian cavarly was in sight, and then leaped into the saddle. At the parting one of the Vivian girls said in her friendly way,

"I'll bet you your general Mylatze will never capture Angelinia Agathina."

But after leaving and at the bend in the road which was to shut out his view of the place where he had spent so many happy hours he turned and waved his handkerchief in farewell to them as they rode off toard their Unles army. The signal was returned by them and Glandelinian soldier, and National princesses had pasted forever. This was known as an incident on the Mic,-Hollester Run(but my how it did run)

After four days of hard marching and sharp severe skirmishing and about thirty m battles each about as severe as the battle of Gettysburg the army again moved moved in such a direction to get around and out of reach of the cityof jennie purmer and its great National army that again it reached an immense curve of the Mic- Hollester Run River which at this point outsides its banks broadened into an immense swamp, the very same swamp through which Munleys army was driven in its defeat at the battle of Jennie purmer earlier in the ar war.All the bridges having been destroyed, and the ends everywhere over two feet deep, and still bitterly cold the nationals had plainly made up their minds that this route was impractable beyond a question(if there is any qu stion about it) and so it would have beento troops led by a less determined chief than Mylatze. It was his pu purpose to move into this swamp to throw off all persuit in case a large portion of the army at jennie purmer decided to advance in persuit.

But his restless energy and unusally indomitable resolution were reflected in his whole army, rendering them superior to all circumstances, no matter how disadvantageous, and their triumph again in crossing the Mic-Hollester Run although not without some considerable loss in lives, probably about nearly five hundred thousand was one of the most conspicious so far in all their all conquering career.

But to general Bargins and Leo Castellicos army fell the severest labor and the greatest cradlet cridit.

The swamp at this point(providing the point was sharp enough) chosen for forcing was perhaps twenty miles wide, abound in treacherious bogs, at the side of roadways, and some points were it was utterly impassable altogether. A dog could scarcely make his way across this swamp, much less a horse, and the mounted officers abandoned their animals for the time to travel in the same way as the soldiers in the ranks, did,at the command the troops plun ed into the timber, so immense are the trees, and so thickly set that the eye could not reach half pistol range, and even in winter they were so abundantly covered with foliage covered also with wet snow that even the light of day is shut outm ,a shut out making good places for deadly ambushes. But the sun had not been shining again to day, and a blizzard is again raging accompanied by the " gentle sixty mile an hour" wind, with the warm temperature of two below zero call it warm if you like, but I'll stay indoors.The progress of the men through deep snow, and through half frozen and concealed by snow was slow and laborous. They forced their way cursing and swearing through the dense snow covered undergrouth, tearing their clothing, and scratching face o or limb. one in a while a whole regiment steps fully into a treacherous bog, and it takes the most desperate and frantic work to have them all but which is done nevertheless though the men look like mud statues walking afterwards.

"reachers" vines trip them, or some long branch unseen away through some mans passage and come back in a manner to hit and overthrow more than fourty men at once, and b u brushing the faces of several. They cutch and grab at bush and treeto save their footing,and again some hue or other man step in to a bog hidden by snow and again there is a desperate but heroic attempt unusually successful at rescue, work accompanied by an unusual nu number of " beautiful words"Then there are cypress knees concealed beneath the wound only half frozen and which wound their feet at every step when forced to march into the water. Now the water grows deeper as the heart of the swamp is upp roached and f here from seemingly nowhere shots come in hundreds of reports at once. They are fired on in bisha bushwack fashion by concealed Nationals hidden in the " impassable swamp"As they continue in the face of all this the water re aches up to the waist and the men take off their cartridge boxes and suspend them from the muzzle of their guns; above their heads for they must keep their ammunition dry no matter what else befalls; yet on they press and still the van guard is fired on and a large number of soldiers go down killed or wounded. The water becomes deeper yet. The left of the column come upon an impassable mud bog maybe about a mile across across and have to change the course of the advance, and yet are fired on by thousands of hidden enemies across this soft earth. Those crossing the water who have watches, dairies or money place these valuables within their hats. Now the water reaches to the arm pit and occasionally ball that can be seen of a short man is his head sticking out of the water. Here and there can be seen even thousands of soldiers sitting upon fallen trees or stumps, half frozen or overcome, and taken with cramps. The surgeons have a terrible job seeking them out and satisfying themselves that that their distress is not simulated h. the surgeon where ever he is directs the military hospital steward to serve to the sufferers a tot of boiling hot whiskey from the hospital liquor cast, which at times he is seen carrying strapped to his shoulders. The administration of the stimulant tells how complete is the h exhaustion of the patients a half pint of the fiery liquid is swallowed without affecting brain or limb. The human mercury is almost at zero zero and the large dose only avails to restore the system to an approximation of its normal condition.

This incident was only usual in some degree. Indeed there were days and days when the Glandelinian soldier was dreadful on account of rains or swamp wading of almost frozen to death while marching through through fo feirve fierce blizzard storms, and found no opportunity to dry or aid himself, save as the sun shone for a few hours, and dried his clothing on his body, or when he shivered over the big camp fire at night alternating turning front and rear of his person to the blaze.These were the exposures which during war time campaigns i under the most dreadful difficulties wrecked the health in countless instances, yetvleft no mark, mark, and which also caused the deaths of thousands.

Yet here it was that the soldier must do and endure, for he would not and must not die, except he was shot down. He drew on his reserve energy, and yet can in after life when war if over and he returns ti civilian life and for suffer with diseases and weaknesses which cause him to fell an age and a degree of infirmity that face and voice, and gain gait fail to reveal. Hay probably millions still suffer who will be unable to locate the date or exact circumstances which have caused nature to claim h er own in after years visiting a severe penalty for the violation of her laws, and of such the pension list is necessarily silents. There are those of whom many of the war correspondents knew whose whose remark able experience it was to march and fight the very war through, from Vivian Hickey to Glorianna who gave to the cause a losing cause nearly five years of their life, and how many of their vigor can never be told, who passed through many a bloody action without a wound, and whose pride and resolution would not an admit of their going to a h shospital if wounded.

They had their aches and pains, their suffering from exposure to all kinds of weather winter or summer but they defiantly braved them out, but only hoping their christian enemy suffered alike with themit would yet have been better for most of the armies of both sides if during battles campaigns and expeditions and the like they had experienced worse fortune or shown less pluck. A wound or two then--always realesing that it was not too severe,---or a brief sojourn in a hospitel would in all probability have afforded nature a breathing spell spell and left them physically better men.

But to return to the " Very easy" passage of the swamp. After a journey of more than fourteen hours, with many assaults made by hidden foes and losses terrible from this and exposure or perishing in bogs and quick sands, the troops finally emerged from the swamp and put foot on solid ground. The movement was absolutely successful without slight doubt the Abbleannians abandoning his positions at the other side, after three sharp battles in which twenty five thousand fell on both sides each time, and then retreating. From the Fourth to the Twelvth and thirteenth the Abbleannians gave ground rapidly but contesting every foot of, the day without a moments pause day or night, until he reached the Resurection City. The forces of the christian foe retre retreated toard that place and Mylatze to avoid an encounter in such bad ground with the main army moved off in another direction with the hope of making a turning movement and force the Nationals to abandon the city. Yet in this location the conditions here were worse than with those of the other section of the swamp.

The road leading from the city was a narrow cause way straight as an arrow and made of corduroy built through the swamp. The Nationals had destroyed this road and at the further end was a long line of stout fortifications mounted with many heavy guns. General Mylatzes later called it the" gowling Alley of Hell." down its three mile length the Abbleannians pitched his cannon balls and shells and grape and canister at the glandelinians as they tried to push through this point and the advanced a head to be stopped. Thi the distance to be traveled to reach the battery was so great that a direct attack would have involved terrible loss of life even if it would have been successful. This route therefore being absolutely out of the question general Dargin was requested to force a passage of the swamp below the works and near them, while Leo Costellio's division was to make an effort still further down the stream. As soon as the head of Dargins column appeared at the foot of the long cause way the Abbiesanniens commenced a severe cannonading. The troops were massed in the shelter of the heavy timber at the side of the road, and out of view of the Abbiesanniens; and when all was ready and they formed the proper length of lines, three miles for 10,000 men each and e t extending about eleven they rushed helter skelter to the same kind of shelter on the other side while Costellios artillery placed in a large clearing answered the fire. Then the infantry deployed and waded through the swamp in the same manner as they had at the other section, untill they came to the right point proper which was exceedingly deep and narrow and run with a rapid current carrying along with it large blocks of ice. This was bridged w by felling large trees even under severe fire of cannon and musketry and over these the men scrabled over to the further side, the Abbiesanniens giving way before a sharp musketry fire.

The first two divid divisions across about 100,000, men led by general Reiner was a portion of Dargins Gungaboo. The second two divisions in command was those under Ma Major generals Towner and Albor both gallent officers and most genial and companionable comrades to their men. He had been a private and so had the other general in the First Mangaboo Division at Delight's junction wiwre his commander fell. There both had been wounded, and on recovering were commissioned as a captain each rising through the various grades till that of ma major generals.

As soon as the troops now five hundrad thousand in number emerged from the timber into the open ground and spreading to a line of about only five miles, the Abbiesanniens finding the works turned, abandoned them precipittely, but made a stand near Turner's Railroad station and repelled three assaults before they again retreated in which both sides lost nearly fourty five thousand men in killed and wounded.

The skirmish line was less than a quarter of a mile from the railroad when the last train ru running out loaded with many frightened passengers was wrecked and captured, nearly a thousand soldiers. The remainder of the Abbiesanniens reentered or rec reoccupied the city of Jennie Turner and Mylstae had to act cautious and therefore moved his main army up and then started a new advance with the purpose to try and move aroundTHE CITY OF Jennie Turner itself and force the army there to abandon the city. But the van guard as they advanced found a portion of the outskirts of the city in flames, with the purpose to keep the glandsliniens from surprising the army in the rear. One of the Glandelinian generals had his former home at this place, and whether his property was destroyed or not, I cannot say, but many books from his libary library bearing his autograph found their way into the National Bump and had been parted among as many men as the books would last as men mementoes. While the main army continued on its movement northward, a large force remained behind to watch the movements of the army in the city and outside of it, and finally seeing the Abbiesanniens apparently made no move re retreated to rejoin the main army. The advance of the glandelinians northward continued during the thirteenth and the fourteenth, and untill the last of march without any actual fighting or meeting with an enemy during which remainder of the month of March and April the weather had become unusually dry and warm.

Far from where the Glandelinian army was advancing a fire was started among a forest of firs and other trees a woods that had more turpentine tress than any other kind. The trees too had been tapped for turpentine and the resin coated them thickly where they had been denuded of their ma bark fourteen to thirty feet upward.

The fire started was considered either accidental or perhaps intentionally by a party of Abbiesanniens, and the entire forest in that location was ablaze and even even the fire bugs had a narrow escape. The thick resinous smoke rose in dense rolling clouds, blinding the sight and chocking the lungs, while the fierce heat even while a mile from the fugitives blistered faces and scorched clothing.

The horses of a Glandelinian cavarly squadron which discovered the big fire were so frightened that it was a most difficult task to coax or force them out of the path of the roaring flames, which raged and advanced with a great speedid speed. Frequently a burning tree fell across the road halting the column untill it could be cut p andthe pieces dragged away. The sticky pitchy black vapors soon soon changed the complexions of the men and when the cavarly reached a portion of Mylstaes army to give the alarm the soldiers would have mistaken them for negroes onhorseback.

Worse yet, no coup was to be had, and it was many a long day before the men regained their normal hue of countenance.

As the van guard of the army continued its advance its officers suddenly pausee in wondering silence. It was the muffled roar of galloping horses in the distance which so quickly caught the ir attention, sounding eerie and grotesque far out in the dense woods, and that and the appearance of the sun blood red even though it was ten oclock in the morning was red and weakened as though it were nothing more than a plate of burnished copper. The slight haziness which all of the soldiers had noticed all day had increased in the west and south untill the sky now was smudgy with far away thick smoke. Again off in the distance the roaring of gallop ing horses sounded anew, roaring viciously and then suddenly ceasing, only to break in into new exertions. One officer turned to his companion nervously.

"A big forest fire down in the west somewhere," he argued." And we can't let Mylstae know it."

The expectations of meeting with bushwacking Abbiesanniens was now forgotten, for that smudge in its shadid against the sun or across the sun had changed the appearance of the whole forest, as though this were the afterglow of sun set instead of late in the morning. The coppery hue of the water of the river the sombre influence which the haziness instilled in all of the Glandelinian soldiers--made them rapidly learn to res respect and fear forest fires without any doubt. And still the galloping of horses sounded in the distance, more nearer now, as though by the speed speed of the hoof beats its was ra ing with the fire. It seemed as though the officers would give a command, hoping for the presence of the cavarly throughout the whole tremendous expanse of Mystic forest but no one appeared, and the officers could only wonder and decide. Scarcely three hours remained and the sky seemed in the south cover ed with the blackness as of an approaching thunderstorm.

To attempt to halt the advance now would be worse than foolish, even though now the army was making a hard flank fiendishly hard tortuous journey through this trailless bush to an unknown goal. Then the roaring of horses sounded again much nearer yet, coming nearer, and nearer, and bringing cheer to worries minds. Still closer and closer it came but no sight of it while the coppry haze of the smoke screened sky deepened, and then suddenly a giant column of Glandelinian cavarly bearing the plainly visible negro like faces raced up to the van guard and one of the men said-

"There are pretty bad fires far off over yonder. Notify your general right away."

Sometimes the army had to penetrate along the shores of the river right ing his way throughthe blackness of the growth, where the sun sometimes pee penetrates only in scanty beams as through holes in a black cloths and where the trees seem to form a veritible wall against the progres progress of a human being outside of a army. And if roads did not run through these forests the Glandelinian army surely could never get through. The glandelinians as they continued to advanced watched with awe the creepl creeping line of slow fire eating its way into the very ground, then the sudden flare like oily paper as one tosses a bit of dried birch beneath the dinner put the spitting like water upon white hot metal as the wind blows the needles from a dead spruce and a hundred individual bearers of potential flame they strike the blaze and explode. In leaps the sudden flar and stun a crown fire is on. One can see the haze in mid summer like the hush of an October day drifting from perhaps more tahn than one hundred miles away, the sun showing dully through it, displaying only a rounded coppery ball which gives no sunshine at all.

One scents the faint odor of pitchy smoke coming from God knows where, one of the soldiers motions his fingers and holds it to the wind, waiting aiting carefully for the feeling of evaporation which will tell its direction, and as gives thanks when it gives warning or shows a different direction from that far ay pall for he learns what it means to fear the approach of such an irrestible fire monster when the army in is in a dense forest and theres smoke and heat in the air, when any one becomes mortally fearful of an enemy, one begings to fight-- and one has only, to go over a land of burned forests to realise how great is the feeling of fear, almost of hatred for that lurking thing, the bush waiting ever it seems for the moment when it may rise and rising, destroy all that lies before it.

It is like some enormous threatening orge, resting black and impotent in the sky that it may gather streng th for its assault. The army gets the feel of it as it marches throughthe threatened forest, while after the passage of a fire there is nothing for mile after mile, ten and ten and scores of miles but the burned up or gaunt monotony of branchless trunks, or grotesque shapes, and tangled deadfall, the aftermath f fire.

The whole army had the haunting sense of it when it makes its a way through the forest either in the dry season or in the spring, the worse one of the Fall season, or during the sporadic spells of summer drought, a cringing sensation a as his feet strike the dried moss and it crinkles and makes other noises beneath his step merely so much tinder, awaiting only the dropping of a cirga cigarette that it may fl flare into instant and destructive action. While the army was advancing one of the Glandelinian officers put a different tone into his voice when he told of the days early in the second year of the war when an immense forest fire broke out in Southeastern Calverinia and rushed upon many towns in its path. There was a thrill to it in general as he described the fire rushing on Irinstown and as he described the plun e of men wo un children into the big Mic-Hollester Run River there to remain hour after hour submerged except for their nostrils, while the roaring of sh flames the flames blasted themselves from the many buildings that once had been s good sized city. There was real drama too when he related the story of the army of the Nationals or at las least a part of it helping the forest rangers stay behind to fight the forest blaze, only that many might die, of the screams of those who had been caught, practically scorches to death in their tracks, for the toll of that fire was never known. . He said-

" The fire did not hit the town without warning however for every day the inhabetants would get out in the streets and look out to the sath south west wonder ing because of the unusual salty weather for that time of the year and in fear. There were a dozen immense forest fires burning over immense territories for such fire but somehow these people of this city-it being a town of more than a hundred thousand people they could not believe the place could catch fire. It seemed impossible, besides the forest eased away over a mile on the other side of the Mic-Hollester and Pandora Railroad tracks. So the citizens watched it every day but they were not worried. But about noon that sad day I was sent in on a scouting tour to watch the movement of a christian army in that locality and entering the town I walked out along the st r street and knew that something was about to happen. One of those winds believed to be caused by the probable 10,000 deg degrees hear heat of big forest fires had arizen blowing seventy miles an hour. I could hardly stand up against it, the smoke was now lying low, sweeping through the city and her streets like it was was coming from a million houses on fire, and on the breast of it we could hear the crackling of the trees coming from how far away we did not know. The whole world was in an uproar, the sun was gone, it was growing dark, and it reminded me of the stories when I read as a boy of the eruptions of big volcances. Singles were flying like snow flakes in the wind, now and then something hot would brush me and fall blaz blazing to the ground- a branch of fiery brush, coming from a full mile away.

Doors were opening, crowds were quickly gathering on the corners, a few people were moving their possessions into their yards as though that would help. The air had become hot untill you could have suffocated. The whole town had grown hazy now as though it had been enveloped in the densest dwnsest fog. I looked toward the river and could not see it although as you may understand, it lay only atthe edge of the town.

I looked up toward the railroad station and as I did so the whole building burst into flames. Then the fire bell began to toll widly ringing ominously from a tower that itself was soon blazing. The sound came as though at a very great distance, there was the roar of flames, the shrieks of the wim , the rattling of boards being torn loose from their foundations. And with that a dreadful rain of fire seemed to shoot over the town, and far off in the distance the horizon sky seemed to fall walled up to an enormous height in fire. The fire had burned the shingles looze on the roof of the railroad station, and the w nd had wind had lifted them and carried them on.

begons and autos were rushing here and there gathering up women and children to take them out of the town, pep people were running for the big river itself, about five thousand were caught far away from means of transportat ion and waded out as far as they could and stayed there through the fire. Others took to boats, a large number suffocated, others actually got lost in the smoky fog. Thos the o men citizens tried to stay behind and fight that thing with lean hosespshen hoses when the whole town was all afire. But they stayed just the same and perished with the flames. Five hours later the whole town wa was gone, while a score of others were wit with it. They say that four thousand people died there but I'm not sure of the figures. It is a big country you know."

As the eye continued on its march every wa eye were toward the west h where in a straight sharp line like a clean sliced cloud a curtain of black arose fro the h horizon in evidence of big fires which lay beyond.

CHAPTER SIXTY FOUR.

APROACH TO BASILICA. A B CAVARY SQUADRON DRAWS A HOT FIRE PASSAGE OF THE ANGELINA RUN RIVER. GENERAL DARGINS TROOPS THE FIRST TO ENTER BASILICA. THE EIGHTEENTH GUNS A TRIFLE T LATE. ONE OF THE GLANDELINIAN REGIMENTS LOSES ITS FLAG. EXPERIENCE OF A GLANDELINIAN REGIMENT IN BASIL CITY.
CITY COUNCILMEN ANXIOUS TO SURRENDER. BURNING DEBRIS IN THE STREETS. ESCAPED PRISONERS RUN AMUCK. THE CITY AFIRE. A GLANDELINIAN GENERAL REVIEWED. WHO WAS RESPONSIBLE.. SCENES OF OLD TIME BATTLE GROUNDS. CHICKADEE CREEK. FIGHTING AT MELDONVILLE. ARIVAL OF A DISPATCH. A CURIOUS TRAIN OF CHILD SLAVES. TO THE RESCUE.
A HORRIED NIGHT MARCH. ANOTHER SCENE OF SHARP FIGHTING. DEATH OF A BRAVE OFFICER. ANOTHER BATTLE. A JOYIOUS INA INTERLUDE. THE WORSE OF ALL THE BRASS BANDS
IN THE GLANDELINIAN ARMY. INTERESTING INTERVIEW WITH GENERAL HOLT. A NOTIABLE SCENE.

OBN.

ON March the seventeenth the columnsof Glandelinians troops under general Dargin being in advance of general Myletzes a made a march of nearly thirty three miles and the next day more than fourteen miles, halting on the north banks of the Angeline Run river after having crossing over, just below the confluence of the Sunbeam Creek and graminie Creek. On theopposite side but some great distance away on gentle ground sloping to the river lay the town of Basilica its many wide streets, wealth of ornamental trees, and many handsome buildings making a picture charming to the eye.
The imposing walls of the new capitol yet unfinished because of the war rose in massiv massive beauty, the white marble of column and cornice--each stone was said to have cost a round 10,000 dollars gi glittering in the sunlight like some enonse gems immense gems. And near this most magnificent building stood a vast Catholic Cathedral. untill the sixth of May it was not known to the Glandelinian troops that the column would reach the city of Basilcia at all the direction appearing to be tear toward Jessicia. But on that date when the Angeline Run was passed it was discerned that Basilcia lay inthe path of march and the fact was regarded by the Glandelinian army with great interest.

All recognized the city as being a verity" The hot bed of the resistance against the rebellion" the biryh place of some of the best of all the well rendwn edchristian generals, out of which came resistance against the wicked rebllion as a legitimate fruit sake, and they looked upon its occupation as as a victory even more significent than the capture of Angelinia Agathia itself.

The divisions of general Dargins command led the advance that day. As this great command reached the edge of the an almost perpendicular bank overlooking the river, the generals in charge turned out to allow the columns to change their directions and form a color line parallel with the stream. Following the generals was a splendid line of cavarly on splendid horses. On the opposite shore was a large child slave plantation which had been abandoned by Glandelinian child slave masters at the out break of the water war, and the brush which fringed the shore near it proved to be full of Abbleannian rifle men who found an unusually as easy mark in the cavarly squadron and a portion of Dargins command too and opened a very sharp fire which brought down a large number of horsemen before the Nationals were driven from the " Fire nest" The leader of the squadron of the cavarly seemed to be the chief mark of the Abbleannian rifle men and therefore the troops in filing past exhorted the rider to please for his own safty go to the rear. without doubt he desired very much to comply with the requests so earnestly expressed, but he had a duty to perform and honor requiredthat he should not leave his pst ntill untill it was completed. owever he " ighted his color line in much less time than usual and therefore rode to the rear but not before four horses had been shot from under him by the fire which he had provoked. He brave as he was never was allowed to ride so near to the front again, the ordinary war risk was dangerous enough without offering any special inducements to the Abbleannians.

Attracted by the firing the a section of general Costellices batteries of urmers guns about ten in number was brought p, and a few broadsides, smashed the houses of the plantation to pieces and send eruptions and timbers flying so lively that the rifle men scampered away like rats from a burning barn. At about the same time a b battery of Centems ter guns threw a willey of big shells into the city dispering a crowd of people plundering the Glandelinian commissariat.

It was while these events were transpiring that general Isner Myletze rode Myletze rode p, and after examing the city through his glass, remarked to general Bishellian who commanded the divisio n in line at this point, that he would appri appriciate the men who made the first capture and lodgement in asilcia. General Myletze then slowly rode away and general Dargin overhearing the rw remakr m remark put his own wits to work to take advantage of the hint he heard from his superior.

ThatvDa night th divisions under Dargins passed passed to the left of the 16th under orders to effect a crossing of the broad Angeline Run three miles above and to enter the city from the south. While this movement was in progress general Dargin disputqhed a large party to make a search for boats, and as of the men was fortunate enough to find an old barge. He had been a carpenter however, abd and bythe assistance of several soldiers by dint of hard work all night, succeedsd in so repairing the old craft as to make it tolerably sea worthy.

About six oclock oclock in the morning of May the first the frail ship was successfully launched, and a party of five hndred men(ifyou can call it such) belonging to ge eral general Dargins army volunteered to cross over.. Colonel Francis hult cit was in command and he was accompanied by two captions and a lieuten ant of general Dargins Staff. A number of citizens who stood about in open mount mout ed wonder warned the s ldiers against the dangersof the rocky channel and swift current, and some of the soldiers declined to take the risks.

Two hundred and se however, and the officers des cribed, ema embarked and attemped the passage of the stream. It was a desperate undert king and doubly dangerous, for the channel was broken by dangerous rapids which would have deterred less determined men. But energy and courage were strong beyond recrd record in these gallent glandelinian soldiers, and after several narrow escapes from wreck on the rocks, and from the withering fire of Abbieannian sharp shooters on the oppowite shore they landed in safty on the Basilcia side. Ascending the slope to the town on a oubt quick at a distance of a couple of squares from the river, the party intercepted a column of National cavarly hurrying off on their swift horses. The Glandelinians made them all prisoners, took possession of thevhorses, and rode rapidly tward the capitol buil ing, directing the rest to follow as rapidly as it was possible. Then the remainder of Dargins troops entered the city from another quarter but when within a few hundred yards of their distination, the soldiers were fired upon from every doorway and window of all buildings within sight, but without effect. The buildings were rapidly broken into and within half an hour about nearly fifty thousand Abbieannian soldiers were lined up disarmed and prisoners.

Upon the arival of the remainder of his men,general Dargin sent to the capitol building, and displayed the Glandelinian flag from the old Angeline Vine State house, and his Regimental banner from the steeple of the Church. On top of the vast dome of the Church could be seen a portion of general Dargins skirmishers and on the roof of otheab houses nearly a mile away could be seen conflicts raging between Abbieannian soldiers and Glandelinians trying to take possesstion.

About three quarters of an hour later, general Dargin and his whole staff were estnding standing in the rotunda of the new capitol when an officer of another command rode p with a colonels strap upon his shoulder and a flag in his hands rushed in, and with an almost breathless voice asked;

" Which is the way up to the dome of the big Catholic Cathedral!"

" What do you want to do?" inquired general Dargin.

" I want to put tyis flag up there."

" Well " laughed general Dargin" you are just too late by three quarters of an hour, and we have had our flags on both buildings at about the same time."

" Well sir who are you"?

" General Dargin , commander of neral Myletzes right wing."

The officer gave vent to an expressive but implote storm of words, and in response to a few questions asked of him said he was from the Eighteenth Corps of general Hallens brigades and also of the Fifteenth Corps. shortly afterwards one of th the lieutenants of a glandelinian Regiment also belonging to general Dargins army reported that his national flag had been stolen from a wagon. The general wanted to know what the flag was doing in a wa o wagon..It was not recovered untill the army army army reached another prtion of the city when it was captured from a squad of Abbieannians who had taken it just for a prank.

Immediately after general Dargins command had crossed the river, a detatchment of general Cranier Cranlers division made a crossing and were allowed to place their colors upon the city hall without opposition. While general Dargins troops was the first to take possession of Basilcia ,yet tye surrender of the city was made to to the Eighteenth Corps. At da dawn onthe morning of that same da day general Stonemens divisions of the eighteenth corps threw pontoons across the river above Basilcia working under a heavy fire. Five brigades of the Fourty Fourth Omarians under the command of general Hendro passed over, and as soon as a sufficient supporting force had crossed behind them which took untill the afternoon toadvanced and made a desperate charge upon the " enemy" driving them from the works and into the city, capturing about three thousand prisoners, inthe outskirts of the city.

General Hendros command then moved forward on the main road leading to the city but was opposed by Abbieannians at every street and house, and had to fight desparately for fours days sustaining severe losses before the firing at last ceased and a carriage bearing a white flag was seen driving tward them.

Major general Hendro rode forward and hailed the occupants, two of which were women and the man being the mayor of the city. A surrender was demanded, which to the surprise of the Glandelinian was promptly made as it was believed the Nationals were of no surrenduring kind(you are of a kind) mind) General Stoneman commanding the eighteenth Corps afterwards rode up, and to him the Mayor of Basilcia made a fore formal surrender. The two generals then took seats in the Majors carriage and in company with him drove into the city. The part taken by the division under general Dargin was suitably recognized by Isner Myletze the main commander who shote the following letter;

HEADQUARTERS OF MAIN INSURRECTO ARMY.
NEAR BASILICA.N.V. APRIL THE MAY THE FIFTEENTH. 1914.

Brigadier general transporting letter to general
Dargin commanding right wing.

Sir, allow me and the whole army to congratulate to, you through all generals for first entering the city of Basilica on the morning of May the First, and being the first to plat your colors on the capitol of Angeline Vine State. And while its army was laying pntoon bridges across the river three miles south of the city, general Hendro under your direction fitted out an old worn our flat barge, but large enough to carry five hundred men, and accompanied by some of your staff crossed the big river in front of the city, and nder fire boldly advanced, through its streets sending back the boat with others secured on the other side for more troops, and on their arival with many mre men captured a portion of a Abbieannian cavarly, and planted the colors upon other buildings of the city. The swift current of the river increased by the spring rains and melted winter snows and its rocksy channel rendered his crossing both difficult and dangerous, and the presence of the enemy but in what force unknown rendered the undertaking still more perilous as they fired upon the men while they were in the dangerous stream. Your main division however and Hendros s also are entitled to great credit for their successful accomplishment.

GENERAL ISNER MAIDI MYLETZE.
Main general commanding."

This shows that general Myletze had not forgotten his remark that he " would appreciate the men who first took the advantage and captured the city first" His report also acknowledged the formal surrender of the city to general Stoneman but declared that the credit ought to go all to Dargin. A pleasant incident marked the occupation of Basilica. Among the prisoners there liberated were four generals and many other officers of the Mangaboo Division.

Many an account could have been written about the destruction of Basilica and it can be said that much of the blame had been bestowed upon general Myletze and his men. As stated before Basilica was first occupied by the divisions under general Dargin and of the Eighteenth Corps while the main army it self too big to occupy so small a city(not small in its size but too big for such an army) had remained outside and encircled it. The colors belonging to general Dargin had been the first to be planted upon the capitol building.

Immediately upon that command of 100,000 men reaching the Basilica side of the river general Hedley turner of the 26th Omarian division who was in conversation with general Hult at the moment asked permission to take a division over. The request was readily granted, and the adjutants sent their orderlies to summon the many companies.

This command headed by general Rassenhals glandern respon,dened promptly and double quicked to the river. The men marched across the poj pontoons or simultane ously embarked in the rickety old barge which was first used by the troops of Dargins Command, AND HAD BEEN BROUGHT BACK BY THE SOLDIERS WHO VOLUNTEERED TO BRING THE others across. To pole it across the streamwas a task of great difficulty, an and grave danger, tythe current being very swift, and broken into rapids which threatened every moment to wreckthe little craft upon the rocks. On reaching the Basilica shore the men scrambled ot and set off up the slope tward the city at the top of the city or at the top of their speed, but they had not gone far, when they wer ere met and resisted by thousands upon thousands of Abbieannian soldiers at every step whose numbers steadily increased and severe fighting ensued. The troops however pressed them back continually and drove them into the city. Then as said before, for over four days and nights, from every window, door way, dark alley, or any point of vantage in the city came innumerable cracks of rifles, and every house was besieged and shot at, and while the conflict raged from street to street, the officers to nerve the soldiers to this desperate task of fighting in a city carried bucket fulls of whiskety to them which they offered with great cordiality. The troops however had ere pressing business on hand at the moment and knowing men can fight better when not drunk refused the drink. finally the houses thus assaulted were captured untill the defenders about two hundred thousand

In number were crose crusaded in hundreds of big houses near Basilica Squaresand resisted assaults for many hours slaughtering the soldiers in thousands until finally firing ceased, and the Mayor offered to surrender the city. Then on reaching the last building in which prisoners were taken out the old color guard ascended to the tower and displayed its colors. Meanwhile general Hedley Turner and general Richardson Reese Ransdale halted in the Mayors office, on an upper floor, and entered into conversation with him and leading citizens many of whom presented themselves to be members of the city council. These Abbiesannian gentlemen were in the greatest distress for being as it was captured by Glandelinians they feared the city would be utterly destroyed and the women and children put to the sword like the Glandelinians nder under Manley have done elsewhere, and also called attention tl large quantities of material and cotton and elixicir and hay in flames in many prtions of the streets set by the attackers to smoke the defenders out of their houses, also to the fact that many of the business houses where the defense was stronger had been grenaded and damaged to a considerable extent.

They declured the Mayor had gone at to meet general Mylatze and surrender the city, but they feared it would be too late to save it from destruction. They were fully assured that a force of Gmerians strong enough to preserve order and protect pro perty would soon enter, and therefore were advised to hold their fire engines in readiness to fight the flames in case ofn ecessity necessity. The su ggestion was acted upon and an entire district of fire engines were run out of stations and made ready for actional night as well make note here that this detatchment of the 86th Gmerians were the first high grand Glandelinian soldiers in that part of the city,,, th the divisions from the fourteenth Mangubee having gone within the sight of the big capitol building.

When the former entered the city at the best section as before stated, there were man many wrecks of old wooden buildings in the city in flames, and captured child slaves in that part of the city as well as many of the citizens loyal to the cause of the Glandelinians asserted that a portion of general Jimmie Vivians Abbiesannian Concen tinian cavarly had fired them on retreating. There was also at the same time some pilla ging going on, the depredations being committed by many escaped prisoners, most of them being Glandelinian prisoners confined in public buildings, who had been re leased by the Glandelinians while the Nationals w re were vacating and the Glandelinia troops entering.

As to the great amount of pillaging it will be borne in mind that the first of the Glandelinians to enter the city was met after capturing the city by many prisone prisoners whom they had released who evidentially began the depredations.While the officers named were yet in conversation with the citizens in the Mayorsoffice, a soldier from one of the Mangubee divisions occupying the capitol building and said that the colors of his regiment had been mysteriously stolen, presumably by troops of the rut retreating Nationals. General Hedley at once ascended to the tower to see whether they had suffered like misfortune, but fortunately, their colors were still in place, and in custody of the color guard. As a precaution against loss therefore, and to ensure the presence of the color guard, they fastened with a bolt on the underside the trap door leading into the tower.. Then descending to the mayors office, they noticed that a regiment of the Fifteenth and Sixteenth Corps had stacked arms in front of the big building and established a provosh guard provist guard. Shortly afterward an officer of the provist guard p made complaint that at some scattered intervals there were still hidden Abbiesannian soldiersin the city who had made an attack on one of the houses garrisoned by Glandelinians and upon investigation it was found that some of the soldiers locked up in the same manner just decribed, had been attacked by about an equal number of Abbiesannian soldiers within the same building. fortunately though the struggle was severe no one was injured very much and the Abbiesannians were seized and made prisoners. These Glandelinians were then at once relieved to bring their prisoners to their proper places and with the remainder of their com company directed to rejoin their regiment afterwards. Before leaving the building with their prisoners, the party tao took two flags from the place---onethe Glandelinian National, the other a handsome si silk state flag which had been recaptured from the Nationals, as well as one flag belonging to the enemy who attacked them within the building.

Up to the time of the arival of the Fourteenth, Fifteenth, and Sixteenth Corps and the establishment of the provost guard, not a building hardly had caught from the wooden ones and reasonably good order prevailed considering the circumstances and many of the soldiers aided the fire men in fighting the fmames, flames.Very many, a men and a great number of soldiers and some escaped prisoners were quite" Hwy Happy" from drinking a little too much " Strong Water" and did some pillaging mainly in liquour houses and Military firn furnishing stores belonging to the Nationals....These depredations were soonstopped b, the provost guard.Shortly afterwards, two jails ne one of them in the rear of the city hall, and Post office had been attacked and fired the vprisoners liberated, but the flames were soon supressed.This seemed to have been th the first fire alarm and was blamed ere upon the escaped pros prisoners somewhat later.

Gallerod. I laner Mylatze rode into the city. It could have been or was a sight cir for the best of art artists, the smile which over spreas nis features, ashis eyes fell upon one of his soldiers, who was just crossing the street in front of his hot horses heads. The fellow surely was far gone in " Happy Water" his guilt being very and most wonf wonderf wonderfully irregular. He wore a wa as most handsome silk gown some thing of a sort of dressing gow gown belonging to a rich womens millionary store, and out side of it were cum buckled accoutrements belonging to an Angelinian military store. He carried his musket at a loose shoulder shift, and in place of his military head gear he wore a big wide womens straw hat tilted well back, and around his neck wer sers strung a number of Abbiesannian epu epaulettes evidently part of the stock of some a Abbiesannian military furnishing store.

A few minutes later he was in the clutches of the In Mangubee provost guard, she though taking him away could not hide their laughter.somewhat later in the day a jolly party met in one of the senate chambers, where a mock senate was organized and a vote of censure was passed against emperor Vivian the great " Cnild C plave Stealer" as he was called by those t fighting in the wicked and most unhappy and bloodiestvof all rybellions in all writings whether true or not. His marble bust was found in the room a conspicious ornament and also a few statues of the Vivian Cilia ornamentuted a hall and these were made the targets for inkstands, ink buttles, and spittoons. Then " All Glandelinia Forever" was sung and played with the greatest noise and enthusiasm, and the ".senate adjourned for the " Night".

The magnificient Abbiesannian government arsenal was a place of the greatest interest. On the grounds mantes upon high pedestals were a number of big shells, some of the Abbiesannian tro trophies of the war, presented to the state by some of the generals. One bore the inscription;

" This shell was thrown into Jennie Bren room by the Skunk army" another,-

" This shell was fired into Angelinia Agathia by a battery belonging to an army of people who resemble those to see running about the Dunk Skunk Farm".

The use of the word, Dam " Skunk," and " Du Skunk Farm" bep bespeaks the nature of the Abbiesannians, who presented the relics, and their determination to rege recognize in no matter or manner whatever the Glandelinian government which they now so bitterly hated.

In the arm are n arsenal grounds were also lots of artillery many being relics from the battle fields of Angeline un, and other places. Also a battery of fine Centemeter guns made in Abbiesannia bearing brass plates with an inscription to the fact that the pieces were presen ed to the National government of the city by one of the generals who had retaken them from the Glandelinians during a counter charge. charge.This fine specimen of ordinance was now in possession of Ianer Mt Mylatzes army. Also in side the arsenal buildings were many varities of Abbiesannian rifles and pistols and many rounds of bullets and cartridges,. On leaving the building as of the war correspon d correspondents serviaig in Mylatzes army brought away with him as a mementoe a pair of uniforms belonging or supposed to belong to the Emperor Vivian himself. They were splendid uniforms fit for any great King, were of an unusuall bright and excellent luve nder, nus and made of fine silken cloth but thick for winter wra wears Thi This valuable relic he had the great pleasure of presenting, in person to general Ianer Mylatze who took it.a portrait of the Emperor, and his highly prised of the war correspondents war relics.

The visit to the capitol and the arsenal building occupied the afternoon until near the evening and p to the late hour of departure from the latter building, reasonab reasonably good order prevailed in the city, there being as said before some drunken ess and at times a little pillaging but the provost guards managed to keep down any gen eral tumult, and prevented destruction of propet, property.Toard dusk the war cor respondent was one of a number of soldiers who repaired to the principal hotel the name of which was the same as that of the city, and called for supper with a number of highly ranked Glandelinian generals and other officers.....

Some of the Glandelinian officers were already seated, when the party entered the dining dinning room. The server servants secretly hostile to the Glandelinians were intolerably sulw, and when, after much delay they brought in the meal, it was found to be consist of fried side meat, corn f bread," nic, nice smelling fish" and coffee that looked more like " mud," like mud.Before this food was disputched, the alarm of fire was raised, and many shots were heard outside, and it was discovered that the hotel was in flames and also that a large immense squadron of Abbiesannian cavarly led by Walter John Harrison was dashing into the streets firing at every soldier they met. The proprietor, servants and guests, departed hastily, neither waiting to render er nor pay a bill. How this fire ever originated has never been stated, but neverthe less the Abbiesannian cavarly came dashing into the town like a hurricaneand attacked ev ery column of soldiers they encountered, until soon there was a terrific fray.

Many of the business houses on Santa monica Street were in flames, and probably brought on by the conflict it was spreading rapidly. Also there had been quite a high wind for a few hours or so and it was now blowing a hurricane, carrying to all all directions flakes of burning materials from the huge piles of blaz blazing wreckage from the wooden houses. As soon as possible, large details of troops not resisting the sudden attack of the Abbiesannian cavarly engaged desperately in an attempt to stay the tide of destruction, making almost supernuman efforts, but with the attack of the Abbiesannians pushing all before it, the task was a hopeless one.

They might as well have attempted to stop a fire with gasoline or in a powder plant. The very elements had conspired for the destruction of the city, and with the attack hindering their efforts all human means were futile, and therefore most of the soldiers had to turn out and fight the Abbiesannians instead, and soon there were countless scores of muskets being fired, and now the rush of the Abbiesannians being met by more numbers was checked. The street in the meantime was soon a seething mass of flames on both sides and from end to end. Then the real work of fighting against the Gl Abbi annians began while those not engage in fighting either the foe or the flames began real pillaging. Some wild with drink, and others sober enough, who conceived that no property abandoned by its owners to destruction was flotsam and jetsam belonging to whom so ever might have courage to rescue it, el entered the burning building and took what suited their fancy.

The attempt to save the save was abandon to that of fighting the Nationals, and the soldidr fire men and the provost guards exerted tyemselves to reorganising more troops to repell theattackers and to saving of life. There also were so many intoxicated as to be in danger from the falling walls, or of capture from the assail ants and in many instances it was absolutely necessary to carry them out of harms way.

Nothwithstanding all this effort, with the fierce attack of the Abbiesannian cavarly a great loss of life occured. Meanwhile there were those who with the hope of driving at the attackers who applied the torch elsewhere in the city. A whole block of frame shanties of the most disreputable character were fired in malicious mischief. A similar fate befell the fine residence of general Concentinian Arenburg who commanded a portion of the army which he had left at Jennie Turner, also that of Emperor Hanson Vivian himself and some of the National Secretary of Treasury and of other high dignitaries. The incendiaries in these cases evidently regarded the destruction as being just and praiseworthy.

It was then beyond question that in some instances private premises were plundered and individuals robbed. There were some ghoule in this Glandelinian army as in all others no matter how civilised. Myletses army might be, and a very few such in the midst of hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of honest and conscientious soldiers could readily bring reporach upon all. One war correspondent said or wrote, Women young or old were raped, hustled from their chambers-their ornaments many cases their very clothing torn from their bodies until they were stripped nude before the drunken soldiers. It was in vainthat the mother appealed for the garments of her children. They were torn from her grasp and hurled into the flames, and the children beaten and some killed.

The young girl striving to save a single frock, had it ret to fibres in her grasp and herself unclothed by force. Men and women bearing off their trunks were seiz seiz beind despoiled, in a moment the trunk burst asunder with the stroke of the axe or gun butt, the contents laid bare, rifled of all the objects of desire.

Frequently no demand of any kind was made. Rarely was a word spoken by these drink crazed Glandelinians and where ever a watch, r or chain, or ring, or bracelet presented itself conspicuously to the eye it was incontinently plucked away from the neck, breast or bosom. One little girl was seen to swallow a diamond and a drink soldier tore open her bosom and took out her stomach to get the diamond. Thousands of women still greaters numbers of old men and many little children were thus dispoiled and the slightest show of resistance provoked violence to the person.

A whole flock of Priests belonging to the Cathedral was robbed, the Church ransacked and when the priests protested they were collared and dispossedu dispossed by violence.

Within the dewellings the scenes were of a more harsh and tragical character, rarely softened by any ludicrious aspects. It was in vain that some woman would offer her keys, or proceed to open her drawer or wardrobe, or cabinet or trunk. It was dashed to pieces with an ax of gun butt with the cry; "we have a shorter way, to do that Mrs Christian Dog."

Nor were these acts those of common soldiers. High commissioned officers of rank so high as that of general were frequently among the most active of the sp oil spoliation and not always the mst tender or considerate in such action of their speeches couple d with oaths and blasphemies as condiment dealing in what they therefor therefore assured and assumed besides to be bitter sarcasms upon their own cause and country."

There may be some of the passionate assertions of a bitter war correspondent who was within Basilica at the time of his destruction, and whose information was supported by fullevidence.. But even he challenges his own assertions when he continu d continued continued" The Majoy Majority of loner Myletses troops were frequently faithful and respectful and many of the houses which escaped sack and fire owed their safty to these very men who after the attack of the Abbiesannian cavarly was repulsed, moved in upon th se sackers and took them all pre prisoners, forcing them to return as far as possible that was stolen and landing them into military prison for several months on a charge of disobeying the commands of their chief generals, while the generals who were said to have joined in as much as the others were requested to resign.

But who was more responsible for the diabolical mischief spoken off by the war correspondent. The majority of Myletses troops of whom he made mention as being in Basilica that dreadful night, outnumbered all others ten to me, and the provost guard was an Mangaboo regiment.

It may be said the moral responsibility for the destruction of Basilica and for the personal suffering which fell so suddenly upon its people, rest upon the National aurthorities themselves, for with criminal recklessness te upon the National aurthorities themselves, for with criminal recklessness in their principal business streets, they fired immense rows of old wooden buildings probably with the purpose of trying to smoke the " revels " out. It was criminal, because it was pre waste being only destruction of property of which the Glandelinians were not able to make any use of, and if fired only jeopardized the buildings of the very people in sympathy of their cause. and the fearful winds which spread the fma flames in every direction and wiped at the main part of the city were notan invention of the " Hated Glandelinian Skunks." The very few fires elsewhere in the city kindled by incendaries besides nearly all the sacking were perpetrated by drunken soldiers and escaped prisoners, the latter acting no doubt as if in bitter revenge for the hardships they had undergone while in the hands of the enemy.

For these excesses the Abbiesannian aurthorities were mainly responsible. All might have also been readily prevented or at least immediately restrained by the Glandelinian troops in possession of the city had not the Abbiesannians delayed more sore time by attacking at the wrong hour and whose own recklessness produced conditions, which no human power could control.

When morning came it was found that over three quarters of the city had been destroyed and that not even the majority of the Glandelinian army itself was without shelter. and it was pitiful to see som many homeless families grouped in the woods outside the city, surrounded by the the few poor household goods they had managed to save from the pillagers or the flames. General Isner Myletses left them a large quantity of provisions taken from the wagon train at the expense of the troops, who were already on short rations in a sterile country, while many of the soldiers dividedthe contents of their haversacks with the poor people--a measure of liberality , liberality which was again unusual for a Glandelinian army. Basilica was more nearly identified with the immediate causes of the war than any other National city so far, and her destruction was comparatively gre greater than that of any other.

Yet there many among Myletses army who while they did not pillaging or did not apply the torch and deplored the sad misfortune of those who suffered, yet looked upon the fate of the city as well deserved.

It is gratifying, and shows the nature of Myletses army that a fine big Crucifix escaped destruction. This beautiful work of art was a crucifix of iron so skillfully made that only the closest scrunty revealed the fact that it was not made of plaster and wood by the way it was colored and painted. It was mounted upon a fine marble pedestal in which was set a brass tablet bearing suitable inscriptions.

A very few days afterward, the "burning of Basilica was made subject of enquiry by the Abbiesannian Relief Commission in the cases for the fire and for buildings burned brought against the army of Myletses by Abbiesannian subjects. General Myletses evidence when interviewed under a flag of true truce was direct and emphatic fixing the responsibility entirely upon the Abbiesannian aurthorities.

He said-

" Hundreds of old frame houses were burning in the streets of Basilica at least teen twenty four hours before any portion of my army had reached within the very limits of that town. I happened to witness it myself and when we arrived we did all that was possible to extinguish it, and the attacking Abbiesannian cavarly interfered. an effort was also made by the counsel for Abbiesannian Accuser Tribunals to show that the Glandelinian army was guilty of unusual depredations. General Myletses evidence therefore can be conclusive upon this point and not devoid of humor.

" question---General, it is alleged that Emperor Vivian has said that your army is just as greatly to be feared as those under the Manleys?"

" Answer.---Emperor Vivian was never fool enough to say that to me. I have never seen Emperor Vivian in person, but I do not presume he is such a Jackass to say that of a army when there is no proof."

" question----So you deny that statement after all do you?"

" answer---" Our army was as good a Glandelinian army as any of the Manleys ever had to oppose the Nationals, and our main adversary Emperor vivian is a man of too good sense to have made any such statement. He is accused of. The armies under the Manleys are learning good lessons and are profetteering by them, and their officers are prompt to prove it."

" question---General I have often heard that your Christian enemies everywhere admit that your armies are keeping more clean records than that of the Manleys?"

" answer---My army could not have accomplished the successes so far in this war unless we kept them under good discipline and made it behave itself.

question--Can you tell me anything about the Mangaboo Divisions.?

"Answer. --Yes indeed I can, I know all about them, and they are as fine a body of troops as ever marched in an army.

" question--They had the reputation of committing massacres and doing them well like Manley and his generals!

"No sir...I do not allow such carrying on.

" question ---Had they note reputation in all parts of the northern state of Angelinia for leaving their mark upon so holy a country?

tttttttttttt" answer---- es sir, they left many a mark where ever they went.

" question---You were aware of this on many a occasion?

," Answer- I sure was.

" question---They were a dangerous set of armies were they not general?

," answer--No sir they were composed of first rate men, farmers and other s, who went to war in earnest for their cause, they were mostly southern men.

" question- They were good men for devastating the country?

Answer- Yes sir, but not unless told to do so m by me in person, andthen they destroyed it very quickly.

question--then not to told to do so if they thought they might do it and be not objectionable to their officers and generals-- answer they could do their work completely when they undertook it but notbwithout but not without permission.

question---were they always in the habit of destroying property.?

Answer No sir, I cannot say they were, they did nit not destroy more than was necessary they are of a kin der set of men than those of the Manleys, and I have known them to frequently share their own rations with the citizens of the country which none of those under the Manleys would have done.

question---- Do you mean to say you was not at all aware that the Omarian troops was distinguished for the marks they left upon all portions of the National country through which which they passed?

" Answer---I may surely have known it and very likely I ordered it, for it was my purpose to carry my campaign on to the finfal finis.

Question---I asked you did you know it. Here you not aware that the Mangaboo Divisions the most dangerous of all Glandelinians was remarkable for the manner in which they lef left their mark upon the country through which they passed?

answer---Explain what you mean by such a word as mark.

question--Devastation.

Answer---They killed every National within range of their guns and left their dead bodi bodies to mark the ground.

question --Do you not believe that some of your soldiers assisted in the spreading of the big fire at Basilica?

Answer--From my own judgement it was caused by Jimmie vivians cavarly caused by the impurdent act of said general for setting fire to hundreds of old frame houses in and then fleeing from the town, that God almighty started wind sufficient to carry that burning wreckage wherever he willed it to go and in some way or other those streamers of burning wreckage was the only origin of the big fire. some of my soldiers crazed with drink after the fire began may have been concerned in spreading it but not concerned at all in starting it. It is not surprising to me either if not some vandal did it without orders and merely for devilty or for revenge upon the upon the Nationals. Neither would it be a surprise to me sir if some of or many escaped pir prisoners aided in the spread of the conflagration in the city, but nevertheless I would not believe upon the mere say so, or upon an oath of any person in Basilica that dreadful night when he or she would state that they saw a fire kindled in a house or in a shed unless it were confirmed by some of my own soldiers. Those caught at it were promptly punished and as much of the sol stolen goods as possible restored to the proper owners.

The army of the Glandelinians was now again pushing on in the direction of Jessicia(angeline Vine State) and found itself on the very trail of the contending armies of the early portion of the war. This fact therefore led addit ional interest tothe cap campaign, and in camp or on the march, or fighting the many skirmishers skirmishes the troops and even generals eagerly pored over every map that they were able to secure, and ransacked their brains for school day recollections of stories of adventure and battles of the earlier days of the war.... Day after day they marched and skirmished upon the very ground made famious by fierce contests between the Nationals under Emperor Vivian and his wayward son Germania Vivian, and also that of Arminie Creek. In these days of immensor armies and thorough organization such warriros warrir warriors would be known as " bushwackers" and " Bummers". Arminie town and Jennie's bridge lay on the route and these places had been the scenes of the wars first fiercest conflicts in southern angelinia or northern Angelinia

, The Mangaboo Corps found on its line of march the old town of Gandor right close sithin sight of Jennie's bridge across Arminie Creek near which Emperor Vivian defeated his son. This was the first of the most disasterious reverses the Glandelinians suffered during the early part of the war and which at that time both sides sustained the worse losses in killed and wounded. Here the Nationals hst lost one dillion one hundred and eighteen. th. thousand dead, and here too both le leaders of both sides fell wounded and where the Glandelinians hst all their artillery and where Germania vivian wounded as he was fought like a cornered like to escape capture. The battle was once regarded as a stupendous struggle, but Myletzes and Manleys armies boasted a good record which justified them in regarding this conflict as nothing more than a respectable skirmish. Myletzes army had already fought a score of such, many far more serious, and so had Manley.

Somewhat later a portion of the army of Mangaboo, and a division of Scoodliers, aided by Phansfasms and growleywogs, supported by furmerannians fought a bloody skirmish near this very spot, and once a charge was made across the bridge in which the Glandelinians suffered a pretty severe loss before the Abbiesnnians were driven off. Leaving the vinicity of Basilica on May the 4th the army reached Alton on the 7th after fighting a score of skirmishes every day and night in which over eighteen hundred feell slain and two thousand are wounded, and there learned that the town of Mombi had been abandoned by the Abbiesnnians after withstanding a seige of nearly a year, the Nationals aban.o abandoning the place not because of not being able to resist the beslegers any further, but because of the news of the approach of liner Myletzes army.

The operations also of Myletzes army having severed their communications with the headquarters and interior of the "National Resistance" led them to believe that city to be the objective point of the campaign, and in fact it surely was. This therefore recalls the incident that when inthe vinicity of Mombi some days previous general Turner of the 32, Mangaboo Corps found among some papers which had been sent out from the city by the " enemy" presumen presumably for safe keeping a requisition dating somewhat back inthe last month calling for rein forcements for thegarrison at port St John and signed" L.H.Myletze. The dingy little piece of paper was regarded as quite a curiosity in view of the changed condition of the officer whose name was apprended.

May the twenty third found the army to the rear of Gandor onthe same stream Arminie Creek but further north. The distance travelled during these days, was something more than fifty miles and over inconsievably bad roads, and with big skirmishes fought here and there every day, and sometimes at night. As soon as they had emerged from the mud of the swamps the troop troops found themselves anchored in stiff clay hills which the heavy may May rains had worked into the proper consistency to hild feet and wagons wheels as if they had grown there. The labor of building roads in the face of, snipping fire from unknown numbers of hidden Abbiesnnian marksmen and pulling wagons and guns out of quagmires was very severe, and many lost their lives during this work, it was work, and skirmish at the same time. To add to the discomfort, this region was almost barren and little provision or forage was to be found, making it necessary for the troops to subsist upon the greatly abbrevated rations was issued from the supply trains.

At Gandor large quanities of commissionary stores were found but the troops had to fib fight a two or a days bloody skirmish from house to house in the town before it was occupied, the provisions then being issued to the troops or loaded on the wagon trains, which six times during the day, and more often at night. Abbiesnnian spies and bandits had tried to set afire, however the capture of the town was important for the army released nearly one dillion prisoners held there, burned one hundred thousand tents to the ground, secured several million stand of small arms and about twenty five hundred peces of artillery. Up to now since leaving Basilica the Glandelinians in the frequent skirmishing lost nearly one hundred thousand men in killed and wounded....

by the end of May a day of jubilee came. The last news recieved from the outer world was that of the near approach of Beppo Evans big army and this was the day upon which Myletze expected to be communicated with him. The event was celebrated in as grand form as the surroundings would permit. at noon when it was supposed the army was heading their way, a salute was fired from the captured artillery and in order to make as much noise as it was possible, and at the same time without destroying the guns which the army wished to make use of they were fired again and again as if being trained upon a desperately charging enemy. and so great was the noise that it sounded like a big battle going on. In the meantime the lusty good strong lungs of scores of dillions of men added to the din and it seemed as if that many demons were giving vent to the loudest of wildest yells.

On May the 30th general Burgin figured in an unusual scene which afforded surprise for him and the army for many a day afterwards. This dashing rough rider of the Glandelinians commanding at that moment an immense squadron of cavarly with a battery of light guns almost moved moved on the exposed flank of the army and could be always depended upon to attack or resist almost any force, apparently regardless of consequences. So restless was he, so continually in motion that he went by the name of " Horse ornado"He was of great height a seven foot man, and compactly built his face adorned with side whiskers expressed at once affability and great determin ation and stubborn nature. At most of the time except for hi his shoulder straps and hat which signified his commission he wore a privates coat and also another peice larity of his dress, was a solid gold band worn around his big wide black hat.

Late in the afternoon when he was crossing Jennie's bridge in the rear of the army a large portion of Jennie Vivians cavarly coming seemingly from no where made an unexpected and desperate at attack upon perkins camp dispersing the command, after fierc fierce and bloody fighting and driving the remainder to make defense near Chickadee creek, and the noise of the firing, and the light of great fires burning in the camp which showed tents afire by thousands warned general Dargin what had happened to his infant y infantry and he urged the whole column forward. At that time as of Dargins generals and one of his brigade commanders was surrounded in a house, and these officers in anything else but their uniforms managed to reach the woods near by after running the gauntlet. Here they rallied their own corps and held the attackers at bay, and just then, Dargins immense squadrons extending in long waves of seventeen miles rode upon the burning camp from three sides like irrestible tidal waves, and after a terrific fight, drove the Abbieannians out with dreadful loss, regaining their camp and artillery, and Jennie Vivian had a narrow escape from being captured.
Jenn Jimmie vivians cavarly again charged however, but was repulsed a second time and then with the arrival of another portion of the Glandelinian cavarly the abbieannians retreated. Both sides lost twenty thousand killed in this fray at Chickadee Creek and fourty thousand wounded, while the Glandelinians captured two thousand five hundred prisoners. But the fire sent too far to save the camp in time the w the whole of Dargins camp was without shelter.
It was thus far the first time in the very war according to general Dargin that ons of the Vivian Girls themselves should lead a squadron of cavarly and y yet make su surprising and desperate an attaci, but she being a little queen it was not believed unusual as she was nervy to do anything. Jimmie vivian her brother helped her however a as he led a portion but she in the lead on June the First a beautiful day, the army was still marching tward gob Mombo but being closer now to Trot town but moving at a rapid pace and in good spirits, general Dargins whole command always in advance with his cavarly proc protecting the flanks. General Dargin was riding a captured horse whose high mettle was stimulated by a sudden blast from a brass band immediately behind found himself unable to resist the ambitii ambitious animal and was born past the head of the column tward about fifteen hundred soldiers who were exchanging shots with the " enemy" on the opposite side of Ermine Creek.
The Glandelinian smirkishere turned out to be foragers whose zeal for advent ure had led them to out doe the regular advance. as soon as they observed an officer galloping down the road---not knowing why he was galloping so hard they raised a shout-
" There goes general Dargin leading a charge..Let's follow him and capture the Nationals and save the Bridges."
They at once all dashed in the direction of one of the nearest bridges tward where the generals runaway horse was gallow galloping but the "enemy had piled a large qu quanity of explisives on the bridge and it was blown up just in time to preven prevent the Glandelinians was crossing over, and besides a Abbieannian battery of one hundred guns was starting to pour thundering broa dsides across the stream with a no noise that shook the air and made the ground tremble . This combination of circum stances and the fact that his horse was winded by the mad run, caused the general to halt, and with the soldiers seeking cover until the arrival of the main column.
It was some time later however before it was really known that Dargins horse had ran away with the general.
Soon after after fierce skirmishing anew among buildings out houses, and from tree to tree, for six hours the Glandelinians finally entered Trot, and as soon as the army was marching in a dispatch boat ran up to the wharf---the first vessel flying the Glandelinian Oh Colors that had ascended this stream since the war began.
the brave little craft making the vent ure because of the abiding faith in the govern ment of Glandelinia in Mylet zes assurance, that he would be there at that time. The boat was in insignificant enough scarcely larger than a gun boat. It brought no letter letters; no papers of any kind- nothing but a small bag of dispatches for the general.
But for all that it was hailed with unbounded enthusiasm for it was the first courier from the outside world since the army left the region of Vivian Wickey. It spoke no word but the bright familiar flag at its peak seemed to be a per personal message to every member of Mylet zes grand army, telling him the Glandelinians else where were holding their own, that the Glandelinian government yet lived, and the great heart of the Glandelinian Confedepate Nation confided in his patriotism and courage. No wonder the general himself nailed the flag with as warm delight as would thrill the heart of any patriot of days gone by in our own country, when imprisoned within hearing of a deadly conflict, and after a nights weary watch he looked out across the waters from his cell at the first gleam of dawn and would give the most eloquent expression to his joy and sing the Star Spangled Banner.
At Trot town an expedition was organized to march down the banks of Ermine Creek to the main Aronburgs Run Stream with a cloud of child slaves who had been forced to attatch themselves to the army as it marched along. The big plantations on the line o v of march had generally been abandoned by their owners because of the danger of dangerous raids by Nationals and when the slaves were compelled to follow the army northward they had to obey who her they desired to or not, and usually did for Mylet zes was a man who would even sent a child slave to freedom into a christian camp for exch a exchange of a prisoner and therefore they did not want to displease so good a Glandelinian general, usually the very child slaves and the rebel boy and girl sequts traveled together in the colu n and made a deplorable and sad sight. The child slaves all had long bobbed hair, the worse kind of clothing, indeed their costuming being something beyond description, and many were even stark naked whether they be boys or girls. Here would be some slaves wearing cumbersome old fashioned army hats too large for their heads and very dilapidated, yet bearing traces of gilt and strange military filagee suggesting that they had been a very stylish affair when brand new.

One slave was dressed in course plantation bresches, with a sky blue brass buttoned coat very much out of repair, and her head topped off with an old straw hat much too large for her and which she had to make holes in front of so she ocould see so farvoid, it come down over her head. By her side a was a boy wearing a scoop shovel bonnet resplendent with faded ribbons and flowers of every color of the ari artest, a silk or satan dress of great antiquity and coarse brogans on her feet which were large enough to fit a fat man or woman.
There were others too who were only an undershirt, some were entire nude and their eyes were wide open in wonder fear or whatever sensation a child slave would have while accompanying a marching army whe whether in wagons or on foot. Most of the slaves rode in some of the empty wagons. But there there was no joy or happ in ess among these slaves they were sad and hopeless. but some of them expecting to be exchanged before long for Glandelinian soldiers held within the National camps as prisoners were invariably gay hearted, regarding the jr exodious as a pleasure trip and evidently strong in the faith that their lot on getting free was to be one of bliss. But many of the slaves who even did not have any hopes were soon surprised.
That day a little beyond Trot town Mylet zes displayed a flag of truce and after some agreement agout thirty thousand prisoners were released by the Nationals who recieved two slaves for each prisoner.
The fine Abbieannian government arsenal at Trot town which had been used by the Nationals was completely destroyed after all the munitions and arms and artillery taken possession of by the army, general Mylet ze remarking that he would devastate ever every town that had an arsenal but he could not keep his threat on account of the concentration of unusually large National forces in front and he therefore went out to find out who the enemy was. He was surprised to observe it was his old adversary Vivianenna who had again been called to oppose Mylet e with a new army. The Glandelinian troops now looked for a severe struggle, some felt there was a strong probability of having to fight a part of paperer Jivians army as well as Vivianenna Vivianenna but all were hopeful, believing that success with Beppo Avena rejoining us on soon drawing near.
June the 2th the Twenty fourth Division was caught in flank by the Nationals and had a sharp engagement lasting all day, but the battle though somewhat severe was not general. Later reports indicating that it was found in its front the whole of Vivianennas army with general Vivianenna at its head, the Corps under Dargin was diverted from its course to go to its assistance, and made a hard nights march under fire of long range gunnon over a miserable causeway of some construction built over a boogy boggy ground. Rain fell in torrents all night long, the lightning was unusually fearful, and as bolt struck a prtion of the column killing thirty men and severely smocking others. They thought it was a small. The corps under general Hedro had ascarcely less pleasant journey on the same errant pestered by the all nights thunderstorm and by abbieannian cavarly attacks, over a at different road, and one possibly a trifle better--nevertheless it could not have been worse.
On the 5th of June the army went into line of battle near Meldonville. Nothwithstanding the condition of the ground, the abbieannians at various points for many miles fought de perately and Mylet zes army won fresh laurels in defeating them.
General Dargins divisions deployed, a long skirmish line also aided in part by the
The Seventeenth and eighteenth corps. This prtion of the line was under orders to make a strong demonstration to create a diversion in front of Hedroes Cr orps who had gone into action further to the left so with so much energy and fury as to be in danger of being overwhelmed. Unfortunately the ground and the conditions were unknown, and Dargins line of attack, particularly those of Lacs Brookes division suffered severely and plack Brook was wounded in the leg. The fire of the Abbieannians along a line of ten miles was most terrific and was hailed in smoke of musketry and artillery without pause but at the word the Glandelinians advanced through a heavy pine forest, the line of general battle being near support moving on until they encountered the National works and countless numbers of the men fell all along the line of charge all the way through the woods and on up to the work and a large number fell dead and wounded on the parapet. One of these a very young general officer of the Mangaboo division was killed a rifle ball having passed through his cheek making its exit behind the opposite ear, while the fragment of a shell torn his abdomen open. Whole lines of the Glandelinian attackers were shot dead on the enemy's works and finally the line of attack was forced back, but occupied the advanced rifle pits. Early the next morning without fighting a general battle as expected the Nationals again retreated having been pressed hard at other points. Vivisanna was ever to fight another battle with Mylets again untill much later in the war but that was not known then. Dargin's men however had fought the hardest and not only charged the rifle pits of the Abbiesannians but advanced fiercely on his entrenched line of battle and only fell back before greatly superior numbers. At night when relieved by another Mangaboo division, he remained with most of his men on the skirmish line keeping up a hot fire all night long without pause and faithfully did more than his duty although he could have with perfect justification have brought in all his men. Mylets main army nor that of Vivisannas had not been engaged but nevertheless the battle of Meldonville caused a combined loss of nearly a million men in killed, and two million more in wounded.

Two days later the army reentered Trot town and was again in full communition with the Glandelinian homes for heavy mails had been accumulating for more than three months past, and to make their happiness as nearly complete as any soldiers may be they were served with all the rations that had been captured from a large portion of the Abbiesannian camp captured in the early portion of the fierce conflict.

Immediately after the Glandelinian army had entered Mombi one of the Glandelinian generals was an actor which would have been a full chapter of experiences, which could have recalled to mind after the lapse of many scores of years and yet might have seemed to have had an existance only in dreamland. But a large package of military order military orders, a few bundles of love letters and three music boxes lying upon the generals desk assured the astonishing scene of the narrative.

General Cradle an old and well known friend of general Dargin's gave Hint to his friend of some military events that was hoped to bring a speedy capture of the military bases of the city of Angelinia Agathia. Mylets was to crush Vivisanna and then move upon the Vivians, whom it was reported that the Manleys were holding as in a vice. Those in high place were so well assured of the successful issue of these operations that the end of the war, and the transfer of the victory army of Mylets to the new born National capitol of Glandelinia for final review and disbandment were regarded as near at hand.

General Dargin was anxious that his command(the Mangaboo divisions) should make as presentable an appearance as possible when that event should occur. The fourth Division " general Meldon Bicknells was without a few brass bands but among the recruits recieved were quite a few musicians and no who represented Himself as having been a band master. These men at Mylets request were to be organized as a sort of band, while the general was ordered to Mombi Junction taking the leader with him to in a raid upon the town purchase the instrument s. A day later the necessary orders were made and the general and his companions began their journey traveling by rail to Mombi proper thence by boat through a dismal swamp till they reached their destination. The raid was therefore quite successful and the band master was sent backto the army with the instruments. To dismiss this part of the subject so as not to make it took too long once and for all it is only to be remarked that the band proved to be the very worse l the army and the alleged leader a most stupendous fraud. It is perhaps to the credit ofthe latter that he never murdered but one tune. It was the only one he ever attempted" All Glandelinia Forever March."

General Dargin himself availed himself of a saving culuse in his orders to remain in Mob Mombi for a few days and enjoy a season of much needed recreation. One evening soon after his arival he stood in the City Hall in the midst of a large throng of glandelinian army and navy officers engaged in discussing war questions with with considerable spirit. It was evident that all were of general Beppo Evans command though how they entered Mombi unseen was a mystery for they magnifice magnified the achievements achievements of the army of glandelinians elsewhere and of the besieged Glandelinians at Vivian Mickey not forgt foegetting to praise someht somewhat others of their friends of the west and south.

This was natural enough from their stand point but it was exceedingly surprising to general Dargin who finally spoke with emotion. his sentence had scarcely passed his lips when his hand was grasped by one in the uniform of a Glandelinian general of the highest rank who excitedly asked " For goodness sake sir, are you one of Mylets grand generals?"

Being answered in the affirmative the stranger introduced himself as general Meldonia M Bicklenl Bicknell of the main branch of Manleys army having come to Mombi on a furlou furlough and in time to find it captured by Mylets army. Then another officer arived and pointed to his disfigured face--the cheek bone had been crushed by the fragment of a shell while fighting in the early part of the battle of Cedernine just passed. The two, strangers alike to the throng about them became close friends on the full instant. The Eastern glandelinians hearing their conversation were surprised for they has had been unaware that general Mylets Myletses army had reached so far north. They were vesy sincere and cordial and proved to be the most companionable gentlemen and also were not ne of them of Manleys command not even Bicknell. Standing well back at the side of the lobby noting the altercation and the explanations but seeming to take no part whatever was an eldery man whose white hair crept out from beneath a large round hat, while a long military cloak of redish gray colorconcealed all evidence of rank. Approaching Bicknell, and Dargin he saluted and said that he had not been able to avoid overhearing the conver ation, and was sre than surprised that any of general Mylet es army should have reached so far north suo soon and come so close to Angelinia Agathia. Then he presented a card bearing his own name, and requested the general to become his guest.

The speaker was no other than general Physician who in the early part of the war had done his own part . His invitation at once of the highest o honor and a command was promptly accepted. The carriage belonging to the general was at the door and the three were soon at his residence for he had lived in Mombi before the outbreak of the deadly conflict conflict. It was now now quite late, and the two gun guests were at once shown to a large room with an injunction that they must be prepared to do a good deal of talking on the fuolowing morning. The next day while at breakfast, the two guests met Mrss Physician and her three children seon not under six years of age. The latter conversed with each other and with their parents then after breakfast all went to the library and general Dargin was requested to give a narrative of the campaign of general Mylet es great army beginning with the march from Sunbeam Creek. Never did any speake speaker have more attentive auditors, and their deep interest put him at so much ease that he told his story with unusual enthusiasm, general Bicknell frequ frequently calling a halt to ask pertinent questions or to comment, as the narrative progressed.

Then when the narrative was finished general Bicknell complied with the solicitations of his guests and gave a vivid des criser description of the fierce attacks of the Nationals armies upon his lines at Cedernine and the occurences proceeding it. He told how with his large divisions of men but greatly outnumbered by the Abbiesannians, he was virtually besieged in stanck Town near Headrick junction how pon his own responsibility and with the positive conviction that Manley would disapprove his action, he abandoned the town during a slight lull in the bloody action and got around to Headrick junction the key to the christian position by fighting his way out of the city, and being reinforced by general . Altoe he assem bled his commands in front of Headrick Junction, hoe he assaulted that place and captured it and the whole christian camp beyonf beyond in the face of the fierce cannonading and maketry fire from the christian line, and of how all the camps and barrucks went up in flames, how ammunition dumps and stores blew up like volcanic eruptions, and how the Angelinians were so strongly reinforced that he had to move off defeated in his purpose but had shown a desperate fifht fight.

During his furlough general Bicknell was now looking forward with the ardent anticipation of a gallent officer and noble glandelinian patriot to a scene which he regarded as a fitting close to his military life before he returned back to his army. At the early portion of the war say the first few months he had been compelled without a fight to surrender Mombi to his Christian enemies, but now Mylet es had re captured the town and he wished it to be his own glorious privilege to himself in person again raise over the ramparts he had so well defended the very flag he himself had been obliged to lower. He had but recently recieved from the war department of Glandelnia orders prescribing the ceremonies and announcing June the 10th 1914 the third anniversary of the surrender at the gate. General Bicknell was to raise the flag precision precisely at six oclock in the morning and it was to be sun saluted with one thousand guns from the forts, and with every battery of Mylets army firing the Glandelinian National salute. Later on these arragement arrans arrangements were fully carried at and that a great oration was delivered upon the spot by general Mylets himself.

General Bicknell spoke with entire freedom, and took a great pride in his own military history. He told how and why he had entered the Glandelinian army, and now he served on the staff of general Lusious Turner, and was wounded the first time at Bobesspeirre Pantonia. He expressed his great admiration for general Mylets and his pride in the great successes of that officer, whom he referred as an equal to general Jon Manley, or Mic-Hollester Johnst nia. He bade his guest to call upon general Iner Myl Mylets on rejoining the army and to convey to him his compliments and good wishes. Then the general asked for a souvenir of the great campaign, where upon general Dargin with pr pleasure, presented him with a good history of it written by one of the war correspondents which he had taken from the arsenal at Basilica having first at the generals request inscribed upon a fly leaf his name and a full statement of the circumstances under which they came into his possession. In return the general handed him a green card with a photograph of himself on the other side, upon the back of which he wrote;

" To general Isner Heidi Mylets from an admirer and lover of his dd time old time comrade, with regards of general Bicknell. Major general General."

On rejoining hi nisscommand general Dargin made good his promish to call upon general Isner Mylatze. He was recieved kindly and the warm hearted Glandelinian general was greatly pleased at the incident, speaking in high terms of his friend general Loconia Maldonia Bicknell and relating many anecdotes with reference to theirvery their early comradeship.later on he andressed general Bicknell a note in which he said;

" The unusual episode with reference of your interview with general Dargin is certainly most interesting with me. for I too esteem him highly. I hopeyou I hope you and all others of my best generals who once served nder me may survive the w r war whether we win or lose. Truly your friend. I.H.Mylatze."

The mornin before leaving Mombi Junction Dargin had occasion to visit the big post office. He was standing upon the top most step of a mailbuilding when a bulliten was posted announcing that the Viviens were concentrating in very heavy force since Cedernine near a town and stream with the name of Eva St Claire and that another terrible storm of war was threatening. so this moment there was not more than the usual bustle on the streets streets but in less time than it can be told, the scene changed and the streets everywhere was packed from end to end with dense masses of soldiers. It was the threatening of another battle on the same once bloody grounds. The tidings had flown fast as there was no need of telegram or printed sheet. Men saw the news in each others face. Then the bulletin sent on to say Manley had been arrested at many points since. the disaster at Cedernine, and the vast crowd hooted and hooted again then exhausted with their own derisious effort, a great hush came over the came over the vast assemblage of soldi s auxiliary and the voices of birds were heard on the house tops. Then to celebrate the capture of Mombi there sent up to the very top of the post office the triumphant flag of Glandelinia regal in a splendor it had never worn before, while unaerneart underneath from the doom high up in the air to the very ground were flags and flags and nothing but flags until the spire was a mass of bright beautifully colored.untin bathed in the sunshine of afternoo afternoon. Then the vast concourse with streaming eyes, and tremulous voices took upthe gladsome voices wedded to the music again the long marsh like song of "[illegible]" " All Glandelinia forever."
There was no discord in that vast volume of thanksgiving. All differences as how this end should have been reached, or by whom should have come deliverance were forgotten and there was no thought but aught but that victory had been gained anew and more brilliant brilliantly and that better success will insure the capture of angelinia Agathia.

CHAPTER SIXTY FIVE...

BEAUTIFUL SCENES IN AND OUTSIDE OF MOMBI. A LOYAL GLANDELINIAN. A NIGHT SCENE IN A DISMAL SWAMP OUTSIDE OF MOMBI. ASSASSIONATION OF A GREAT GLANDELINIAN GENERAL IN THE NET. RAGE OF THE GLANDELINIAN TROOPS AND TERROR OF CHRISTIAN CITIZENS. THE NEWS REACHES THE ARMY AT MOMBI. A TRUCE BETWEEN GENERAL HERO TURNER AND MYLETZE. FEARS FOR THE SAFTY OF MYTLE MYLETZE. THE CHAPE DRAPED SWORD. THE ARMIES OF HERO TURNER AND MYLETZE CONFRONTING EACH OTHER UNDER FLAG OF TRUCE. SUDDEN APPEARANCE OF GENERAL BEPPO EVANS. SURRENDER OF TURNER. THE TERMS GRANTED. QUARREL BETWEEN MYLETZE AND THE MANLEYS. SOCIETY OF THE ARMY OF GLANDELINIA. REORGANIZEDWITHIN THE SOUNDS OF THE CHRISTIAN GUNS. A BRILLIANT ARRAY OF PRESIDING OFFICERS. GENERAL MYLETZE ON A BEAUTIFUL HORSE. ON TO ANGELINIA AGATHIA. BEPPO EVANS AND MYLETZES ON BETTER TERMS THAN BEFORE. TRUT CAPTURED, A PRISON PEN AT THAT TOWN. STRANGE AMUSEMENT OF THE PRISONERS. PROFANE VERSES. TRUT COURTHOUSE AND ALBERTINIA. THE BATTLE AT OZMA TOWN. DEATH OF GENERAL ALEXANDRIA FRANCIS.
ARRIVAL AT BETSY BOBBIN. A GRAND REVIEW OF TROOPS IN SAME TOWN. DARGINS ARMY. THE SOLDIERS OF THE SOUTH. A PHANTOM OF GLANDELINIAN ARMIES. GENERAL MYLETZES ORDER. ONWARD BOUND UNDER SEVERE FIRE. RESISTANCE AT EVERY STEP . TROOPS SHIPWRECKED ON THE ARONBURGS RUN BY ENEMY FIRE. GENERAL DARGINS ORDER. UP THE ARONBURGS RUN. A FORT CONQUENTINIA. STILL ON TO ANGELINIA AGATHIA. A DEMORILIZED COMMAND REMONSTRANCES AGAINST THE CONDUCT OFTHE RESISTING NATIONALS. ARRIVAL AT ALBERT. THE TROOPS REINFORCED. A STRANGE PICTURE.

RETURN
RETURNING from Mombi Junction to Mombi proper to the front a most magnificent scene would have presented itself to the eye at the outskirts of this place, and also on the rivet near the sharves. With the help of his great aides in the west general Manley that is John Manley had begun his designs upon southern Culverinia in the west, and in view of posible complications every maritime power in Christiandom had sent one or more war vessels by means on the only open river to the National Government into the spacious harbor whi whench they might reach angulinian states without much delay if necessary, and indeed they surely had come but I only in time to now be the property of Isner Mylatzes army, and which he decided to have Manley send to Vivian Hickey by a se secret water route to aid in sending provisions to the garrisons there resisting the abbleshnians so long. Here in this river before Mombi town were the ships flying the flags of all nations, and war vessels of all type but among them none looked so trim andc and r ready for action nor did any fly such beautiful colors as the flag of Glandelinia. Here were also the battle scarred gunboats, which for nearly two years had lain under a ceaseless storm of iron hail from the National batteries near Anna Aronburg and swift heavily armed cruisers battered by tempests of river and sea batteries fire while striving to break through Glandelinian craft at Hickey bay and while persueing Glandelinian blockade runners and blocading Glandelinian ports and Vivian Hickey and which had come to Mombi for repairs. First they hadcbeen captured by the Nationals at this very port but now Mylatze had them in his own possession and they were ordered to be repairee repaired for further service.
Towering over all rose the war like sides and lofty spars of ten big Glandelinian battleships made obsolete by many big guns. They were somewhat larger than the big British warships of war days and carried for each ship over three hundred such big turret guns. In the wake of these in curious contrast, somewhat resembling a long barge with a slanting house on its top armed with three hundred and fifty big pounder guns lately fo floated one of the most formidable of all the Glandelinian craft the big Cytian or River Ram battleships, resembling the Confederate Merrimac of Cival Civl Civil war days but extending to the length of five to nine hundred feet and so morbidible that the biggest warships itself could never wreck it not even with the most powerful torpedoes. But these were here also for repairs, as some had engine trouble, or broken smoke stacks and also coms for fuel and recruits.
To leave Mombi for a certain part of the Glandelinian army it was necessa necessary for hundreds of thousands of men to leave in these crafts thus mentioned and take passage a considerable distance up the river. These crafts the smallestvof which were about eight, yards in length had suffic sufficient room to shelter the artillery and a thousand man each, while the bigger could take on nearly 10,000 . The most prominent passengers aboard were three chief war correspondents, and a Glandelinian civilian whom was known as Pendro Pedro. An acquaintance was speedily formed and Mr Pedro proved to be a most companionable gentleman. He was a native of Northern Glandelinia and also a man of consideable note. as a member of the big convention to make the unsuccessful attempt to vote the state of angelinia out of the abblemanian Union in the early secession days he took a leading part however inthe deliberations of that body, and would have hanged those bitterly opposed to their rebellious spirit if a body of abbleannian cavarly had not come to their rescue. Thereafter it was not safe for him to live within the Christian territory and as time he was loudly denounced by a mob of children themselves as a." Glandelinian Child butcher" and at one time a rope was actually placed about his neck, and he would have dangled from the brahc branch of a big tree had it not been for the atervention of prominent Glandelinians who were his warm friends. The route lay through a dismal swamp laying along the edge of a forest which the river often overflowed, a wild and mst lonely and dangerous region, a swamp which was mre boggy than land or water, and which to try and go through was actual suicide. It was night, and the moon though partly covered by clouds was at its half the light increasing by contrast the gloom of the swamp and the winding of the river which was almost entirely concealed by the dense foliage fringing its banks. Here and there straggling moonbeams crept through, and their fitful glint pon the dark waters far away seemed as if it might be the fire fly lamp of some demon ghost, and one often caught a glimpse of the unusual Willeotheuwisps will-o-the-wisps flaring over dangerous and bottomless quick sand and other bogs.

But more suggestive reminiscenses clung to the lonely region. It was a scene of horror for even the Glandelinians escaped that no matter how dangerous this swamp may be there was no telling how many abbleannian bushwackers would be lurking it in its depth ready to fire upon the ships with hidden artillery. The North of the cit city was reached June the Fifteenth 1914 and there on the day following was recieved news of the glorious consummation of general Maldonia picknells mission to Mombi. The joy of the troops still stationed at Mombi on recieving the news was unbounded, but it was of short duration. The hurrahs had scarcely died at when other news came on the evening of the same day of victory and gladness almost before the echoes of the joyful guns at Mombi had ceased to roll that general prude the beloved and true hearted command er next to Beppo Evans, in Beppo Evans command had fallen not in battle, or in scouting tours or otherwise in any line of duty but by the hand of some assassin.

To the whole of Mylstzes army which was preparing for action at the tim the recollection of this unusual tragedy came as a dreadful night mare, and who could imagine in the terrible sensations; the awful forboding it awoke.

It was not even so long ago that the Glandelinian nation was overwhelmed with grief because of the death of general Turner at Dantonia. The latter death, however was in time of fierce battle the former in time of inactivity. With general Lulsus Turner dead, the Glandelinian army though badly wrecked still existed, Manley took command, and th the smooth continuous movement of the Glandelinian war cloud was not to be interrupted. When general Drudd brude of Beppo Evans command fell the Nationals in the east were in possession of most of the country, and men of the rebels dreaded lest the assassins bullet might consummate that war crime against even National abbleannian civilization, which lines of battle had for over two years so far have tried unsuccessfully to accomplish against the rebellion.

For the Glandelinians nder Myletze, as well as Beppo Evans the overwhelming surrow, and fear of possible evil of awful character to follow fell upon all the soldiers and the Glandelinian nation like a pall. The soldiers drilled in an aimless sort of way, and blue blanched cheek cheeks. The ordinary concerns of military life the routine military duties which through long continued of habit had become to be performed machanically were fogt fog forgotten, and many soldiers who usually drilled the most spled splendid make many comilcs comical mis-a mistakes. Then as the mind slowly grapsed the horrible reality, stupor gave way to fierce rage and an intense desire to be revenged upon all Nationals whether men women or children. National women then fled all towns in path of the advance of Mylstze or Beppo Evans, and all who bore the name of National fearful that they would be vi visited with destruction of property and perhaps of life, left the rhomes and came to abbleannian military head quarters bringing with them their children whose danger seemed the greatest, and pleaded in tears to the military to save their children from the Glandelinians.

But so far as Mylstze's or Beppo Evans army were concerned, their fears were idle, cowardl cowardly, their pleads pleads absolutely unecessary. For it can be the highest tribute that can be paid to the self self-control and magnanimity of the Glandelinian soldiers of these two armies, that their rage was expended with their breath with the capture of the very assassin within the town of Mombi and his immed late execution, and that neither bullet nor torch was sent upon its deadly work. If they had been the armies under Manley why then it's different ----- there is no need to say the reader knows himself from Manleys character.But it is wonderful therefore to record that not one soldier of Izner Mylstzes army except the escaped prisoners from Basilica committed a deed of excess--indeed if he so willed a single one might have like those of Manleys drenched the land in innocent blood and covered the name of Mylstze andcBeppo Evans with undying shame.

The next day June the eighteenth the main army arived at Mombi junction the news of general prudes assassination then not yet having reached the troops, and when one of the generals informed the members of his mess they were very incredulous regarding it as one of the biggest jokes which were no so numerous those bloody days.

The, took him as a big joker, or rather also saying.

Where did you get thatdrink last night." and " What was it you drank" and so on.

But later in the day general Mylstze himself gave authenticity to the sad story by the publication of an order in which after reciting the cur circumstances he said;

This it seems that our enemy the ,ationals despairing of meeting us in the open manly warfare, begins to resort to the work of assassins. But I do not wish to say in other words that this might be universal or general, for I know for sure that the great mass of the abbleannian army would scorn to assassin ate a great general, but nevertheless I believe it the absolute consequence of abbleannian government not for the full purpose of fighting in this fashion, but probably to avenge the massacre of women and children committed by the armies under the Monleys and of the great disasters caused by said armies such as big, explosions, food fire and so forth.

Therefore we that is I and Beppo Evans have met every phase which this unusual war has assumed, and must no now be prepared for it in its worse shape, that of assassins and bushwackers, snipers, and angelinian guerrillas, but woe unto the Nationals who seek to expend their wild insane passons on in such a way for there is but one dread result.. We have surrounded a abbleannian army under general Nero Turner from whence the assassion had come into Beppo Evans army and if he does not comply with my demands for surrender within three days I'll give him no quarter."

Then occured scenes more remarkable than any other witnessed at Mombi town. Mylstzes army had surrounded that of Nero Turner, the latter having abandoned Mombi town. But nevertheless both sides were still drawn up in line of battle only a few hundred yards apart, but it seemed as if peace negotiations were in progress and white flags along the lines proclaimed a truce. But many of Mylstzes men forgot this state of affairs in their thirst for revenge, and here and there large brigades and detatchments of Mangaboos, Scoodliers, and Greelaywogs grasped their long rifles, and withoutbthought of orders, and nled by officers, mowed to tye the front. If they had not been frustrated, and had they fired even a single volley, or even still more had only a single gun been fired it would have opened a tremendous conflict which would have been the most horrible of the war for it would have involved both armies in which no quarter would have been asked or given. Wi e wiser counsils prevailed however and the hot headed soldiers went reluctantly to the rear.

The next day general Izner Mylstze and general Nero Turner met to consider terms for the surrender of his besieged abbleannian army. A long conference was held alom midway between the lines and was regarded by all of Mylstzes army with the greatest misgivings. They were fearful lest their general should be slain through treachery and there was much alarm and nervlousness untill he had returned in safty within his own lines.

General Mylstze during the conference wore his sword and in its hilt was a frayed and black colored fragment of crape twined thereon by his orderly at his request, as Mylstze required the army to wear morning mourning for six months of or more in emort memory of the lamented general. It appeared to be the most saddening and sacred of all the Glandelinian war relelcs, relics.. on June the 19th generals Mylstze and Nero Turner again met to arrange for the surrender of the abbleannian army. The two generals knew but not the men that gen ral Drude had been assassinated. Other conferences followed but as to their results the Glandelinian troops who became greatly impatient knew nothing and yet feared that the Glandelinian government might have overruled the terms granted by Mylstze to Nero. Therefore the tro armies had lain in idleness under the flag of truce for two days and nights after negotations had opened, when general Beppo Evans suddenly appeared upon his this scene, his army having come up and made a junction with Mylstze.

His coming taken in connection with the protracted delay, when all exc expected an abbleannian army to surrender immediately was painfully suggestive, and the troops concluded that general Nero's answer was not satisfactory to Mylstze, and Beppo Evans had come to aid him force the surrender or massacre the abbleannian army in a noquarter battle. There was no warrent for this conclusion, but the men believed it to be the fact and so implicitly implicitly did theybtrust Mylstze and Evans that ignoran ignorant of the merits of the case they looked upon Nero with hatr hatred and revenge and this feeling was intensified when on the day of general Beppo Evans arival orders were issued to the ending of the truce and the renewal of hostilities at the expiration of the agreed three days notice. The men had supposed an easy capture of this Abblean nian army of only four sen d illion men fourteen million men but they now felt that the wisdom and honor of their chief had been called in question by the Christian general, and they were inclined to resent the other day of delay and wanted to discard the flag of truce immediately. Happily however for before the ending of that second day another conference was held by the opposing commanders, terms were immediately arranged, and Nero's men laid down their arms forever.

The struggle with these armies, only one attle too and not a severe one was ended and the curtain was now about to fall upon one of the final scenes a most fitting one which was to shed added glory upon the gallent Mylstze and his voctirous victorious hosts.

Here was the long line of ashen gray which marched out of the region of Delight's Junctions nearly two years ago and from that first victory in that bloody battle pressed on from victory to victory, every halt, every skirmish every engagement, every movement of the campaign adding as more to its lists of the most heroic achievements.

It had broken a portion of the National in- Investment of fortress Thumbelinia, and during the battle of Delight's Junction stormed and carried the christian positions after repulsing their assault upon North Bend. It at snatched victory from defeat at the same conflict. Hiedi town fell before its dogged determination, and other places succumbed to its most impetuous assaults. Hiedi town was literally hammered to pieces under its terrible blows. Then defiantly it marched eighteen hundred miles through the heart of a hostile territory, demanding and recieving the surrender of the first of the foes about within four hundred miles within the very gate of his capitol. Myletzes army so far had been the victor which in the west as He well knew Manley and all his Confederates was being hammered to pieces and spanked by the Nationals. Therefore Myletzes army had the power and the right to be exultant. Its bands played a tumult of manic music and its artillery from thousands of guns thundered the most jubilant volleys heard at Angelinia Agathia. Its mighty columns marched with pomp and most arrogant step in sight of the first of the National enemy it had conquered. It was like the scenes honored in the days of chivalry. Nothing could be seen but the disdainful look of the victor, and hagine the bended knee of the vanquish ed, the surrendered swords, the grounded muskets and the pillage of the camp which ensued. To the victor belongs to the spoils.

The purple lines grounded arms in the front of the Glandelinian camp, and handed over swords may was not even allowed to retain their own flags. The Gray lines stacked grey lines stacked arms in its own quarters. For two whole days came the blare of many bands hundreds of them, the peal of cannon and the shouts from millions of voices.

It was pitiful indeed to look upon those men in purple. Engaged in a cause which had a great Holy as, and yet forced to ground their arms because their cowardly general surrendered was a movement which had a great wrong, --a crime against humanity and civilizationp-- a surrender to an enemy which was considered a Foe of Heaven. They had the same hardy manhood and the same stern devotion to what they knew was right as God is right. As soldiers they had won a right to be admired and honored. Ever in retreat they like Vivianna hid made a stout battle at every stopping place. Defeats did not disheurten them and to the very last they fought with conspicious courage. In their purple uniforms a uniform that betokens a righteous nation, and their broad purple hats they looked more like soldiers of Christ indeed. That they should be such was wonderful. But to their cowardly general it seems as if their cause holt holy as it is was a losing game from the first. The vast mahority had not recieved tidings from their families for many a month, they only knew that the war tempest had swept oer their homes, and their fearful anxiety as to the fate of their loved nes was unappeased.

On account of being so far away from their bases of supplies, they were more poorly provisioned than Myletzes army and indeed their very medical department was worse than even their comi commissariat, the two great necessities of the field hospits hospital quinine and morphine were never to be had. Yet amid all these ja hardships and discouragements, they were courageous, self reliant, even hopeful because they knew their cause was right. All praise t for their true soldiership. But it seemed that shame and everlasting disgrace was to be upon the base conspirators who caused the general to surrender to an army and general whose fighting was for only a most unholy cause.

The terms granted by general Izner Myletzes was most severe but but reasonable in other ways. Field transportation, and artillery and artillery and wagon horses and all arms and ammunition of general Turmers army or belonging to the National army which had surrendered were to be given up to the Glandelinian army including tents and all army provi proper y property but each brigade of the military of the christian army was allowed to disrobe themselves of their uniforms, put on civilian clothing which Myletzes army would furnish furnish at its own expense and march to their homes as out of the war altogether, but the generals and officers who surrendered were to be retained as prisoners. There were within the christian army which surrendered over one hundred thousand child slaves rescued from many a Glandelinian plantation and to the surv surprise of the Christian soldiers Myletzes in the terms for surrender passed a decree that all said child slaves shall be thus retained by the vanquished to be taken to their own country.

This seemed a right cause for Myletze in one way but it was a blow to Manley who Manley who was even very jealious of Myletze as he won so much while the former was being crushed in every battle. All of Manleys army officers and all those for him crit icised Myletsz severely for granting such favorable terms, for usually it was the law of war to even re retake all child slaves taken from a vanquished army and keep the soldier as prisoners a well. And it is highly probable however that the most high of the censure came upon Manley not only for his own defeats but also for his interference with Myletze which the government of Glandelinia did not like which claimed that Manleys interfer was overruled at Glandelinia city, and that as Myletzes was the victor he could do she sees fit and also another thing, if Manley and his Confederates did not allow so many massacres to be committed he and they too would have had better luck in their on campaigns. This This cause the unfortunate animadversions of the Three Manleys with reference to the terms about the slaves first submitted and the rejected portions of this memorandum provided for the disbanding of the National army and only the retain ing of the officers who surrenders , besides allowing the slaves to remain free use therefore overuled by the aurthorities acting under the Manley s who seemed to lose their heads, and the former authorized a semi offical statement which was a hot argument against the agreement. It asserts that the agreement practically acknowledged the National government that Myletze was acting as a traitor, that in secret Myletze was seeking to reform and reestablish other National armies from his own to aid them overthrow the rebellion and to place in the hands of many child slaves arms and nations of war which might be used as soon as the Glandelinian armies were seperated on in an effort of their own to aid the Nationals to gain their freedom.

It istherefore remarkable to note how high feeling rose against general Myletze, who the day before was regarded by Manley and his generals as a demi-god. Even leading Glandelinian papers which had never faltered its its in its evotion to the Glande linia cause and had bestowed the most greatest praise upon general Myletze was soon led by Manleys statement to make a bitter assault upon the Glandelinian general. It could have been said that in reading the compact one was at a loss to know at this time of the war which of the two, turmer, or Myletze agreed to surrender. These infamious terms of Myletze in not only liberating a army of abbieannian Christian dogs, and not only to secure full amnesty to every cu class of Christian Dogs who are fighting to overthrow Child slave y slavery which they hold is a sin against God, but to open the way in league with the Christian Dogs in freeing thou a thousands of child slaves.

This ignoble instrument might have become a menance to our cause. Therefore the act of general Myletze was one of dangerous insurburdination, and that the government and King of Glandelinia should side with Myletze, when he himself is fully responsible for the war itself and not the Christian dogs, is the biggest of fools on earth."

General Myletzes hotly contended that the agreement by its very term and by every p inicpal of law could not be wrong, pr providing he retained all the materials of the camp, and every christian officer who surrendered including the main general himself, and that as long as it was approved by the King Himself he was not going to allow any one not superior to him to tell him what to do. And further more he explained that he had taken all precautions necessary to lay the matter before the Glandelinian king in all its fulln ss, sending several staff officers to Vanity Fair City, and enjoining pon him to avoid spies and in informers, and to say not a ord word to any body whatever untill the King glandlin Procile himself could make known his Determination. and he said further more;

I have the written doc documents right in my own hand signed by the King himself approving my terms to its fullness, that my terms were no folly whatever, and also it does seem strange to e me that of all Glandelinian generals who have armies many times bigger than mine over there in the west like the Manleys, should allow themselves to be paddled spanked by smaller armies lthan their own, like their disasterous defeats at Codernine, Evangeline St Claire, Mic-whirther, Badge Evans and all other places shows which is a disgrace to the cause and our southern glandelinia States. Therefore Manley is just jealious that I have covered a territory of over fifteen hundred miles in a little over a year, while he has during a longer period of time never gained an ince of ground, and neither retain a foog of ground during the campaigns the so called " christian dogs" made against him. He if would act more like a so called " christian dog" himself and not like a " pussy cat" he would win more victories, and not one man, defeats."

Meanwhile general manley was further complicating matters by ordering troops of other armies under his command but stationed inactive elsewhere to invade general Myletzes territory and ree all offensive operations, sin disregarding the strange truce existing bet e between general Myletze and Turmer prending the discussi n of the strange terms of surrender. Fortunately Manleys order was sternly revoked by general Leonia Heldonia Bicknell the main chief commander of all Glandelinia, and none too soon either, for it seemed evident that Manley and Myletze were absolutely absolutely on the eve of a bloody collision.

Myletze declared-

For me to fight a dirty dog like Manley and his army is no disgrace of or to Glandelinia. If glandelinia was freed of such a butcher the nation would not be under the disgrace so much as she is now."It was one of the most painful recollections to any of the glandelinian soldiers under either Manley or Myletze that two great offic ials so high in the esteem of the Glandelinian nation, each so necessary to the triumphant vin dication of its unholy aurthority as Manley and Mylet , Mylet ze Myletze should have been so completely estranged by these unfortunate events, that even in this hour of triumph when Myletze and his army won the first most gli glorious glandelinian victory of the war, that both should become forever bitter enemies, and whenever they would fight side by sight againstthe christians yet never would Manley or Myletze recognize each other, and that during the later part of this bloody war one of these two went to his death, unforgiven, and unforgiving so far as the Nations can ever know. During the short stay of the army at Mombi the foundation was laid for the reorganization of the army mysteriously called the " society of the In Glandelinian army" the earliest as well as the most conspicious and successful of any Glandelinian army ever existing yet. Its memberships represented an army which had now for its generals, Beppo Evans, Cannonia, Mic-pollester and Myletze. The achievemen achievements of that command were as brillaint and remarkable as the lives of its chiefs though mostly in his long march, Beppo evans so far never encountered but one enemy in his pathit's nucleus was half a dozen brigades whihc which occupied Dalghis junction when the first guns were fired in that dreadful battle. The army then grew to be seventy million men, when it commenced its first investment, and afterwards stormed and carried other places just previously mentioned. Further on its numbers were swelled to nearly a hndred million who fought at Heidi investing and capturing the place comprising the fourteenth corps, and all other big divisions and finally capturing Mombi and forcing the surrender of general Jurmer. Few of its many hundreds of brigades traveled less then six thousand miles during that long campaign, many of them all but doubled the distance. It's roll of dead was appaling beyond comparison but not so heavy as that of the Glandelinian armies of the west. If this fiction history of the Glandelinian army was phenomenal the reorganization of it was dramatic. It was literaly born amid the clash of arms a little before the progress of the war after the Crowley war cloud and the sound of the abbiennian guns was the accompaniment o to the songs of the camp at its first meeting.

June the 18th 1914 Myletzes and Beppo evans forces were grouped about Mombi under orders to move against Another Glandelinian army as soon possible but later in the day general Myletze recieved from the Glandelinian government a note stating that Manley would nterfere no more with a view to avert hostilities between the two Glandelinian forces so badly threatening, but this was not known till later.

That evening a large number of Glandelinian officer of the army met in the city hall at Mombi. All were in the highest spirits, for general Myletzes order had been just issued in which he announced the surrender of general Jurmer ending;

" Glory to our Glandelinia; to our Country, and all honor to ar co our comrades in arms, and hope for a glorious victory at Angelinia Agathia toward whom we are marching. A little more labor, a little more toil on our part, and the great war is won, and our government will stand free from Abbiennia Aurthority after to two long years of war."

Among the company was general Black Charleston Brooks. He was in his happiest mood, despite the remberance of his stinging defeat so early in the war at Ester Stirring, and made a brilliant impromptu speech, congratulating his comrades upon the speedy conclusio conclusion of general Jurmers surrender, and suggesting the hasty reorganization of the army to preserve the army, and renew the campaign as soon as possible. A committee of Air Tribunal with general Brooks the head was appointed to draft a plan for speedy reorganization and the meeting adjourned subject to call. Another meeting was held the next day, June the 19th when general Black Brooks reported as follows;

" The Reorganization of this army for the continued campaign against Angelinia Agathia shall be known as the " Mysterious society of the army of Glandelinia, and shall include every officer who has served with honor in said army.

The object of this Society shall be to keep the army as strong as possible, to be enabled to continue in no small degree its glorious achievements in our countrys cause, and that as soon as we can arive there, Angelinia Agathia will be our's. And the fame and glory of all the army officers who have fallen in the battles either on the field, of conflict or in the line of their duty, shall be a sacred trust to this Reorganization Soe Society which shall cause the army to strive harder in their memory. At the time of this meeting the army was under orders to move forward on the following day. In the afternoon of the same day a large number of officers met elsewhere in Mombi to hold a council. Their membership was composed of officers of the Fifth and Sixteenth Divisions. The two united in an effort to be the first to enter Angelinia Agathia when the place was reached.

At the evening all the officers united at a banquet in honor of the victory, and addresses were made by generals Cannonia, Black Brooks, Myletze and Beppo evans. and others. The council was successful in every way and every officer agreed to all plans. At this meeting also an effort was made to admit to membership many lieutenants as colonels and generals as more commissioned generals and high officers were badly needed but many declinned the honor. It was objected that they were not well enough educated in military works to become officials of such high rank so far even though they had fought s desperately, with their commands in the face and under the sound of hostile guns.

It was probably one of the grandest of all councils ever held anywhere and was one of national interest to Glandelinia. Even this council was the most notable of all events ever known and attracted the presence of the most distinguished glandelinian citizens of Mombi city as wel as other military men of the nation, and the orations and responses to sentiments were worthy of the most cultured audiences of any land and banquet was a very grand affair, the greatest of all for the co clebration of a great victory. Myletze delivered an annual address at this banquet and again the Song March " All Glandelinia forever" was sung w by all at the great Feast.. The most peculiar part of these scenes was that the great Monuments of Emperor Ivian and some of his Daughters in the city of Mombi was never harmed by the Glandelinians even though the celbration of the Glandelinian victory made it the occasion of one of the finest pageants that any city in the world would have ever witnessed within its streets.

The last speech of Myletze ran as follows;

" How we all looked for this grand time after our long and devious wanderings, but we have done our work well faithful soldiers, and now I your commander re-echoe every sentiment and tell you, to do your best during the remainder of our journey, and that sooner or later Angelinia Agathia too like this city will be in our possession. The day will come when she will fall, but if Manley ever attempts a like campaign we must beat him to it, for we wion to make a good victory of our cause, but not to lal lay the city of Angelinia Agathia in ruins like that butcher would. He will rub the helpless inhabatants wih while we will not, he is only after money and precious jewels while we are after only a success, so that when the war is ended every soldier in our army will be able to tell his children that he had heard the first hostile shot atvpelight's Junction and the last boom of cannon at Angelinia Agathia.

So go then therefore and have unbounded faith in our cause, i our country and its flag, and we willwin for the country of Glandelinia a fame equal to that or greater to that we won here at Mombi, and He who holds the fate of all nations in the palm of His hand will see that our labors and fighting are not in vain, and that the glorybof glory of glandelinia and her noble armies for which you battle in this war shall not be tarnished by an insedious Christian foe."

At last the big glandelinian army again turned its face northward. It took up the cry of " on to angelinia Agathia". It was indeed a very odd experience foe a few days to jog along the road after recieving the surrender of a abbiennian army and yet surprisngly again being forced to stop here and there to form a line of battle, and also to go to sleep at night and then to be disturbed by a midnight call to reinforce the long line of Glandelinia skirmishers. Now however no straggling or unecessary plundering was tolerated. Citizens of villiages and towns even who sympathised with the National cause did not flee at the approach of this gray coated glandelinian army, but women and children of the christian cause flocked to road ways and streets to see them pass through the places when captured, and even then Beppo Evans and Myletzes were yet firmer in their faith and friedship of each other than before the matter admiring the great white horse Myletze rode and the two could agree that each together could clean out any big christian army that dared to face them.

The line of march lay through many points of great interest, down a portion of the yellow Brick or Big Girl Knool Road to be later in the war rendered famious for the scene of one of the most terrible battles of all as well as one of the moer most brilliant victories for one of the nations and one of the most decisive of the war, of which side will not be mentioned here.

Passing by an old farm where Violet and her sisters, were born the army again crossed the long Aronburg's un Stream but had aquite a fight before it could enter a small town called Marcu. Two days afterwards Manter was reached on the northwest section of the same river(this river runs from Northeast to southwest) immediately opposite Trot town. Here they encountered a portion of Jimmie Vivians gallent concentinian troopers who by their hard riding and desperate fightings were so often dangerously close to Myletzes base of supplies. Their uniforms were of an exe excessive stl style and were regarded by Myletzes army withgreat contempt. not far off lay Trot town mown a big villiage, which had been ofor a long time in possession of the nationals. General Meldon picknell of the christian side was in command here and the bridge across the river here at this point had been destroyed and Myletzes engineers had to lay pontoons to cross over.

The army that held Trot town was strong but Myletze determined to go into the town at all hazards. Accordingly a large body made a charge upon the town covered by artillery, and the town was in their possession before picknells main army or the general knew anything of it. The town too was captured by sheer wait of numbers. Ther There was no great los in this engagement but many prisoners w re were taken. Bicknell learning that Myletzes whole army including Beppo Evans outnumbered him ten to one retreated, and the next day the army entered Trot town in regular order.

There were many points of interest noted here with keen curiously, especially the mansion so long occupied by Emperor Ivian before the war, and the capitol of the Nation which had been the quarter for the royal house before it was moved to Angelinia Agathia. These and other big public buildings were heavily draped in mourning because of the war by order of the National aurthorities and these were not disturbed by the Glandelinian soldiers, and the army had entered the city so suddenly and without warning that the inhabatants all women and children had no chance to flee, and were totally surprised that tye glandelinians instead of doing them harm were respot respectful and either k kindly treated them or bothered no one as they marched through. The capitol grounds were rich in statuary. Here was a magnificent statue of emperor Vivian and his brother -mperor and near it the fine gold statues of his daughters and the queen. It was the finest work of art and even this was not touched by Myletzes men, though of course most of the soldiers jeered at them and said mockery words concerning them. If Manleys army had marched through, everything in the town would have been laid in ashes, and God help the women and children.

One of the biggest prisons in the Angelinia State was viewed with a mournful interest. It was an immense building, three blocks long, and six stories high, and when the glandelinians entered had been crammed with one hundred and fifty thousand Glandelinians who were held prisoners there all being so crowded that there was absolutely no room for more. They were released and it was found by those who released them that the walls were covered with inscriptions written by the unhappy occupants all breathing an air of hopel hopeless despondency, yet full of bitter hatred for the " Christian Dogs" and lurid with the words of blasphemous anathemas against god and every living creature in existence. The prisoners sang many a blasphemious song and had done so with great vigor howling the refrain at the top of their voices, very often aggravating the Nationalguards on the outside to such a degree as to cause them to fire a few shots through the windows in the vain hope of putting a stop to the noisy disturbance.

The floors of this prison were marked off with many cherker boards, and other scenes testifying to the efforts made to kill time by the prisoners, but these species of amusement were only da available in the earliest days of the war, for later on the building was becoming too crowded to admit of anything of the kind.

After crossing the river and then leaving Trot „own the army passed by a famious old building known as Maldons Court House, and here was some sharp fighting with a body of Abbieannians which retreated however. within these walls „mperor Vivian pleads pleaded his first case in behalf of his war war stricken nation, and won a grand victory. He was borne out of these doors in great triumph upon the shoulders of the people, and was their famious emperor from that instant. From „rot „own on the Glandelinians had some unusual amount of fighting, struggling in a succession of strange battles for a week every day and night; and had to charge and fight through a country bristling with field works defended by fierce Abbieannians at every place but their advance was not stopped and the Abbieannians had to retreat and abandon the debris of their vast camps.

The army then on July the First passed close to the city of Ozma and seeing a strong array of Abbieannians the like of which was unusual the „landelinian army halted and prepared for another action. It was discovered that the range in front of Ozma city was occupied by General Germania and Jimmie Vivian together with an immense army of winkies. The country here was quite high well nigh devoid of timber and commanded a fine view for many miles to right and left. Across a little stream lat the city scatteringly spread over ground even sloping over to the very waters edge a but only occupied by Abbieannian soldiers, and just beyond the town was visible a long heavily wooded ridge, crowned with great breastworks and teeming with long lines of long range artillery, and while which Myletze knew served the Abbieannian army to good purpose. To him it required but little imagination to fill out so suggest ive a landscape with hundreds of batteries and troops, and who could ever think of the dreadful battle scene to come. Myletze during the first and second and third of July formed his positions and troops, and then on the fourth of July 1914 twenty two thousand two hundred and fifty pieces of artillery of the glandelinian army discharged their terrible volleys across the stream in mile long broadsides into and tyrough through the streets of Ozma city, and broadside for broadside was hurled back by only fourty miles was in action. It was a dreadful cannonade, and even the concussion Jimmie „ivian and his brother until about fourty thousand cannon over an extent of shook Angelinia Agathia. Even under this fire big pontoonswere laid by the glandelinian engineer troops, and on the afternoon of the Fourth Beppo Evans and Cannonia supported by „lack Brooks and Dargin passed over. They assaulted Jimmie „ivians position immediately opposite this very ground. The Abbieannian columns were silent until the gallent ten miles of „landelinian soldiery with a million men in each rank were within short range. Then the whole Abbieannian line opened fire and gaps were torn in Beppo „vans lines, seen by both sides more than three miles off. But the men in gray manfully struggled on ward those flaming heights, and from behind every works, and fr fromwoods, and mountain meadow leaped a very forest fire of flame and musketry and batt eries right and left poured in an infilading fire of grape and canister that any army could not withinstand. The assault was repulsed, but ten times it was repeated, and during the tent assault, Myletze managed to work an army of troops around to the rear and finally ousted the Abbieannians from the works.

During the night the glandelinian army posted itself between the town and the stream a Beppo Evans being a little seperate from Myletze. The right front was commanded by General Dargin withnseveral Secondlar divisions reinforcing his Mangaboos.. In his rear was general Cannchal with his divisions. The left front was held by Myletze himself with general „lack Brooks in his rear. General Beppo „vans as in the center. On the morning of July the fifth the Abbieannians renewed the battle by attacking purging Glandelinians suddenly and without warning and driving them and other divisions to the woods where an infero inferno of a ba l battle raged, and taking two hundred thousand prisoners. A large force of the Abbieannians got to the rear of Cannonias division completely cutting it off from the main army but Cannonia at the head of his troops fought most fiercely and cut his way through the Abbieannian hosts destroying many. The fighting had now c become her very despera te and bloody and Beppo Evans was also engaged, and Myletze assumed full command. Finally the Glandelinians began to gain ground pressing the Nationals back steadily Still the Glandelinians occupied the same positions they had captured. Then in the afternoon the battle was renewed with the greatest furt fury. Then general Dargin crossed the stream and attacked the Abbieannians in the flank destroying whole lines and the route of the Abbieannians soon became general. The „landelinian victory was now complete. The fighting was as terrific as some of the big battles fought in the west,the first fiercest fight since Myletzes battle at Delight's „un t junction but the loss of life and in wounded somewhat greater. The Glandelinian loss was reported at fifteen million to eighteen million killesand wounded killed and wounded.

The Abbieannian loss was to be estimated at twenty a five million to thirty million. The Nationals during the retreat werepersued by the Glandelinian cavarly who captured large mmbers of prisoners freed their own comrades, took many child slaves found in the vanq s vanquished camps and slaughtered the fugitives by scores of thousands, and a hundred thousand tents went up in flames. General Jimmie „ivian who mainly commanded the Abbieannians was reported severely wounded. Twenty Abbieannian generals were killed. General Bell of the Glandelinian side as was killed, and general „olt was taken with fifty thousand men and two hundred guns. General Bainberry of Vanity Fair city was wounded. The loss of officials was fearful it being atside of Delight's junction one of the greatest battles ever fought and the bloodiest on Angelinia soil so far, there being over one hundred and twenty million engaged on both sides.

One of the officials who arived from Ozma „own declared that t at the first outbreak of the battle early of the morning of the fifth the Abbieannians had attacked in apparent overwhelming numbers and that Jimmie Vivian is certainly wounded. The estimate of the military commandsers on the Glandelinia loss in the battle is about seven million dead, of whom two million were mortally wounded. The general Howert was reported among the dead, and Ben „ogan as a prisoner. The fiercest of the conflict had raged around the Albertinia and Trot courthouses and these buildings were burned.

During this battle of Ozma „own the death of the Glandelinia general „lexandria Francis caused a profound sensation throughout the Glandelinian army. During the battle he moved to the counter attack in the evening upon a strong line of A Abbie annians posted o in a wood. His division had been noted for its admirable skill in charging and resisting charges, particularly in the manual of taking works. The attack of this division was as splendid as any e exhibition drill, and even created a furore of excitement among the very Abbieannians who resisted the charge. During the final issue of the charge when the works were being carried the Glandelinian general and a score of his men saw a Abbieannia flag flying over a portion of the works and determined to take it charged in person for the place but at the foot of the works the Glandelinian general encountered Germania Vivian who drove his sabre into his breast killing him instat instantly. The death of the Glandelinian general would have been avenged by a force of Glandelinians but Germania Vivian was borne from the works by a his men. General Francis that sad evening was buried in front of Albertinia Courthouse with imposing ceremonies. During the first week after this battle the whole army worked desperately to dispose of the 10,000,000 dead by burning, or every way possible but it took a little longer, while all was done for the wounded. This therefore either delayed the pursuit of the Abbieannian army, and the campaign and chafing under the insult Myletze determined if possible to capture these two Vivians as soon as possible. General Myletze as soon as the dead had been buried, went into Ozma city, and was accompanied by general Evans the Glandelinian flag now flying over the courthouse of this city, which had been captured at so great a cost of lives. From causing such a tragedy Germania Vivian was afterwards known as Abbieannia's avenger and even to the later part of the war he „et had in his possession the weapon with which he ran through the Glandelinian generals breast which he did with the purpose in his desperate effort to repulse the insane rebel assault and which was of no avail at all.

The army left Trot „own on July the 10th and after being opposed at every step for every day after covering fully three hundred more miles in which there were as many actual conflicts in which a thousand were killed, and ten thousand wounded on both sides at every time the army reached Betsy Bobbin on the 21th 21th of July on a sel sweltering hot day..... Most of the march was forced however but the majority of the army moved by rail and the portion of the army that moved by foot met such opposit ion every day that they could not make an average of five miles a day, but nevertheless it was pretty fair marching considering the fact that they were able to go ahead despite the opposition though this portion of the army did not arive until late

In August going on near September. The town of Betsy Bobbin however did not give in without a struggle and therefore for over two weeks more desperate fighting first e ensued outside the town, and then there was continuous fighting day and night in the streets, both sides fighting from street to street to house and house, and many a big house was besieged, the most desperate of all in single house fighting being at the Betsy Bobbin Court House where over six hundred Abbiennians kept more than fifteen thousand Glandelinians at bay for three days without a single loss until their ammunition was exhausted and then they retreated fighting from house roof to house roof, and finally escaping. Ben Betsy Bobbin was captured however a victory which again cost Myletze a great loss in life, the Glandelinian troops under reasonable restrictions enjoyed the freedom of this beautiful city, and explored all the big and small public buildings and other places of great interest to their hearts content, and greatly to their credit credit they took no undue advantage of their victory, which would surely have had a much different ending had it been Myletzes army instead of Myletze. On August the 20th to September the First the armies passed in final review previous to the further movement of the campaign to celebrate this victory..

Never before not even since the capture of Trot was there such a sublime pageant witnessed by mortal eye----the review of two hundred million Glandelinians, all weather beaten soldiers, flushed with victory, an army got that had Stanley's beat miles, an army of glandelinia fit to conquer not only the Abbiennians but the world, yet who on the morrow would continue the unusually long campaign for the city of Angelinia Agathia was only seventy miles off.

The best of the authorities of Angelinia Agathia dreaded the approach of Myletzes army and the soldiers of the mobolization camps of Dorothy Gale made preparations to stop Myletze if possible. The head of these mobolization camps said; " General Izner H. Myletze has easily raised great armies, his soldiers are masters of the situation and they cannot be overcome without Emperor Vivian sending an army to our assistance. We need Jack Evans and Consentinian frontiers here right away The nation is at stake."

All the ardent Abbiennian patriots at home feared that the arival of Myletzes army would cause a dreadful disaster, and that what Stanley could never accomplish, Myletze would in a short time. But Emperor Vivian at once even from a great distance tried to allay the fears of his friends; proclaiming by their own conduct that the fortifications around both Dorothy Gale city and Angelinia Agathia are even stronger than even those around Vivian Hickey, and that aid will be sent in the generals asked for as soon as they are requested for. In the meantime all purposes will be made to delay the advance of Myletze by sending many armies not active elsewhere in the field of battle to move against him from all points.

On the First of August or September, main general Burgins great army of fierce Nansabora Abb debouched upon Glenly Avenue and poured down the broad street in admirable order, and in immensely long columns, as wide as the street. Heroes all despite the wickedness of their cause.

No army save that gallent host ever stood up so nobly before punishment or gave back punishment for what it received. At times victims of inconsistency and jealously in high places, sacrificed on many a bloody alter, their courage never failed, their hopes never died out, their full faith in the hope of the final result never wavering nor faltering. Here were the Glandelinian soldiers who learned the noblest of war at the great encampment at Dilligat's junction, crushing the christians there, and risking the superior vigor and courage, the battalions which stood under the severe ordeal of bloody action at Heidi city, the brigades and whole armies which snatched victory from defeat at the battle of Ozma, the survivors of the murdered legions of all other battles of the campaign. Their colors were riddled by shot and shell should every rent stood for a bloody battle, and scores of thousands of human lives.

Erect and proud they strode down the broad avenue, every foot in time every musket perfectly poised, while many liberated prisoners shouted themselves hoarse in their praise.

That night general Black Brooks army of Aranthians crossed the big bridge from Trot town to Ben Betsy Bobbin and encamped in the outskirts of the city and then at ten oclock in the morning it began its own march in review while all people of the city who were in sympath, with the cause strewed flowers and garlands before them.

The avenue was literally packed with people on either side, every window was occupied and the very house tops were black with humanity. General Myletze and his own staff led the way. It was amazing to the troops to note the complete dressed portion of himself whom they had seen almost drilling from the beginning of the campaign until now in a dingy ash gray uniform, carelessly worn, which many a brigadier brigadier would have thought very disgraceful.

His His horses neck was covered with wreathes of flowers by admiring spectators. Then came general Black Brooks commanding the army of Tarmerantians and Micollestinians. Then rode Ablenby at the head of his own gallent army. None asked his name. None asked his name. He was known known by all, bright of complexion, with heavy black beard and eagle eye, he was the image of a born soldier indeed. Then followed all his division commanders, and all others, each column being as wide as the street and taking a long time to pass. After him were the divisions commanded by general Beppo Evans and all other generals. But who could picture the hosts that followed. Here were the men who taught new lessons to the western masters of war. Such terms as " Lines of retreat" and " base of supplies" were not in their vocabulary. Their strong back made almost absolutely unnecessary commissionary and ammunition trains and their swift limbs out ran and out lasted horses. From vivian Hickey to Betsy Bobbin they had covered ten thousand miles, every post could mark the roads they traveled, the places they fought at every day through every Provinces of Angelinia except those of the south. They were the men who fought at Cain's Fair, and assaulted Delight's junction. They had been crushed at Sunbeam Creek at Evangelinia Grania Heights, and while the Abbiennian hosts were repairing the reaping the fruits of ve victory snatched it from them. They had fought over every foot of ground within one mile of Heidi town losing 10,000 men a day. They had lain in the trenches at Heidi town for three bloody days, and when they arose from that mighty Abbiennian stronghold the mighty town was their's.. They had shattered Vivianania at different battles, and rescued a besieged gafrison near Turner town and foot by foot they had pressed their enemy back from Heidi town and after a well fought struggle of nearly a year wrested many a stronghold from the Nationals. They had dissected the very bowels of the Angelinia State by their long bloody march toward Angelinia Agathia, and bestowed upon the Glandelinia nation a new honored name. Three hundred miles further to Trot town they pressed the enemy and received his first surrender as they were stripping themselves to give the full coup de grace.

With heads erect and an air of indescribable sang froid these men of Glandelinia stretched down the streets with an easy swinging gait, peculiar to themselves, acustomed to long and rapid marches. And they were no holiday garb but their own uniform, the ragged and faded uniforms in which they had slept and marched, through the swamps of the Northern Angelinia State still clung to their bodies, and they strode along as if proud to display them as badges of the most faithful service. They were so regarded by the many thousands of spectators and therefore cheers upon cheers followed them from beginning to end. There were some very comical features even in the midst of all this grandeur. In the rear of many regiments were the pack mules loaded down with the provisions belonging to the child slaves, who trudged alongside making an unusual scene. From every building people viewed the troops and high up on one of the buildings was displayed the words;

" ALL GLANDELINIA FOREVER"

The grand reviewing stand was erected in front of the postoffice, and here stood the main Glandelinian chiefs, Mylette, and Beppo Evans. The troops proudly recognized their presence but there was not a heart in all that unusually vast concourse of soldiers which did not ache with sorrow that general Brade the loved and true hearted chief aid of Beppo Evans had not lived to see this, the consumation of his highest effort and most ardent hopes. Here too were generals Jack Brooks and Burgin, and about them offering heartfelt congratulations and bestowing unusual praise were the non-combatants who were loyal to glandelinia's cause, though it can be said the people who even sympathized with Abbiennia viewed the scene aloof but not so cheerfully though it was interesting enough.

The army ended wh with a portion afterwards nam cicknamed the " Phantom army" It appeared like a phantom army marching without the sounding of a fife or drum, thirty sere all uniformed in white, with hoods, with eye holes, and kept time to a throbbing hum of pretended wailing and ghostly lamentations, and who carried white banners with flags also of blue green, yellow, and vermillion. Among these were the martyred heroes of Delight's junction, Heidi, and Trot town, all who left their lifeless dead far behind, many who had perished in swamp holes, and fen, so strongly unlike their uniforms formed that they appeared with limbs enfranchised and bearing bright as their uniforms formed that they appeared with limbs enfranchised and bearing bright which would have made a terrible night amid a pale moonlight of a dark night.

And so all day long and for three days the armies continued to pass through, with their banners spread above them, and at night of August the third swept past the last of the strange army, and all night long till the coming of the morning, when the review ended.

On September the fourth Mylette issued his order " forward To Angelinia Agathia" in which he ele, eloquently rehearshed the achievement of his army and to which he added some excellent words of admonition. As a matter of fact, a large force of the troops remained at the city to guard it while the main army pushed on. puhs pushed on.

Every commander announced to their division that the time had come for their final effort. They told their officers that it was apparent that the work was almost done, even though armed christian enemies still defied them.

Three great Glandelinian armies had come together from distant fields to join with Mylette, with somewhat seperate histories, yet bounded by one common cause the overthrow of the Abbiennian nation. It was evident that Mylettes army was fully in earnest, for it paused not for danger and difficulty, and at the first portion dashed through Aronburge gap and fell on Scraps-Jess, and then stared three other towns, losing 10,000 men for every place and the heat of the early September month found them on the banks of the Aronburge on proper further yet from home, and still dependent on a single road for supplies. But again they were to be held back by any obstacle whatever, they continued on and fought four hard battles for the possession of a section of the Mic-ollester Woods. But the resistance of the Nationals was dreadful for every step, and sometimes so fierce was the every day attacks that a slight doubt would cloud the future of Myletzes army but it solved the problem, destroyed the attacker,s fighting battles as severe as eight waterloos in one day for a week without a pause, destroyed a portion of the Abbleannian army, struck boldly across the Provinces of "urner again severed all the main arteries of life to that province, and then halted at Maldon.Halting there only long enough to fill the wagons, the army again continued the march, which for peril labor and results never could compare with any yet made by any other army. Roads were let bose by the Nationals, and bridges across flat bottom dangerous quagmires were broken down by the ever accumulating enemy but Myletzes army was not checked and within another day a courier gave the statement they were within ten miles of porothy Gale city but that a force of over two hundred million Abbleannians was moving forward to met Myletze and Beppo Evans.

It was evident that the Abbleannian army was defiant, but Myletzewas determined that nothing could check him and therefore pressed on, his army going in fourteen different big columns. Yet how far the operations of this great Glandelinian army may be expected to contribute to the overthrow of Angelinia Agathia cannot now be judged by the readers, but that it is evident that Myletzes army was doing it all could possibly do, and I think whether the cause is right or wrong so brave has been Myletzes army so clean has it kept its record, concerning the brutal character of other, that even the reader could he if he so desired join in the cheers for Myletze especially as long as his army stands vindicated before the world by the joint action of his generals and volunteer soldiers. All their success in the past was due to hard ee work and discipline, and that the same work and discipline was e as equally import ant to the future. But whether Angelinia Agathia fall or not will be known by and by.

But Myletzes army by its patriotic devotion to its country in the hour of its own danger and alarm, its magnificent every day fighting, bravery and endurance had maintained the supremacy of its own side, overthrown all armed christian opposition, and opened a way apparently easy for the abrupt march on Angelinia Agathia, and its fortresses.

The only obstacle so far mainly is porothy Gale city, and all fortified towns around it. The marches of Myletzes army, its seiges and bloody battles, in distance duration, resolution, and brilliancy of results dim the li lustre of all the past achiefements of the Glandelinian and christian armies of the west combined. In obedience to the call of their country these Glandelinians have left homes and families, and volunteered in its defense for of course a wrong and wicked cause, but victory so far has crowned its valor, and secured the purpose of its patriotic heart, and with the grati ude of its own country men and the highest honors a glandelinian nation can afford it was hoped Myletzes army would soon, be raising its banners on the public buildings of both porothy Gale and Angelinia Agathia, to achieve these glorious trum triumphs however Myletze knew from what many spies and couriers told him would cost many bloody battles, and that to bring on the succes one of the"Manleys" must help him with his armies.

General Dargin troops a few days after the Grand review moved forward along the banks of the Aronburge run. "ortunately the weather was unusually good, and for the army there was ample time to enjoy the magnificent scenery on that famious route. The supply of wagon trains was the same as usual. A certain number of the troops had embarked upon about fourty big steam boats to make the trip more easier. But a serious incident with collaterial comical doings befell the whole army on the fleet itself.The boats were steaming full speed down the river nearing a town known as Topsy when suddenly from the opposite shore there was a noise as if the whole earth was blown in the air, the river was fairly covered with explosions, and all of the big ships were shattered to pieces. Quick as were the boats to sink sink the solid lers managed to cut louse the horses and the mules, while the men who had not been mkilled and who could not swim straddled gang plank, wagon beds, and anything that would float, while Mylstze ordered Leo ostellites batteries into position which covered the river with a most terrific gun fire untill all the soldiers not killeeor wounded on the ships had reached land saftly.

At the time one of the boats struck, a merry party was seated ate card a game in the cabine cabin above, immediately in front of the bar. hen the shock came, all jumped to their fe feet and rushed to the guards. while they were making up their minds eaether to leap overboard or not, a sudden jar and a terrific eruption like noise indicated that the ship was being shattered by shell fire, and they for with went into the water like fishes. It took about four hours, and under a terrific return fire of two hundred cannon to rescue the remainder of the ship wrecked passengers, which after repeated work and desperate efforts succeeded in picking up every soldier who had abandoned their sinking crafts. On account of this disaster over twenty thousand lives were lost, and an immense ammount of army provisions stored in these ships was never seen afterwards.

Soon after this Dargin ordered his troops to build Pontoon bridges which they did under an increase of the same fire, but being covured by Leo costellioes artillery the work went on successfully, and then a large body of men moved over to flank the Nationals at this point. The movements was successful but the Abbleannians as they retreated took the artillery with them repelling the glandelinians at every step with a deadly artillery fire. But the Glandelinian army launched into a region swarming with these Abbleannian enemies, fighting their way step to step, breasting the enemy's destructive artillery fire and finally cornered them untill the Abbleannians fled under cover of the darkness of night. The army then continued on toward Angelinia Agathia up the Aronburge Run their cold steel next flashing among the north branch of the Mic-Hollester woods and pursuing the enemy onward marking the path by the g graves of hundreds of thousands of fallen commades, they again worsted the forsted the Abbleannians, fighting their way from hill to hill, from glen to glen ever pressing on for miles ; sometimes facing a murderous fire of artillery that frowned from the summits of a hillwith a tenacity and constancy that finds no odds, and then long lines of deadly musketry fire, fighting and suffering through the broiling heat of a blazing forest fire, heroically maintaining every advance up the Aronburge run under discouraging losses every day and night, fighting incessantly and attacking incessantly on unceasing battle,. They grappled with the enemy at every position all the time hurling him back dismayed and torn their matchless couraging courage turning victory after victory. The during of this desperate foe under germaine Vivian in thrusting his legions upon Myletze but Myletze surmounted every onstucle beating down every fierce opposite during the remainder of the month of September and it finally ended at the main clearing of the woods, where the Abbleannians for one day offered main resistance and then retreated. It was a big battle of the Wilderness of nearly a months duration, a Battle a score of times greater than the actions of the Wilderness in the civil war in one days time, the Glandelinian columns plunging in the face of a fearfil fire into the swamps of the woods, endureing dreadful losses, and carrin carrying position after position deemed impossible to capture and which could have formed a creditable episode neverfound in any history of a war yet.

The Glandelinian generals, francis Pocatalige, Hendro Hatchie, Jno Adlstoi, Jack Adlsto,, Henry Brunenville,, James Orangeburg, and many others including Dargin and others led in the last resistless sweep of the columns through the wooded territory meeting with hundreds of thousands of Abbleannians at eve y every point who gave resis tance which fierceness broke all records but swept them before them.

The woods was cleared of the Abbleannians on the lan last day and again Germaine Vivians army was on the full retreat having lost more than fifty four million killed and wounded, to that of the Glandelinians who lost only twenty million. after this tremendous action which raged day and night without hardly any pause, General Myletze said in an address to his generals.

" I am grateful for the gallentry shown by every one in this awful long conflict in the Mic-Hollester woods brought on by the artillery trained upon the ships.None fought better than they did this time sweeping the enemy from every work every time and therefore they most graciously won my best regard by their bravery and dutiful obedience in time of such bloody fighting. It will ever give me ple pleasure to know that of all Glandelinia operating in this tremendous war , and most tremendous of all big wars, I command the best, and bravest of all armies."

HIGHLY : Shortly after the capture of Betsy Bobbin and other places just previousl previously mentioned Myletzes army continued on up the Aronburge Run River continually keeping Germanies army on the retreat. Instead of expecting a quiet easy advance after the months bloody battle of the Mic-Hollester Woods the Glandelinian soldiers had expected they were dismayed to find that as they continued their advance the formost part of the army, or any unexpected part of day or night would be suddenly attacked in an unexpected quarter and another severe engagement would be the consequence every few miles in an open country, and garrisoned by ten million troops and defended by a thousand big cannon, and nearly twice as many field pieces.

The army therefore received orders to deploy itself into long lines of battle, and to prepare for any emergency for it was evidently that Myletze for the first time in the campaign recieved what he expected a serious check in his advance. He could have acted around port Concentinia, but then general Germaine Vivian anticipated every one of Myletzes plan, and co-operating with his brother Jimule vivian, and two other wales extended the line of battle a great distance beyond the fort on both sides and his works was teeming with an enormous double line of artillery, while his cavarly fairly deployed into a number of squadrons and remained on each flank.

This was an unforseen event, what it all meant no one knew though they did know the strength of the National army which was equal to that of Myletze and Beppo Evans combined.But all of these Abbleannians were better marksmen with both artillery and rifles, and to make matters worse the cavarly squadrons of the Two Vivian Princes were dangerous and very powerful and consisted of nothing else but Winkies and Concentinian Myasinkillians.....

The troops however conjectured one of two causes. These Abbleannian armies op opposed to them were the oldest in the serive since the war started, but had not been hardly in any known severe battles of the war and therefore were not much depleted, except in the battle in the woods while Myletzes army through casualties of the recent conflict had become so greatly depleted that the late assignments of drafted men and recruits recieved from many points, and the addition of Glandelinians rescued when prisoners, made them almost new armies, the old soldier & old soldiers being outnumbered by the " conscripts six to one. Mylette had sent in a note often to the King of Glandelinia that he was in bad need of new armies and that some of the armies should be sent to him from the west but the Glandelinian King and even the Manleys had the excuse that the armies were needed more in the west than elsewhere, that the war in the east or in the vinicity of Angelinia was only a skirmish compared to that in the other regions and therefore no men so far could be spared and that Mylette would have to ordered a general conscription or forced angelinian prisoners into the services.

This caused Manley and even the King to be cursed with a full heartiness and euphonic originality which was never surpassed anywhere else during the whole campaign. The officers were fully as disgusted as the men and the entire command grew to hate Manley and his Confederates and many for a time because of this were on the very verge of mutn mutiny against the cause itself. The veterans argued that they were under no obligations to fight the war around Angelinia Agathia alone around Angelinia Agathia alone and without aid and under no moral obligation either to obey any orders from the Manleys or any one else and that Mylette or Beppo Evans alone had anything to do with the army.

They had enlisted early at the start of the rebellion for a year unless discharged andwhen they found that the nationals were not to be disposed of in that time they had re-enlisted untill the war was over. Now they had won many battles, made one of the grandest and biggest campaigns of the war, and believed that when one third of the Nationals were soon to confront them they deserved rein forcements. Nothing was said in their oath of enlistment about serving without aid from other armies, or about fighting overwhelming numbers in a bad ground or under very difficult conditions, which would would be fatal to the armies. They might be ordered to fight the whole abbieannian nation alone with as much justice. and to make it worse, not only they were confronted by the Nationals at port Concentinia but by the armies and under the two Vivians, shilliam Schloeder, General Bargar, and Caldwell including another Vivian and general Vivian himself was coming, the camps at porothy Gale were sending out armies to overlap them and therefore they needed help and demanded help or the campaign would be entire entirely abandoned and Manley and his generals and the Glandelinia government can go to--- indeed these were the sentiments expressed by all the soldiers, andthe conscripts complained as bitterly as the others.

The officers however and many of the veterans resented the idea of rebellion and discountenanced the desertion of the campaign believing the injustice was so evident that upon proper representing or proper representations to the War Departmentthe the request for extra troops would be granted.

Furthermore they were determined that t no act of theirs no matter what the provocationshould blind their long and honerable r e record. Accordingly a statement of the case and a remonstrance was prepared and telegraphed to Vanity Fair City over the signatures of all the generals including Mylette and Evans themselves.

September the 24th arived two days later and no reply having been recieved from Vanity Fair City the command broke eck command and Beppo Evans moved westward while Mylette moved eastward, with the purpose of getting around the rear of the armies and try to draw them out of their positions. Mylette and Beppo Evans army numbered only a little over a hundred million men, while the Nationals was double that number and was commanded mainly by Jimmie Vivian.

Thiswas to be a very desperate movement a long detour to be made by both armies and would would be made on the style General Jackson did in his advance around Hooker at Chancellersville but on a hundred times greater scale. The line of march for Mylette lay along the old National government trail north west of Fortress Concentinia and was being quietly made at night. There was not a foot of railroad track west of the Aronburgs Run River because of the frequent wrecking and destroying of so many roads and each day general Leo Costellicos cavarly squadrons thundered by coming and going on scouting tours escorted by a guard of artillery and the fleet footed Gargoylian Wheeler Cavarly which sped past as if on lightning wings. The movement was successful as it goes however compelling the National armies to retreat anew but it was wearisome enough to move forward day after day over those plains, teeming with long lines of lines of suddenly attacking Abbieannian cavarly, wit which ascended and descended with the roll of the ground, meeting resistance at every spur, at every place, fighting a desperate battle of the Gettysburg ferocity and losses from one hill & hilltool Hillock to another, losing thirty six thousand every time, meeting a fire of dreadful intensity from every little town, villiage, farm field, woods or summit of another hill outlined against the sky still further on.

Here and there the glandelinian cavarly always in advance would come upon a apparently abandoned angelinian plantation, country home and grounds, or some abandoned orphan asylum or other place, and thinking them uninnabited would suddenly be fired upon with deadly effect, and which would be taking six or seven dreadful charges to oust the enemy. The mono to monotonous scenery and so much fighting and bead bloodshed during this march begot in the breasts of the Glandelinian soldierys great repugnance to to the untamed angelinian armies and many gave expression to the conviction that the Good Lord never intended that region for aught else than a place for continous and bloody fighting eve y day. The action was so abundant along the route and onseveral occasions the army was forced to halt, while a portion of it at far different places fought ten or twelve battles as severe as Gettysburg in one day. They had all the fighting they wanted on this occasion and great strategy was necessary to ensure a successful fight against a body of national cavarly, which at times advanced against the Glandelinians in more bigger droves of men on horses than you ever seen of a stampeding herd of buffoloes on the plains.

At one time the wheelers went into a grand skirmish line, against a portion of the sinkle concentinian cavarly and by keeping on the hills managed to surround a large drove of yinkies in the valley between. a fierce fire was opened all along the line and a great number of purple coats killed or wounded, but with the speed and fury of a stampeding herd the cavarly charged up the slight slopes and attacked so fiercely that though the assault was finally repulsed the experiment was nevertheless very disagreeable to the Glandelinians for many of them the cavarly lines had rode over the rp prots prostrate men but killed a dreadful number.

On September the 27th the monsterous Glandelinian army reached the Little Grainie River in Eastern Angeline yine state and here was a large town fortified by a portion of the National army which had retreated that way. This was the scene of another Getts gettysburg like battle the Glandelinians making a concerted charge ten times pon the place and gave no quarter to the defenders, driving the survivors out in total route to tward evening. The destruction of the town was fearful and the sad evidence ofthe sufferers of the owners was visible in the ruins of their burned homes.

Each night that the army went into camp the roll call showed the losses more greater. Each morning the columns was somewhat shorter than on the day previous. The total number of killed and wounded during the marchwas over five million five hundred thousand. A terrible losses for the many every day conflicts since the battle of the Mic-pollester woods. Many throats upon the life of general Mylette himself was made by the National agents and one night through a mysterious cause a terrific bomb explosion occured at the entrance to one of the headquarters tents wrecking it, and driving the occupants outdoors and amid an eruption of fire and smoke and debris. The adjutant had made every effort to place reliable guards over their generals quarters during the entire day but but even they were often mysteriously slain. In one instance he went to his former company and detailed an officer of the headquarters guard, a trim soldiery sergeant who had been his comrade from the very day of enlistment and with whom he would have risked his life. Upon this trusted soldier he placed a special obligation and perhaps his life. Even this watchful sergeant least expected of all others was found mystero mysteriously dead the second night he went on duty, and somewhat later his body was found in a creek with six bullet holes init. The general probably looking upon the personal risk as unusually hazardous made it a rule therefore that the army was not to allow any one even those wearing Glandelinian uniforms witnin the camp d night and this was carried on with such strictness that these attempts at his destruction ceased.. on the 29th, of September the army arived witnin sight of Misery. The garrison being Glandelinians also was very friendly and several days was spent in reorganizing and preparing to continue the march. From this place further explanations and remonstrances were telegraphed to Vanity Fair City and a few days later orders were recieved in response directing the army to remain at that place untill the expected reinforcements arived. On the 4th of October the reinforcements began to arive. as the commands neared neared the destination many of the citizens who aided with the cause hastened to join. Man, more appeared and the army was now swelling to a record breaking size. It was just then that general Mylette in conversation with one of the officers of the newcarmies learned that the armies in the west were really sorely needed because it was the ill luck for the cause to be that the whole of Abbieannia was mustering its strength in Calverinia, and many veteran troops were being even sent from Glandelinia to aid Manley because he was in sore need.

Now comes a strange poo picture.

On October the 5th the army whose wanderings we have followed so long drew up in lines many miles in length and in immense squares and columns for the purpose to recieve the coming of the new armies with due respect. But it did not look like a army of soldiers at all but like tramps. The uniforms once bright gray and unusually trim with beautiful class, decoration are rugged and travel worn. The many flags whose folds shone with resplendent beauty were rent by bullet and shell, and stained with dust and smoke of march, camp and battle, untill their once dazzling bright hues were hardly distinguishable. The order " Present arms " are obeyed and the colors are unfurled

The men are formed in brilliant ranks as straight as walls ---once more they are as if on drill. There is seen a fervent salute and a stand of attention as the new army comes up up. Most of these soldiers were Glandelinian schoolboys and the like when the, enlisted. But they have left their books absolutely unfinished, left their occupations whatever they may be. The, come to take up the struggle against Fate and war and those who having res refused to do their duty for country have thus far been thrown out on the back ground as deserters. Myletzes army thus reinforced are determined to push on to new distinction. Here stood Myletzes army a hundred dillion strong, surviving the battle of the past, even when shot and shell tore its ranks,. But it is peopled with faces only too few of those once familiar, whose bones are now the milestones marking the bloody road from Dolight's junction to Albery. The whole arm, stands erect of form their eyes gleam of undaunted courage. Not no man is missing.

" Present arms" again comes the order.

A hundred million muskets over a score of iles of fields and reams flash in the sunlight. How smartly, these victorious Glandelinian soldiers handle their pieces. They are better to have been in the army for a more worthy cause.one can hear the sharp snap as the guns respond to the command. The sergeants many of them too many to be counted, there are brigades of them marche march to the front and report- all , " All Present. " Then the, return to their posts. The thousands of company officers meet on the center, close upon the adjutants marched forward and salute their commander. Even while he returns the greeting the flag rises on high, the reinforcement comes up and forms in line line and the army is reinforced to resume the campaign as soon as ordered. Will Angelinia Agathia fall. Well-we,ll see later on.

CHAPTER SIXTY SIX....

THE STRANGE STORY THE BOY TELLS, AND WHO THE BOY REALLY IS.

DELDON IS AFRAID OF THE STRANGE BOY, AND WHY? THE BOY AND JANNIE.
ANOTHER HOPE FOR LIBERTY. A SORT OF VICTORY.

AND BEHOLD THE TEARS OF SUCH AS ARE OPPRESSED, AND ON THE SIDE OF THEIR OPPRESSORS THERE WAS POWER. WHEREFORE I PRAISED THE DEAD, THAT ARE ALREADY DEAD,MORE THAN THE LIVING THAT ARE YET ALIVE. ECCL. IV:4

It was now late at night, and poor little Jane lay groaning and bleeding alone in an old forsaken room of a gin house, among many pieces of broken machinery, piles of rotten ill smeeling weeds, and other rubbish which had been dumped there by the slaves as refuse. The night was damp and close, and the thick air swarmed with myriads of mosquitoe mosquitoes, which increased to an immense mea ure the restless torture of her wounds, while a burning thirst, filled up all the hardest mea ure of her anguish.

" O God" she pleaded: Do look down---give the christian army victory. Make some come and set me free." prayed the poor girl in her agony and horror. A footstep light and cautious like that of a cat entered the room, behind her, and the light of a candle flashed into her eye.

" Who is there? Oh for God's Mercy, please give me some water".

The strange defiant boy, for it was he---set down the candle carefully, and pouring water from a bottle, raised the little girls head, and gave her a good drink. Another and another cup were drained, with feverish eagerness.

" Drink all you want you poor little girl" he said " I knew now it would be. It is not the first time I have been in slave camps like now and seen these things and been out at night, carrying water to such unfortunates as you."

" Thank you you good kind boy" said Jane when she was done drinking.

" Don't call me Little good boy" said the boy." I ave been among thousands of miserable slaves like you, but insecret I am not one." said the boy bitterly." But nog sun" said he going to the door, and dragin dragging in a han handful of straw, over which he then spread linin cloths wet with cold water" I'll try and place you on to this."

Carefully and slowly he raised the girl, and placed on her on, and when this was done, she felt a great relief from the cooling application to her wounds. The boy who really had been in one slave place after another for a year at long intervals, and was long practice with the little victims of brutality had made him familiar with many healing arts,, went on carefully and quickly to make many applications to the little girls wounds, by means of which she was soon somewhat relieved.

" Now" said the boy when he raised her head on a roll of weeds covered over with a cloth, which was to serve for a pillow," there is the best I can do for you."

Jane thanked him heartily, and the boy sitting down on the floor, drew up his knees, and embracing them with his arms, looked fixedly before him with a bitter and painful expression on her face.

" It's no use my poor girl" he broke out at last" it is of no use this you have been trying to do. You and Jannie both are brave little girls,---you both had the right on your side, but it's all in vain, and out of the question for you to struggle. You are in the hands of the devil and his angels---they are the strongest, and you will die here if you do not give up."

" Give up to the will of that Brute." Indeed had not the little girls human weakness and physicial agony whispered that before. Jane started, for the bitter boy, with his wild eyes and melancholy voice, seemed to her an increase of the temptation with which she had been wrestling.

" Oh my God" she groaned" Please sent the christian soldiers here to save us."

" There is no use calling on the Lord---he never hears us" said the boy most steadily. " I don't even believe there is a God, or even if there is, He has taken sides against us. Don't you see from the way the christians get licked so hard, and they are fighting to free us. All goes against us, heaven and earth. Everything is even pushing us slaves into hell. We are in hell now. Why shouldn't we die when we go there?"

Poor Jane closed her eyes, and shutt shuddered at these awful dark atheistic words.

" You see You see" said the boy" you don't know anything about these slave plaves but I do, I've been on many of these places for five years,, body and soul, and now I have purposely placed myself for a time under this mans foot. I know Deldon, he knows me, and young a boy as I am,he hates me and I hate him, and he is afraid of me. Here you are on this lonely plantation, ten miles from a christian camp; and only a mile from swamps, in an et ernormous impa impassable swamp---and there is no one who could testi testi testify, if your new master would burn you alive,-or if you were scalded, tortured, cut into pieces inch by inch. set up for wild animals to tear, or hung up and whipped to death. He could take you and throw you into a bog and you would sink beyond aid and chock to death under the mud. There is no law here, of god or man that can do you or any l slave, the least good, and this man, there is no earthly thing that he is too good to do. I could make the bravest soldier turn pale and his hair raise, and his teeth chatter, if I should only tell what I have seen on many a slave plantation, and been seeing and experiencing here---and it is no use resisting. Did any of the slaves want to belong to him. What did I want coming here, but it is my own secret. And ye, t yet I've been here with him for a month, and sawterriblo things occur here every moment I've been here. This place is a hell. And now he has a new boy, a beautiful boy, and she said she was brought up a Princess. Her good mother a queen some where taught her to read the gibls, and she's brought her bible here---to hell with her."

And the boy gave a wild and doleful laugh, that rang with a strange supernatural sound, through the old ruined shed.

Poor Jane h closed her eyes, all was darkness and horror.

" Oh Jesus, Lord Jesus, have you quite forgot us:poor children" Burst forth at last.

" Oh god please please set us free now."

" The boy sternly continued;

" And what are these miserable boys and girls you work with, that you should suffer because of them. Just to save their own skins, every one of them would turn against you the first time they got a chance. They are so degraded from the lives they live, that though they are not low and cruel to each other, they nevertheless only think of themselves themselves first, and therefore there is no use in you a suffering to keep from hurting them."

" Poor slaves, poor little fellow slaves" said Jane sadly with tears in her eyes"

" hat has made them cruel. Their hard lives of course. And if I give out, I shall get used to it all, and grow little by little like them. n o no kind boy, I've lost everything, mother father, and home, and two kind masters, and the last would have set me free if he had only lived a week longer but he was killed at Phelantonburg. I've lost everything in this cruel world and it's clean gone forever too, and no I can't lose heaven too, no I can't live like them, I'll lose my soul too."

" but how can it be that the good Lord will lay the sin to our account," said the boy.

" He surely won't h charge it to the poor little slaves, when we are forced down to it, he he'll charge it to them that drove us to it."

" ess" said poor Jane" but that won't keep us from growing hard and cruel. If all of us get to be as hard hearted and cruel as that boy slave jake, and as wicked, it won't help me any either, for no matter why it is God won't excuse us."

" The boy fixed a wild and startled look on poor Jane, as if a sudden and new thought had struck her, and then heavily groaning said;

" Oh god Have mercy on us all, you speak the truth little girl," and with groans he laid himself out on the floor like one crushed and writi writhing under the extremity of menthal anguish. There was a silence in which the breathing of both parties was heard when Jane faintly said;

" Oh please my good boy."

The boy suddenly rose up, with his face composed ot to its usual stern, and sad expression.

" please boy, I saw them throw my waist coat into that corner yonder. And in my pocket is a small bible which Jannie had loaned to me. If you would only please get it for me."

The boy went and got it. Jane opened at once to a heqvily marked passage, of the last scenes in the life of Him by whose stripes we are healed.

" If you would only be so good as read this part for me----it' better than water, and will take my mind off my horror."

The boy took the book, with a dry proud air, and looked over the passage. He then read aloud in a sho soft voice, and with a beauty of intonation that was peculiar. they that touching account of anguish and glory. Often as he read, his voice faltered, and sometimes failed him altogether, when he would stop, with an air of frigid composure, til till he had mastered himself. When he gave to the touching words' Father forgive them for they know not what they do' he threw down the book, and burying his face in his hands he sobbed aloud with a convulsive violence,,,,.. Jane poor Jane was weeping also, and occasionally ejaculated a smothered word or two.

" If we could only Stand up to Him" said poor Jane" it seemed you kno to come so natural to him, and we slaves have to fight so hard for it. Oh Lord Jesus help us. Oh Blessed Lord do help us."

" My good boy" said Jane, after a wb while, I can see that some way or other, that you are quite abce me in everytning, that you are asort of spy instead of a slave, but that you too are in distress nevertheless, but not because you are here pretending to be one of us. So there is one thing you can learn from either I or poor Jannie. You said the good Lord took sides against us little slaves, because He allows us to be abused, killed and ill treated---but you see from what you read hat happened to His own Son----the blessed Lord of all glory---was he not always poor? And have we any of us slaves yet come so low as he He had come. Don't fear it, od has not forgot us, I'm more than certain of that. I know that the christians even had taken from the masters many thousands of slaves, and would we not come next. I any how if we suffer with Him we shall also reign, Scripture says---but if we deny Him, He also will deny us. Did not all his friends suffer---The Lord and all gis. It tells how they was stoned, and cut and sawn asunder, and wandered about in sheepskins and goatskins, and was destitute afflicted, tormented. Therefore just because we suffer it is no reason why we should think the good Lord has turned against us---it is just the contrary, if only we hold onto Him, and don't give up to sin."

" but what his friends suffered, is nothing to what I saw slaves suffer."

" Yes, that's is true, but that does not help u us any" said Jane.

" and why does he put you slaves where you cannot help but sin!" said the boy.

" I think we can help it" said jane.

" you'll see" said the boy" what you may have to do. They will be sure at you to morron and worse than to day. I know them all, I have seen their doings everyshere---I can't bear to think of all they'll bring you to-----and I'm afraid they'll make you such tor ture that you will have to give out at last."

" Lord Jesus," said jane, " You will take care of my soul. Oh Lord do--don't let them make me give out."

" Oh dear-oh dear" said the boy" I have heard lots of this crying and praying before, and yet they have been forced to break down, and have been brought brought under. There's that new boy who came with jannie, he's trying to hold on, and you and jannie are trying, but what's the use, you must give por be killed by inches."

Jane did not answer to that, while the boy sat with his blue eyes intently fixed on the floor.

" Maybe it isthe way" he murmured to himself" But those of the slaves that have given up, there is no hope for them---none. All slaves are compelled to live in filth and grow loathsome, till we loathe ourselves, and they all long to die, and yet they fearing the future don't dare to kill themselves, no hope, no hope, no hope---this little boy much younger than I am" you see me now" he continued speaking to jane very rapidly, " fee for real what I am. well I was brought up in luxury, the first I remem ber is playing about when I was a three year old child, in beautiful parlors---when I was I was kept dressed up like a doel doll, and company and visitors used to praise me. There was a beautiful garden opening from the front windows, and there I used to play hide and go seek, under the beautiful tall wind swept pine trees, with my brothers and sister s sisters. I was sent to a good school where I learned mostly anything a child should know, and when I was eight years old a Clandolinian soldier stole my brothers and killed two of my sisters and my father. My father died of his wounds, and I too was sot upon and stolen. no one ever expected such a thing to happen. My master my first master treated me strangely but I did not know. There were many who would come to see me, and they came every day, and was about the house, and always gave me and my remaining sister whom they also took with me the blackest looks and spoke al awful rough to us.

One of these brought with him one day, two years before this war broke out, a number of Clandolinian officers, whom I thought the worse looking lot of men I ever had seen. I shall never forget that evening. I was lostlonesome and full of sorrow, and my first master was so rough and unkind to me and my sister, and I had no friend or protector and I was his property. I loved my sister and yet was in deathly fear he would sell her to some one else and seperate us for good. Oh how I did fear and even hate that man. now I did love my por sister, and how I love her now, and always shall whilevi while breathe.

I then saw a chance one day, and ran away i with my sister. I and my sister then wadered the streetes of some southern Calverinian town for days almost starving and was picked up by some rich Calverinian couple, who brought us into his beautiful home, with servants, horses, carriages and furniture and dresses. Everything that money could buy he gave me, but we did not set any value on that---as he was good to us, we only cared for him. I loved him and his wife, better than any one except our parents, and I leven tried, I could not do any other way from what he wanted me to. I wanted only one thing---I did want him to adopt us as his children. I thought if he loved me as such as he said he did, and if it was what he seemed to think I was, he would be willing to have legal adoption papers made out; and that we would be his and be free. But he convinced me that it was impossible in that part of Calverinia, and he told me that I and my sister being slaves who ran away, that if he proceeded to try to get papers for our adoption he and we would be investigated, and the three of us put to death. But he said that when he has enough train fare he would take us up to Northern Abbieannia there we would be his adopted children without even the need of papers. If that is true was I not his adopted children already? Was I not faithful for seven years I studied every look and motion, and did everything to please him. He had once got shot in a pistol fight, and for twenty days and nights I watched him ad watched with him. I and my sister alone---and gave him all his medicine, and did everything for him, and then he called us his good little angels, and said we saved his life. We had become two beautiful children.

This master was the image of the one who had died, he had such beautiful eyes. My sister who was older than me too had the most beautiful of eyes, such a splendid forehead, and her hair hung all in curls around it, and she had the same spirit as I and my parents had, and their tarlst tarlent too. My sister he said looked just like me, and he usedto tell he that I and my sister were the most beautiful children he had ever seen, and he was so proud of having me and my sister that he was going to take us north as soon as he could collect the sufficient amount of money. He just loved to dress us up, and take me about in an open carriage, and hear the good and beautiful remarks that all the people would make about us, and he used to tell me and my sister constantly all the fine things that were said in praise of me and my sister. Oh but those sure were happy days. I thought I was as happy as any one could be, but then there came evil times. There came a man one day near his home, who I found out was a particular kind of Glandelinian detective, and from the first time I saw him, I could not tell why, I dreaded him, for I felt sure he would bring misery on us. Whenever my master went out day or night some man whom I did not like always followed him but at some distance, and often my master would not come home till three or four o clock in the morning. I did not dare say a word, for the man way the man looked at me I was afraid to tell on them. Whereever my master went I did not know, but he seemed one of the sort that when he once got a going there there was no holding him back. Then I soon saw that something was wrong with him. He never told me anything, and did not even answer when I asked him, but I saw he was in some sort of trouble, I knew it day after day--I felt scared, and also my heart breaking, but oh--those dreadful men who shadowed him, I could not help it, I had to tell.

At this I saw him when he went out the next time put two guns into his pocket but the next day a man came and told me that my kind master was just to get rid of me had sold us. He told me that day that I had offended my master in some way, and should be forced to sell me and my sister for it. And the day before he had spoken to me kinder than usual and said he should come back when he could. But I was not decieved for I saw in the papers what had really happened. I knew that the time had come, I always felt sure why those awful men shadowed him, he was arrested not for holding us two unlegally, or because he had kept us two runnway slaves, without saying a thing about us, but because he was arrested as a Christian government Agent spy, and one of the detectives said he sold men me when he did not. I and my sister was not sold at al, the detective just took us. And my good master, the day before he had kissed me and kissed the child ren whom he knew a good many times, and then had went at out. When I saw in the papers he was arrested, I fell down and fainted.

The day came when by the stern orders of the Abbieannian government they had to release him or the Glandelinian states would be immediately in a state of war, but it was too late for me, for the cursed wretch man came and took possession of me and my sister. That detective as told you before had told me that he had bought me and my sister, but he would not show me any papers. I so cursed him before God as a thief, a lying rascal, a kidnapper, and told him I would sooner die than live with him.

"You may do as you please you brat" said he "but if you don't submit reasonably will I will sell your sister where you shall never see her again. He tolo me that he was always suspivi suspicious whom I was, and who my master was and that he always meat meant to have me the first time he saw me, and that he had his men shadow me, my master day and night, and got him arrested on purpose to make him come to jail and give him a chance to steal me. That just to obtain me he got in into lots of trouble and tears, and things of that sort.

I had to give up for my hands and feet were tied and so were my sisters. He had my sister--whenever I resisted his will anywhere, he would talk about selling them and he thought he had made me as submissive as he could but he did not. Oh what a life it was, to live with my heart breaking, every day, to keep on, on, on living her when it was only misery and sorrow, and to be bound body and soul to whom I did not recognise as my master at all. I used to love to read to my sister, to play to her, to dance with her, and so sing to her, but everything, did for this one was a perfect drag------yet I was afraid to refuse anything.

He was very imperious, and harsh to je us both. At that time I was a I was a timid little thing, but my sister was bold and high spirited, like my father, and she had had never been brought under, in the least by any one. He was always finding fault, and quarreling with my sister, and I used to live in daily fear and dread. I tried to get my sister to be respectful---I tried to keep her and him apart, but it did no good, and one day she struck him in the head with a dish cutting him badly. He had her sent out to be flogged terribly, and then he sold her. He forced me at on a errand one day, and when I came home I saw she was nowhere to be found. He told me he had s sold her---he showed me the money, the price of her sould and body. Then it seemed as if all good forsook me. I raved, and cursed, cursed god and man and all Glandelinians and christians alike, and for a while I really made him afraid of him, I know I did for in the night I often stole in upon him when in bed and tried to stab him but he was awake and always frustrated me. And he did not give up either. He told me that my sister was sold, and it was up to him whether I would ever see her again, and that if I killed him in his sleep I would would never see her as he alone knew where she was. Well you can do anything with a little girl I suppose, when you have a sister you long for. He forced me to submit, and even me flogged for every time I resisted him, he made me peacable, and so things went on for a week or two. One day I watched my chance, and ran away, and passing by a Glandelinian plantation, I saw a crowd of soldiers about the gate, and heard a childs voice-----and suddenly my sister broke away ffom from two or three soldiers who were holding her, and ran screaming and caught my dress. They ran up to him swearing terribly, and one man whose face I shall never forget as long as I live, grabbed hi her, and told her she would not get away so easily, and that she soon would recieve a lesson she will never forget. I begged and pleaded, they only laughed and swore at me, my poor sister screamed and looked into my face, and held on to me desperately, and finally they tore him off, but tore also the half of my skirt away, and then they carried her into the plantation, placing a hand over her muth sh so she could not scream any more. There was one soldier there who seemed to take pity on me. I offerred to be his slave, if he would only interfere. He shook his head and said, that he had no power to do so, and told me that they were probably going to beat her to death. I turned and ran, and every step of the way I hear her scream. I got into the house, and ran all out of breath into the parlor where I found the owner owner. I told him and begged him to go and afterfere with his overseers. He only laughed, and told me the girl had got her punishment. she has got to be broke in-----and the sooner the better, what did an old child slave expect?" as asked. Then something in my head seemed to snap, I felt dizzy and furious. I do remember seeing a great sharp sabre on the table, and of catching it, and flying upon the owner, and then all grew suddenly dark as I felt a crushing blow upon my head, and I did not know any more for days and days.

When I came to myself, I was in a nice big room---but it was not where I hoped and expected to be. A ten year old child slave tended me, and a surgeon came to see me often, and they took a good deal of care of me. After a while I found he had gone away and left me at that place to be sold, and that was why they tried to bring me to. I hoped I would not even get well, but in spite of me the fever went off, and I grew healthy, and twice I tried to drink posion but I was frustrated. Then they made me dress up good and plenty every day, and men used to come in looke lo k me over, and ask questions, and what my price was. I was so gloomy and silent, that none of them wanted me. They threatened threatened to whip me to death if I did not show a more happy a face, and did not not take some pains to make myself more agreeable. At length one day came an old gentlemen whose name was Frank Lengin. He seemed to have some feeling for me, he saw that something dreadful was on my heart, and he finally bought me and promished to do all he could to buy back my sister. He went to the owner who had my sister, and they told him they had sold her to a soldier. Then he found out where she was, then a general was keeping her. He offered an immense sum for her, but recieved the truthful news that she had run off in the night and all pursuers even with dogs could not track her. My former mean owner blamed me for it, and he sent me word that if she was ever retaken she would be burned at the stake. My new master was very kind to me, he had a splendid plantation, and took me to it. In the course of a year he had a son and daughter born. On even his own children now I loved them, but some sicked enemies of my master took those little children off as day and killed them. How even we slaves mourned and cried over the tragedy.

He found out who killed his two children and hand them hunted down, but was killed in the battle with them---indeed every good master that I wanted to see live, died, and I took sick, and then though I too went down to deaths door---I lived. Then I was sold again, and was bought by a factory owner but however bought me for my freedom and sent me up to northern Abbieannia to be taken care of. Then the war broke out, and for revenge on these Glandelinians who treated me so, and who treat other slaves even worse--yes far worse than I was treated. I spy. I spy on child slave plantations, to bring the christians doen upon it and liberate the slaves, sometimes I run away when the time comes and take slaves with me. Other times I spy in enemy camps and learn the plans of the general---but just now here I am. I am dressed like a boy, yes, but I am not. I am a girl my name is Anna Arenburg."

The boy, no a girl now stopped. he had hurried on through her harrowing story with a wild passionate utterance, sometimes seeming to address it to Jane, and sometimes speaking in a soliloquy. So vehement and overpowering was the force with which she spoke, that for a season Jane was beguiled, even from the pain of her own wounds, and raising herself up on one elbow, watched her as she paced restlessly up and down, her suddenly long golden hair, swaying heavily about her, as she moved.

"Can you tell me" she said after a long pause. That there is such a creature as a God that looks down and see 's all these horrid things? Maybe it is so. Indeed the sisters in the convent used to tell me of a day of judgement-when everything will be rising to light-----won,t there be vengeance then. They think it is nothing what the poor child slaves suffer, what I and my sister has suffered, in what all these little children suffer. They think it is a small matter---yet once I walked the streets of the city of Galverine itself when it seemed as if I had enough misery to sink the city. I've wished there would be a big earthquake that would shake the houses upon me, that the stones would sink under me, or that I would step into quicksand and go down forever. Yes and in the judgement day I was will stand up before christ the Judge to be a witness against those, that have ruined me and my sister, and all other child- ren body and soul. When I was younger I thought I was religious, I used to love God and pray. Now I fell as if I was a lost soul, persuad by fiends that to torment me day and night, they keep pushing me on and on,---and I'll do it to one of these days." she said clinching her hand while a fierce light glanced in her heavy blue eyes. I'll send all these child slave masters where they belong---a very short way too, if I am burned if I'm burned or cup out open alive for it." a wild long laugh rung through the deserted room and ended in a hyste hysteric sob, she then threw herself on the floor in convu - lsive sobbing and struggles. In a few minutes the frenzy fit seemed to pass off, she rose slowly and seemed to collect her collect herself.

"Can I do anyanything mre for you poor Jane" she said approaching where the wounded girl lay" shall I give you some more water?"

There was a graceful and compassionate sweetness in her voice and manner, as she said this that formed a strange contrast indeed with her formal whiteness. Jane drank the water;, and looked earnestly and pitifully into her face..

" Oh Anna I wish you would go to Him that can give you living waters.

" Go to Him. Where is He? Who is He?" said Anna.

"Him that you read of to me-------the blessed Lord."

" I used to see statues of him h Him over nearthe alter of a catholic Church, when I was younger." said Anna her dark blue eyes fixing themselves in an expression of mournful revr reverie" But you should know He is not here. There is nothing here, but sin anda whole hell of suffering and despair. Oh He is only within the christian camps."

She laid her hand on her breas t and drew in her breast as if to life lift a heavy si wi weight.. Then Jane looked as if she would speak again, but she cut her snort with a decided gesture.

" o don't talk now por Jane. Try and get some sleep if you can."

And placing water within her reach, and making whatever arrangements for her com ort comfort she could, she fix fixed her hair back the way she had it beforem put on her camp, and left the shed.

The sitting room of this es establishment was a large square room, with a wide ample fire place. It was hung with a showy and most expensive wall paper, but despite the fact of cleaness the place had that peculiar steaming unwholesome smell, compounded of mingled damp, dirt and decay, which one often noticed in closed up old half tumbling down houses. The wall paper was defaced in spots, by what appeared to be slops of blood, and garnished with black chalk memorandumns, and long sums footed p up as if some one had been figuring something up. In the fireplace stood a big brazer full of hot coals for though it was June and the weather was not cold, Deldon moreover wanted a place to light his cigars, and heat water for the slaves who scrubbed out his rooms and for cooking and making coffee. The ruddy glare of the coal fire displayed the confused and unpromishing aspect of the room, old furna furniture, and various articles of old clothing scattered in the corners of the room, and the dogs of whom I have ar written before had lain among them, to suit their own taste and convenience.

Deldon was just cooking himself a pot of coffe, st o st ith strong coffe coffee; pouring his hot water from a pitcher and grumbling as he did so;

" plague on those overseers, to kick up this rowbetween me and my new slaves. That girl jane won't be fit to workfor a week now---right in the press of the season. By gad she'll have to or die."

" yes you are always that way" said a voice behind his chair that almost chilled him to the bone every time he heard it. It was the girl spy Anna Aronburg, who had stolen upon his soliquy.

" Ha you little slave devil, you have come back since you went out to night?"

" Yes I have" she said cooly and deliberately" Come to have my own way, in anything I desire too."

" You lie you brat. For I'll be up to my word. Either behave yourself, and leave me and my fellow s alone or stay down to your own quarters, and fare and work with the rest or get out of the plantation altogether."

" I'd rather ten thousand times" said the girl, " work in the worse plantation in the world, that than to have to place myself under your hoof."

" But you are under my pow r power for all that" said he turning upon her with that big dog like grin" And that is one comfort for me. Sit down beside me on a chair my boy and hear to reason for once" said he laying hold of her wrist.

" James Deldon, you take care, take care" said the boy, with a sharp flance of her eye, a glance so wild and insane in its strange light as to be almost appalling. " You know you are afraid of me Deldon" she said deliberately and haughtily" You even in your heart know who I am, you are afraid to expose me even, to the army of Manley, and you have reason to be. But be careful, for I have the devil in me to night."

" Get at boy I believe for sure you are the devil himself" said Deldon and he pushed her from him, as he looked uncomfortably at her." After all" he said" why can't you repent of your can work and be friends with me and others as sh you e used to."

" I never was your friend, you are dreaming" said she bitterly. She stopped short, a world of shocking feelings, rising in her heart kept her silent. As long as she had been I with him Anna had always kept over Deldon the kind of in. influence, that even a real strong, impassioned woman could ever keep over the most brutal of all men, but of late she had grown more and more irritable and restless, and ferocious, under the hedious scenes she had witnessed, and her anger at times seemed to break out into raving insanity, and therefore this made her a sort of dread to Deldon, who like all wicked who like all wicked persons have that superatitutious horror of insane persons. When Deldon brought the disguised Vivian Girl Princess in his house, all the smouldering feelings of womanly fe feeling flashed up in the worn heart of Anna Aronburg, and she took the part of the girl, and a fierce storm of qua quarreling and words ensued between her and Deldon. The latter in a fury, swore he should sent her out of the camp to be lost in the swamps if she were not peaceful, and she with proud scorn, declared that he had not enough nerve to sent her into the swamps. But to defy him also she worked there that day as already mentioned, to show how perfectly she was not afraid to do the lowest kind of work.

And d Deldon felt secretly uneasy all that day, for indeed the disguised girl spy had an influence over him in some way, from which he could not even free himself. He knew who she was, and why she was here, but her knowledge of his stealing qualities, for he stole more slaves t than he bought made him helpless and to even chanse her of the camp would bring her to even report his theft to Manley who had an he is won't allow any one to steal a slave, even if it is stolen from Mylatze his enemy. The penalty to steal a slave from another camp or any camp is Death. When she pre sented her work on the crop field, he had hoped for some concession, and addressed her in a sort of half conciliatory, half scornful tone------and she had answered with the bitterest contempt. The outrageous treatment of poor Jannie had aroused her still more, ad and therefore she had followed Deldon to the house with no other intention but to give him a piece of her mind and upbraid him for his brutality.

" I wish you would less Anna Aronburg" said Deldon, " You would behave yourself more decently and get out of my plantation. You know I would not say anything of you being a spy."

" Anf you wouldn't dare to" she sneered." And you tak about my behaving decently. " And what have you been doing, you who have not enough sense to keep from laying up one of your best working little slave child; right in the season when it is most hard, and pressing, just for your devilish temper."

" I was a very foolish man indeed, it is sure a fact to let such trouble come up." said Deldon" but it was the fault more of my overseer than myself. " Jane could have saved herself more if Jannie had not interfered. I did it to shok annie what do when I am aroused. Now I'll bet she will too be afraid of me."

" I reckon you won't make her afraid of you."

" Won't I?" said Deldon rising passionately" I'd like to see the day I can't make thes these slaves afraid of me. She'll be the first little bobbed haired black headed devil of a brat that ever dame it around me, and knuck but the teeth of one of my overseers, and throw mid into jakes face. I shall break every bone in her body if she ever does anything like that again. "

Just then the door slowly opened, and one of the overseers entered. He came forward bowing respectfully, and held out something in a paper.

" What have you got there sir?" said Deldon.

" It's a thing of magic sir, something which christian dogs use, something like a with witch thing of the Catho catholics?"

" A WHAT?"

" Something that child slaves who were in better camps might get from christian get from christian prisoners. Keeps them from fubling it when they got flogged I guess. Jannie had it in her pocket when I searched her suit coat."

Deldon was superstitious, like all godless and cruel men, and taking the paper he opened it was an uneasy look on his face. T There dropped out of it a pair of rosary beads, a small childs Catholic prayer book and also a sacred Heart Emblem concluding with a curl of Daisys fair hair, which all went to the floor.

" You crazy fool" he shouted" as he stamped on the floor in sudden passion. Where did you get this from? Take those things out of here. What did you want to bring it to me for. I don,t want these things in the place. Take them out, take them out burn them up."

The overseer stood with his heavy mouth wide open, and aghast with wonder and surpris surprise, and Anna Aronburg who was preparing to leave the apartment, stopped and looked at him in the greatest amazement.

" don't you bring me any more of these accursed christian dog implements" said Deldon shaking his fist at the overseer, who retreated hastily to the door" If you do I shall be fired." and picking p the prayer book, and beads and the emblem he flung it and sent it all smashing through a window pane out into the darkness.

The equally terrified overseer was more than glad to make his escape. But when he was gone Deldon swore roundly to himself, and sat doggedly down in his chair and began sullenly s slipping his tumbler of coffee. He had not been frightened by the sight of these things, he only hated anything that reminded him of Catholics and the sight of these things had aroused him to a sudden fit of uncontrolled uncontrollable fury, though now he seemed to be a little ashamed of his fit of anger and fury.

Anna prepared herself for going out, unobserved by him, and slipped away to minis ter to poor Jane, as I have already related.

Before going further I must relate something of Deldons history. Though he was reared, hard and cruel and reprobate, there had been a time when he had been rocked on the bosom of a mother, cradled with catholic prayers, and pious hymns---his nose seared and wicked brow, bedewed with the waters of holy baptis baptism. "is mother had been almost a saint, and had led him at the sound of the church bells; to Mass to worship and to pray. Far in that now b's besieged Vivian Wickey, his mother had trained her only son, with long an unwearied love and patient prayers. But he like many others when he grew up hungered to own child slaves, and when his father died leaving him part owner of the place, he bought many slaves despite the prot protest protest protest of his mother and became a hard tempered sire, on whom that poor woman had wasted a world of unvalued love, and Deldon had followed in the steps of his own hearts desire.

He became boisterous and unruly, and terribly tyrannical, he despised and repelled all her counsil and would have none of her reproof though his mother clung to him and sought with passionate prayers, and entreaties, to win him from this life of awful sin, to his souls eternal good.

That was supposed to have been Deldons day of ------what we may call a day of chance for repentance, a day when the good angels had called constantly to him. Indeed h ne had been almost persuaded, and mercy and a touch of remorse had him in its power. He almost repented in his own (providing he had so)---there was a long and desperate conflict with himself, and the inspiration to do bad, but sin and evil conpuny got the victory, and then he set all the forces of his rough nature against the conviction of his conscience.

He drank and swore, and blasphemed, and became wilder and more brutalto his slaves than ever.He bought the old time prison building known as the hell hell hell hell penotentairy which on account of the righteousness of the country of bbleannia had been closed by the aurtherities for the lack of criminals, and turned it secretly into a slave face factory in which early in the book as we know the Vivian "I"ls Had their first advantage with him and whom were accom accused by him of setting the place on fire, which in reat realtythey never did. nd one night two weeks before the great fire, when his good mother, the in the last agony of agony of her despair, knelt at his fests, he even refused to heed her, and ran away out of her sight and with brutal curses fled to his prison.. A few da s after Deldon as he was having six of his slaves flugged to death recieved a letter which was brought to him from or by one of the overseers. The letter told of i his mothers death, and that as she was dying she blessed and for gave hi , and that when in heaven she would ask God to bring about his repentance some way.. or a real wicked man there is always a fearful dread and unhallowed necromancy of evil, that will turn things that are sweetest and even most holy to spirits of great horror and fright. Therefore that beautiful loving mother,---her dying prayers, her forgiving words, did not make him weep for her loss, like many people would usually usually do, but wrought in that demoniac heart of his only as a sentence that was bringing his eternal damnation, bringing with it a fearful apprehension of a terrible judgement, and fiery punishment for all time.

" Deldon burned p the letter, and when he saw it hissing and crackling in the flam inwardly shuddered as he thought of everreverlasting fires. He tried then to drink and revel and swear away the memory, but often afte afterwards in the deep night, whose unusual and solmne stillness arranges the bad soul in forced communion with herself, he imagined he had seen that pale mother rising slowly by his bes bedside, and felt the soft twining of her hair around his hand till the cold sweat would roll down his face , and he would spring from his bed in horror. Ye who have a.. alw y always wondered to hear, in the sane evangel that God is love, and that God himself is a consuming fire, see ye ye not how to the souls which are steeped probably beyond repentance in evil perfect love is the most fearful of all tortures, the seal and sentence of the direst despair.!

" Blast it. said deldon to himself, as he sipped at his coffee." Where did she get those rosary beads. If they did not l look ju t i just like my mothers---whooo. I thought was forgetting that. r curse me if there is any thing like forgetting thing things of the past anyhow-- hang it. I'm getting lonesome and scared. I mean to call that little goldenhaired boy. I know he hates me the little devil. I don't care,---

----I'll make him come."

Deldon then stepped out un into a large long hall way, which went upstairs by what was a fine and beautiful staircase, but at this time of night the passageway was dreary and dark, and encumbered with boxes and unsightly litter. Yet the stairs covered with decorative carpet, seemed winding up into the dense f gloom, to it seemed no one knew where. The pale moonlight streamed through a shattered opening above,, a large door, the air was unwholesome and very chilly and damp, like that of a vault and uncommonly still. As he stopped at the foot of the stairs he thought he saw a beautiful head of a little girl, yes uncommonly beautiful so beautiful as to cut the heart to look upon, but it gave him a chill, and as he stood there, he heard a voice of a little gitl, a pretty voice singing. But beautiful as the sound was it seemed strange, weird and ghostlike in that dreary old house, perhaps of course because of the already tremulious state of his shattered nerves. Hark what was that. A beautiful but seemingly wild and saiddened voice, like some one in sorrow from the other world, chanted a Catholic hymn but those kind that is common among the child slaves,.

" Oh the wicked shall pay their depths, oh they,ll pay their depths, Oh the wicked will pay their dues, oh they,ll see some awful hues,
And there'll be mourning and sighing and weeping,
At the judgement seat of God. "

" last that little goldened haired devil" said Deldon shaking he knew not how, or why" I'll shock him. hey boy. Hey boy" he ca called harshly, but only the loud mocking echoes answered him while the sweet voice unheeding him as it seemed just continued to sing on;

" Brothers and sisters here are to part,
Many a child will suffer a broken heart
Children and parents forever are apart,
On this earth shall never meet no more."

nd clear and loud swelled through the empty halls the loud uncanny refrain

" Oh the wicked shall pay their depths,oh they,ll pay their depths, Oh the wicked shall pay their dues, oh they'll see some awful hues,
And there'll be mourning, and signing and weeping,,
Oh there,ll be mourning, mourning, mourning,
Oh there,ll be mourning, at the judgement seat of God."

Deldon who was tried trying to nerve himself to climb the steps lose courage and stopped. If he was asked he would have been utterly ashamed to tell it, but his forehead was covered with large drops of sweat, his heart was beating heavy and loudly with a great fear, he even thought he again saw that little white beautiful celestial like head of a fema female child reveal itself in the moonlight, and also something white rising and glimmering in the darkness and gloom before him, and shuddered to t think what if the form of his dead slaves whom he slaughtered so brutally or that of his mother and father should suddenly up appear before him.

" I know one thing" he said to himself as he was trembling like a leaf, and staggered back into his room, and sat down" I'll let that little Jane girl alone after this, and not bother with that little black haired witch Jennie either. I'll sell her to one of yonleys generals to get her out of sight. Pretty as a sprite but a little fire cat for all that. What did I want of her cursed prayer book and rosary beads, that put me inmind of my mothers and--whooo can t quit thinking of it. I believe I am bewitched sure by that little slave. Maybe she id is one of those creatures from heaven at that. PHEW. Where did she get that prayer book, and black beads? It could not have been those belonging to my---Phew I burned them up I know they are burned. I believe it would be something unusual- if a prayer book and rosary beads could spring up new as before even after being burned up. Phew".

Ah cruel, wicked Deldon. That prayer book, was charmed, each deck of beads in the rosary had a spell of remourse and terror for three indeed, and was used by a slightier Power to bind thy cruel and ruthless hands, from inflicting uttermost evil on the helpless slaves.

" I say" said Deldon stamping and whistling to some of the slaves who were scrubbing the floor near his room" Come in here some of you and keep me company." but he looked so wild in his fear ,to them that they got up and ran out.

" I'll have my overseers in here, to sing and dance for me, and keep off these horrid notions and thoughts.2 a " said Deldon, and putting on his hat(I hope it is full of ink) he went on to the verands, and fired off se of his pistols, with which he usually summoned in two or three slave drivers, who cruel as they might be were not like him and who usually overlooked more among the slaves than he really through..... Deldon was often wont when in a gracious humor, to get these worthies of his into his sitting roommm room, and after getting them stark crazy drunk with whiskey amuse himself was setting them to sing wild blandslinian war songs, or prize and other fighting, or to bring in some child slaves who might or who he pretended had offended him and had them tortured to his hearts content, just as the humor took him.

It was between one and three or two oclock at night, as Anna Aronburg was returning from her kindly ministrations to poor little one, that she heard the sounds of blasphemie blasphemies, and wild shrieking, shooping, hallbeing, and singing and the loud orations against the " Christian dogs" mingled with the loud roaring and barking of all the dogs in the neighborhood, and many other symptons of general uproar and the screaming of some of the slaves.who were being tortured to satisfy the wickedness of their passion. She slowly came up on the verands step s and looked in. Deldon and six of the drivers, were in a state of furious intoxication, and were singing, whooping, setting chairs, and torturing two little girls and one boy in every way we can imagine for cruel cruelty upon the helpless and eve even making ludicrous and horrid grimaces at each other as savages do. She therefore rested her small slender hand on the window blind, and looked fixedly at them---there was a world of anguish, scorn and fierce bitterness, in her blue eyes as she did so.

" would it be that a party of christians would suddenly come and rid the world of such wretches" she said to herself. She then turned, hurried away, and passing around to a back door glided upstairs and tapped lightly at Violets door to her secret room.

Anna Aronburg cautiously entered the room,,, and found Violet, not in her own custom, sitting somewhat pale with fear; and excitement in the furthest corner of it with a long gleaming dagger in her hand. As she came in, the beautiful girl started up nervously with her dagger ready for instant action, but on seeing who it was put the weapon away and rushing forward, and catching her arm said;;;

" Oh my good boy friend is it you. I'm so glad you have come. I was afraid it was-----oh indeed you don't know what horrid sounds and terrible cursing and yelling and blaspheming there has been down stairs all this evening. I'm usually really good and brave but the noise has me excited beyond what I could think."

" I ought to know" said Anna dryly" I've heard the noise often enough. I've seen what goes on."

" Oh I know you are a spy too like me, do tell me my lad---could we not get away with the slaves we desire to find right now? ---I don't care where---into the swamp, among snakes and bogs---anywhere. Could not we get them away from here, somewhere away from here to night."

" If we go now we'll go into our graves." said Anna. " We got to be careful."

" Didyou ever try?"

" I can do it yes, alone right now, but I've seen enough of trying to get away with other slaves, and nothing good comes of it but a horror I cannot dare think of."

" I'd be willing to run the risks and perils of the swamp. I ain't afraid of bogs. I know them on sight, even quick sand and know how to avoid them. And I fear no snakes. I'd rather have a rattlesnake near me than him or his drivers." said Violet eagerly.

" There have been many others here of your opinion" said Anna but I am an experienced spy, I've been many places, more places than you or your sisters have ever been and I tell you it is utterly impossible, impossible beyond words to get through that swamp the very swamp we are in unless you know it. And you could not stay in the swamps, or escape through it--and you'd be tracked by the dogs, and the penaulty is so terrible for runaway slaves that they have when cornered by dogs, jumped deliberately into the treacherious bogs chosing to perish than be brought back. And if you were brought back and you were brought before him, then---then------"

" what would he do" said the girl, looking withbreathless interest into Anna's face.

" I would never dare tell you what he would do" said Anna." He had learned his trade well, among the worse child slave drivers and masters in southern and middle western plandelinia. You would never sleep much as long as you remain here, if I should be cruel enough to tell you, the horrible bloody things I have seen---and horrid things that he tells me of sometimes just for good jokes. And very often I have heard screams here and other places where I have been that I have not been able to get out of my head as long as I've been spying among the slave plantations.

" There are places in every slave plantation where I have spied, where I have seen either a black blasted tree, or stump or post, and the ground all covered with ashes. Ask any slave what was done there, and see if they will even dare to tell you."

" Oh but boy what do you mean.?"

" I won't tell you. It would be not for your ears. I hate even to think of it: And I tell you God only knows, what we even may see to morrow, if poor Jane and even Jennie holds out against this beast as they have begun."

" Horrid" said Violet, every drop of blood receding from her cheeks. Oh we should rescue them and bring them up here too. Oh do tell me how we shall do it.?"

" It can't be done now. We have to do the best we can for ourselves---stand up for what you must---and make it up for revenge by and by."

" He wanted to force me yesterday to drink ossme of his hateful brandy" said Violet, " And I hated it so. He grabbed me by the throat almost chocking me and tried to pour it down my mouth, and I struck at him so with my dagger he had to let go. Then I fled up here and have been up here ever since. He called for me two hours ago and I would not answer. And oh there was somewhere at that time such uncanny singing."

" You would be better off to keep out of his sight now" said Anna" I hat him hate him too, and I cannot live unless I too get away with a few slaves. One must have something to escape with,---things don't look so dreadful you know when you have weapons and we have none yet."

" Mother used to tell me before I went with father into the army never to shoot a man in cold blood unless he is a wicked soldier in uniform pursuing us with intent of murder" said Violet.

" MOTHER told you" said Anna with a thrilling and bitter emphasis on the word Mother. what use is it for good mothers to say anything? You are free and have a mother, but the slaves, are to be bought and paid for, and it seems their souls even belong to who ever gets y them. That's the way it goes. I was a slave once and I know. I say it is no sin to shoot down like a brute such a man like him. Iall sure do it if he trifles with me."

" Oh but you are a good boy, pity me."

" Pity YOU,O-----don't I? Don't I even love you. And have I not a sister------ God only knows where she is, even though free now, going the way I am going, I suppose and the way all christian spies must go after her. There's no end to this curse of horrid wicked slavery of childe children unless we fight it and the curse like FIENDS"

" It would have been better if all these poor little slaves had never been born" said Violet bitterly, and wringing her hands. " But I'll fight for their freedom."

" That's an old wish with me" said Anna. " I've got used to wishing that.They would kill themselves if they dared to" she said looking out into the darkness, with that still fixed despair which was the expression of her face when at rest.

" It would be wicked for any one to kill themselves" said Violet.

" I know it would be though of course in the situation they are in , don't see why. But the sisters and priests told me things, that even make me afraid to die. If it would only be the end of all slavery, why then---"

Violet, turned, away, and hid her face in her hands.

While this conversation was passing in the chamber above, Deldon overcome with his carouse, had sunk to sleep in the room below. Deldon was very seldom, had very seldom been drunk for a deep cautiousness usually overcame him, and therefore it had been years after one good spree that he would drink enough as to lose control of him self. This one night however in his feverish efforts to banish from his mindtn those fearful elements of woe and remourse whc which woke within him, he had for the first tim time in his life indluged more than usual, so that when he had discharged his attendants he fell second asleep lying right on the hard cold floor.

When Deldon dreamed. In hid h his heavy and feverish sleep, seven visled little forms stood before him, and one of them seemed to raise its hand up to the skies. He thought he knew who they were; he almost imagined since the Dellmslitellmsll horror that Violet Violet and her sisters were dead, and now he shuddered with creeping horror, seemig seeming to know who they were even though the faces were veiled. Then he thought that they advanced and surrounded him, that their long curls of golden hair from their heads started circling round his fingers, and then that from somewhere unseen one of them flung at him a serpent of golden color, and that it slice slide smoothly round his neck, and tightened and tightened, and he could not draw his breath, and then he thought that childish voices from them whispered to him----whispers that chilled him with horror. Then it seemed that he was sinking in one of the bogs of the very swamp his plantation is in, holding on to a branch and struggling to hold himself up with mortal fear, while from the bog it seemed that childish hands, probably those of the slaves she perished in it stretched up and were pulling him down with main force, and the other slaves whom he tortured in all manner to death, came behind him laughing, and breaking the branch to which he so desperately clung. And then rose up a solumne welf visled figure in front of the seven others, and each one drew aside the veil.

They were the Vivian girls, and our blessed Lord, and they all turned away from him and he went down buried aloud, amid a confused noise of shouts from the slaves who pulled him in----and Deldon awoke.

Calmly the beautiful rosy hue of dawn, was stealingbinto his room. And the morning star stood with its solemn, holy eye of light, looking down on the man of sin from out the brightening sky. Oh Oh with what freshness, what beauty, is each new born day as if to say to a wicked man" Behold thou has but one more chance. Strive for immortal glory." There is no speech nor language where his voice is not heard, but the bold and wicked man heard it not. He woke with a blasphemy and a curse. What to him was the gold and the purple, the daily beauty of morning. What to him the beauty and holy sancitisity of that star, which the Son of God has hallowed as His Own emblem? Brute like, he saw without caring to perceive, and stumbling forward, poured out a full tumbler of it and drunk half ?.

" I surely have had a hell of a night" he said to Anna Aronburg, who just then entered from an opposite door.

" yes indeed, I see yo had, and you'll have plenty of the same sort by and by" said she dryly.

" What do you mean you disguised minx?"

" You'll find out one of these days if you don't repent" returned Anna in a more decided tone. " Now Deldon, I've goo got good advice to give you and now."

" You have?"

" Yes, and my advice is, said Anna, steadily as she began adjustingthe things about the room, which was thrown every which way in the drunking dances" That you let Jennie, and jane alone."

" Let jane and jennie alone eh? Well I I'll be. And what business it is it of yours Anna?"

" Plenty of business to be sure, what it might concern me does not concern you, but for jane especially if you want to pay down, twenty five hundred for a girl like her and use her properly in the press of the early crop season, just to serve your own selfishness and spite, then it is no business of mine no loss to me. I've already done what could for her."

" You have. and why do you desire to meddle always into my business."

" I have no desire to meddle. But I have saved you some thousands of dollars, at many times by taking care of your little slaves---and that's all the thanks I do get. If your sime crop comes shorter into plandeys camp and camps of other plandelinian wakes you won't lose your plantations, I suppose. The government won't take them away from you I suppose as lack of being a farmer,---and you like to lose out on your farms wouldn't you. I think I see you doing it."

Deldon like many other plandelinian planters, had been one obligation, to have the best crops of the season for plandelinian armies, and he feared also if he failed to failed too much in supplying the proper ammount of crops he might lose one of his plantations for though slaves were his legal property the plantations were only loaned by the Clandelinian gover government for de use. Anna therefore with her girlish shrewdness and tact touched the only string, that could be made to vibrate.

" Well I'll let that Jane off with what she got" said Deldon" but she shall pay for it by and by, and Jannie too shall beg my pardon for hitting the driver and Jake with rocks, and promish better fashions and to take her whippings like a slave should."

" That she won't do" said Anna.

" Won't eh. ----I'd like to see why. she won't?"

" No she won't" said Anna.

"I'd like to surely know why, Anna Aronburg." said Deldon his face showing his extreme scorn.

" Because you know she has done perfectly right, and she knows it too, and so does Jane, and neither will say they have done wrong."

" What do care what they know? That black haired devil will do as I say and so will Jane or I'll kill them by burning at the stake----"

" And you'll loss your plantation because you do not have the right hands to supply the early summer crops on time, by keeping yourself short of hands, just at this very press."

" but they will give up---of course they will, don't know the nature of these little little slave brats. They'll beg my pardon like dogsthis very morning."

" These two little girls won't Deldon, you don,t know this kind. Jannie as I can see by her conplexion is of panish by blood by rates and so is Jane. you may kill them by inches,---you won't get the first word of confession or anything out of them."

" We,ll see. here's that Jane for one" Said Deldon quickly going out.

" In the waste room of one of the gin houses" said Anna.

Deldon though he did talk so stoutly to Anna, still strode forth from the house with a great degree of misgiving, which even was not common with him. is horrid dream of the past night, mingled with Anna's prudential suggestions, considerably affected his mind, and several times he feared he would see the forms of his dead slaves or even the Vivian girls suddenly appear before eve him, or even worse still his mother. He therefore resolved that no one should be witness of his first encounter nce with Jane in the gin house; and determined if he could not subdue her by bullying, to defer his terrible vengeance, to be wrecked in a more and not so pressing a season?

The beautiful light od of dawn, the angelic glory of the morning star, had looked in through the rude shed window where Jane was lying, and as if descending rapidly on that star beam; came the solemn words" I am the root o and offspring of David, and the bright and morning star. The mysterious warnings and intimations of Anna Aronburg so far from discouraging her little soul in the end had roused it as with a heavenly call. he felt sure that the day of o her death was dawning in the sky, and her heart trobbed wit with solumn throes of joy and desire, as she ma may have thought that the wonderous all; of whic she had often pondered----the great white throne, with its ever radient rainbow and stars, the white robed nation of multitudes, with voices as many waters, the crowns, the palms ,the harps----might break upon her vison vision before the sun should set again. And therefore without shuddering and trembling, she heard the voice of her persecutor, as he drew lumbering near.

" Well my little high spirited sprite" said Deldon, with a contemptuous kick," how do you feel this morning. Did I not tell you Jane I could learn you a thing or two? how did you like it h eh. ow did your flogging agree with you ,Jane? Ain't quite so free feeling and so independent as you was yesterday evening. And you could not treat a poor devil like me now, to another sermon could you---eh?"

" But Jane answered nothing but sobbed.

" Get up you little chicken." said Deldon, kicking her again.

Indeed this was a very difficult matterfor one so young to be so bruised and faint, and as poor Jane made efforts to do so, Deldon laughed wickedly.

" What makes you so spry and difficult this morning, Jane. " Laid up from your whipping last night eh."

However Jane by this time had gained her feet, but had fallen again and finding herself almost unable to get up had to help herself by grabbing the supports of a projection in the wall, and tried to confront her master with unsteady but unmoved front.

" The devil you can't stand up eh" said Deldon as she again fell. " Yet I believe you have not got enough yet. Since you can't stand up you little brat, get right up on your knees, and beg my pardon, for what you did last night!"

Jane did not move.

" get up pu upon your knees, you little rut" said Deldon, striking her with his riding whip. But Jane could not do it. He grabbed her and tried to make her kneel but she grew dazed and then fell in a swoon. Seeing she was too far gone yet to do anything with her he next went to where Jannie was and said to her when he reached her;

" Down you little christian dog" and he struck her across the face with his whip. " Down and beg pardon for hitting the man and boy in the face with rock and gravel."

" Mr Deldon I will not do it" said Jannie defiantly. I can't do it and I never shall for I only did what is right. And I shall do so again if ever the time comes. I will never allow any overseer to strick me ar across the face, come what may."

" Yes you little black haired brat---but you don't know what I could do to you if I so desire to. you think what you've seen me do to Jane is nothing, and what that you seemed lot off more easy I'm not going to do with you what I please just because I stole you fro, general Mylr Myletze. but I tell you that I have done within your sight is nothing at all. How would you like me to tie you to a big tree with wire and not ropes, and then have your fellow slaves forced to light a slow fire around you ---I suppose that would be pleasant would it not."

" Mr Deldon" said Jannie," I know you can do most dreadful things but" she stretched her little form upward, and then clasped her hands" but after you have killed my body, there ain't anything else you can do. And oh for you and me there will be Eternity after that, and one y for you you will like to escape."

ETERNITY.---the word thrilled through the little girl with light and hope, as she spoke, it thrilled through the wicked mans soul too, but like the bite of an adder. Deldon gnashed on her with his teeth; but rage kept him silent, and Jannie like a saint disenthralled, spoke in a clear and cheerful voice.

Mr Deldon, though you have me I'll never call you master, because you have never bought me, for I m stolen from Myletze. But otherwise I'll be a true and faithful servant to you. I'll give you all the work I can do, all my time, and all my little strength, but my little soul I will never give up to mortal men. I will hold on to God , and therefore put his commands before all---die or live, you may be sure of that. Mr Deldon none of us slaves are a bit afraid to die. And I would sooner die than be a slave. And you may whip, me starve, me or burn me---it will only send me to heaven where I want to go."

" I'll make you give in to me though before I am done with you you black haired brat." said Deldon in a rage.

" I shall have help" said Jannie defiantly." You'll never do it."

" And who in the he h---ll is going to help you'd like to know " ? Said Deldon scornfully.

" The Lord al almighty himself" said Jannie.

" Da D----n your" said Deldon, and he would have felled her to the earth with one blo blow of his ugly fist, had not a cold soft hand, touched his at this moment. He turned, it was Anna Aronburg, but indeed the cold soft touch, recalled his dream of the night before, And it flashed th through his brains, like all the de fearful images of the night watches, with a portion of the horror that had accompa accompanied them.

" Will you be a fool? said Anna. " Let Jannie alone now. And let me alone to get Jane fit to be in the field again. Is it not just as I told you?"

They do say that any kind of wild beast endlused in bullet proof skin yet have such a spot where they are vulnerable, and fierce fierce reckless unbelieving wicked sicked reprobates have commonly this point also in their superstitutious dreads.

" "well have it your own way" he said doggedly to Anna." Hark ye " he then said to Jannie" I cannot deal with you now, neither Annie either, because the business is pressing; and I want and need all my slaves in the fields; but I will never forget, and neither will the driver whom you knocked out his teeth with that rock. I and he will score it against you you black haired little brat; and some time I'll some time I'll have my pay out of you."

Deldon then turned away and walked out of the field.

" There you go you old devil" said Anna to herself looking darkly after him" You will meet your own reckoning too--- my poor girl why don't you try and be more meek. Don't hit those overseers, even if they do strike you. Hold now since you defied him you have also his ill will upon you, to follow you day in and day out, hanging like likea mad dog on your throat----sucking your blood, bleeding away your life drop by drop. Oh I know the man."

For a short while we must leave Jannie in the hands of her persecutors, while return to perse the fortu fortunes of Angelinia Aronburg and her friend Jennie Farmer, whom we left in general Vivianannas army. Deldon before he came to sneak Jannie from Mylatzes army as we read left groaning and tossing in a cot of a christian tent under the motherly supervision of a Nun w o who found him to the full as truct ehe a patient as a sick wild rhinoceros. Imagine a tall good nun, whose clean white bronet, overarches as it seems thoughtful gray eyes. A snowy crept if nearlyly matly on her bosom, her purple dress rustles peacefully, as she glides up and down the big sick tent.

" To h---l with the sevilish christian dogs" cried Deldon, giving a violent throw of the bed clothes.

" I must request you, Mr Deldon not to use such language within this christian keep or it will go hard with you" said the Sister, as she quietly rearranged the cot."You know you are a prisoner here too."

" Well I won't sister Rose, if I can help it" said Deldon----" But it enough to take a fellow swear and blasphemes---to be found in so cursed a condition."

The un remobed a comforter from the bed, straightenes the clothing again; and tucked them in, saying as she did so;

" I wish sir, you w would leave off cursing and swearing and save your soul, and think the penalty of your wickes ways."

" What the devil " said Deldon" Should I think of them for. Indeed last thing I would like to think of----hang all of it" and Deldon flounced over, unto untacking and disarranging everything, in a manner frightful to behold.

" Those two girl dogs with that little slave boy are here too I suppose Sister" said he sullenly after a pause.

" They sure are and protected" said The sister.

" They better remain right here then" said Deldon." If they do it will be better for them."

" probably they won't as they have to go on to Emperor Vivians army" said the Hun knitting peacefully.

" Well hark ye" said Deldon fiercely and his eyes blazed with fury". I have soldiers and correspondents and the, like watching every approach in the direction of that christian army from town to town, farm to farm and the like and also wood and swamps that watchesevery person for us. I don't care if I tell now, but I swear I know they'll never get away if they leave this camp. But I hope to h---l they stay so they won't be taken just to spite those soldiers who deserted me---the cursed cowards---to h---l with every thing."

" Mr Deldon" said the Hun.

" I tell you Sister Rose, if you bottle a fellow up too tight I shall split" said Deldon. " But about the girls I hope they do get caught. Their descriptions are out everywhere and the little boy too."

" The nationals will tend to that matter" said the sister with characteristic composure.

As I tat this place take leave of Deldon for a while. I may as well say, that having lain two weeks within this camp, sick only from the effects of his wound, Deldon finally arose from his cot, and then he saw the slightest chance stole away from the camp wounding two guards who tried to hinder him, and set about with as much fury as possible to slave catching, and then hearing of Mylatres army and knowing he only has a good stock of "slaves which he sents as tribute to the enemy instead of selling he therefore entered secretly and as we now know is in possession of Jennie and one whom he took along from Mylatres army with him. Yet before even this happened, long before, as Deldon had informed the nun that the two girls and the boy if they were forced to leave the camp would be looked for anywhere they went, it was thought among them to divide themselves. Deldon with the boyscout friend, was to forward themselves seperately, and a night or two after, well al armed, Angelinia Arenburg, and Jennie Turner were driven privately into El Verso village, and lodged beneathba kindly roof, To make preparations to take their passage now across the mighty Mis-sillestor Rum River, wide as an immense inslund lake at this point and yet with a swift and turbulent current.

Their night too was now far spent, and the morning star rose before them. And now about liberty for the many child slaves. Libery. indeed a word sletric. What is it? Is there anything more than a name in it. Why even men and women of merica itself, have a strong thrill at that word, for which their fathers bled, and their braver mothers were willing that their noblest and best should die? Indeed is there anything in it glorious and dear for a nation, that is not also glorious and dear to millions of little slaves. What is freedom to a nation, but freedom to all the persons in it? What is freedom to a little boy who sits there between two beautiful girls, wi with his little arms folded over his little chest, the tint of Abbie-nnian blood in his cheeks, its dark fire in his little eye---what is freedom to a little slave boy already rescued? To all others freedom was the right of a nation, is the right of a nation to be a nation. To this little boy for his future life it is the right to be a man, and not a dying little slave, the right to call his father, his daddy, and to be protected from the lawless violence of Glandelinian soldiery, the right to be protected and educated, , the right when he grows up to have a home of his own, a kind loving wife of his own , the right to call the wife of his bosom his wife, , to have a religion of his own , a character of his own, and not to belong to the will of another.

Indeed all these thoughts were rolling and seething in Gertrudes breast, as she was pensively leaning her pretty head on her hand, watching Jennie turner as she was cap cluptting adapting to her slender and pretty little form the costole of a little boys attire, in which h it was deemed saftest she should make her escape to the christian army under the Emperor.

" Now for the needed sacrifice " said she as she stood before a looking glass, and shook down her silky abundance of golden curly hair." I say Gertrude it isa pity too" said she as she held up some of it almost wistfully---" pity so much of it has got to come off?"

Gertrude smiled sadly, but did not answer.

Jennie, turned to the glass, and the scissors clittered as one long lock after another was det detatched so that she were now short bobbed hair.

" There now that will do" she said taking up a hair brush" now for a few fancy touches."

" There Gertrude ainit I a pretty young little boy?" she said turning around to Angelinia Arenburg, laughing and blushing at the same time." Now I can be your loving boy friend all the way."

" you always will be pretty do what you will" said Gertrude.

" What does make you still so sober?" said Jennie, knl kneeling on one knee shoulaying her hand on Gertrudes. " We are only within thirty six hours to Emperor Vivians Great army, general Vivianianna said." Only two days and nights of constant traveling and then--oh then--"

" Oh Jennie" said Gertrude drawing her tward her" That is it. But remember our fate can be narrowing down to a point with so many watching. To come so near to be almost in sight, and yetthere is danger in losing out yet. I shall never let the boy live if he is in danger of being retaken Jennie."

" Don't fear" said Jennie, hopefully." The Good Lord would not have allowed us to come so far already, if he did not have any intentions of allowing us to go through to the end. I seem always to feel Him with us, Gertrude."

" You are a blessed good companion Jennie" said Gertrude, clasping her with a convul & convulsive grasp." But oh tell me, can He really pull us through. Will we really reach the National army with him. Shall the boy at last be free and see his father again?"

" I am sure of it Gertrude" said Jennie looking upward, while tears of hope and enthusiasm shone on her long golden eye lashes. I always feel it in me that God is going to bring us safely through the adventure desperate as it might be."

" I will believe you, Jennie" said Gertrude rising suddenly up." I will believe. But come let's be off" said she holding her friend off at arms length, and looking admiringly at her." You looklike a pretty little fellow indeed. That crop of short bobbed hair is quite becoming. Put on your little cap. Some a little to one side. I never saw quite so pretty a boy. But it's almost time for our disguised escort, I wonder if the general himself has got the little boybrigged,--why even to how don't don't know the little lads name."

Just at this moment the tent entrance was tttrust aside, and general Arenburg himself entered, leading the little boy dressed in girls clothing and a man accompanied him.

" What a pretty little girl he sure would make" said Jennie turning him around. " As we don't know his real nake name we ll call him Jacob Saunders, you see--don't the name come nicely. I'd like to pren pretend we are of english personality but that would make them think we are escaping slaves, probably, and besides there is no one of us who can speak it, at least least not I."

The child stood gravely, regarding the two girls in their new and strange attire, observing a profound silence, and occasionally drawing deep sighs, and peeing at them timidly from under his long dark curls.

" Don't you know us" said Gertrude, stretching her hands tward him.

But the child clung shyly to the man.

" Come Gertrude why do you continue to coax him, when you know he has to travel with another person now."

" I know it's foolish" said Gertrude---" yet I can't bear to have him turn away from me like that. But come where's my cloak. Here--how is it the boy puts on a coat, Gertrude. This is my first experience entirely in a boys full attire."

" You must wear it so" said Gertrude, said Gertrude putting on the coat.

" So then" said Jennie, imitating the motion several times so she would remember,

" And I must stamp and take long steps like a boy, and look saucy?"

" Don't exert yourself too much on that" said Gertrude." There is now and then silly young boys who act like girls you know, and think therefore it would be better and easier to act like a boy who is in the class of sissies."

" And these gloves, mercy upon me" said Jennie laughing to herself" Why my hands are almost lost entirely in them."

" But I advise you to keep them on pretty-str strictly" said Gertrude." Your little slender fingers might bring us both out. Now mr soldier you are to go under the charge and be our father kind. The boy will stay with general Vivianenna."

" Is I've Heard" said the soldier" That there have been men sent everywhere from all camps of the enemy against you two and a boy."

" Ine, have said Gertrude. " Well if we see any such people they will fight with us in a wa, they won't expect."

A few Horses now came forward to the tent door, and as the, mounted the soldiers crowded around them with farewell greetings. The disguises of the party has assumed were in accordinace to their own plans. The soldier a respectable man had consented to appear as a guardian of the two, and in order to attatch himself to them, he had been allowed to be with them as long as they remained in camp, and then to attire himself in civilians clothing.

After a few hours of riding they came to the big river, and the two young little boys arrive, they appeared finding the bridge out decicedecided to take a boat across but had to pose as some kind of traveling Glandelinianchildren looking for passage to Kenleys army and therefore had to buy their passage across. Jennie walked up the plank into the boat, and Gertrude attended to what little baggage they needed to take across. Gertrude was standing at the captians office, settling for her party, when he she overh overheard two Glandelinian soldiers talking quite close to her.

" I have watched every one that came on board that river boat" said one" and I kno know therefore that they are not on board that boat."

The boive w voice was that of the boat inspector. And the speaker to whom he addressed though Jennie Turner or Gertrude did not see him was out old time friend... if we may call him friend, Nero Gunnia the spy who so much resembles the Mutt man in the Daily news comics who with that valuable perser perseverance which marks him out as a man that seldom fails in what he's after, had come on to this point, while having all places searched for the one he was after, and he for one was not after Jennie or Gertrude but a christian spy who had got away from , him. like a roaring lion seeking whom he may devour. But the inspector of the boat was looking for the two gi girls and he said to the spy;

" I wish thoughthere was some chance of locating those girls that kidnapped from My letxes army that little boy slave. You would easily know the two girls, one is Jennie Turner, and the other Angelinia Aronburg, and the boy is easy to recognise for he has the child slave brank mark on his chest and two onnie left hand."

The hand with w ich Gertrude was taking the tickets, and change trembled a little, but she turned cooly around, fixed an unconcerned glance of the on the face of the speaker and walked leau lesiurely toard the other part of the boat, where Jennie and the soldier with the disguised litle boy stood wisaiting for her. The soldier with the the boy sought the seclusion of the mens cabin, where the unusual beauty f of the supposed little girl drew many fluttering comments from the passengers, but sneers and and growns and black looks from those who were real glandelinians.....

Gertrude herself a had the sutifue satisfaction, as the bell rang out its farewell peals, to see the " knut mutt looking spy walk down the plank to the shore, and therefore drew a long sigh of great relief, when the boat had swiftly put a long distance between them...It was a beautiful day, and the little blue waves of the large lake like river, danced ripplingly beautifully, and sparkling with spangled flag flakes of gold in the sunlight. A fresh strong breese blew down the river, and the big boat plowed her way right gallently onward. Oh indeed what an untold world there can be in one humen heart, whether big or little. And who could be thinking as Gertrude thought as she continued to walk calmly up and down the long deck of the river steamer, with Jennie Turner at her side, of all that was burning at her bosom! The easiness of the escape escape so far which seemed unusual from all her other experiences earlier in the war, and the mighty good that seemed approaching indeed seemed too good to fair and say to seem to be a reality, and therefore she felt a jealious dread, every moment of the day, that something would rise to snatch it from her, especially as she knew she was on a glandelinian boat, and most of the passa passengers were glendelinin Glandelinians many of whom looked at her sasipciously and with black looks.

But the boat swept on. hours floated, and at last clear and full rose the blessed shores on the other side of the river, shores that seemed to be charmed as if by a mighty spell, with one touch to dissolve every incantation of danger no matter in what la guage r pronounced, or by what national power confirmed.

Gertrude and jennie stood arm in arm, as the boat neared the small town of Glandorn. Her breath grew thick and short, a mist gathered before her eyes, she silently pressed the little hand that lay trembling on hi her arm. The bell rang, the boat stopped. Scarcely seeing what she did, she looked out her little baggage, and gathered her little party. In a few minutes and not hindered either the little com any were landed on the shore.

They stood still till all those leaving the boat were gone, and the boat had shoved absoutely cleared, and then with tears and embracings,, the two girl friends, with the little wondering boy in their arms knelt down and lifted up their hearts to God. And the little party were soon taken by the soldier, to the hospitably abode of a small convent, when christian charity had placed here and at which point the big war had not yet reached or devastated, and also whom christian charity had placed here as a sherpard to the outcast and woud wandering, who were constantly finding an asylum on this on this shore from persecuting enemies, who can speak indeed the blessedness of that day of firee freedm freedom coming for the little toy. And indeed is not the sense of liberty, a higher and finer one than any of the other fic fireThe more speak and breathe ------go in and come out and go back in again unwatched and free from all danger. and who can speak of the blessings of that rest, which also would come down on the free and happy, under laws which insure to all of her the rights that God has given to humanity, . how fair and precious to that mother was that sleeping childs little face endeared by the memory of a thousand horrible dangers. How impossible was it, was it How impossible was it for many children to sleep when they knew the perils that beset them in the path of that awful war. And yet the million millions of little slaves, far from home, and parents, who had not one acre of ground ground----not a roof or any thing that they could call their own. They had not what the birds of the air have, nor the flowers of the field, and not me could sleep, smile now Gertrude and jennie with the little boy could not even lalsep for joy at their escape so far.

" Oh ye who taketh freedom from man, what worlds shall ye answer it to God. But to takeall freedom away from little children, make them slaves, keep them down... as lost souls woe be unto them that do."

We have not many of us in the weary way of life felt in some hours, how far easier it might be to die, than to live, when we are in dire pain and misery or have lost a child father or parent, or wife or husband that is dear to us. Even the martyr when faced even by a death of bodily anguish and horror, and persecution and tortures beyond comprehension finds in the very terror of this impending doom astrong tonicand stillument. of course there might be some vivid excitement, a thrill and fervor which we know would carry him through any crisis whatever of suffering that is the birth hour of eternal glory, happiness, and rest. But to live, to have to wear on day after day, in torturing toil, standing up under tortures and the lash, and stand mean bitter low harassing slavery, every nerve dampened and depressed, every power of feeling gradually smothered, this long and wasting mytr martyrdom this slow daily bleeding away of the inward life drop by drop, hour by hour---this is sure the true searching test, of what not only may be in a man or a woman or even what are in little children.

When poor Jane stood face to face with her wicked perse tur persecutor, and heard his threats, and blasphemies, and thought within her little innocent soul that now her hour had come, her young little heart swelled bravely within her, and she therefore thought she could surely bear torture by fire, bear anything with the vison of vision of jesus and heavy but a short distance off, but when he was gone, and the present present excitement passed off---there came back the pain of her bruised and weary little little limbs, and also there returned the sense of her utterly degraded, hopeless, forlorn state, and the day passed tearfully though for her?

Long before her wounds were healed, Deldon insisted that she should be put back to the regular field work, and then came day after day of pain and weariness, aggravated by every kind of injuttice and indignity that the ill will of a mean and malicious mind could devise. nd whoever would be in our circumstances has made trail of pain , even with all the alleviatio s which for us usually attend it, must know the awful irritation that comes with it. Either Annie or even poor Jane I no longer wondered at the unusual surl surliness of their little slave compulsion, nay they found the placid sunny temper, which had been the habit of their own young lives, broken in on, and sorely tr strained by the inroads of the same thing.

She had hoped for the leasure to read her little bible and so did jennie Jennie but there was no such thing as lesiure there, in the height of the very early June season and it only being the middle of the first week too Deldon did not at all hesitate to press all his hands through, working them furiously from six in the early morning untill eleven at night, through Sundays and weekdays alike. And why should he not?--he made more crops for Uncle Sams army and others by it, and gained his his money, and if it were out a few more hands, he surely could buy better ones. He should worry how they suffered, children were made to suffer; that is why they were put on the earth for, nothing but work and suffering. They ain't supposed to play, they are not supposed to have parents, and good times, and are not supposed to be happy. At first Jennie, or Jane used to read a verse or two from her bible, by the flicker of the fire, after they had returned from the long hours of their daily toil, but for poor Jane after the cruel treatment she had recieved, she used to come back to her shed so exhausted and foot sore, that her head swam and her eyes failed, when she triedto read, and she was compelled to stretch herself down, with the others in utter exhaustion.

And it is very strange that the religious peace and trust, which had born her whitherto, should give way to toshings of doubt and despondent darkness. The gloomiest of all prombleus of her mysterious life, was constantly before her eyes---little souls crushed and ruined, evil triumphant-------and God unusually silent. All the time he was a slave from the beginning even Jennie herself had wrestled in her own little soul in darkness and sorrow, and often she had really lost faith in God too. H She now thought of general Wyletse and his army, and prayed daily and nightly that God would send her deliverance. And then she would watch day after day in the vague hope of seeing some one sent to redeem her, or the christian soldiers to suddenly burstupon the plantation and take possession, and when no one came, she would crush back to her soulbitter thoughts---that it was vain to serve God, that God had forgotten her entirely. He or Jennie too sometimes saw Anna Aronburg, and sometimes when summoned to the house caught a glimpse of the delightful form of the disguised Vivian Girl Princess but did not talk with either, in fact, there was no time for her to converse with any one.

One evening she was sitting in utter dejection and prostration by a few blazing brands, where her coarse supper was baking. She put a few bits of burs brushwood on the fire, and strove to raise the light, and then drew her little worn Bible from her pocket. She still had all the marked passages, which had thrilled her soul so often words of ppatriarches, and sebrs and poets, and Sages, who from early time as we all knew had spoken courage to man---voices from the great cloud of witnesses, who ever surround us in the sorrows of life. Had the word lost its power, or could the failing eye and weary sense no longer answer to the touch of that mighty inspiration? Heavily sighing, she put it in her pocket and tears rolled down her cheeks. A coarse wicked and haughty laugh aroused her; she looked up, Wicked old Deldon was standing opposite to her.

" Well Jennie you sprite" he said scornfully" You are beginning to find that syour religion does no good for you, it seems. I thought I should get that through your silly little head at last."

The cruel taunt was more to her than hunger, cold, and ha f half nakedness. But h she was silent.

" you are one of the worse of little fools that I have ever seen" said Seldon " por I meant to make it well with you, when I took you from Mylatsas army. You might have been better off than you were in Mylatsas army even, and had more easy times, and instead of getting a lash or two every day, you might have had more liberty to work as a sort of little house keeper in my own house, and had now and then a good warming up of hot coffee. Come ,annie don't you think you had better be reasonable. Throw that old bible th trash in the fire, and be de I ar."

" The ord od forbid." said annie most fervently.

" You see od is not going to help you, he does not keep his promises with you, and if he had been helping you, he would not let me get you from Mylatsa in the first place. This catholic religion and all others annie is all a mess of money making schemes. I know all about it for I have had my experiences. You had better hold to me only, for I am someone, and can do more than any creature of "saved."

" go No sir" said annie I'll hold on to God. The Lord He may help me or not, but I'll hold on to him, and believe Him to the last."

" You are insane I can see that you little fools" said Seldon spitting scornfully at her, and spurning her with his foot." Never mind I'll put you down yet, and bring you under, and if I can't come general in Mylatsa army will get yo---youlittle."

2 And Seldon turned away.

When a heavy weight presses a soul to the lowest level at which endurance is possible, there is an instant and most desperate effort of every physical and moral nerve, to throw off that weight and therefore the heaviest anguish often precedes a return tide of joy and courage.so was it now with poor annie. The wicked sadistic taunts of her cruel master, but a master for some reason or other who did not dare strike her as far as it seemed, sunk her before dejected and forlorn soul to the lowest ebb and though her faith still held on like a drowning man to the bottom of a boat, it was with a numb despairing grasp. Jannie sat like one stunned, at the fire. Suddenly everything around her seemed to fade, and a vise vision rose before her of one crowned with thorns, buffeted and bleeding bleeding. And annie gazed in awe and great wonder, at the majestic patience of the face, the deep sad eyes thrilled her to her innermost heart,, her soul awoke as if with floods of emotions, she stretched out her hands and fell upon her knees;---when gradually the vision changed--the sharp thorns became dazzling rays of glory, and in ple spe splendor inconcievable,she saw the same face bending compassionately before her and a voice seemed to a say" He that overcometh shall sit down with me on My throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my father on His throne."

How long poor annie lay there she knew not. When she came to herself the fire was gone out, her clothes or what remained of her clothes were wit with the chill and drenching dews, but the dread soul crisis was now passed, and in the joy that filled her, she no longer felt the cold, hunger, degradation, disappointment or wretchedness. From her deepest soul she felt a relief, and she looked up to the silent ever lifting s stars---imitations of the angelic hosts, who ever look down on every one good or bad, and the solitude of the night continued .

These she could have been among slaves and become familiar with the religious history of these little slaves, would become acquainted with that religion like what I have written are very common among them. I would myself Have been glad to be among them disguised as a r driver or overseer, and have the chance to hear frm from their own lips of things of a very affection and touching nature. Usually the affections and images of the little minds become so dominant and overpowering, that they press into service the outward senses, and make them give tangled images to the h inward inward ual imaginations. Therefore who shall measure the all pervading spirit or what an all pervading spirit may do with the these hundreds of thousands of little ones, or the ways in which He may encourage the disponding little souls of the desolate. If these poor little forsaken slaves believe that Jesus had appeared and spoken to him, who shall contradict him? Did He not say that His mission in all ages, was to bind up the broken hearted, and pt set at liberty all them that are bruised?

When the next morning approached and the bugle woke the little slumberers to go forth to the fields, there was among those torn and tattered and shivering little wretches, one little girl who walked with an exultant thread, for firmer indeed than the ground she trod on was her strong faith in Almighty, eternal eternal love. A Ah Seldon try all your wicked cruelty now. Utmost agony, woe, degradation, want and loss of all things, shall only hasten on the process by which you will look for a greater horror than even a Hellish sentence by and by. From this time an inviolable sphere of peace encompassed also the lowly heart of the oppressed child slave--jane an ever present savior hallowing it as a Temple. It seemed now that the bleeding of all earthly regrets was all passed, though her will seemed bent, and bleeding and struggling along, but nevertheless was now entirely merged in the Devine. So short now seemed her remaining life---so near so vivid seemed eternal blessedness---that all her woes seemed to fall from her unheeded. And every one noticed the change in her appearance, for cheerfulness and alertness seemed to return to her, and a strange quietness which the worse insults and innu injuries could ruffle seemed to possess her, entirely.

" what the devil has happened to that jane?" Seldon said to His driver Cuid!" After ssed a voice within him such as of old his Master used in the demoniac soul saying " ying" What have we to do with Thr Thee, Thou Jesus of Nazareth? Art Thou come to ilment us before the time?and annie dear little soul overflowed with great compass ion and sympathy for the many poor little wretches by whom she was s so thickly rrounded. To her it seemed as if freedom somehow was really coming, she often felt it, and if out of the strange treasu ury r treasury of pow e and joy with which she as endowned from above, she longed to pour out something for the relief of others and of their woes.

Of course it is true for a place like this that opportunities even though not rarely was quite risky, but on the way to the field, fields, and back again, when the overseers were not looking, and also during the hours of labor,, when a little chance did fall her way, she did succeed succeed in her simple way of extending a helping hand to the weary, the disheartened and discouraged. The poor o worn down brutalised little creatures, at first could scarcely comprehend this, but when it was continued for about a week a after jannie had first come to Seldons, it began quickly to awaken the long silent chords in their benumbed hearts. Gradually and also interceptibly the strange silent patient little girl, who was ready to bear every ones burden, and sought help from ----------And who stood aside for all, and came last and took least, yet was the foremost to share the little what she had with any one who needed,--the little girl who during a cold night would give up her tattered blanket, to add to the comfort of some o other little girl who shivered with sickness and the chill of the air, and who helped the paper ones at their work in the fields, at the terrible risk of coming short in her ion crop lines--and who though persons persued with unrelenting cruelty by their comma nder tyrant, never joined in uttering a word of reviling or cursing------this little girl at last began to have a strange power over them all including even the overseers, and when a wild fire broke out near the plantations because of the [illegible] setting things agoing and when the slaves were forced to go out to help fight the flames at it any risk, some who were not able to go or who would refuse to go, would gather to hear either from her or jane about jesus. They s however would all have gladly met to hear, and pray and sing, in some secluded place, together, but Seldon and his overseers surely would not permit it, and very often brutally and violently broke up such attempts with blasphemies, and brutal execrations------so that the blessed News had to slowly circulate from one little slave to another.Yet indeed who can really tell of the simple joy, with which mostly all of these poor little outcasts, to whom life was a joyless journey to a dark unknown, heard of a Compassionate Jesus redeemer, and a heavenly home! As we our selves know it is usually the statement of missionaries, that of all races of the earth, no none have received the gospel which such eager ducility as the very African himself himself. Therefore the principal of reliance and faith without question, which is its foundation, is more a native ailment in to this race, tha than any other, and it had often been bfound among them, that a stray seed of truth borne on some slight breese or accident into hearts the most ignorant has sprung up into fruit, whose obedience had shamed or shamed that of people of higher and better nations.

At these l little child slaves of all races, took it up much quicker, and once they did, all all hell could not stamp it out of them. Many of the poor slaves in whose simple faith had been well nigh crushed and overwhelmed by the avalanches of cruelty and wrong which had befallen upon them, felt their souls raised up by the hymns and passages of the Holy writ, which this little girl slave and missionary, breathed into their ears at intervals, as theywere going to and returning from work, and even the half erased and wandering mind of "nna Aronburg was soothed and calmed by this simple and obtrusive influences.

But long before she had been strung to madness and despair by the crushing agonies of a whole life, and had therefore often resolved in her little wild soul hour of swift revenge, when she should take revenge on the oppressor all the cruelt ies she had been a witness to, or which she had in her own person suffered elsewhere in the past!Therefore one night, after all in Jannie's cabin ha had sunk to sleep, she suddenly aroused by seeing her face at one of the open windows, and she was making a silent gesture a silent gesture for her to come out. Jannie came csilently to the door. It was between two and three oclock in the morning, and it was bright and calm as a bright moon was shining in the sky. And jannie observed as the light of the moon fell her fell upon Anna's large blue eyes, that there was a wild and most pe culiar glare inthem, unlike their wong wonted fixedness and despair.

" come here with me" she said to jannie laying her small hand on her wrist, and drawing her forward with a force and grip as if the hand was of steel" Come here I have good newsfor you."

" What Anna?" said jannie anxiously and half fearfully.

" Jannie o would you not like to be free to night?"

" I shll Have it in the proper time." said jannie looking fearfully around.

" Yes but you can be a free little girl to night if you choose." said Anna" with a flash of sudden energy." Come on."

Jannie hesitated.

" Yes " Said Anna in a whisper, fixing her blue eyes on hher," Come along. Don' t be afraid." [illegible] [illegible] [illegible] 1042 ner whipping she was down and crippled, and now she is like a robin."

"Hard telling o boss, maybe she ins intends to run off on us some day."

"I would like to see her or any one try that" said Deldon with a d savage grin" "would we not Caldi."

"I sure guess we would. Ho ho, haw." said the man laughing wickedly." My goodness goodness what fun we would have. To see her sticking in the bogs, chasing and tearing through to get on the other side, with the roaring dogs holding on to her like leeches. Good Lord, I laughed fit to pilt my sides open that time we caught one girl that here that girl called ,nn. I thought they had already eaten her up before ; could get them off. He never lived through it either; for her body was torn open by those dogs."

" I reckon she will run off h if she has the chance" said Deldon." So now Caldi, you keep a sharp look out. If the little brat insteads to do anything suspicious o or makes any kind of a break as if to rush out of the camp trip her up."

" I'll watch everything she does sir" said the overseer. " I'll tree the little skunk, never fear."

This was spoken as Deldon was getting o on to his horse to go to Munleys lines . Near Phelantonburg. That night as he was returning, he thought he would and make a circuit of the plantation n underide around the quarters to see if all was safe for He had that instinctive dread that some of the slaves knowing hes near a christian army might lay may take advantage of the night to sneak off. It was a bright moonlight night, and the shadows of the graceful pine trees, threw enormous ill shaped shadows, and there was that transparent stillness in the air which it seemed almost a wicked sin to disturb. Deldon was therefore quite a distance from the qu quarters of the little slaves when he was started to hear the voice of o some one singing a catholic hymn. It was seldom any such sound there as he allowed none of his slaves to sing, and he paused to liss listen. A musical childish voice sang,

Lord for to morrow and it's needs, do not pray,
Keep me My God from stain of sin, just for to day,
Let me no wrong or idle word, unthinkingly say,
Set Thou a seal upon my lips, just for to day.

Let me both diligently work and duly pray,
Let me be kind in word and deed, just for to day;
Let me in season, Lord, be grave, in Season gay,
Let me be faithful to Thy grace, just for to day.

Let me be alert to do my will, prompt to obey,
Help me to mortify my flesh, just for to day,
And if to day my life should ebb away,
Give me Thy sacraments bevine, sweet Lord to day.

In purgutory's cleansing flame, brief be my stay,
Oh, take me in Thy loving arms, lest I should stray,
So for to morrow and its needs I do not pray,
But keep me, guide me, love me, Lord, just for to day."

" go he" said Deldon fiercely to himself" She thinks so does she the little catholic skunk. How I hate these cursed catholic Hymns, they sound so confounded silly and nutty. Here you you devil and bratty skunk" said he wildly as he rode suddenly out upon Jannie, and raising his riding whip" How dare you be starting singing quartette of religious songs when you know singing or music is not allowed, and when you ought to be inbed. Shut your little mouth you skunk and get inside your den before I scourge you with this whip."

"Yes sir Deldon" said Jannie somewhat defiantly as she rose to go in.

Deldon however was provoked beyond measure by Jannie's evident defiance of him and riding up to her a started to belabor her over the head and shoulders.

"Where youskunk" he said" See if you'll feel so dignified after that."

Jannie could have picked up a rock to hit him with for she was blinded by rage, but there was nothing she had to go into the hut but she taunted him and told him she would surely get him on time for that saying " You are not my master and I won't have you you dirty child beater and thief." And as Jannie disap disap disappeared into her hut; the rascal h wheeled his horse suddenly round, and suddenly there passed vividly through his mind one of those sudden thoughts that often send the lightning of realization realization across the dark and wicked soul. He understood full well that Jannie herself m small as she was was standing between him and his victim, and he blasphemed "ed for sending him the ill luc luck of having taken her out of the army camp, and cursed himself for stealing her. And the submisive and silent child poor Jane whom taunts, nor threats, nor stripes nor cruelties could disturb also.

sailing. I would have d ne it done it myself only I do not care to do it alone. Come along. I want you to shoot the brute to death."

" No I could not do it for a million heavens, Anna " Said Jannie most firmly stopping and h l holding her back, as she was pressing forward.

" But think of all these poor little creatures" said Anna bitterly" We might set them all free ina moment, and if we cannot find our way into the camps of the christians we can go somewhere in the best parts of the swamps, and find an island, and live by our selves, for I ha have heard of it being done. A y Any life for the slaves is better than this."

" No indeed I'll not do it it's murder" said Jannie firmly" And no good comes of slaying our masters, for we'd pay for it worse if we were taken. And I'd sooner chop su my right hand off."

"Then I shall do it" said Anna turning. " I'llshoot him my self.

" Oh but Anna" said Jannie throwing herself before her" For the sake of the dear Lord who had died on the Cross for us, don't sell your por little soul to the devil that day. And nothing but evil will come of us. And indeed the Lord has not called upon us to revenge our wrongs. We have to suffer and wait his time."

" Wait" said Anna scornfully. Haven't I waited---waited until t until I'm dis dizzy and sick at heart. What has many of these cruel masters even made me suffer before I became a spy. What has hundreds of thousands of these little ones suffered. And is he not wringing the life blood ut of you and Jane. I'm called on, all the dead slaves call me. His time surely has come, and I'll kill him, and set all the slaves free."

" No,no,no" said poor Jannie pleadingly holding the small hands of her friend, which were clenched with spasmodic violence. " No or you'll be a lost soul. You must not do that it's murder. The dear Lord never was nailed on the Cross to shed is own blo od for nothing, and he He shed only his own, and which h he poured out for us when we were all his enemies. Lord help us to follow Your steps, and love our wicked enemies!"

" Love" said Anna, with a fierce flare-----" love such enemies. It i is not in flesh and blood. The enemy have devastated the christian country, let loose big floods, and committed millions of outrages of all kinds and we should love them. Nah."

" No it is not in fl flesh and blood" said Jannie looking up" But God gives it to us, and that is the final victory. When we can love and pray over all, and through all the battle is past, and the victory is here,---glory to God." and with streaming eyes, and shocking voice,poor Jannie looked up straight to heaven.

And this poor child slaves,, called to the crown of thorns, the scourge the bloody sweat, the cross of agony---this is to be the fate of many no doubt but by this they if true would reign with christ, when His kingdom shall come on the earth.

The deep fervor of Jannie's feelings, the softness and pleading tone of her voice, her tears an and the pleading of her face fell like dew on the wild unsettled spirit of the poor girl spy. A strange softness gathered over the lurid fire of her eyes, she looked down, and Jannie could feel the relaxing muscles of her hands as she said;

" Did I not tell you that I am in possession of evil spirits? Oh Jannie poor Jannie, I cannot pray,-----I wish I could. I never have prayed since my sister was sold and my parents were brutally murdered. What you say is right , knowcit, but I know it, but when I try to pray, I only hate and curse. I can't pray."

" Yes but think of your poor soul." said Jannie compassionately." Satan desires indeed to have you, and he will if you are not careful. I always pray for you. Oh Anna you are free;you are a spy and you risk a lot more than you think. Ba some day you'll be killed by clandelinian soldiers, or if captured be shot as a spy. Please turn to the dear Lord Jesus before it is too late. He came to bind up the broken hearted, and com-fort all that mourn."""""

Anna stood silent, while large heavy tears, dropped from her down cast eyes.

"Anna" said Jannie at last in a hesitating tone, after surveying her a moment in profound silence." If ye could only get away from here with Violet, and take as many slaves is you dared with you------if the thing was possible------I would advise you and Violet to do it now, and not remain any longer for your healths sake---that is if you go without shee shedding blood needlessly------not otherwise."

" Would you try it with us, Jannie."

" Yes" said Jannie." The time was when I would have long ago, but the Lord had given me a work among these poor little souls, and have stayed with them, and born my trose with them to the end. It' s a snare with us all---it's more than we all can stand, and you'd better get them all to go with you if you can. You and Violet know the swamp, they, don,t and neither he or his overseers so you'll succeed somehow."

" I know of no way but through the grave with so many" said Anna." There's no beast or bird but can find a home somewhere, even the snakes and the alligators have their places to lie down and be quiet, but there's no place for us. Down in the darkest swamps their dogs will find us, hunt us, and there are bogs everywhere in the swamp too which is so treacherious that even a piece of paper will go down. Everybody and everything is against us---and therefore where shall we go? The christian lines is too far off, and Munley istoo near. If we could all disc disguise ourselves it would be all right. Bu But we have no means to do so."

Jannie was silent, but at length she said just to bring a hint of some plan,

"Him that saved daniel in the lions den, that saved the children in the fiery furnace, Him that walked on the sea, and bade the winds be still, He is alive yet, and I've faith to believe He can help you deliver the slaves, even without needless bloodshed. Try it please Anna and I,ll pray, with all my might for you."

By what strange law of mind it is that an idea long overlooked, and trodden under foot as a useless useless useless stone, suddenly sparkles out in new light, as a discovered diamond. Anna had often revolved for hours and hours, all possible or probable seems of escape with her for the slaves, and i dismissed them all as useless, as hopeless hopeless and impracticable, but at this moment there suddenly flashed through her young mind a plan so i simple, and feasable in all its details as to awaken an instant instant hope. To escape alone with Violet, yes that was easy all times as she knew the swamps and so did violet, but to the other question that had been diffus difficult.

She had once read a book called Sparrows and she decic decided to get out as she read of those children doing.

"Jannie dear I'll try it" she said suddenly, "but you and jane must do it with us. Better perish in the swamp than remain here."

"Amen" said Jannie" the Lord help us all."

CHAPTER SIXTY SEVEN.....

A DESPERATE STRATAGEM. ANOTHER YOUNG SPY.
SOME SORT OF A STORY ABOUT A GHOST. RESULTS.
SOME OTHER REMARKS.

There was a big garret like room in the house that Deldon occupied, and like most other garrets was a great desolate place indeed, dust hung with big cowebs, and littered with thrash of all sorts. The christian family that had once lived in the house in the days before the war, had imported a great deal of the most splendid furniture, most of which they took with them when leaving the house at the approach of Sherman's army, while which they ahad been forced to leave behind remained standing desolate in mouldering, unoccupied rooms, or stored away in this place. There were several large packing boxes now empty in which the furniture had been brought, and which stood against the sides of the big garret. There was only one small window there, which let in through its dusty dingy panes, a scanty uncertain light in on the tall high backed chairs and dusty tables and other furniture, that had before the war seen better days. Altoge ther to the wicked and fearsome it would have appeared altogether to be a weird and ghostly place, but ghostly as it seemed to be, it wanted not in legends among the child slaves, to increase its terrors. some few years before, a little girl slave who had tried to reveal somethings about Deldon to a Christian governer was confined up there for nearly three months. What passed there it is not right for me even to write, I would not dare even think, but all the little slaves used to whisper darkly to each other, and it was soon known that the body of the unfortunate little gr girl was one day taken down from there, and thrown into one of the bogs, and after that it was said that oaths and cursing, and the sound of violent blows and screaming used to ring through the old garret, and mingled with wailings and groans of despair.

It happened once that Deldon chanced to overhear something of that kind, and he broke out into a violent passion and swore that the next one who would speak to each other about what was going on in the garret, should have an opportunity to know what was there, for he would chain them up there for a year. This hint was enough to repress any unusual ammount of talking, though it did not of course disturb the credit of the story in the least. And gradually the staircase, that led to the garrent gattat garret, and even the passageway to the staircase, were avoided by every child slave who worked in the house from every one fearing to speak even of it also, and the legend was gradually spreading throughout the whole place. It therefore had suddenly occured to Anna Aronburg to make use of the superstitious excitability, which she even knew was so great in Deldon, for the purpose of her escapade and Violet's and the liberation of the little slaves.

Now Anna Aronburg always slept in the house since she came there, and her sleeping room was directly under the garrets. so once when she had the opportunity she told violet to hide herself up there some night and make an awful kind of noise which she obediently did, and then without consulting Deldon, Anna suddenly decided with some considerable istentation, to change all her belongings and appurtenances of the room to one at some considerable distance, Violet of course aiding her. And the other servants who were called on to aid her in this work, were running and bustling about with great zeal and confusion, when Deldon returned from a tour of the swamp.

"Hello you girl she devil" said Deldon" what in h---l are you up to now."

"Nothing but as long as I remain in this house, I believe I have a right to change my room to one somewhere else." said Anna doggedly.

"And what for pray you sprite?" said Deldon.

"I choose to do so for good reason of" said Anna.

"The h--l you do and for what?"

"I'm intitled to a little sleep now and then if you want me to overseer the place as I do."

"sleep---well what in the world is preventing you from sleeping. It ain't hot in that room at this early time of year."

"I could tell, I suppose if you have courage to hear." said Anna dryly.

"Speak out you minx."said Deldon.

"Oh nothing. I suppose it will not disturb you. Only terrible noises and people or one one little girl screaming, and somthing rolling and stamping around on the garret floor, half the night, from twelve to mourning!"

"it little girl you say screaming up in the garret" said Deldon uneasily---but forcing a laugh" who is she Anna."?

Anna raised her sharp blue eyes, and looked into Deldons with an expression that went through his bones as she sa said icily" To be sure Deldon who is she. I'd like to have you tell me. You don't know I suppose. Well neither do I. I don't go up there to inves ligate unless you want me to."

With an oath Deldon struck at her with his whip, but she glided to one side, and passed through the door, and looking back said"

"If you'll sleep in the room I'm leaving you'll know all about it. Perhaps you had never enough to try it." and then immediately she shut and locked the door.

Deldon blustered and swore, and threatened to immediately break down the door, but apparently thought better of it, and walked uneasily into his sitting room. Anna perceived her plan was striking home, and from that hour with the most exquisite address, she never ceased to continue the train of infuksences she had so quickly started..

There was a small knothole in the garret, and therefore also having read of Casey and how in the book of Uncle Toms cabin that negress had terrified Legree, she decided to follow her work, and therefore securing an old whiskey bottle belonging to Deldon but which he had cast aside, she broke it and inserted the long neck of it into the hole in such a manner that even when there was the least breese, there could be heard in the garret the most lugubrious and doleful wailing sounds, which proceeded from it. But when there was a stormy windy night, the noise increased to a perfect shriek, as a such as to credulous credulous and superstitutious ears might easily seem to be of the little girl when she was being murdered so brutally. These sounds were from time to time, heard by all and therefore revived in full force the memory of the old ghost story ghost legent of the little girl, and therefore a superstitucous creeping horror seemed to fill the house and the plantation too, and though no one dared to breathe it to Deldon or his overseers, he ...h and they found themselves encompassed by it, as by a s at a atmosphere.

As we all know there is no godless or wicked man that is never thoroughly superstitucous. Men and women living a real true christian life, is composed by the belief of a wise all ruling Father, whose presence fills the void known with light and order, but to any man or woman who has detroned ed, the spirit land is indeed, in the words of the Hebrew poet" a land of darkness and shadow of death" without any order, where the light is as dar hess darkness. Life and death to him are haunted grounds, filled with horrid gob goblin forms of vague and shadowy dread.

And Deldon had had the slumbering moral element in his roused by his encounters with poor Jane and Jennie, roused only to be resisted, by the determined forces of evil, but still there was a thrill and commotion of the dark inner world of this wicked mans soul, produced produced by every word, or prayer or hymn, that reacted in superstitutous horror and dread. The the influence of Anna Aronburg over him, was also of a strange and singular kind. She was free, he was not her owner, he could not be her tryant and tormentor. She alone seemed as he suspected wholly to do as she liked, he did not want her here, was afraid to drive her off, and though he crushed many slaves without scruple beneath the foot of brutality, yet it is so that the most brutal of men cannot live in constant association with even strong female children and not be greatly controlled by their nature. He was a little afraid of even Jennie, for his cruelties to others waked the fires of fiercer passions in her, and even she though his little slave, had become in a measure his mistress, and though he alternately did tyrannise over herv yet she was spitful and savage to his overseers if struck by their whip and he dreaded her. He knew she was of pure spanish blood no matter where she was taken from and therefore had the nature of a spanish girl, and he feared often he'd see her stopp stooping over his bed with a gleaming knife in her little hand.

And this influence of both Jennie and Anna Aronburg had become more harassing and decided, since for Anna especially, partial insanity had given a strange weird unsettled cast to all her words, actions and language.

A night on the 6h of June Deldon was taking a rest in his common sitting room, by the side of a lamp, that threw uncertain glances around the room. It was a bad night, as a fierce and terrific thunderstorm accompanied by a torrent of rain and a fifty nine mile wind was blowing without pause and which was shaking the house and raising whole squadrons of nondescripts noises in rickety old houses, accompanied by the awful meta l metallic or whip like cracks of deafening shattering thunder rolls and blinding lightning. Windows were rattling, shutters flapping and banging, the wind carlousing wildly and insanely, rumbling and tumbling down the chimney and every once in a while puffing at smoke and ashes as if a legion of spirits were coming after them, combined with the noise of the rain on the window glass or its hail like roar of the slanting roof above. Deldon had been casting up accounts and reading some newspapers for some minutes, while Angelinia Aronburg sat in the corner, sullenly watching the lighting and listening to the storm. As there came one of these well knownoribb known ripping thunder crashes that seems to tear the sky and shake the earth with its crazy noise, Deldon laid down his paper , and seeing an old book lying on the table which he had noticed Anna reading, the first part of the evening, took it up and began to turn it over. It was one of these collections of bloody murders of child slaves by other brutal masters, included with ghs ghostly legends, and supernatural visitations at stormy nights, which coursely got up and fully illustrated, have a strange fascinat ion for ee one who once begings to read them.

Deldon pooh ed and pished,, but read, turning page after page, stopping once in awhil while a when a crack of thunder seemed unusually loud, then finally after reading some way, he threw down the book with a blasphemy.

" You don't believe there are such things as dead child slaves coming back to haunt its wicked master do you Anna?" said he, taking the thongs and settlingthe fire. " I thought you had more sense than to let such noise you say is in the garret scare you."

" I believe what , please" said Anna sullenly, and she sat looking intensely at him in the shadow of the black corner. There was that strange light in her eyes again that always impressed Deldon with some uneasiness.

" Those noises are caud caused by rats and the wind" said Deldon." Rats will make a terrible noise. I used to hear them in houses, and when a hurricane or typhoon is once let loose, you cannot imagine what noise there is to such a wind. I saw a tornado at a distance once, and Lord what a noise it made e en even that far off. No one could describe it. But ghosts pooh."

Nevertheless Anna knew that Deldon was uneasy under her sharp eyes, and therefore she made no answer, but sat fixing them on him, with that strange unearthly expression as before.

" Come speak out , Anna don't you think so-? Said Deldon.

" Can any such things as rats walk down stairs, and then pass through the entry, and open a door when you have locked it, or pass through a wall or scream and cry like a little girl who is being murdered?" said Anna" and come walk, walk walking right up your bed, and putbout their hand on your face?"

Anna kept her glittering eyes fixed on Deldon as she spoke, and he stared at the half insane child like a man in the night mare, till when she finished by laying her hand icy cold and damp on his(having recently placed it in ice water) he sprang back with an oath and blasphemy.

" Why Anna by goh gosh what t do you mean? No one did?"

" Oh no, I guess not---did I say any one came in your room?" said Anna with a smile of chilling derision.

" But did you, have you really seen a little girl a spirit of the one ---Oh I mean--- --- oh come Anna speak out, what is it now-- speak out."

" You may sleep in my own room I) just left if you want to know" said Anna.

" Did the noisesthat you say you have heard come from the garret, Anna?"

" It came from what did you say?" said Anna.

" hy what you was telling me about---"

" Yes indeed, but I did not tell you anything" said Anna, with dogged sullenness.

Deldon therefore walked up and down the room with an uneasy look in his hedious face.

" Ill have this whil whole place immedi tely examined. I'll make a strick investi gation this very night. I'll look into it, and I'll tak take my pistols, and two of my overseers---"

" Yes I'd like to see you go and do it" said Anna" Even you may sleep in the room I vacated. I'd like to see you doing it indeed. And fire your pistols do. See if it will scare the spirits."

Deldon stamped his foot, and swore violently, adding by a few blasphemies.

" Don't swear and blaspheme so" said Anna." and no one knows who and what might be hearing you. Hark, what in the world was that noise.?"

" hat noise" exclaimed Deldon with a sudden start.

A large hall clock that stood in the corner of the room, began and slowly struck the hour of twelve, and for some reason or other Deldon never moved or attempted to speak. He was seized by a vague horror, he felt as if a piece of wet ice was slowly slipping down his back, while Anna with a keen sneering glitter in her eyes, stood looking at him, while she counted the strokes.....

" welve o-clock, well how we will see" said she turning, and slowly opening the door into the passageway, she stood still as if she was listening for some sound.

" What was that awful sound?" said she turning around and raising her finger.

" it's only the wind, and the noise made by the rain?" said Deldon." Don't you hear how curiously it is blowing." Just at that moment there was a sound of thunder as if the whole house had been filled with explosives and it all went off at once, and then the long booming roll from it had ceased to shake the earth, Anna suddenly said, " Deldon will you please come here," and she laid her hand on his, and leading him to the foot of the stairs" Do you know what is making that noise.? Hark! Confounded to that infernal thunder" she added to herself. " Why don't it blow the world to pieces while it's add at it."

When the thunder ceased, both heard a wild and most piercing shriek as if some lost soul in distress, and it came pealing down the stairway.

It seemed to come from the very walls of the house itself, and echoed through the very hall though it only came down from the garret. Of course Deldon grew so scared that his very knees h came together, and his face grew very white with fear.

" Don't you think you should get your pistols and explore that garret?" said Anna with a sneer that froze Deldon's blood." It is time you or some one would investigate that you o know. I'd like to have you go up now as they are already at it."

" I shall not and won't go up there for no one" said Deldon with a blasphemy.

" Why not? There ain't no such thing as ghosts, for we all don't believe in such trash. It's only one of your overseers flogging a slave. Come up and see if he is doing it right." and Anna started up the winding stairway, laughing and looking back afterwhim." Come on up. don't be afraid.There is no ghost up here."

" I believe youare the very devil him himself in disguise" said Deldon furiously.

" Come back you little witch---come back Anna Aronburg. you shan't go up there I tell you. The spirit of that dead child will get you."

But Anna only laughed wildly and fled on. He heard her open some doors, probably the GARNET. Suddenly a wild gust of wind swept down from seemingly nowhere, extinguishing the candle which he held in his hand, and with it, the fearful unearthly screams, half of rage, and half of distress as it seemed, appeared to be shrieked into his very ears, and he fled frantically into his parlor room, where within a few mini minutes he was followed by Anna, who appeared pale, calm, and as cold as a little spirit of fury; and with that same fearful light in her little eyes.

" I hoe hope you are really satisfied now" said she.

" blast you, you little brat" said Deldon.

" what for" ? said Anna. " I only went up and shut the doors so we won't hear those horrid noises. "But what isthe matter in that garret, Deldon, do you supposed" ? Added she.

" It ain't none of your business." said Deldon.

" Oh it ain't? Well at any rate" said Anna, I'm glad I don't sleep up under it now."

Expecting from the appearance of the swiftly moving black clouds of the approaching of a severe June thunderstorm, and anticipating the sudden rising of the wind which accompanies storms of this line squall character, Anna had been up secretly and opened wide the garret window. Of course the moments the doors were swung win wide open, the chill wind had drafted quickly down, and extinguished the light of the candle. This was one of the specimens of the guns that Anna Aronburg was playing with Deldon, and she knew that sooner or later, he would rather, throw himself into a bog, put his head into a lions mouth, or face a spitting cannon than to go up and investigate the cause of the noise in that garret. Meanwhile in the night, when the storm had died down to calmness, and when every one else was asleep, Anna slowly and carefully brought there a full stock of provisions, sufficient to afford subsistence for some time, and transferred articles by article, a greater part of her own and violet's wardrobe, and of course Violet helped in everything. Then all thin ge being arranged, they only waited a fitting opportunity to put their plan in execution. and by cajoling Deldon, and taking advantage of a day when he was more than unusually good natured for ace, Anna had begged him had t to take her with him, on a ride or stroll to the Glendelinian army camp pretend ing her curiousity to see an army which could so whip a christian army had got the better of her, and which army was still situated on that portion of the great Cadernine crook or river, which ran through the immense swamppp. And when she accomplished it, and went along, and with a memory sharpened to almost preternatural clearness, she remarked every turn of the roads leading to where Emperor vivians army was, and Manleys and formed a mental estimate of the time to be occupied in traversing either one, and which road to avoid when fleeing with the slaves.

Therefore at the time when all was matured for action, it being Sunday June the what ever you may call it if the reader pleases to do so, he may perhaps like to look behind the scenes, and see the beginning of the final coup de etat. It was now near Sunday evening and the day had been quite warm. Deldon had been absent, on a ride to general manleys camp for he had gone to try to find some general who would be willing to buy Jennie from him at a good price.

Since that go ghost scare for peldon, anna had been unusually gracious and very accommodating in her action and humors, and Deldon and she therefore had been apprently on the best of terms. Now she and violet were in the room of the garret, busy in sorting and arranging two small bundles. Violet knowing more about the su situation however was to arrange the escapade.

" There these bundles will be large enough" said Violet. " Now put on your bonnet James(she still thinking he was a boy and not knowing her right insendity) and let's start on the plan you suggested----it is just about the right time."

" Maybbut they can see us" said Anna.

" I know it, and I mean they shall" said Violet coolly." I know how you made your plan but I'm going to do it in the same way. but a more better one. don't you know that they must have their chase after us, at any rate. The way of the thing to do which you suggested I know was this. We are to steal out of the back door of the building, keep clear of course of the dangerous bogs which are so close near the edge of the house, and run down by and past the quarters. The overseers, or Jake, or any one is likely o likely to see us. Of course the overseers have guns too, but I'll know what to do since you brought me two of Deldons pistols, and if the overseers in chasing us start firing I will sure give them a taste of what real pistol shooting is. We will we know get to the swamp as you suggested, but we won't take no slaves with us at all, on this first break as it would be useless, and though the persuers cannot follow us any further, they will go up and give the alarm, and turn out all the dogs, and so on, and get rifles and some machine guns, to rake the swamp, and while they are blundering around and tumbling over every other one as they always do, we can do something else. My plan is during the excitement is to slip along Bog creek number me, you know that two hundred foot ten mile stretch of mud bog that runs all along and behind the house, and if we have to we'll try to e wade along in it, but I'll have means to prevent us from going down so far that we are in danger, and then doing this we can get topposite the back door. I'll take along plenty of rope which we'll hide in our bosom so they won't see it or otherwise they might get wise. The condition of the bogs will put the dogs at fault, for scent won,t lie in wet mud no more than in water. every one of course will run out of the house to look out after us as we go, and then we'll slip in at the back door, and up into the garret, where I've got a nice bed made up from a an old big mattress I found. We must stay in that garret a good while, for I tell you He will raise heaven and earth after us. I know Deldon as I had been his prisoner once in the Dell-Hell-Pell-Mell prison with my sisters and I know therefore from experience. He will muster some of those old overseers on the other Glandelinian plantations, and also get as many soldiers from manleys army as possible, and have a great hunt, and they'll go over every inch of ground in that swamp, and armed with small machine guns, grenades, rifles and have many blood hounds with them. He makes it his boast that no childcslave child slave ever got away from him. He would not care of course if you went alone, as I know he would be happy to see you go knowing you as you are, but when he sees me with you there will be different doings. So let the scoundrel hunt at his leisure."

" Violet you have planned it much better than I could have done" said Anna" who ever would have thought it of you, but with your experiences in your work you should know how to do wonderful things."

But there was neither pleasure or exultation in Anna's eyes as she said thid, only a despairing firmlness.

" come" she added, reaching her hand to violet, and the two little fugitives glided noisely ndieselessly from the big house, and flitted through the dashing shadows of evening, along along by the quarters but carefully and desperately avoiding the bog so close to their very feet. The big cresent moon, set like a silver signet in the eastern sky, delayed a little the approach of night. As violet had expected, when quite near the verge of the main section of the swamps that encircled the plantation, they suddenly heard a single voice calling to them to stop. It was not any of the overseers however however, but strange as to say general Manley and a few of his officers who were persuing them with the most violent exdrutions. At the sounds of these voices, Violet grew excited and drew his gun her gun, and would have fired, but grabbing hold of her arm Anna said;

" don't do any shooting now. If yo you do those Glandelinians will kill us both. They are Omarians and crack shots." The warning accomplished the purpose. Violet did not shoot off her pistol, and succeeded in plunging with Anna into a part of the labyrinth of swamp, so deep and dark that it was perfectly Hopeless, for manley or his officers to think of following them, without assistance.

" Well" said he chuckling brutally" At any rate those two runaway slaves have got themselves trapped now---the devils. They are safe enough from escape for beyond them only a few more feet is a treacherious quicksand bog concealed under water. They will either be stopped or will perish. if they sense the bog they then cannot go on and will sweat for it when caught. I'll notify their owner who is in the camp."

and he and his followers immediately made their way down the road tward camp at breakneck speed.

" Hullom, there, every one of you overseers. All hands" called Deldon riding up to the quarters swiftly; when the little boys and girls were just returning from work. The there are two runaway slaves in the swamps, manley just informed me. I'll give fifty dollars to any man us catches them turn out the dogs immediately, turn out Dragon and terror, and the rest. We must get them back."

Indeed the sensation produced by this news was unusual and instant. All of the overseers sprang forward officiously to offer their services, either from the hope of the re reward, or to get the slaves and burn them at the stake which is the penalty some went one way some another. Others were getting pine knots, others were uncoupling the blood hounds; and another was bringout bringing out the six small machine guns, and the hoarse salvage bay added a great deal to the animation of the scene.

" Boss shall we shoot them both if we can't catch them quickly" said Hendi, to whom his employer brought out a long rifle.

" yes you may if you like for I found out from manley who the other d e was with Anna" said Deldon. "It's time they both were gone to the devil, where they belong. And now boys be spyr and smart, fifty dooms to him that captures or kills them, and a glass of brandy to every one of you men anyHow."

And the whole band of overseers, for no slave was allowed to go, wity the glare of blazing torches, and whoops and shouts, and savage tumult of yells, from man and least proceeded down to the edge of the swamp, followed by some of the slaves to a considerable distance untill driven back by some of the overseers. The establishment was therefore of a consequence wholly deserted, when violet, and Anna glided into it the back way having as easily escaped the treacgerous bogs. The whooping and shouts of their persuers were still filling the air, and looking from the sitting room windows, Anna and Violet could see the troop, with their torches, just dispersing themselves along the edge of the swamp.

" see over there" said Violet, pointing to Anna. They are starting the hunt already. Look how all those lights from the torches dance about. Hark the dogs? Don't you hear how they bay. If we were there now our chances would not be worth one of those bogs. Oh for pity's sake some of those fools are accidentally setting fire to the moss of the trees. See the flames have spread to a thousand trees at once it seems. There ll be a forest fire heading right for us soon. Do let's go off some other way. Quick."

" There is no occassion to hurry" said Anna ccoly" They have set the fire on purpose to burn us out of our hiding place, they are determined in the hunt, so we can go up stairs by and by. Meanwhile" said she deliberately taking a ket from the pocket of a coat a that Deldon had thrown down in a hurry" Meanwhile I shall take a passbook from him with that we can go anywhere without being detained."

She unlocked a desk, took from it a pass book, whose small pages she counted over rapidly and finding the right sheet tor imitated the handwriting of Deldon and Manley as much as possible and put it in her pocket.

" Oh but we won't need that" said Violet" I know the way."

" Don't need it" said Anna." And why Not! Would you want to be retaken by Manleys soldiers, or shall we take entirely to the impassable swamps; where there are a thousand big bogs to one dry firm piece of ground, or have it that we get through to the national lines. A pass as you ought to know from exi experienc experience will do anything for us Violet." nd she put the pass book into her pocket.

" it would be dangerous for Deldon will notify Manley that his pass book is gone." said Violet in a distressed whisper.

"Dangerous" said Anna, withe scornful laugh." I know you and your sisters Violet, though you don't know me, and therefore you need not talk that to me. I've been through dangers you never tyought of and escaped. Let's not talk about danger. There's no so such thing if you say so. But come, we may as well go up to the garret now, I've got a good sized lamp there, and some books to pass away the time. You may be pretty sure they won't come there to inquire after us. If they do you and I can play ghost for them, for you play it fairly well yourself."

When Violet reached the garret, she found an immense mattress lying on the floor, but surrounded by heavy furniture. Anna lit a small lamp, and creeping under the eves eaves of the furniture; they established themselves on the mattress. It was spread with a couple of smaller matresses, and some pillows, a box near by was plentifully stored with candles, provisions, ammunition, and all the clothing necessary to their journey, whi which Anna had arranged into bundles of an astonishingly sl small size.

"There" said Anna as she fixed the lamp into a small hook which she had driven into the side of a wardrobe for that purpose" this is to be out home for the present. How do you like it. like it?"

" Are you sure James, they won't come up and investigate this garret?"

" I don't kno about the overseers, but I'd like to see Deldon doing that sure enough" said Anna." Oh indeed he will be only too glad to keep out of it. As to the servants they would any of them stand abd and be shot, sooner than betray us here even if they know we are here."

Somewhat reassured, Violet settled herself back on her pillow and the two remained sometime in silence. Anna had busied herself with a book, and Violet overcome with the exhaustion, fell into a doze and slept for some time, and soon she was awakened by the loud shots and shouts and out cries, the tramp of horses feet, and the baying of dogs. She started up with a faint shriek and hastily made a grab for her pistols.

" They are just returning from the hunt" Said Anna ccoly" ner fear. " Look out from this knot hole. Don't you see them all gathered down there! Deldon had to give it up for this night as too much of the moss covered trees are ablaze and the heat is too great for him and his followers. Look how muddy his horse is, flounching about in the swamp, the dogs too look rather crest fallen. Ah you scoundrel, you'll have to try the hunt again and still again for many days——the game is not there."

" Look out don't speak too loud, or they'll hear you" said Violet.

" If they do, I'll do something that will make them very particular to keep away from here" said Anna." But never fear, there is no danger, we can make any amount of noise we please, and it will only add to the effect."

At length the still ness of the night settled down over the house, but somewhat stabbed at intervals by the far receding fires in the swamps. Deldon cursing his ill luck, and vowing dire vengeance on the coming morrow, went angrily to bed.

The escape of Violet and Anna irritated the before surly temper of Deldon to the last degree, and his fury as was to be expected, fell both upon the two defenseless girl slaves Jannie and Jane, but more so upon Jane. And of Jannie we have followed her thus far in the sea of horrid slavery, first through flowers of east ease and indul gence; then through heart breaking sorrows and seperations from fellow slaves, and all that a child holds dear. Again we have encountered and followed her in a sunny part of slaverybthrough Mylestes army, where generous kind hands concealed her chains with flowers, and now we have followed her, when it seems the last ray of earthly hope went out in night, and seen how in the blackness of earthly darkness, the firmament of the unseen starts to blaze with stars of nee and magnificent lustre. As to Jannie and Jane, Jane Deldon had suspicions they had something to do with the running away of the two, for when he hurriedly announces the tidings among his overseers and other wage earning hands, there was a a sudden light in Jannie's eyes especially, and a sudden expression on her face that did not escape him. He saw that she had tried to hinder some small disasters so as to hinder the progress of the persuers. He thought of forcing her into one of the bogs but in his hurry did not desire to stop and enter into any conflict with her. Though most of the slaves followed us far as the edge of the swamps after the persuers, Jannie of course remained behind, with those who had learned of her to pray, and offered up prayers for the successful escape of the two fugitives. There fore when Deldon returned, baffled, and disappointed, a.l the long working hated of his soul teard all his little slaves begun to to have or gather in a deadly and most desperate form. Had not this little Jannie particularly braved him, been spiteful to him and his overseers, steadily, powerfully, resistlessly, ever since he stole her from Mylstes army? And was there not a spirit in her which silent as it was, burned on him like the fires of perdition?

" I will kill that brat of a Jane" said Deldon that evening as he sat up by his table sipping the brandy. " I will sell that snake Jannie. And even if I did steal her from general Mylstes, is she not by rights Manleys property, even mine? Can't I do what I like when I want a few more slaves. Who's to hinder me from killing her I wonder?" and the rascal clinh clinched his fist, and shook it heavenward. But then though she was stolen and jane too, both had been to him faithful valuable servants, and yet Deldon hated them all the more for it. But he determined to say nothing as yet, but to assemble a larger party, and soldiers from Manleys army, with guns and dogs, and to surround the swamp, and go about the hunt systematically. If he was successful it was well and good; if not he would summon both Jannie and jane before him---and his teeth clenched, and his blood boiled---then he would break them down---or there was a dire whisper inwardley, to which his wicked soul assented.

Some of course might say that the interest of the wicked master is a sufficient safeguard for any slave, & t then in but then in the full fury of mans mad will he willwittingly and with open eye, sell his own soul to the devil to gain his own ends, and will be more careful of a little slave! yo.

" Well" said Anna Aronburg, the next day from the big garret, as she was carefully watching through the "key hole" They are going out on the hunt in general to day. They have a hundred soldiers with them."

There were sixty or seventy mounted horsemen surveting about, on the space in front of the house, and soldiers were standing or lounging about, and and six groups of strange vicious looking dogs were struggling with strange overseers who held them, baying and barring at each other. The men outside of soldiers were overseers of other glandelinian plantations in the vinicity and from slave places in the city of Phelantenburg, and some others were the old associates of Dead Deldons who had come for the interest of the sport. A more hard favored set perhaps could never be imagined. And Deldon was serviving brandy, profusely, round among them all, as also among the soldiers who had been detailed from Manleys army for their service; for it was an object of a glandelinian general to make every service of this kind profitable. Anna placed her ear at the knot hole her ear at the knot hole, and as the mor ing morning air blew directly toard the house she could overhear a good deal of the conversation. A grave sneer overcast the dark severe gravity of Her face, as she listened, and heard them divide divide out the ground, discuss the rival mir merits of the big dogs; give orders about firing, and the cruel treatment of each in case of capture. Then Anna drew back, and clasping her hands looked upward and said" Oh Great Almighty God, we are all sinners, but what have we little children of foriegn nations done more than all the rest of the world, that we should be made slaves by men of a wicked nation, and be treated so?"

There was a terrible earnestness in her face and voice as she spoke.

" If it was not for you Violet" she said looking at the disguised Princess" I'd give myself up to them, and I'd thank any one of them that would shoot me down, for what use is freedom to me. Can it give me back my mother and father, and brother and sister, and make me what I should be and what I was in the past?"

Violet, in her child like simplicity, was half afraid of the strange dark mood mode of Anna Aronburg. he looked perplexed, but made no answer, she only took her hand with a gentle caressing movements.

"Don't do that Violet" said Anna Aronburg, trying almost desperately to draw it away" You will be causing me to start loving you, and I never stand to love anything again, c rchristian or no christian."

" Poor James" said Violet" don't feel so bad, it will only hurt you more. If the Good Lord gave you liberty yours before, and even o gave you the l arlest as a good and reliable spy and helps you in your work to free other little slaves, perhaps he He'll help you find your sister even if you do not see your poor mother or father, at any rate if you like I'll be like a sister to you and bring you to my sisters and futher. I know James there are many poor little ones here, who will never see their poor old mother or brothers and sisters again. I shall love you James, and do, even if you refuse to love me, or not."

The gentle child like spirit of the beautiful Vivian Girl princess conquered. Anna sat down by her, put her arm around her neck, stroked her soft golden hair, and even Violet then wondered at the beauty of her magnificent eyes, now soft with tears.

"Oh Violet, Violet." said Anna." I've hungered, I've yearned for my brother and sister and I thirsted for them, and my eyes fail with abject longing for them...Here, here,..."

she said striking her breast," it is all desolate, empty as an egg shell..if god would give me back my mother, and sister at least, then I could pray."

" you must trust him, James" said Violet" He is our Father, and also He is not to blame for what these cruel and wicked clandelinians do. you know they are worse enemies of His than any one else could have been."

" His wrath is upon us all, christians and slaves alike" said Anna" He has turned away not caring what becomes of us all."

" no James. He will begood to us for sure. Let us hope in Him," said Violet," I always have had hope, and trusted Him in everything accomplished and intended to do and though Im I never failed yet.....""

The Hunt for the two escaped or apparently escaped child slaves, was long, animated, and complex, every portion of the swamp as possible had been gone over, but it was absolutely unsuccessful and with grave ironic exultation Anna Arenbur g looked down on Deldon and the rest, as dispirited and weary, he alighted from his horse. He was as the reader had been told supposed to have a face with the expression of a bulldog but now he looked like a cornered enraged lion lion.

" Now Hendri" said Deldon sneeringly as he entered the sitting room," You just go ou and march both that Jane, and Jennie up here to me right away and delay not a moment. Th The two little brats are at the bottom of this whole thing, they know something about it, and theyll either tell me about it, and confess the truth or I,ll have it out of them both, or I,ll know the reason why. All the overseers of Deldons plantation though hating all the child slaves in general, had a fierce hatred of both Jane and Jennie, Deldon had told them at first that He had bought them for a general housekeep ing slave in his absence, and the resistance of Jennie in particular to the mals overseer, and the fact of one of them being struck in the moth mouth by a stone thrown by the latter had begun an ill will, on their part, which increased as they saw both slaves becoming very obnoxious to their boss's displeasure. Heidi, for he was the one who lost several of his teeth because of the stone, therefore departed with a will to execute his orders. Jane herself somehow or other must have heard the message with a forewarning heart, for she as well as Jannie knew all the plans of the escaped fugitives, and also the place of their present concealment;;; and they also knew the deadly and wicked character of the man she had to deal with, and his despotic power. But little as she was she felt strong in god to meet death or whatever punishment would come upon Her, rather than betray the two others. She left her row of beans and quietly yeilded herself to the rough brutal grasp of the overseer who seized him, but Jannie had armed herself with a lot of stones and not only refused to go but stood at fierce defiance despite her small size, for we all know girls of spanish girls never give up to anything without a fierce struggle and she was of that kind when aroused.

" You br at" said Heid as he dragged Jane with him" You will catch it now, and as and so will Jannie by and by. Your master is good and angry by now, and there can be no sneaking out now. I tell you you will suffer for it and no mistake either. You are accused of helping your masters two slaves run away, and see what you'll get if you do not tell where they are at."

None of these savage words however, reached her ear---for a higher voice was saying!

" Fear them not that kill the body, for after that they can do no more."

It seemedthat nerve and bone vibrated to these words, as if touched by the finger of God, and she seemed to feel the strength of a hundred thousand souls in one. And as she passed along, the trees and bushes, the huts of the slave po quarters, the whole scene of her degradation, seemed to pass by her very swiftly. Her soul throbbed, thheaven was in sight, and the hour of release seemed at hand. The other overseers espite despite her resistance had managed to seize Jannie and had her up before Deldon with Jane almost as quickly.

" Well yoy two little rebels, you brats of Hadon regions" said Deldon walking walking up and standing very haughtily in front of them, and speaking through his teeth, " Do you know I a and my servants have power to kill you both if we only wish to do so and there is no law of any kind in Clandelinia or elsewhere to protect you, or punish us for the deed?"

The two girls did not answer.

" Well we can" said Deldon, with grim and terrible calmness in his voice" And I am going to do that very thing, and very brutally too, unless you two girls tell me what you know about these two girls who ran away, and don:t you two tell anything different from one or the other either."

The two girls stood silent.

"" Answer me you rats" said Deldon, stamping with a roar like that of some enraged lion and making his bull dog face hedious indeed in his determined paroxysm of rage und fury." ""

" We have nothingto tell at all sir." said Jane herself with a slow firm deliberate utterance..

" And do you dare to tell me, you brown haired little Christian dog, that you know k nothing about it?" said Deldon.....

Again both the little girls were silent.

" speak you da d---m little dogs" thundered Deldon striking both of them furiously with his whip. " Do you know where they are hiding, either in the swamp or where?"

" We know but we won't tell" said Jannie herself.

Deldon drew in a long deep breath, and supressing his wicked rage as much as possible, in a most terrible voice,

" Listen to me you black haired little snake" you think because I let you off so much before, that I'm afraid of you and don't know what to do or don't kn mean what I say, but this time I've made up my mind to the last, and determined upon a thing. You as small as you are have always stood it out against me, now I'll conquer you, or sell you to general Calmannia Shoemannia or kill you one or the other. As to you jane you tell me where they are hiding or I'll count every drop of blood there is in you, and take it drop by drop till you give up."

At this moment however jannie proved herself to be nearly a wild cat, for she nearly sunk her h sharp little teeth in the hand that held her arm, and with the other hand would have scratched his eyes out if he did not let go. When she was momentarily released she ran out of the building, and hid at once so that not even the ever seers who were sent after her could find her. Deldon looked aghast and looked at Jane herself who had not run off, and then foaming with rage ever jannie's escape, and the fact that Jane would not tell anything, Deldon foaming with rage, smote the poor girl to the floor.

There are scenes of cruelty in these child slave dens according to this story when can be found anywhere which I is absolutely shocking to the hear, and thrilling, beyond measure to the heart. What a wicked child slave master will do, cannot be put in any picture whether moving or stationary; and which no man can bear to see, that millions of little slaves must suffer, cannot be always told in full here, not even as secretly, no man can imagine it perfectly, and to witness it would not harrow up the soul but make the witness refuse to have mercy on the wicked owner. nd yet in the wicked Clandelinian country country these things are done, and approved of by the laws. A master can in front of thevofficers of the law kill his slave in the most brutal manner imaginable and only be told" what you do to your property is only your affair and your own loss providing the sl slave cost a huge sum."

But we all know, there was One whose suffering changed an instrument of torture, degradation and shame, into a symbol of glory, honor, and immortal life, and where his spirit is, neither degrading stripes, nor h shedding of blood, nor insults, can make the last struggle of a child slave who is a christian less than glorious.

And was the poor little girl alone that night, whose brave living little spirit, was bear ing up in the old shed, against the still continued and buffetting and brutal stripes and kicks and blows. No. There stood by her shoul---I'll say seen by her alone---it was the Son of God, but he had his eyes shaded from the horrid scene as probably it seemed more than even He could bear. Yet the tempter stood by her too---blinded by furious de deputed depotic will---every moment it seemed pressing the unfortunate little girl slave, to shun that agony by the betral betrayal of the two christian spies. But the brave true little heart, was firm indeed, and like her Master, she knew that if he saved others, Himself he He did not save, save of prayer and holy trust.

"S he is almost dead sir" said Hendri touched in spite of himself, by the patience of his little victim.

" pay away untill the little brat makes it her mind to give up. Give it to the little snake; give it to her harder---give it to her" shouted Deldon administrating t, kick into her side. " I'll make her shed every drop of blood untill she tells what knows."

nutafter a few more blows he finally said!

" I believe she is done for at that." and he stepped forward to take a coser closer look at the poor little prostrate form. " Yes she is dead.. Well she is got rid of, her blabbing mouth is shut up at last---- and that is one comfort to be sure."

You Deldon, but who shall be able to shut up that voice in thy soul you wicked cruel wwherse than a beast, that soul far past repentance, guilty of the outrageous order of thousands upon thousands of little children, God's beloved ones, asoul past prayer, past hope of fortiveness, in whom the fire that never shall be quenched is already burning.?

Yet poor Jane was not quite alone.. her strange and wonderous words, coming deeply from her little heart and soul, and her pious prayers, had struck upon the hearts of the imbruted child slaves, but it had no effect upon those who had been the instrumen instrument of cruelty upon her, and the instant Deldon withdrew the overseer Hendi picked her up from the floor, and brought her bleeding form to the shed and threw her in as if she was a piece of bundle tyat he wanted to get rid rid of. when all was still some of the slaves came in and in their ignorance sought to call her back to life---as if that were any favor to her.

" ure master Deldon has been doing a dreadful wicked thing" said Jannie herself, who came in with them" Master will give an account for it to one of these days. some one told me he has murdered thousands of little girls and boys."

Thry carefully washed her wounds,---they provided a rude bed, of some refuse straw and grass for her to lie down on, and one of them stealing to the swamp secured some water, and poured it down Jeandeses throat and bathed her head.

)((Janes)

" Oh poor Jane, poor 'ane" said Jannie" Deldon has been awful wicked to you."

But poor Jane did not answer for she was still unconscious and when she was finally brought too she could not hardly talk. And the other poor slaves wept while Jane however said-

" I forgive poor Deldon with all my heart. He does not know what he will bring on his wicked soul for this."

" I don't " said Jannie. " I hate him. If he does to me what he did to you or even tries to I.ll kill him."

These words roused the failing fainting spirit of the wounded little girl.

" O, no don't" said Jane. " To kill him would be murder too. I'd be willing to bear all I can it, if it would only bring him to Christ.. and if poor Deldon was in trouble, I or in serious trouble or dying, and I could do something for him or save his I'd give all I have, and if taking every drop of my blood would save his precious soul I'd give it freely as the good Lord did for us. Oh, Jannie please be careful for my sake. Run away if you can, but don't bring the great sin of murder on your little soul. It will hurt you as much as it will hurt him. The wicked can do the worse they can you n know Jannie, but our troubles will soon be over, while if the wicked don't repent, their horrors will never end. This burst of feeling from Jane came like a snatch of heavenly music heard as if in the lull of a great storm, and there was such a silence, that the noise or chirping of some bird could be heard.. Jannie was softened.

Two days after, a tall robust man rode up through the avenue of magnolia trees and halting by the pine grove, threw the reins hastily on the horses neck, sprang down and inquired for the owner of the place. It was James poor father, and to show how he came to be there, I must go a little back in thi this chapr chapter.

This man had been training every point in search of his little daughter. In order to try to recover her even if he had to pay a ransom but by some unfortunate accident, he had been detained for a month in Manleys army because he could not give any satisfactory explanation as to why he was entering the lines, before he could go on, in his search, and of course before he was released, Jane was already lost to view among the distant and dangerous swamps of the Cedernine river.

He continued the search with the deepest concern, but any immediatey chance to locate her or her owner was an impossibility.He finally came to a camp where he was told a little girl slave of about ten years of age, lay dying and which was believed to be his daughter,and who lay delirious in the crisis of a fever. But he saw at once she was not his child. Then after some days of unsuccessful search, by the merest accident this man whose name was Frank Carr fell in with a Clandelinian scouting party, who happened to be possessed of the desired information, and therefore with his money in his pocket and leaning a horse, he rode for what is known as the Headrick Junction swamp lands resolving to find out and re-purchase his daughter.

He was soon introduced into the house, where he found Deldon in the sitting room drinking a glass of brandy. The wicked man recieved the stranger with a kind of haughty and yet surly hospitality.

" I learned" said the father" That you kidnapped from general Mylenes army some twenty days ago, a little girl named Jane Carr. "

" Well what of it?" asked Deldon.

"Well she is my daughter, and I come to see if I could not buy her back."

"Deldons brow grew as black as a tornado cloud, and he broke out passionately;

" Yes I did kidnap such a little snake with another one known as Jannie something, ---and a h---l of a fool I was in doing so. They both are the most rebellious saucy impudent christian dogs I ever came in possession of. I had the vivian Girls once my prisoners and they were nothing compared to your confounded daughter and Jannie. Set up one of my slaveste run away with a christian spy girl called Anna Aronburg, the former worth eighteen hundred or two thousand dollars. Jane confessed to that, and when I tried to force her and jannie to tell me where they were hiding, they defied me und would not tell, and jane stood to it to the last, though I gave her the worst flogging I ever gave to a child slave yet. I believe she will die or is dead already, but but I don't know how she will make out by and by."

" Well,where is she?" said Frank impetiquely." Let me see her please."

The cheeks of her father were crimson, and his eyes flashed fire, but he prudently said nothing to Deldon as yet, though he was tempted to knock him down right there.

" He is lying in that old coal shed" said a little boy slave, who stood holding Franks horse.

Deldon, kicked at the little boy and swore at him, but Frank without saying another word, turned and strode to the spot.

Poor jane had been lying for two days since the fatal evening, suffering intensely untill now when every Nerve of suffering became blinted and destroyed. She lay for the most part in a quiet stupor, and by stealth th re had often been there in the darkness of the night, poor desolate little creatures, who had stolen from their scanty hours rest that they might repay to poor little Jane some of those little minestrations of love in which she had always been so abundant. Truely those poor little disciples had little to give----only the cup of cold water, or something to soothe her wounds, but it was given with full hearts. Many tears had fallen on her little innocent face tears of sorrow and remourse and late repentance in the poor little ignorant ones, whom her dying love and patience had awai awakened to repentance, and bitter prayers breathed over her to a late found Savior of whom they scarcely knew more than the name but whom their yearning ignorant little hearts never implores in vain.

Even Angelinia Aronburg and Violet who had glided out of their place of concealment, and by overhearing, learned the sacrefice that had been made for them both, had been there for those two nights defying the danger of detection, and moved by the few last words which the little soul had yet strength to breathe, the long years of despair for Jane had given way, and the dark despairing little girl spy had wept and prayed for the first time since her sister had been seperated from her.

When James poor father entered the shed, his head grew giddy, and his heart sick.

" Is it possible that he did this to you.Is it possible!" said he kneeling down by her little mangled form. Jane my dear Jane, my poor daughter. please speak to me."

Something in the voice penetrated to the ear of the dying. The little girl moved her head gently smiled and said;

" Jesus my Lord and God can make a dy dying bed,

Fell soft as downy pillows are.

Tears which did honor to his stout manly heart fell from her fathers face or eyes as he bent over hi his little daughter.

" Oh Jane, Jane---do wake , do speak once more. Look up. Here's your dear father---your own dear father who has found you. Don't you know me?"

" My father" said Jane opening her eyes and speaking in a feeble voice" . My own father come to me." But at first she looked bewildered. Then slowly the idea seemed to fill her little soul, and her vacant eyes became fixed and brightened, her little face lightened up, the little hands clasped, and the tears ran down her cheeks.

" Bless the Lord---it----it is---it is--- it is--- it is all I desired. My father has found me. Oh Iam happy now, and now I shall die content. My father has not forgotten me. Bless the Lord oh my soul. "

" Oh but Jane you must not die now. You must not die or even think of it. Try and live, I have come to ransome you, and take you back home to your mother and brother." said her father with vehemence.

" Oh daddy daddy, you are too late now. I cannot live. I'm too badly beaten up."

" Oh poor Jane please don't die. It's it'll kill me too it will break my heart, to think of what my own darling little girl has suffered---and dying inthis old shed here Poor jane. Try and live. You'll have good times. I,ll take you way up to Abbieannia where the brute brutes will never get you again."

But it could be easily seen by her father that she could not live. Jane grasped his hand and continued in broken sobs;

" father please now do not tell mama or my brother how you found me--it would break their hearts. Only tell m her you found me dying, and that I could not live. And tell her that God stood by me everywhere, and made everything light and good. And my poor sister and brother at home, my heart has been broke for them always since I was stolen away from home. Tell them all to follow me into heaven where I long to go. Tell them the good Lord bought me from the wicked Clandelinians---and I is going to take me to His home. Give my love to them. Oh father you don't know what a good thing it is to be a christian."

At this moment there uppeared a dark shadow over them both and turning around he saw Deldon sauntering up to the door of the shed, look in, and th n then with an air of indifference turned away.

" Is he not an old demon" said her father in his sudden anger." It's a comfort to think the christian soldiers will get hold of him some day and he will pay for all this. I know the scoundrel and what he has done in his past life."

" Oh please father don't talk that way of him" said his little daughter, grasping his hand" He is a poor foolish man, and it is awful to think what will happen to his soul. Oh if he could only repent, the Lord would even forgive him now despite all the children he had murdered, but I am afraid he never will repent."

" I know he won't I see it in his face" said her daddy." Any how I never want to no him in heaven."

" Hush daddy dear---don't talk that way please---it w rries me so. Don't feel so."

" but he is one of the worse of all scoundrels."

" Yes but he has not done me any real harm---only sent me quicker from slavery into heaven that's alll.""

But sudd nly at this moment the sudden flash of little strength, which the joy of meeting her father had infused into the dyingtttttttttt dying little girl gave way. A sudden sinking fell upon her,, she closed her eyes, and that strange and mysterious sublime change passed over her face immediately, a sign which told that she was dying. She drew her breath, with long deep inspirations, and her little chest, rose and fell heafily, and the expression of her face was that of one who had already seen her God face to face.

" who,,,--- shoop who shall seperate us from the love of Jesus christ?" she said in a voice that contended with mortal weakness, and with a smle she gradually fell asleep. T hough grief stricken as he was her father sat fixed with solemn awe. It seemed to him That the place was holy, and as he closed the lifeless little eyes, and rose up from the dead girl, only one thought now possessed him---that expressed by his dear but now lost daughter" What a thing it is for us to be a christian." He turned slowly,, Deldon was standing sullenly behind him. For a few minutes something in that dying scene had checked the natural fierceness of the mans passion, but nevertheless the presence of the scoundrel was simply as loathsome to frank as if he had or was standing bf before the very devil himself, and he felt the greatest impulse to get out of his sight, and to say as few words as possible. But for a time his grief had almost overcame him. He had searx searched for his little daughter for many moths, months and had risked perils unaccountable and immeas immeasureable and now when he did find her she had been killed by this brute. , fixing his keen eyes on Deldon, he simply said but with some. what of a sneer, as he pinted to the dead child;

" You have got out of that little child you ever will. She was my daughter. How much shall I pay f you for the little body? I will take it away and bury it as it should be buried."

2 " I do not care to sell any dead slave brats." said Deldon doggedly." You are therefore welcome to bury the snake where andwhen you like like."""""

" Boys" said frank, in an aurthoritive tone, to two orvthree of the Glandelinian drivers, who were looke looking curiously at the little body" Help me lift her up , and carry her to my wagon, and please get me a spade."

TeThe overseers however refused saying they had nothing to do with it, and a number of boy and girl slaves had to bring the wagon the body to the w the wagon, while one of them ran for a spade. Frank in the meantime neither spoke to nor even looked at Deldon, who did not however countermand his orders, but stood whistling with an air of real unconcern, and sulkily followed them to where the wagon stood at the door lf the of the shed. Then Frank with tears still in his eyes, spread a black blanket in the wagon, and had thevlittle body carefully disposed of in it---moving the seat as to give it room. Then he turned, fixed his eyes on Deldon and said, with forced composure.

" I did not have the time yet to say to you what I think of those most atricious affair----the brutal murder of a little innocent child, just because she was a christian for this is not the time or place. I know there is no single christian on this place, and that in all the Glandelinian courts the testimony of children is nothing because what you did is approved by the Glandelinian government. But sir nevertheless, this innocent blood shall have justice in due time. some day you will be, I hope a prisoner among the christian soldiers, and I will proclaim this brutal murder. I will go to the very first christian general, and expose you."

" sure you will not." said Deldon snapping his fingers scornfully."I'd like like to see you o doing it. If the christian dogs do make me a prisoner, yet where are you going to get witnesses? How are you going to prove it, if you have no one to help you testify. I'll destroy all evidence against me so youtll never get any satis faction, and the christian dogs won't believe a thing without a witness."

Frank saw at once the effect and force of this defiance. There had never been a christian soldier on the place, and though in Abbieannia the testimony of rescue child slaves is strong as gold, yet it might happen that no slave who was with eldon would be with him to testify. He felt at that moment as if he could have rent the heavens with his hearts indignant cry for justice, but it was in vain.

" Yes but even though you are her father why make such a fuss over a dead brat that was once my slave" said Deldonscowling fiercely.

The word was just the same as a spark to a shed of explosives. Though all Abbieannians according to which this story makes it are unusually righteous, and though you can go through city cafter city or town after town you,ll never see people doing wrong,or children dispebying their parents or fighting among each other, yet there is no Abbieannian who had prudience as a cardinal virtue. Insult an Abbieannian man or woman in the street, and god help you if you can't outrun th him. Or insult a child and a mob of children will be at your hells throwing stones and everything. Frank was an Abbieannian from the state of Concentinia, and at the words eldon uttered he turned immediately and struck him one blow right in the mouth, knocling knocking the rascal flat upon his back, as well as loosening all his front teet, and then stood over him blazing with wrath and defiance, and form some personification of his great names sake being victorious over the devil. Though some men are said to be decidedly bettered by being knocked down, and that if a man fairly lai lays them flat in the dust, they seem immediately to have a respect for him, Deldon was not one of this sort. He rose to his feet slowly, and calling upon his two overseers, drew from his side a long flash ing knife, and made for prank like a roaring lion. Again he was felled, and then while Deldon went heels over head, Frank quickly drew a pistol, and fired, killingbone of the overseers, and stopping the other, who scared ran quickly for cover.

Then quickly getting upon his wagon ,rank drove away, and when far beyond the army of Munleys itself, came to a shady knl j knoll, covered by a few trees, and there the slaves who came with him, made the grave.

" shall we take off the cloak now ,aster?" said the slaves a boy and girl, when as ready..

"No---no bury it with her. It is all I can give you now my poor daughter--- nd you shall have it."

They carefully laid her in, and the boy and girl shoveled away, silently, banking it up, and laying green turf over it.

" If you would only buy us Master" said one when they were finished.

" We would serve you faithfully" said the little girl.

" our master is cruel to us too" said the first. " Do please buy us Mr."

I can't I can't have not the money". said Frank" It is impossible, and after I struck him he would not sell you anyhow."

The poor children looked dejected and broken hearted, but suddenly the man realised the reward that the Abbieannian government had issued for any one who would take from wicked masters and Glandelinian armies little slaves, for to do so on the condition of hy they were slaves was more than lawful not in the law of the overnment but in the eyes of god himself and so turning to the poor half weeping children he said;

" As I cannot buy yo, I can at least take you. But lie low in the wagon so no one will see youfor Deldon will miss you by and by and warn Manley."

Before he started however, he kenlt on the grave of his little dauh daugh er, and said-

" witness Eternal God in Heaven. On witness that from this hour, I will help Abbieannia and all her armies in which way I can to drive out this curse of slavery of innocent children from my land and help Abbieannia overthrow the Glandelinian insurrection also."

gan to say there is no be no monument to mark the last resting place of one of our poor little child slave friends. But let the good kind hesorted reader weep if he must. Nevertheless she poor chu child does not need none. Her Loving Jesus knows and always knows where any one lies after life is past, and will raise them up immortal to appear with Him when He sh shall appear in His glory. And since her time of sorrow and suffering is over there is hardly no need to pity her now for such a life and death is yet for more pity. Not in the riches of omin omnipotence, isthe chief glory of God, but in self denying, suffering love. And blessed al are all those, whom He calls to fellowship with Him bearing their co cross after Him with patience. Of such it is written.--- or some redmarkable reason, strange ghostly legends as it seemed were uncommony uncommonly rife about this time among all the child slaves o of Deldons place. for it was whisperingly asse t asserted, that strange footsteps in the dead of night, had been heard by them descending the garret stairs and sometimes going in and out the house and patrolling the plantation yards. In vain the doors of the upper entry had been locked, the intruders who ever they were ghosts or not, either carried duplicate keys in their po ckets or went straight through the door, or what ewe will say availed itself of a ghost ghostly power and privilege of coming through the keyhole, and going as before, with a freedom that alarmed all the slaves that they did not dare enter the building during the night but slept outside. Aurthorities however were somewhat divided, as to the outward forms of the spirits, owing to a custom also known among n negroes, and also among whites too, of shtt shutting the eyes, and covering up heads under the blankets, or whatever else might come in use for shelter, on these occasions when scared so badly. Of course as every person may known from reading ghost stories, when the bodily eyes are thus gone, the spiritual eyes are uncommonly vivacious and perspicuous , and therefore many had i different descriptions as to the go ghoststhey thought they saw, abundantly sworn and testified to, as is often the cases of such pictures, agreed with each other in no particular except the common portion of the ghost tribes, the wearing of a black shroud over the hedious form of a skeleton. Be as it may The reader has private reasons for knowing for facts, that two small figures, in a white sheet, did walk at the most approved ghostly hours, around the premises of peldons plana plantation pass out the doors seemingly without bothering to open the doors, glide about the house----disappear at n intervals, and reappearing, pass up the silent stairway into that fatal room above the building, and that in the earliest morning, the entry doors doors were all found shut, and locked as firm as ever.

" BLESSED ARE THEY THAT MOURN, FOR THEY SHALL BE COMFORTED.....

Deldon could not help overhearing all t, i this whispering among the little slaves, and it was all the more exercising to him from the pains that it was taken to conceal it from him. He swore and thrashed his child slaves more fiercely than usual, held up hi his head briskly, and blasphemed more louder than ever in the daytime, but he had wry bad c dreams, and what he might have dreamed off we would not like to hear. the night after Janes body had been carried away, he rode to general munley, lines offering to him the whole plantation and the slaves . Then he got home very late and tired, o lock ed his door, took out the key and went to bed. Indeed no matter what it is let a man take what paine he may to crush down a human soul is an awful ghostly unquiet possession, for a man man indeed to have. And who ever knowns the mstes and bounds for it, and who knows all its awful perhapses----those shudderings, and tremblings, which it can no more live down than it can outlive its own awful eternity. And what a fool is that wicke man wicked man who locks his door to keep out spirits, who has in his own bosom a spirt he dare not meet with alone----whose voice smothered far down, and piled over with mountains of earthliness is yet like the forewarning trumpet of doom.

But cowardly Doldon carefully locked, d his door, and set a couple of big chairs against it, he left all the lights burning, and put his pistols under his pillow. He carefully examined the catches and fastenings of his windows, and then swore roudly that he did not care for the devil and all his angels, and went to sleep. Well he did sleep for he was tired------slept soundly. But finally slowly and gradually there came over his deep heavy sleep a shadow, beautiful in one way, but a horror too, an apprehension of something beautiful but dreadful hanging over him. It was the shroud of his mothers he thought, but one of the dead Vivian girls had it holding it up, and showing it to him. He heard a confused noise of soreams as i of many children being tortured, mingled with shouts, and with it all he surely knew he was asleep, and he struggled desperately to wake himself. He was half awake. He was sure something small was coming into his room. He knew the chairs had been moved aside, the doors were opening but he could not stir hand or foot to save his life. At last he turned---with a start- the door was open, and he saw a little hand putting out the lights. It was a cloudy misty moonlight, and there he saw it, something small and covered with white gliding noiseless, in butorying strangely and with an unearthly sound as it seemed, as if there was an unearthly woe or that it was a little soul of a slave that had been lost through his own wickedness.He could not even hear its ghostly garments. It stood still by his bed, it spread apart from its body the robe revealing partly some of its nudeness, and covered as it seemed with bloody stripes and sores from whips, then replacing the robe, and making a sound as if crying piteously, it ceased, it held up a defiant head, then a cold little hand touched his---and a voice which chilled him with horror said three times in a low fearful whisper;;" See what you have done to me. See what you have done to me. Come with me to where i abide."

And while he lay sweating with terror, he knew not when or how, She little thing was gone. He sprang out of bed and pulled at the door. It was shut and locked, and the man fell down in a swoon. Then after this there were reports around the country that a score of his little slaves were sick and dying. Excess of cor, o brutal lashings, and hardships had brought on a frightful kind of diseases. None could bear the horrors of the sick room of these slaves, where the poor children raved and soreamed, and spoke of sights which almost stopped the blood of to those who heard them.

At this time Violet and Anna had left the plantation altogether, and had taken with them as many of the slaves as they had dared. Anna was dressed as a girl, new and so was Violet, while the little slaves were dressed in the manner of Glandelinian children. Brought up from early life in connection with the highest society, the languages, movements and air of Anna Aronburg and Violet, were all in agreement with the idea of escape, and they still had enough remaining wity with them of a once splendid wardrobe and plenty of ammunition, to enable them to personate thevthing to advantage and to dress up the little slaves with them in the way they were now. They stopped in the outskirts of the o town of Phelantonburg, and secus secured a nice large wagon without being observed this being done at night. And accordingly Violet du doing the driving they started. Violet had a small black bonnet on her head, and it had been agreed in their escape that she was to personate the character of a glandelinian girl scout, and the child slaves, and Anna hervfollowers . And accordingly having the big wagon, they left the town far behind and made their appearance at a boat landing hoping to get a river steamer that would pass near where the christian army was situated.

The first person that took violet's not notice after her arival, was Frank, little yes poor little Anns fater father, who was staying at the landing, awaiting the next ship to come up. Anna Aronburg herself had observed the young man from her lop loop hole in the garret, and had seen him bear away the body of his little girl, and observe with secret exultation, his fight with Doldon and the overseers. And she too had easily gathered from the conversations she had overheard among the slaves as she glided about with Violet in her ghostly disguise, after nightfall who he was, and in what relation he stood with the little dead girl. She therefore felt an immediate accession o of confidence, when she was sure that he like she and her foildwers was awaiting the next boat. And the air and manner of the two girls, address and evident command of money prevented so far any rising disposition to suspicion at the boat landing, among the crowds awaiting the boat too. Usually people never inquire too closely into those who are fair on the main point, of paying well---a thing which Anna Aronburn had forseen forseen, when she so secretly provided herself with plenty of money. In the late of the evening the whistle of a boat was heard coming along , and the girls and their slaves were helpled aboard with the politeness which comes naturally to every Abbiesannian, and exerted himself to provide the children with a good stateroom.

The trip the children were to take on this boat appeared appeared eas, bindsed for all going on were either Abbiesanniens from the city near by or national soldiers who talked about the city near a siage of seige from Emperor Ivien of and of Manley moving around to try and frustrate him. Anna and Violet kept her their room and bed, during the whole time they were in the vinicity of Phelantonburg or the enemy, and were waited on with devotion beyond comparison by their attendant who was struck by the marvelious beauty of violet and her kind sweet manner. When they arived at a slaer part of the Cedernine river, Frank having learned that the course of the strange beautiful little girl and her companions was northwestward like his very own, proposed to take a stateroom on the a same boat with himself good naturedly compassionating the feeble health of some of their followers, and desirious to do what he could to assist the sick children. So behold therefore the whole party safely transferred to another big river ship, and sweeping up the river under a powerful head of steam direct for christian territory. The health of some of the slaves was now improving, and Anna and Violet sat upon the guards, come to the table, and were remarked upon in the boat as one girl wo who must have once been extremely handsome and the other of a beauty that put them in mind of one of the little Abbiesannian Princesses. And from the moment that frank first got the glimpse of violet's beautiful face and form he was troubled with one of those fleeting and indefinite likenesses which almost everybody can remember and has at times been perplexed with. He could not keep himself from looking at her, and 3 watching her pet perpetually and sometimes feared inwardly in his heart that she must be little Eva of Uncle Tom's Cabin" come back to life again. At table or sitting at her state door or room still she would encounter the young mans eyes fi fixed on her, and politely withdrawn, when she showed by her countenance, that she was surely sensible of the observation.

Also at this Anna Aronburg became uneasy. She too began to think that he was suspicious of something, and therefore she and violet resolved to throw themselves entirely on his generiousity, and both intrusted him with their whole history. Frank was heartily disposed to sympatise with any one who had easily escaped from Doldons plantat ion---a slave that he could not remember or speak of without a heartbreak, and with the courageous regard of consequences he assured them that he would do all in his power to protect and bring them saftly through to the christian lines which now was not far distant.

The next stateroom to Anna's and violets was occupied by a Abbiesannian lady named Minerva Rillo who was accompanied by a fine little daughter, a child of some eight years of age. This lady tall and powerful having gathered from franks conversation that he was an Abbiesannian and had just buried his little girl who died on a slave plantation seemed evidently disposed to cultivate his acquanitance in which design she was seconded by the graces of her little girl, who was about as pretty a child as ever ever diverted the weariness of a long trip on a steam boat and who in her manners and actions was almost a character of the Vivian Girls Themselves.Franks chair was often placed at her staternom door, and Anna or violet, as they sat upon the guards, could easily hear their conversation?

Madam Rillo was very minute in her inquries as to northern Abbiesannia, Emperor Vivens army, where she said she had resided in a former period of her life, and prank discovered to his surprise, that her former resience was in his own, home town Sacremento Abbiesannia, and her inquiries showed him her knowledge of peroples people and things in his region, that was perfectly surprising to him.

"Do you know" said Madam Rillo to him that next day" of any little girl in your neighborhood of the name of Jennie Lillian."

"There is a little girl slave by that name who is in peldons plantation" said Anna herself interrupting prank." I could not get the chance to take her along."

"He is a very cruel slave owner,I believe" said madam Rillo with a manner which seemed to betray more interest than she was exactly willing to show."

"A cruel child slave owner" said Frank scornfully though rather surprised at her manner." No Miss you are mistaken. He is a murdering beast.

"Did you ever know how long he has had Jennie Lillian as his slave----perhaps you have heard of him having a little boy slave called James."

"Oh certainly Jacob Anderto----I know him well----he escaped from peldon six weeks ago with a number of girl and boy slaves and is refugeed within Emperor Hanson Vivens army."

"He has" said madam Rilo quickly." Thank god."

Frank and the others looked a surprised inquiry but said nothing.

Madam Rilo leaned her head on her hand, and burst into tears.

"He is my son", she said.

"Madame" said Frank with a strong assent of surprise.

"Yes" said madame Rilo, lifting her head r proudly and wiping her tears" Mr Frank Lewis, Jacob Anderto is my long lost son."

"I am perfectly astonished but glad " said Frank pushing back his chair a pace or two, and looking at the lady.

"He was stolen from me and sold throughout Calverina" said she. " I was married to a Glandelinian but he was a good father and became loyal to dear Abbiesannia and before the war took me to Calverine city and married me. It is but lately he died in battle fighting to free these poor little children, and now I was coming up the river river to see if I could find and redeem my little son. Thank god the christians have him in their refuge.

"I have heard of child slaves losing relatives after being torn apart and sold" said Frank. Are you really the little boys mother. ? Have you any evidence to show? If so you can go direct to the christian lines and reclaim him."

"Yes indeed I am his mother" said Madam Rilo" Tell me what so sort of an Emperor is Robert Vivian."

"A very fine and righteous man" said Frank." He sustained a first rate character both for intelligence and principal and a man that anley and all hi his generals and others are beginning to fear. I knew you see" he said" because he arried a fine holy and beautiful woman."

" what sort of a girl?" said Madam Lillie, eagerly.

" They say he was married a treasure in 1900 and she is a beautiful amiable saintly woman. woman even now and has seven of the most beautiful and holiest and loving children God has ever crea ted. She is very pious and for the funniest part that girl who is Emperor Vivians wife new a was a little slave in her day and owned by my own mother who bought her not for a slave but to free her and adopt her as her own child. he She brought her up, and trained her carefully, and never talked of her as anything else but her daughter. She could read and write, embroider and sew beautifully, and wa was a beautiful singer. In earlier day before the war she fell in love with mperor Vivian, and now she is a Empress."

" Was she bought early in your household" said Madam Lillie.

" Yes, very early. Father bought her once, in one of his trips to vivian Dickey, and brought her up as a present to mother. She was about nine years old then, and surely had seen the hardest times as a slave. Father would never tell mother what he gave for her but I know he paid an extravagant sum on account of her extraordinary beauty. It took her a long time to get used to her kind treatment and beautiful surroundings."

Frank at this moment was sitting with his back to Anna Aronburg, and did not see the absorbed expression of her countenance, as he was giving these details. At this point of the story, she startled him by touching his arm, and with a face perfectly white and rigid with interest said;

" Could you tell me the names of the people your father bought her off?"

" A general, a Clandelinian general, who is known as general Richardson Purgatorium who now is the chief commander of the beleagured Clandelinian armies at Vivian Dickey. and he was the principal in the transca transaction. At least I think that was the name of the man on the bill of sale."."...."

" Oh my God" said Anna Aronburg, and fell insensible on the floor of the cabin. Frank was wide awake now, and so was the woman and Violet also. Though neither of them could understand what was the cause of Anna's so suddenly fainting, they therefore made all the tumult which is proper in such cases Frank upsetting a water cooler, and breaki t o two small windows, in the w warmpth i of his humanity, and various ladies in the cabin and others, hearing that a young girl had fainted, crowded the stateroom door.....

and kept out all the air, they possibly could, so that on the whole, everything everythi was done that could be expected, that is providing it was really done. Nevertheless p or poor Anna, when she did recover, turned her face to the wall, and wept and sobbed,---- perhaps all mothers who are even living till this day you may be understanding what she was thinking of. if not, never nevertheless she felt more than sure in that hour, that god had had mercy on her, and that she should see her elder sister------as she really did months afterwards----when but I anticipate just now.

Frank was as interested as any other young christian man might be, by the romance of this incident, no less than by feelings of humanity. was at the pains to send to Anna Aronburn the bill of sale of her elder sister, whos date and name all correspondent with her own knowledge of facts and left no doubt upon her mind as to the identy of her elder sister which was now the empress of Abbiennia and her queen as queen. And from Violet herself she recieved the very address of her sister, but yet Violet did not know the girl herself thinking still she was her boy friend James and not the second eldest sister of the three, the other being our well known friend Angelinia Aronburg.

Violet and her siste Violet and her sister Alice, and Angelinia Aronburg with Jennie, farmer and also daisy too had thus become reunited through i singular coincidences Witho of fortune without any thrilling adventures on this account, and therefore proceeded on their way toward, mperor Vivians lines, bringi , bringing the rescued slaved with them ed except three, of which frank to n to took to himself for adoption. Violet and her sisters going on their scouring at different parts had been some time away but had all returned to the christian army before the battle of Phelan tonburg and the little boy who had been rescued by Angelinia Aronburg---had been brought to mperor vivian, but general Roswell uster Johnston at that time was in Hanson vivians army and a great distance away. But general Randolph Massendale, was so interested in the statements of violet and her sisters on the accounts of their own an adventures among the little slaves, that he yeilded to the entraties of the girls to accompany them to Emperor Hansons mighty army now investing phelantonburg to bring the little boy to the general his father. The scene now changed to a small neat camp in the outskirts of ansons big army, it being ea ly early morning. A cheerful campfire was blazing outside the tent, and the soldiers were eating their breakfast. Inside the tent, a small round table with a purple army table c, cloth stood prepared for a breakfast of some ob in particular. In one corner of the large tent was another but smaller table covered with a purple cloth, where there was a little open writing desk pens paper, and over it a small shelf of well selected but military books such as plans geographies and histories and the like. This was always seen in any tent ever occup ied by he vivian Girls girls the same deal they had for self improvements o of their utiful work which led them to secure the much coveted arts, of studying maps, and histories and stories of heroes and heroines so they could do exactly the stun s they had accomplished. At this present time one of them was seated at the table makingnotes and drawing a small map from a geography which she had been studying.

" Come"" said one of her sisters to her" come violet" You have been gone so long from us so please do for a day put down that book, and let's talk while I'm cooking the coffee----------please do."

And little Jennie, seconded the effort by toddling up to her sister,, and trying to p lithe bo pull the book out of her hand, and install herself on her knee as a substitute.

" Oh you little interfering child slave of a---what you call it oh yes Centep ede" said Violet playfully, placing her arm around jennie". You should not interfere with your master so. Ki'll sell you to geural anley."

" That's right" said Jennie as she te then began to cut a loaf of bread." Sell me and I'll run away and become a christian dog." every one h aring this laughed outright while a soldier who heard the same said;

" what kind of a dog." ?

"One that barks with his teeth." answered Jennie.

A little more beautiful still she looks, her form a little stouter, more beautiful tco, her air more matronly than of yore, but evidently contended, and happy as a little girl should be, and why not. She too had gone to a child slave camp just like her sisters did, and brought back with her duindering her escape a whole sale number of them.

" Jake my little boy friend how did you come out in that Gepgraphy lession I gave you to study the days" would be af away" said Joice to penrod, as she laid her hand no oable head. Penrod had his same ways as before, quiet and proud, and he could never lose those eye lashes and and eyes, and that fine bold brow, that flushed with triumph as he answered" I did not study it from the book as you suggested. I studied from Manleys camp and left the book home. Ask your father himself what happened."

" that's right" said the soldier who was cleaning the utensils prepartory to breakfast." Ask your father the emperor what he studied in place of that book. it'll be a long time before Manley will ever want another such experience from penrod and his comrade called the Rattlesnake. Depend on it joice, Penrod had a good chance to ask Manley his prison but locked him in his headquarters where he was in for three days before the soldiers discovered it from his long absence. If you want a lot of money joice disguise yourself as a Clandelinian boyscout and bring Penrod over to him. You will be rich for life."

" Ill do no such thing." said joice." I'd give a good sum myself to see Manley hand over his co sword as a surrendered prisoner."

At this moment a orderly stepped in and announced that an officer wished to see the Vivian girls. Violet said that he was to be admitted, and went to invite him in. The delighted" by this is you general Johnston" and ty o good fighting christian general is welcomed. There were two other generals welcomed, general Massendale and Greatheart. Now if the truth must be told, the honest general Massendale had arranged a little programe according to hi which this affair was to develope itself, and on the way up all had very cautiously and prudently exhorted each other not to let things out, except according to previous arrangements. What was the good mans consernation therefore, just as he had motioned the two generals to be seated, and was taking out his pocket handkerchief to i wipe his mouth so as to proceed in his introductory speech in good order when Violet upset the whole plan was throwing her arms around the generals neck and letting out all at once by saying;

" Oh general, don't you know the good news yet, we have your little Son Henry. "

General Greatheart had seated himself more composedly, and would have carried on his part well, had not the other Vivian girls suddenly appeared before him in exact shape and form every outline and curl as they had done when he had seen them last. The beaut iful princesses peeped up in his face, and greatheart caught as of them in his arms, and pressed her to his bosom saying;

" what I would give if had children like you."

Therefore it was a troublesome matter to do up exactly in proper order, but the good general Massendale at last succeeded in getting every one quiet, and delivered, the speech with which he had intended to open the scene, and which at last he succeeded so well that his whole audience were sobbing about him in the manner that ought to satisfy any orator, ancient or modern.

They knelt all together, and the good general prayed---for there are some feelings so agating and tumultous that they can only find rest by being poured into the bosom of bosom of the almighty---and then rising p, they all embraced each other, i with a Holy trust in him Him who from such peril and dangers, and by such unknown ways, had brought them altogether once more. The notebook of general Massendale among these travest of Abbiennian heroes and heroines should for better sake have contained more ir truth than fiction. Why should it had to be otherwise, when in wicked Clandelinia a terrible system prevails which dew troys families, and scatters their children into horrid slavery, as the wind whirls and scatters the leaves of the trees in a storm. Then christian armies of refugee, like the Eternal Shore, often had united again in glad communion hundreds of thousands of little hearts that for some years or long years, have mourned each other as lost. Often n unusually often every day child slaves have really been rescued from their owners by forces of cavarly and raiders, and affecting beyond expression is the earnestness which every new arival among them is met, if per- chance it may bring tidings of mother, sister, brother or father, still lost to view on account of the shadows of slavery. Deeds of heroism are wrought here, especially by the Vivian girls, and self sacrifice also more than those of other hero books and romance, when defying the dangers of horrid torture from wicked Glandelinians, and braving horrid death itself, the Vivian Girls voluntarilly threds threads their way when ever they choose back to the terrors and perils of the past of that dark Glandelinia possessed land, that they may bring out of some child slave plantation or town or from Glandelinian slave places in army camps, as many little slaves as it is convienent to get away i with. O Violet herself never had been captured during these exploit however exploits however neither had her sisters, for they had played their work well, but they had observed the suffering shameful stripes of others, and risked therefore everything to accomplished a little slaves freedom, and in one letter which she wrote to her mother Jennie herself told her she was going back again some day that she may at last bring out to the christian lines poor little Jannnie and others. Therefore my good reader, are these Vivian Girls merely heroines, or reckless children. children who could have easily stayed s aftly at home in Abbieannia? But would you not also take the chances to do the same for a little slave. Suppose the slave was your little daughter, son or little brother and sister? And could you blame them for the risks they are taking?

But to t return to our friends whom we left wiping their eyes, and recovering themselves from too great and sudden a joy. They are now all seated around the break- fast table and are decidedly compi companionable, only that Joice who is there too tells Boswell how Angelinia Aronburg brought his son back for him.

Angelinia Aronburg herself had passed on to some duty however without stopping but such a change had passed over her, that our readers would scarcel scarcely kno her even though she still retained the uniform of a boy scout. The disparing haggard expression of her face had changed entirely to one of gentle, trust, and she took with her as companion two of the rescued child slaves and seemed to sink into the bosom of these two and took the little ones into her heart, as something for which it long had waited. Indeed her loe seemed to flow more naturally to one gi golden haired little girl for she seemed an exact image of one of her younger sister she had lost. The little one was a flowe y beauty, and though she too though still retaining the disguise as a boy had been for two days with the Vivian girls, their steady consistent piety regulared by the constant reading of the Sacred ord, made made her a proper guide for the sh shattered and wearied mineumind of the girl spy. Therefore Angelinia Aronburg yeilded at once, and with her whole soul, to every good in l influence and became a devo and tender christian like th the rest.

After a day or two Angelinia Aronburg then had told Violet and her sisters and th rest more particular of her affairs, and she generiously offered her shares of what she recently had discovered in the many p ces she had spied and raided upon during her whole carreer. And when she asked Violet and her sisters what she could best do for theal they answered:

" Do not give up your good work. Rescue as many of the poor little ones as possible for we ourselves won't stop. You dor you do your part, and we,ll do the rest."

Then Angelinia Arenburg embarked on a steamer disguised as before to go to Calverine to st study child slave conditions there, as that city since the war was long in the hands of the enemy. If the reader do not lose hope, he will yet hear from her there. General goswell Buster Johnston took his little son to his headquarters in the army camp much to the surprise of all generals and soldiers who had not known he had a son and thought at first he had adopted one of the rescued child slaves as many were always doing. Angelinia Aronburg who had risked so much to bring the boy saftly to the christian lines and so throughoutly efficient had she been in her conscientious endeavor to bring the lad in, and had showed so much intellengence, activity and zeal in her adventures, that h she was recommended to emperor Vivian by general Boswell Buster Johnston, and approved as one of the best of girl scouts along with His daughters as a slave freer rescuer, and whose activity and ingenuity which made her so multifora and restless in her work had succeeded in every thing she set out d to do without even being captured once. Had she known that her sister was alive, and that her elder sister was the Emperors wife what would she have thought and done? It will also be a satisfaction to some mother, or father, also to state, that during the beginning of the war, for the hundreds upon hundreds of thousands of little laleves rescued, about two quarters of them were identified as to what parents and ationalty they belonged and though they could not be returned to those countries as yet on account of the nature of the very war ra iraging just as brutally on the sea, the na parents had been notified nevertheless by wireless telegram and told that hereafter their children were safe, but that they could not be sent. But if they themselves wished to risk the perils perils to come over they could, and reclaim their long lost ones. Others of the slaves whom it was proved had no parents or relatives living were transported under escort to parts where the war would be far away, and adopted into many kind loving families

On mature deliberation, it was decided also that all soldiers who rescued little slaves should obtain a parole or a despensation from the army provided he desired to do so or if his term expired and keep the little one for his own child. When Anna Aronburg left Hansons camp and embarked on a boat up the Mic-Hollester Run River for other points en route t ard tward Calverine she carried of course the two slaves with her to try and find a good home for them. The good looks and not only that but also out of pirty won for these little dears a beautiful nome among some rich and righteous Calverinians en route for northern Abyssinikile, and they were therefore adopted.

However the views and feelings of Violet and her sisters may be expressed in a long letter to their mother, which of course Joice herself was voted to write, but which was singed by them all with the confirmed signature of their Father the Emperor.

To Be TO SACREMENTO. ABBIEANNIA.
JUNE THE 14TH TH 1913.

Dear Mother,

I and my dear sisters indeed feel at a loss, as to our future course. Trus as you have often said to me and them, I might take the chances and mingle in with as many poor little slaves as it is possible without our exposing ourselves to too much of a da danger, as we can so beautifully disguise ourselves for every exploit we make, and toat of posing as little child slaves and running the risks and being one for a time to study the matter seems easy enough. Well perhaps on sufferance, we have done so. But to tell you the truth dear mother, I have to wish to be one for real, and our hearts cry to hea heaven for justice.

Our sympathids are not for the parents of these poor little slaves, for the mothers only suffer the loss, but for the slaves. I and my sisters have been among these little slaves often, and to their wicked masters, the little slave is no more than a sicky sickly horse or dog and man, belong to even our own nation to whom many a poor heart broken mother yearns for, and we have taken such risks in allowing our selves to be sold as slaves that often it seemed to be that yn the cruel sale would have seperated us also for good, and we can feel it when we know we love each other so dearly. I know how it is by my own heart and so do our friends. When I and my sisters witnessed all the little slaves have suffered of our own wilfully selected sufferings for them of the distresses and struggles of my sisters sold seperately in their behalf in any slave market for the cause yet we always have succeeded in escaping one way or another and not only reunited again but always coming back with a good baton of slaves in our possess ion. I hope however dot to have unchristian sentiments yet I may be excused for saying I have no wish to pass for a dirty Glandelinian boy or girl scout, or to identify myself with any Glandelinian.

It is with the oppressed, enslaved little girls and boys, that we cast in our lot, and if I or my sisters wished anything, I wi would wish myself and them together for a long time. The desire and yearning of ar soule for all of the slaves without parents is for a true Abbieannian n Nationality. I want to make these little slaves a people like our own, and where are I and my sisters to look for it. Not in existing slavery, for slavery is a wicked thing worse than piracy to our government. Where then shall we obtain our wish. In the states of our nation, raising these little ones far above the condition of slavery. Abbieannia has at last risen by this tremendous war that is on, become an acknowledged christian nation on the face of the earth, acknowledged by every christian nation existing. Here in Abbieannia all slaves should be brought and become citizens and have new parents, fine homes and all the happiness their hearts desire AND SHALL.

I and my sisters are aware now, that as we are Emperor Vivians beautiful daughter, and as we are just as strong in soul and heart in the cause as You or our Dear Father and all the rest are, he'll have all Glandelinia against us, but before we defy the insurgents to strike, hear me and my sisters, during our stay in one slave place of horror and to another, we have followed up with intense interest as wellas horror and grief the history of child slavery in Glandelinia, and of its extending into the states of Calverinia which we by main force are already even stamping out. I have noted the struggle of Exner Mylette against his more wicked inferior and superiors and have recieved some impressions from what pal paisy and Joice have experienced in Mylettes stay that Mylette alone is one of the most christian of all Glandelinian generals but could he be nevertheless pare pardoned and not acknowledged as a leading rebel when he born in the Capitol city of whole Abbieannia takes up arms against his own country and strives now to capture his very own city?

Yet in the question of slavery alone Mylette and Johnston Jacken Manley includ ing his sons are a sort of abolitionist, and colol colonizationists, and Mylette the Abolitionist frees the slaves by exchange for prisoners or by having free papers made out to him them. Yet the Glandelinian government as we have learned in our other spying work have subserved all sorts of purposes, by being played off in the hands of the oppressors against us and all christian children. Doubtless the scheme may have been used, in all wicked ways as a means to retarding the emancipation of the slaves and therefore ---horrors to think of it dear mother---but could we have it, we have got our father to sign a decree that " no quarter shall be given to all child slave owners and their attendants found by spies to be brutal to little slaves. And also the question to me is is there not a God above all Glandelinia's wicked scenes. May He not already be ruling and overruling their wicked and most powerful designs, and will he some day not make a part of the population of Holy Abbieannia from the survivors of these poor little helpless toiling little ones.!

In these days as even christian nations know from the knee, news hundreds of little ones like th ethese are y being rescued every day. Once a nation starts upon this holy work of mercy nothing can stop it--it was not to discover but to seize. Let us then all take hold together, with all our might, and see what we can do with this enterprize, and the whole splendid continent of Abbieannia opens wide her arms and recieves her little forllorn children, children of sorrow, horror and ruthless toil. Our Nation shall roll Glandelinia from our righteousstates, with the help of Christianity and civilization, and play plant her Mighty Kindom Kingdom, whose armies growing with the rapidity of germs throughout the world shall win in the end.

Do you say that I or my sisters might be doing things quite rashly to work this was for our enslaved little brethern? I think not as we do it so cleverly. We don't let those who place us as their slaves go too far inbrutality with us. If I or my sisters could forget one minute the sorrows and sufferings of a little child slave, so chained is it not right for us to choose to suffer with them.

M.may God forget us. But what else can we do for them here if we cannot breaktheir

Other christian nations have already formed a council over this sorrow, and they too are protesting to the horrors with a great vehemence. All christian nations have a right to argue, remonstrate, protest, and present the cause of the slave. If Abbieannia ever crushes this rebellion---as we trust in God it will---if there they will put down all oppressive social inequalities, and all the horrors are done away, then in the great congress of all nations, thelittle slaves willl show their acts of gratitude, as the nations are presenting the cause of the enslaved and suffering race of children, and, then it can be that free el enlightened Holy Abbieannia wi l succeed in wiping out from her own escutcheon placed there by her enemy that bar sinister which if her own fault would have disgraced her among all nations, and which is truely a curse to her as the enslaved.

But you may tell me dear mother, that we are taking too great a risks to mini mingl among the slaves as one of them too, but why not when we know what they suffer. What did I see at Deldons plantation. A little girl whose name is Jane first flogged almost to death, and then thrown around as if she was not ing but a bundle of old clothes. We are free to meet and mingle, to take our chances come what may, and they who try to deny us this right are false to their on own cause and country e and of humanity.

We are in particular allowed to do it. The slaves have more than the rights of common men---they have the claims of an injured race of children for reparation. But, then they shall get it, they shall belong to a country that fought for their freedom, shall have what they wish for, and those that have parents will recieve their children as soon as possible.

To our nation has been entrusted the destines of the world during this period of bloody struggle and conflict. To this this mission of holy war its stern inflexible energitic elements is well adapted, and sooner or later I look for another scene to arise within the Glandelinian cities I hope are armies will soon enter victorious, on Glandelinia's borders I trust we stand, and the throes that now convulse the countries are to my hope but the birth pangs of the coming hour when universal peace and brotherhood shall come for good and all. Yet the little slaves having been chilled in the firmas of injustice and oppression they have need also to bind closer to their hearts that sublime doctrine of love and forgiveness, through which alone they are to conquer which it is to their mission to try to spread among each other.

In myself, I confess I and my sisters at times good as we are have been quite feeble in this or for this---having witnessed what we did, observe--for full the blood of our our veins is between the hot and hasty saxon and spanish, but we have an eloquent preacherof the gospel every by our sides, in the person of each other, and the lovely pi priests in our christian armies.

And when ever one of us almost give gives way and wishes to abandon any such sad undertaking god's holy spirit always restores us, and keeps before our eyes the christian calling and mission of our holy Abbieannian race. As a Christian Abbieannian patriot as a rescuer of little slaves, we go among them, my own chosen my glorious little hard toiling brethern and friends, and to them in my heart, I always apply those splendid words of prupheoy;

" Whereas though has been forsaken and hated, so that no man went through thee, I will make th ee an eternal excellence, a joy of many generations."

" You will call me and my sisters," heedless little fools" you will tell me and they that we have not well considered what dangers we face in our undertakings. But I and my sisters have always considered and counted the costs. We will often my long as the struggle continues go among the poor little slaves, not as to an asylum of romance, but as to a field of holy work, a field of self sacrifice for the good of the slaves and for Abbieannia's holy cause.

We expect to do this holy work with both hands and all our heart------to work hard-- to work against all sorts of difficulties and perils, and discouragements in the face of toil and privations and horrors, and to work till every slave is free. This is what I do it for, and in this I and my sisters I am quite sure we shall not be disappointed disappointed in the end. Whatever you may think of our determination, do not fear for us in the least or think that in whatever we do, we take risks too great.

Violet, An Angelinia, Alice, Catherine, Daisy, Hettie Jennie Vivian your
dear and darling daughters.
Abbieannian princesses..."""""""""

In the meantime Frank had written to to his loving wife merely a few lines stating the day that she might expect him to be home with the two adopted child slaves. Of the harrowing death scene of his poor little daughter Jane he had not the heart to write, it it cut him too much. He had tri e tried a number of times, and only succeeded in half mocking himself, and then suddenly finished by tearing up the paper, wiping his eyes, and running somewhere to get quiet.

Indeed there was a pleased bustle all through the beautiful mansion where his wife lived in Northern Galverinia, that day in the ep expectation of the arival of her husban with his child and the two others. His two other children were seated comfortably by an open window, and a supper table glittering with plates and our class and beautiful silver we were sere sit out on whose arrangement their loving mother, was presidinh. Arrayed in a new dress, wit el with clean white apron, her face glowing with satisfaction, she lingered around the arrangements of the table, to see if every thing was just right.

" on't it look good to him and dear little Jane and the new children!" said o to her daughter Margaret." There I set Janes little plate and cup ajust where she likes it, round by the open window. Poor little Jane always wanted to sit by the open sindow to see the scenery she liked so well while she ate. And here is our best coffee pot the little one Jane bought out of her savings for us two Christmases ago. And did you ohn hear yet when papa was coming home with Jane and the rescued little slaves?" she said inquiringly of to her son.

" Yes mama---but he only wrote a few lines to me also, just to a say he will be home to night--if he could and that was all."

" did not say ayn anything about poor little Jane I suppose?" said his mother still fidgeting with the tea cups.

" o he did not mama. He did not write anything of Jane but just of the two girls he was bring home poor things. He said he would tell all, when he got home."

" just like your dear papa---he always likes to tell everything for himself. He never likes to write everything but take you by surprise."

Her elder daughter smiled.

" I am thinking poor Jane won't know you Margaret and John any more. you are such a big girl now, good too, and pert. I have also the good pattern my your father likes so much that I always baked for him, and also the little cakes Jane liked so much, and which makes me remember the day she was stolen from us that sad morning. Lord how I felt that morning."

Nevertheless her eldest daughter sighed and felt a heavy weight on her heart at this allusion. She had felt uneasy ever since she recieved her fathers letter, last something should prove to be hidden behind the veil of silence which he had drawn.

" Mama have you got the morning paper," said Mara Margaret anxiously.

" Yes daughter, why?"

" Because I want to show father the news of the great christian victory at Palmerinia recently won. But poor Jane won't know the difference I believe Lord it is six years since the Glandelinians stole her. She was a mere baby yet then, and could hardly walk. Remember how tickled father ju used to be when he would just learn her how to walk. And how good she always was when she was three years old. ow she is ten I believe, six when shec was stolen.

" N o mama she was five years" said John John.

" Then the rattling of a carriage was heard.

" Papa has come" said John starting to the window. His wife ran to the window, looked out, observed it was true, and then ran to the entry door, and was folded into his loving arms. Then she stood anxiously straining her eyes for some one she did not see.

" Oh Poor Annie my wife Annie" said Frank stopping compassionately, and taking her hand between his" I would have given my fortune to have brought poor Jane with me, but she has gone to heaven. "

There was a passionate exclamation from both son and elder daughter, but his wife said nothing. The party entered the breakfast room, but his wife turned and pointing to Janes place said kind of sarcastically" There's a place for one of the new children." Then pointing to the other said" there's one for the other. I hope I never see anything of a Glandelinian again. Just as I expected she would be,--stolen ---sold, and then brutally assassainated on one of those Glandelinian plantations."

And then she turned and walked out proudly and swiftly out of the house. Her husband followed her softly, and took one of her hands, drew her back into the house but he could not comfort her, and he was forced to tell with simple phatues the scene of her daughrrs daughters death, and her last message of love. Then he said;

" My poor poor wife I know your heart is broken, and I cannot heal it but jesus can. He always heals the broken hearted, and binded up their wounds."

But finally she broke out laughing, a fit of hysterics.

-Two days later a surgeon and two men came and took her away to sad to say an asylum for the insane, while the two remaining chilurn wept piteously together. AND this AND this is the result of the cursed child slavery. The poor woman about a month after came back to her reason again from good care, but she is broken down in health and not the same woman she always was.

In the meantime Emperor Vivian appeared among all his officers who on a sunday Sunday had attened the army Mass and he said;

" My good friends and fellow officers" There will be no need for any one to be told of the conditions of slavery still existing. The army needs to use better efforts than it did before. I expect to carry on this campaign and to bring an end to this horror going on. I expect you all to be good and willing to carry through any plan I so desire, and I trust in God I too shall be faithful and willing to aid Abbiennia and all slavery forever and ever. And now my friends and comrades look look up and pray to God for is granting to the poor slaves their speddy speedy Graces of Freedom.

An aged officer who was a colonel now rose and lifting his noble hand said;

" Let's beg beg of God the petition of the childrens prompte freedom." As all kneeled by consent a more touching and hearty Te Deum never ascended to heaven at the conclusion of the Holy Mass though borne on the peal of organ, bell and cannon, than came from the Priest and the honoest old colonel. On rising another struck up one or two Pen petional py prayer hymns of the Catholic Church. Then when all concluded Emperor Vivian appeared among the officers with a bunch bundle of papers in his hand containing a certified something to every officer which was a decree to every soldier in the army who so desired to adopt a little slave as his own child or to use as an army mascot and train them to be a boy or girl scout, which he read successively, and presented amid the sobs and tears and shouts of all present.

One thing more said Emperor Vivian as he stopped the congratulations of the throng, " you all remember poor little Jane who was brought here by soldiers who raided Deldons plantation and brought the rest of the slaves except one here?"

He then gave a short narration of the scene of her death as told to him by Violet, violet, and of her loving farewell and added--

"It was on her little grave my dear generals and friends, that I have resolved before, god, that I would exert my utmost strength, and all the resources of the Nation and all my wealth and life included if need be to bring about the protection and freedom of all these little slaves, that no one through me will ever risk possibly run the risk of being parted from home and parents, and dying on a lonely plantatin plantation at the hands of a cruel master, as she had died. go when you think over the plans I have made out by you, think that when you have any opportunity to adopt some of these poor slaves when freed, that you owe it to the good little girl Jane, and pay it back in every way you can. Think of all the slaves that have died in all these horrors every time you rescue a slave, and let every scene be a memeorial to put you in mind to follow in the steps of christ and continue to be an honest and faithful a christian as she was."

During even the progress of this dreadful war for the freedom of child slaves the Emperor Emperor of Abbiennia, and all his generals of the many various christian armies, have often been inquired of by war correspondents, and news paper men from not only different parts of the Abbiennian country, but also from all christian natipns of the world who had managed to get through, whether the horrors of child slavery was as great at it is said to be, and to these inquiries they have gave one general answer-" Go and see for yourself."

Therefore the many seperate incidents of child slavery which I have described in this book and o other volumes, they f also found to every extent authenitic, all of them occuring either under the observation of these men and war correspondents, or that of their personal friends who however to see everything for themselves had to pose as overseers and drivers. Therefore these war correspondents have observed characters the counterpart or worse of all that are here in the story stated by the aurthor himself having witnessed things among these slave places that the aurthor himself would not dare, or have the heart to write. The frequent personal appearance of violet and her sisters as slaves among the slaves, and the character ascribed to them were also witnessed, as well as their incorruptible fidelity, piety and honesty and loveing a nautre of the Vivian girls, the impossibly of spoiling them no matter how good or mean people would be to them had more than one development to their pre personal knowledge. And some of the most deeply tragic and romantic, some of the most terrible incidents which occured which are not stated in this book because of their revolting horror have also been observed by these correspondents. The incident of the dreadful penalty for child slaves who are caught when they run away, was discovered to be a well known fact by the newspaper men who witnessed some of it themselves and only could stand the scene once and no more. The story of child slaves being captured after running away and their bodies opened alive and left to lie there in the hot sun in that state, of horrible things beyond human comprenension comprehension was an incident often that sluckily fell under the personal observation of war cor e correspondents of foriegn nations. From the same source was derived the character of wicked old James Deldon. Of him one of the war correspondents wrote, speaking of visiting his plantation on a tour of this kind;

" He actually made me an impression of some hedious bulldog gone mad with hydrophobia. He showed me the trees which he burned his slave for running away, the dogs he threw children in for the slightest provocation so so they would die of suffocation under the mock, and other horrible things, and actually showed me his guns which he shoots them and also his fist which was like a sledge hammer, telling me it was made so calloused with knocking down the little slaves, and especially little girls. When I left that plantation in that big swamp, I drew a long breath, and felt as if I had e escaped from themouth of Hell."

That such things as the tragic fate of poor little Jane, and others, also has hundreds of thousands of times had its horrid parallel, there were as many war correspondents and newspaper men all over to testify to their nations. And it can be remebered that in all Glandelinian states, that no child slave has no protection whatever not even from law, indeed nothing whatever to protect the little ones, but the character of the master. If the master is a bad one, he can kill the slave and suffer notying for nothing for it if his cviolent deed was even witnessed. Therefore countless thousands of scenes too shocking to be contemplated occassionally forced their way to the ears of people in other nations, and the comment that one often heard made on them was more good then the thing itself.

The public and shameless sale of beautiful little girls and boys had acquired an unusual notoriety from many incidents predicted in this long story. I can extract the following in a short detail. In a company of two hundred and fourty little slaves who attempted before the battle of Phelantonburg to escape from a big slave plantation to the christ ian line were many young and beautiful little girls who had those peculiar attractions of form and feature which Glandelinian slave traders prize so highly. They however in their flight were lost, and ran plump into a portion of Wanleys glandelinian army camp and were captured and instead however is usually the case being punished for running away by death were doomed to work in the army in building fortification, help the soldiers dig trenches, and ruthlessly make them expose themselves to the fire of christian batteries while at work. Wicked as Wanleys army is there were many soldiers there too however, whose hearts were touched with pity for their fate. These soldiers each offered any price to redeem them and save them from this o horror and offered also to give that would have broke them but the fiend of a general Wanley was more than inexorable. They were dispatched from one camp to another, hardly having even at night three hours of sleep, but nuthing else except work work, and hard work beyond even what a grown person usually could stand, but when they had about six days of this, many died, and Wanley sold the survivors to Deldon.

When the survivors therefore were being sent to Deldon, some of the more humane soldiers went to Wanley to plead with the wretch who owned them for the love of God to spare his victims. They coaxed so hard however that they managed to secure their redemption but at an enormous ransom and brought back, and sent to Myletze to exchange for prisoners. It is it not therefore plain from this that many other slaves had many couter counter paprts parts.

Justice too obliges the aurthor to state that the fairness of mind and generiousity generosity attributes to general Heidi Myletze are not without a parellel as the following anecdote will follow.

About two weeks after the month of the following July was passed, when as we see some time after the battle of Cedermine when Jannie was safe within the christian lines some as within Deldons plantation who had also been an overseer but a more humane none one went to Myletze army and being interviewed by the great general told him that Jannie had not left with the aid of the free papers he had made out for her as he thought but that Deldon had stolen her. And this was reported before Deldon took her to sell to Manley as he proposed. Isner Heidi Myletze was highly indignant, during a lull in his campaign at Angelinia Agathia he left Beppo Evans in full command and visited general Wanley in high anger, but being possessed of uncommon candor and fairness, and as Wanley truthfully proved that he had nothing to do with Deldons stealing any slave was soon quieted by his arguments and representations. But never theless it caused the break between Myletze and Wanley to be wider then ever, and he nevertheless immediately told Wanley before his face that if ever he tries any more interference with his slaves or his army, he and Wanley will be fighting a war also, that Myletze would take sides with the nationals instead and do all possible to crush him. It was a side of the subject which Wanley never had expected, never had thought on, but Myletze at this moment was dangerous, and therefore the former was scared and inwardly glad when Myletze le t left the camp to go straight to Deldons plantation.

An interview was forwith procurred, and Deldon was asked why it was that he had the maness to go and steal a slave to make a slave who had free m papers made out for her. Mylstze asked;

" Did you not know I made free papers out for both Jennie ,illian and ,ane.?

you confounded scoundrel."

" ,,o sir" said Deldon evidently cowed." The little brats never showed me anything."

" Never showed you anything? Then you took them from the children and burned them up without even looking f them over. And why did you dare to come to my army to steal my slaves from me?"

" Because ,annie herself had belonged to Manley once and general federal had no right to sell her to you just to get her,ame from his hands."

" I see" replied Mylstze. " Well sir Deldon fork over the value of those two slaves y stole from me and tell me where ,annie is now, and if you don'T 1811 I'll place you under arrest immediately.You see my soldiers are here with me to carry out my orders. go take your choice. Re arrested for kidnapping from a ,landelinian government general or hand me over the money for the slaves."

" But what good will it do me ,sir. One of them is dead.?"

" ,o she is not dead." said Mylstze." She was assassinated by you. Hand over the money or you are under arrest."

Deldon seeing there was no way out, andknowing Mylstze well immediately made out the money in bills,,disposited the bill of sale in h the hands of the irate general and then was glad to get away and into his house were he locked himself in his room and did not again show himself for three days. He could not tell where ,annie was for though he had told Mylstze general Manley bought her, yet Mylstze knew he lied. The aurg aurthur hopes therefore that he has done justice to the little slaves, to therefore bring this sort of calimity that came upon Deldon, to have to pay for a slave that even was dead and in heaven. And after this Mylstze on his return made his lines so strictly guarded that he one could ever take a little ne of his again.

For many days during their work these war correspondents avoided all writing upon or allusion to the subject of child slavery considering it as too painful to write about. But when they heard and saw how fiercely the christian soldiers were struggling f the freedom of these little ones, and when they saw with perfect surprise and great consternation, the ,landelinians striving with might and main to win the war to keep tn them slaves , and when they saw on all hands the awful brutality to them, they could only say that the scenes were more harrowing than they had heard. nd from this arose a de ir desire to exhibit it in a living horrible reality. They endravored to show it fairly in its best and in its worse phases. In a few of the best aspects they might have been successful, but oh whowill say what yet rema remained untold in that valley of shadow of death, that lies on the other side. To you generous nobled minded men and woman readers---you whose virtue and magnanimity and purity of character are the greater for the serever trial it has ent encountered---to you is the appeal of these little ones living such a life of horrors and sorrow. Have you not since you read this in your own secret souls, in your own private conversings, felt that these a e woes and evils in this accursed system far beyond h what are here shadowed or can be shadowed in this book? Can it be otherwise. Is man or woman a creagur creature to be n ded to go and witness such scenes of brutality of little children and say nothing. And n doesnt this awful slave system by denying the slave all legal right of testimony made make every owner an irresponsible despot. Can any of the readers fail to make the inference what the practical result of this holy war in their favor will be in the long run. If there is a the aurthur admit a public sen sentiment among the readers, men and women of honor, justice and honor and humanity, and little children too who read this who may have soft and loving hearts for their like brethern, is there not a good way to free them, and cause the just punishment of all the ruffians who enslave the little ones unjustly.

And cannot the ruffian, h the debased by slave law bedeprived of unjustly owning so many slaves as the best and purest?

This child l slave trade is now in Abbieannia, By ,merica Abbieannian law by t by the law of ,mperor Vivian; by the request of the Princesses, and their mother, considered as something far more wicked and dreadful than the worse of piracy. But despite the war the slave trade as systemici systematic a as ever is carried on in Abbieannia's very face in Calverinia, and its heart breaks, and its horrors, hes can I have the heart to write it allI I have given so far only a faint shadow, a dim picture of the anguish and despair that are everywhere throughout ,landelinia and elsewhere at this very moment , en even writing, riving millions of little hearts, shattering millions of lives, and driving the helpless and sensitive little people to frenzy and despair and horrible still to sucide. There are those, living who knew the mothers from whom the children have been stolen, and whom the fear of this cursed traffic has driven to the murder of their children, and themselves seeking in death a shelter from woes more dreadful than death. ,othing of tragedy can be written, can be spoken, can be conceived that can ever equal the frightful horrors of scenes daily and hourly acting on the shores and in the interior of Calverinia and wicked ,landelinia beneath the shades of defied Abbieannia's ,oly law, and the shadow of the Cross of Christ. Nay many have said to ,mperor Vivian that they have actually seen in dreams Jesus Christ among the slaves, and that though He Be god as well as Man seemed unable to bear the sights, and had turned away placing his arm across his eyes and weeping like a little homeless child just deprived of its parents. And now even you good men and women of ,merica and all,other christian nations, is this a thing to be trifled with, apologized for, and let alone in silence should it have been true. Every person who may r ad read these books by yhe blaze of your winter evening fires,, strong hearted generous men, sailors, ship owners everywhere, nuns of convents priests of churches---is this a thing that should not be prayed for to their freedom. Brave and generous men all over the world, answer would you allow t,i this thing to be if you had the power to end it. And you dear fathers and fathers all over the world, in every nation---indeed you who have learned by the cradle of your own little children to love,and feel all for mankind--by the sacred love you bear your child, by your joy in his beautiful spotless infancy, by the fatherly pity and tenderness with which you guide his growing years, by the anxieties of his soul and education, by the prayers that you breathe for his souls eternal good-- I beseech you pa pity the mother who has your affections, and who some day finds her child gone; and who by the power of Abbieannia still has the legal right to protect aide or educate her child and yet cannot regain him because he is gone beyond as it seems all help.

By the very sick hour of your little child, by those dying eyes which you can never forget by those sadchast cries, that wrung your heart when you could neither help or save, by the desolation of that empty cradle, that silent nursey, I beseech you to pity these poor mothers that are constantly made s childless by the wicked, landelinian child slave trade. And say mothers all over the world, has Abbieannia a real right to put down this sorrow and horror by war?

Do you say that if it was truely happen that the people of other nations have nothing whatever to do with it, and can do nothing. I well suppose it was your own s child I would steal from you and make a slave of it. what then would you do. Prosecute me to the full extent of the law. Nevertheless let me say this," Those who favor the cause of ,landelinia favor the devil when He has arrayed against heaven and earth in a wicked rebellion against God. The people of wicked ,landelinia have defended, encouraged and aided, and are more guilty for it, before god if the storywould be true, than the owners and drivers.

The many mothers and fathers in all parts of Abbieannia who really feel as they should have adopted the slaves when they were free, and all the Abbieanniens had something more to do than denounce the ,landelinians for the horror, they have to fight the evil within their own southern territory because of the ,landelinians, who even there trade the souls and bodies of little girls and boys for a great sum of money. But there are multid multitudes of little slaves always being freed, and sent north to be free and have homes.

But what can the Abbieanniens do when the enemy fight so fiercely to even regain the slaves they lost? Of that every one has been the judge. There was one thing they can ha and have done, they can see to it that the slave is never retaken. An atmosphere of sympathic sympathetic influence encircles every Abbieannian, and every man or woman there feels strongly healthy and justly on the great interest of humanity, and there fore is a great benefactor to the race ofvlittle slaves. They are in harmony with the sympathies of Christ, and those who do not have the chance to adop the little ones pray. Masses are offered for them by thousands in every city or big town and elsewhere, Litanies are said for them all prayers and hymns are used, and they pray for, those poor distressed child slaves whose whole chane chances of religious improvement is an accident to wicked trade and sale, from whom any adherence to the morals of Christianity is in many beases an impossibility, unless they have given them from above, the cou age and courage and grace of horrible martydom. But still more. Everywhere in Calverinia too can be seen emerging broken remnants of child slaves, boys and girls escaped to freedom by miraculous providences from the surges of ,slavery to various christian armies--but feeble in knowledge, and in many cases infirm in moral consit constitution from a system indeed which confounds and confuses every principal of christianity and morality. They come and f seek refuge among christian soldiers, they come to seek homes, and new parents, knowledge and Christianity.

What do the Abbieanniens give to these poor litle unfortunates. Does not every Does not every Abbieannian give to this race of little slaves some effort at reparation for the wrongs that the wicked ,landelinians had brought upon them. Will the doors of churches and schoolhouses, and orphan asylums and private homes be shut upon them? Will the Abbieannian states arise and throw them out. Shall the Church of Christ hear in silence the taunt that is thrown at them by the wicked, and shrink away from the helpless little hand that they stretch out, and by her silence encourage the cruelty that would chase them from the borders into awful deserts. It would be a mournful spect acle if so, but the answer is NO.. All refuges are opened to them, once free, forever free, and the way Abbieannia is doing things, the country of Glandelinia will have reason to tremble, when it also should remember that the fate of wicked nations is in Abbieannia's hands, as well as in the hands of One who is very pitiful, and of tender compassion.

Would the Abbieanniens say" We don't want the slaveschere, we have no room, let them go to other countries?"

No Abbieannia will make citizens out of them all. That according to this story the providence of god has provided a strong refuge impossible to break into in Abbieannia, and it is a great and noticeable fact, and no Church of Christ there throes off that responsibility to this sad outcast race of little innocent children, which Her profession demands of her. All Churches, and homes have recieved already countless thousands of these poor sufferers as Sons of God, in the spirit of Christ, recieved them to the educating advantages of Christian Catholic Society and Schools, until they have attained a moral and intellectual maturity, while the christian armies rescusing elder slaves have righteously turned them into hardy good reliable boy and girl scouts, to assist their little brethern to become free.

There were bodies of Islandelinians however who have penetrated Abyssinkile and other state o states of Abbiesannia in their efforts to get back these slaves, and as a result these men have afterwards never been heard of, having disappeared mysteriously, yes behind iron bars. The Abbiesannians who adopted the slaves and made them as their own children have rapidly gave them all the rights of a citizen, good reputation and education, and children who had parents and who always had good times instead of treating the unfo t unfortunates as unfortunates as "Nobodies" have made them as res. pestiful companions and loving friends as a part of themselves which considering the circumstance of even righteous children all over Abbiesannia is remarkable, and more moral traits of honesty kindness, tenderness of tenderness of feeling toward them, for heroic efforts and self denials endured for the ransom of these little brethern and friends yet in slavery, they have been remarkable in degree that considering the influence under which they were born, is surprising.

Good loving little children of Abbiesannia holy and righteous because the country is righteous, not one child there ever knew what a licking or a scolding was because they never deserved one. Why is it not here also.

Indeed we say that the war correspondents have for as long as the slavery was known to exist has had great opportunities of observation among the slaves. They have acted for the masters in disguise of course as overseers and drivers, have seen every thing, and also had the testimoney of others and missionaries among fugitives in Abbiesannia in concidence with their own experience. And the first desire for the free sl slave is a good home parents and education. And there is nothing that Abbiesannian childre are not willing to give or do to see the slaves set free, and so far as the newspaper men have observed themselves or taking the testimony of teachers among them, they make great sacrifices to accomplish this. I will give a list of a few of many of the little Abbiesannian children who made sacrifices to even buy the freedom of slaves. And they are all residents of Pandora Abbiesannia.

Ben Bassile, sold newspapers, and rags and iron to make money. Secured by the hol of army officers and soldiers a little slave worth one hundred dollars from all his own earnings.

Jennie Storia---bought one slave stolen from Abbiesannia who had been once sold to general Stanley--paid for the child with the aid of well to do parents six hundred dollars. Parents of generous child owns thirtyfarms in Calvernia worthy twenty thousand dollars a piece. Never yet touched by the devastations of war.

Calvin Lore, parents dealer in real estate secured slaves freedom who was worth three Hundred dollars, the child now free six months. Calvin paid thirteen hundred dolla hundred dollars to free free her and adopted her as his sister, which he has taken care of and brought her back to health?

Adria Meldon poor boy about ten years old,--secured slave worth three hundred and fifty dollars, saved up for the child for two years being once defrauded to the ammon amount of six dollars---made all his money to by the slave by his own efforts--- much of it while selling newspapers and stamps and collections in school, a fine gentle boy. Slave a girl. Now his step sister.

Angeline Heidi bought slave from a humane owner, paid for slave with parents help over three thousand dollars, slave really claimed to be worth twenty six thousand dolla s dollars, all her own earnings, slave also girl.

George Turner. Parents owner of mills, paid twice for same slave before he bought her defrauded once. paid fifteen hundred, slave died from ill treatment before free. Owner arrested by Abbiesannian authorities at request of boy and parents. Sentenced to die as murderer. Other slaves sent horty north to freedom.

We can well ren remember this boy George Turner, who collected most of his money from his loving and generous fellow schoolmates. His sister and parents helped. He was a remarkably active and capable young lad of eight summers, and by his efforts and thrift and the most persevering self denial raised the fifteen hundred dollars for the little boy slave which he had hoped to add to his family. About to pay it in the hands of the master when the child died. Child beaten like like jane by Deldon. But arrested by christian officials with the testimonsy of slaves which is believed in Abbiesannia. Sentenced to hang in public as an example.

These however are but few facts among the immense multitudes of little Abbiesannian children which might be told to show the self denial, energy, patience and honesty, which they exhibited in their efforts to bring the little slaves their freedom. And let it be remembered that these good children of Abbiesannia have thus bravely succeeded in securing what their heart most desired.

Therefore if these children of Abbiesannia have done this much poor and rich alike with every discouragement, and self denial and disadvantage have done this much, how much more they would do if they could, while the Church and nation acts toward the poor unfortunates in the spirit of her Lord. This now is an age, when both Islandelinia and Abbiesannia are terribly convulsed over the Child slave question. As we know a mighty struggle beyond immeasureable fury is surging extensively and heaving the nations as with a mighty earthquake. Battles beyond comprehending has raged what will the scenes of war be in the future. And is Islandelinia safe? Every nation that would carry in its bosom such great and unredressed injustice injustice as wicked Islandelini Islandelinia has in it the elements of such a convulsion. Look at America on account of the slavery there. The great Convulsion of 1861 which raged four years or a little over a most terrible upheavel that ever was known in the world even before or after till 1914? Yet for what is this mighty influence thus even rousing all christian nations watching the Islandico-Abbiesannian war, and which rouses in these nations at the sounds of those groanings and plaintive weeping that heart cannot endure, for the slaves freedom and equality.?

Oh hear from the pri- Priests of all Churches, who read of the signs of the times. Zand is not this power, the spirit of Him, whose kingdom is yet to come and whose will to be done on earth as it is in heaven. But who may abife the abide the day of His appearing?" for that day shall surely burn as an oven, and He shall appear as a swift and terrible Witness against those that do worse than oppress little schildren ints such horrors of slavery and the fatherless, the widow and the hireling and that turn away the stranger in his right, and He shall break in pieces the p oppressor.

Should not these dread words warn a nation bearing in her bosom so mighty an in justice as child slavery, that a day of vengeance will come with the year of His redeemd. All Islandelinia has been more terribly guilty than any other slave Holding nation before God, and Islandelinia has a heavy account not only to answer to Abbiesannia alone but to God as well.

1078

The [illegible] train wreck of the war.

It indeed does seem probable that Violet and her sisters are some of the bravest children that have ever been seen in Angelinia. There are many soldiers no doubt in Angelinia who went through simila r experiences thoug though it is probable that they were less fortunate in getting away. It has happened three times during their dai daring exploits that all of Violet and her sisters had been captured, ad treated harshly when by Glandelinians who do not slaughter children. On three occasions when captured by the enemy whenout scouting the little girls had been forcibly stripped completely naked by the wicked Glandelinians Glandelinians scourged and then tarred and feathered and made to ride the rail throughou throughout the whole camp and then sent back to the christian lines looking more like peculiar birds than little girls. You my reader may guess how long it takes to rr remove tar and feathers from the body after it has dried on, and the long and intolerable painful process of it. It indeed was humiliating to the little girls, but nevertheless this did not daunt them no more than their slightest trials and punishmen punishments they recieved from the Glandelinians.

On many occasions the little girls would go out scouting and be persued by the fiercer Gargolians and other Glande Glandelinians ad only by the fleetness of their horses would they manage to escape the Glandelinians All their experiences with the terrible blizzard not mentioned and even with Federal and other Glandelinians did not daunt them, and with their friends, Angelinia Aronburg, and Jennie Francis Turner proved to be the worse scouts that the enemy ever found spying on their pos tions. Without exception it was said that Gertrude Angel ne beat them all, and in fact she was one of the best guardians o of the Vivian Girls, and Jennie Turner was another.

The Glandelinians were amazed at the actions of these l ittle girls, for it was something extremely unusual. Very selden was it seen that little girls could ride the swiftest horses without falling over being fatigued, a n and I have not heard of a little girl who could yet handle a pistol without danger to herself. The pistols Violet and her sisters held and those of her two friend seemed to the Glandelinians the main danger to them elves instead, for the little girls only missed a shot when they did it on purpose.

Since their peculiar escapade from Federal as mentioned h just that Federal had become somewhat fearsome of them, for he had not known that they really could do untill he witnessed on these many occasions.

There he ha d been many soldiers who had been far from the christian lines when caught in the same cyclonic blizzard and the soldiers ha had almost poi perished before they reached the christian lines, and Violet and her sisters at the conclusion of the blizzard had been able to find a battle with Glandelinian snipers before reaching the christian lines and almost annihilated all but two of their number of a assailants.

what is it that makes Violet and her sisters so brave and yet at the same time so patient and forbea forbearing? When the little girls were first known by even the Angelinians it was not believed by the soldiers that Violet and her sisters would ever dare face the wrathful fury of the wicked Glandelinians. It was believed that the first sight of a Glandelinian would sent them fleeing for protection or to some hiding place like frightened mice out in that they were completely mistaken. Though like little Eva in Uncle Toms Cabin in character, ways and kindness, the little girls also had a different nature and that was the nature that made them seem like men instead of more little girls. And there was nothing now that they could not do. To jail them was folly to the enemy for that would enable the little girls to escape with the enemys plains and also break out anyway they wished.

They could ride the best horses, jump on them even from a roof, and could ride ride in the stirrups standing up. Also Violet and her sisters could read, write and spell as good as a any co mon high teacher, and in figures no man learned a as he was could beat them. The little girls were experts in all kinds of games, even cards and chess and the most difficult games ever known.

The little girls could sing any good song and without looking at the words a if they knew them by heart, andthere was hardly any musical instrument that they could not play as well as the best expert. The best they like to play is the organ and piano.

The little girls could drive the fastest engines of trains, which they have done and also drive the fastest teams of horses and knew how to control a team of horses in a runaway. Most little girls it in true cannot throw straight, many one who thinks that the Vivian Girls cannot throw straight just stand in their way and let a one of them prove it. Glandelinians had boasted frequently that one thing the little girls could not do and that was throw straight. Now ask them if they have the same opinion. They will say the little girls can throw anything as straight as an arrow fly ht flight and never miss what they aim at. They are good swimmers, can stand the coldest water and air without any clothes on and can do the best jumping jumping and running for little girls of their age...!!

It was some time later when Violet and her sisters had been sent by general Hn Hanson Vivien with a message to some point near Norma Catherine that the little girls had one of the most trying experiences of their lives. They had boarded a child refugee train for the point to which they had been sent and were enjoying the best of rides when they were suddenly thrown to the floor of the coach between the seats as the car they were riding on, and rendered senseless. They did not open their eyes again until they had been back to the christian lines and then when they did recover they heard officers talking excitedly about them and something of a train wreck. Indeed on accounn of the treacherous scene of Glandelinian agents the most disasterous train wreck everheard of occured n south of the town of Jennie wren Town Calverinia and over two hundredand fourty two known dead marked the trag toll of this rail horror at Jennie-Wren-Town. At the time the Vivian girls had recovered their senses it had seemed certain that the list of dead would be swelled as rescueing parties carrying on their nightmare search sought more and more bodies under the grim monument of wreckage that markei the scene of the most dreadful catastrophe. There were two hundred bodies in the morgues at the town of Shielding and the remainder brought into the hospitals at Jennie-wren Town. That the dreadful list of dead would number two hundred and fouty fourty five when the bodies still in the wreckage had been recovered was announced late by some of those directing the rescue work after surveying the situation. They said the results would be delayed three or four das because of the delay of identifying the bodies caused by their ma mangled condition.

At this hour too another search wa s gon going on. It was a search for the Glandelinian agents guilty of the crime that sent the Mc-Hollester and Pandora Refugee Limited train through Evangeline St Clare No. one. The Evangeline St Cla Clare train leaving a staggering train of death and disaster. The Mc-Hollester and Pandora was due at Jennie wren Town at seven thirty that evening running for Angelinia with child refugees saved by christian a a armies brought out from plades where they had been rescued. It carried al all chair cars. The Evangeline St Clare which left Pandoraat 5:05p.mp was a train going through to reinforce some christian ar my and was crowded with Abyssinkillian soldiers. The Glandelinians who were responsible had fled from the scene of the crah crashThe chief engineer of the Mc-Hollester and Pandoretrain was questioned by general Hanson himself as to the cause of the wreck.

''I had the right of way he ''He cried. The block gave me clearing. My engine and four coaches crossed the tracks of another li line before the accident and suddenly my engine was switched to the tra track of the other l line and we rammed the train ahed of us. I jumped and saved myself.''Later he was questioned by genera general Jack Evans.

He repeatei what he had told Hanson.

''But if you had the right of way?''Asked Evans''Why was yo r train thrown a off the tracks before it struck the Sendon Railroad crossing?''

He refused to answer this testimony of passengersEvery effort was made to keep secret the inquiry of Hanson and his officers and it became known along with the fact that the fireman who also was saved, and a breakman and a conductor were also facing Hanson and being questioned After three hours of questioning it was decided by the christian generals that the wreck had been deliberately planned by Glandelinianagents with the purpose of preventing the soldiers from reaching the christian army and of the children in the other train reaching their destinationAfter the wreck the Glandelinians had dis disappeared. Hanson began investigation by sending to the scene of his best generals a and railroad inspectors for the publ c service comission. They were instructed to pierce every effort to cover up the secret of the appalling wreck. The first of the investigators had been informed of the exclusive report of the cause of the wreck given to the christian generals by a towerman in control of the tracks and switcher at the fatal f crossing. He declared that the block signals had been set to halt the Mc-Hollester and Pandora train, that the Evangel ine St Clare had the right of way, and that the switches did not work it was his belief that Glandelinians had tampered with the tracks. According to the prominent railroad official the Calverinian country it was a double wreck. They explained that the Evangeline St Clare had jumped the track at striking a derail and then jumped back on again a few yards along and then into it rammed th other train. This in itself was said wa was sufficient to have caused trains to collide. Just as the train t returned to the tracks Mc-Hollester and Pandora Flyer struck it to; escoping the rem ir coaches and damaging the rest. It seemed certain that the engel ine St Clare train which had been derailed that the engine n miraculously jumped back on the tracks again just as the oncom g Mc-Hollester and Pandoratrain crashed into it. Officials from many Calverinian towns were on the spot. Othes from Pandoraware rushing to. It was apparent that it was going to be a joint investigation a and throughout one. It was impossible to place the blame now but it wa dent that it had been caused by Glandelinian agents. An official statement from one of the superior christian generals, division attendant of general Hansons right wing declared that the train offic ld agreed that the derails had been thrown by Glandelinian spies and not ents with the probable intention of causing the deaths of the Vivian girls who were on the train which collided with the angeline St Clare. At the time of the incident two christian generals ging to Hn Hansons command and one of the general supe supretendants the roads were at that time in Pandora The main investigation of the interlocking system declared one of h Hansons generals in a statement issued in Panderashows that the derail had been set. hinst the two trains and from the Mc-Hollester and Pandora Railroad hiquarters came to Hanson the following official statement;

a AN EAST BOUND FRIEGHT WAS ON THE Mc- HOLLESTER AND NDORA PASSING SIDING AND SMOKE BLOWING FROM THIS TRAIN ALSO OBSCURED SIGNALS. THIS TRAIN WA ALSO WRECKED BY GLANDELININ GLANDELINIAN OFFICIALS AND MANY ANIMALS AND CATTLE OF AL SORTS TAKEN BY FOR RAIDERS. GLANDELINIANS ARE RAIDING THE WHOLE REGION ALL AROUND YOUR REAR GENERAL HANSON AND WE THOUGHT TO WARN YOU THAT THE FOE ARE PLOTTING TO RUIN ALL PASSENGER TRAINS THAT WILL COME IN THEI ADICH.''

The train wrecked or tampered.

t statement added that the signals and derail of many lines in the ion of th forces or a armies were tested immediately after the rted despite perils of facing enemy snipers and fount found to be t of working order aband to have been tampered with. Traffic along both ds on account of the disaster had been postponed before noon the st days ad and there was slight delyadelays in the neighborhood f the wreck in the wok work of sending out men to round u up if possible e persons responsible for the wreck. At this point where the ain christian line was situa ted there was a crossing intersection. The Evangeline St Clare wa only passed the intersection and had stopped to let on passengers when the Mc-Hollester and Pandora train came up. At this point the Mc-Hollester and Pandora does not stop a ad as the switches had also been tamperedwith the Mc-Hollester train had been switched off to the yo ro worng track and collided into the rear of the train ahead. The Mc-Hollester and Pandora train was said to have been traveling at the rate of seventy miles an hour. The Mc-Hollester and Pandr Pandora Locomotive after ploughing through six of the rear coaches of the tra train ahead plounged into the ditch, rea reared up as if in a death agony flung itself completely about and toppled ba backward into the ditch again a mangled heap of iron and machinery. The six cars of the train struck weretossed about the w right of ways for five hundred yards like so many toy cars of a child''Choo, choo ''setThe Engines and fire man of the Mc-Hollester and Pandora train saved themselves by jumping into the stream near by

There was on the rear car of the telescoped train two generals, one was scalded to death and the other died soon after being dragged from the wreckage. Physicians were rushed to the scene of the wreck that night and the soldiers armed with axes, picks and shovels went to the wreck also guided by the screams and groans of the dying. At the latest accounting two nuns were among the killed and most of the other victims of the wrecked train were sad soldiers. Nea r the christian lines was a small tr town or tiny village it being fourty miles southeast of Pandora. There was a big postoffice, a general store and the depot. There was a scattered handful of homes. The towns principal distinction was that a number of crack overland trains whizzed by it each day. This town was in flames having been raided by the enemy at the same time the wreck occured. Just at the moment the enemy had raided or started to raid the village two trains were due around the same hour at six thirty the Evangeline St Clare interstate limited full of Abyssinkilian soldiers from Pandora to Hansons lines. and the Mc-Hollester and Pandoran train carrying fugitives to Angelinia.

Up in the tower at the intersection the towerman looked at the glow of fires burning the town and then heard the buzzer of the signal service to warn him of the trains approach. With him in the tower was another man, telegraph operator. Both men were verterans of the railroad service. The Evangeline St Clare train buzzed first and that gave it the right of way which meant that it was his duty to open up the block against it and let it through leaving the blocks set against the other train coming on the lines opposite the St Clare. And that is what he did. Then he thought he was in a nightmare for as the train stopped at the station beyond around the bend the Mc-Hollester and Pandora train came swinging at seventy five miles an hour. To his horror it was on the same track of the Vangeline St Cla Clare. He knew that something was wrong, and also knew that the train would hit the rear of the one in front. He called to his companion and both tore for the steps to the ground. They felt sure the tower would be hit.

Engineer George Harris was at the throttle of the Mc-Hollester and Pandoratrain. As the train sped past the burning town the speeding train was attacked by Olandelinians on horseback. Then a storm of shots was heard continueing for several minutes as no doubt came a grinding jolt. The locomotive struck the derailed switched and it and the cars behind it went over to the other tra track and three cars had sped over the crossing of the Benden, when the engine of the train struck the rear coaches of the Evangeline.. The flyingmammoth loco motive str struck the rear chair coach and swept through it like through a air strewing wreckage and theodes dead and injured along the rail, and with crash upon crash swirled the other cars about as i if some giant hand had reached down in a mood of grim humor and brushed them to destruction. The engine then crushed the cars ahead pushing the wreckage for one thousand yards and then the engine dived into the ditch after tearing up the rails and tearing a hole twenty feet in the ground.

Then the engine recoiled like some meta metal monster in a death grapple writhed about and o fell back. Bo Bits of wreckage were tossed high into the air and became fastened in the telegraph wires along the right of way of both trains. On the train ahead six coaches had been crushed and scattered and six others telescoped. The other four coaches were derailedbut not demolished. The coaches of the Mc-Hollester and Pandora train were not wrecked but the front cars about five of them were twisted partially off the tra trauks.

As the most terrifying cra crash resounded through the countryside , and startled all of the christian soldiers in the army, the wooden coaches broke into g flames. At the same time the screams of the dying and the crased shrieks of those who survived and the confusion of the child fugitives who had rushed from the coaches of the other train to see what had happened cried their hedious message of the worse train disaster in Calverinia, and not an accident either.

The soldiers of the christian camp hundreds of thousands of them u rushed from the lines bewildered by the catastrophe that had been hurled at their very feet. The army soldiers were great in numbers and they came not as specat spectators but rushed to the scene either with leveled muskets, with axes, shovels, and po picks as stretchers and ambulances and began the work of rescueing those still in the wreck and quelling down the panic stricken children from the other derailed train. Several crews of them dragged a fire hose from the camp two blocks away and played it on the burning cars.

Women and s red cross nurses in the christian camp arived to the scene and also and tore skirts into bandages, and helped carry the injured soldiers to safty.

They went to the aid of hystriod child passengers of the other train who ran up and down the rails or tried to hide in the wreckage or under cars and debris frantic, excited and frightened with the horror of the scene. Some of them tried to rush back into the wreckage to look for child companions wh had been with them. Into the wreckage to look for child companions wh had been with them. There were sixty children hurt from the sudden stopping of the cars but none seriously, and not one had been killed. The light from the burning twelve coaches or what had been coaches and that being thrown by army in lantrens and a army flashlights was all the light the rescuers had by which to work. The flickering illumination made the scene a ghastly inferno. Emergency cals were sent all along the line. Mean while in the flickering light assailed by the cries o the scores of survivers and the sight of the terribly mangled bodies the soldiers and red cross Nurses wok worked. Those they could move were taken into the christian lines and the base hospitals were now morgues. As soon a as possible under strong support of armour cars four rescue trains were sent from four different directions. When the first arived after fighting with enemy sharpshooters and hidden batteries--it was not untill two hours after the crash, they found the soldiers of Hansons command still at work and Hanson and others there investigating it, with the arival of the rescue trains a special arch lights were hoisted over the scene, in their bluish glare the scene wa was revealed in all its ghastliness. A blown down factory by some great explosion could not m look look so be bad.

Any Acetylene torches used to burn through the side of metal cars in a desperate effort at rescue added their weird glow to the spectacle of desolation and death. Through the whole night the rescuers worked, when the dawn bed began to wipe the blackness of night from the sky clouded sky they were still at it and later in the day with the sun threwing its full glare on the black horror the hunt for the dead and injured went on. Bodies had been draged from the wreckage like fl es fllies. The sun disclosed a large group of soldiers and officers working about the great locomotive. Here thirty bodies had been recovered. The great weight of mangled metal on them made the work of removal an engineering feat. The workers went at their task in reverent silence.

Hundreds of suitcases, army bags and supplies, army c valises, and other luggage was strewn nearby.

The mail cars tilted drunkenly bead beside the rails. A womans fur cloak was wrapped around the inj injuries of one of the soldiers, and a uniform c at lay nearby. Other artical articles o of soldiers wearing apparal lined the front of the right of way. Two cars of the Mc-Hollester train had been displaced r from the tracks. Great chunks of wood twisted from the sides of the wreckee wrecked cars he had been thrown fifty to seventy feet from thevrails. Over it all was wafted a soft sp spring like breese from nearby Mc-Hollester Ian River.....

Thirty of the bodies were taken from the scene of the wreck to morgues in the city of Pandora. They were the remains of some of the best soldiers of the cr & rs christian army and an unid unidentified man and officer. On the train ahead there were also a lot of women and children and about sixty of these had been killed and it was indeed a harrowing sight to see soldiers carrying away the bodies of a mother and three of her little children six, seven, and eight years old. The hair of the children were singed, t The mothers face was burned beyond recognition. They passed the mother and children upon the floor along si side of two other ow women and three other children. Just three feet from this tragic sight was the remnant of some human being. It had been placed in a army casket and this some form was only a bundle, and burned beyond recognition. No one could say whether it was aman or woman.

To the right with a smile on his face lay the body of a husky Abbleannian officer. His face was scarred and his body brusied and mangled. He was colonel Peterson Chain of Pandora (Angelania). His entire makeup was one of strength and virility. He had bravely died with a smile on his fae face.. Further on to the left little Francis Vivland a little girl rested upon a stretcher and keeping her company in death on the same stretcher was her own mother. Burnedabout the headand chest, and singed all over the body lat another soldier his teeth set in determinat ion and his fist clenched. He had died fighting. Hanson Vivian was at the scene when rescue workers uncovered the multilated bodies of a husband and wife. The bodies had been buried under tons of coal.

During the meanwhile while all this wa was happening and the many battles raging everywhere everywhere a dreaded plague had broken out among many Calverinians and raging terribly throughout all the surrounding villages towns and cities, and even in the country. It was a disease looking very much like cholera but its character was different and mysterious. Over three hundred persons had it and many soldiers along among the norte northern armies also. housands were dying. The war was indeed causing a complication of horrors.

Others occured that was more shocking On one occasion there was in southern Calverinia asylums filled with deaf mute children who had been massacred by Turmerannians. A disaster also occured to the Glandelinians in western Calverinia. he foe forces stormed a big christian force situationed on a row of high hills called White MountiansOn these hills was a beautiful orphan asylum and two monasteries. These monasteries were plundered by the Glande linians for after fifteen desperate assaults the foe were victorious. Two beautiful statuew of the Infaint Jesus were thrown down by the Glandelinians and insulted. Everything seemed to go well for the Glandelinians for despite this secrelege the Glandelinians had won the day against overwhelming christian forces and they rejoiced on the presumpteous thoughts that God and his host was beaten arely at last and God even humilated. For unfortunately on the second morning the christians came back on them like athunderbolt.

The Glandelinians fought with the utmost bravery all da day long repe ing the most dangerous charges charges successfully but tward evening general Ferdinand Francis gained an important victory over the united Glandelinian forces cutting their army to pieces annihilatin their right wing, capturing their main leading general and driving the enemy down the hill and from the whole region in tota total rout. General Montly on the christian s de played a most important part in the bloody battle carrying a picture of the Nativity of Christ aloft in view of the christian sld soldiers and so prayed and urged the to fight for theirfaith that the day was won but such christian flags were always the main tag targets o the enemys fire and the poor brave general was mortally wounded at the conclusion of the frightful conflict.

even then at the same time rading Hooded soldiers of the foe called "The Hooded Terror had bursted a dam holding in the waters of lake St Vincent andtowns in the whole region were flooded. A terrible typhoon followed by torrental rain could not make a worse flood and all the walled in city streets of Mantown were turned into ru river houses were demolished and the walls of many houses even of big childhood orphanages came down into the flooded streets with a crash , and terrified the children and little maidens fell down on their knees while a va wail of Ae A ve Mariawent up to heaven duin dai during all the flin firing as Glandelinians at attacked the town in boats or from shore fr with rifles and cannon. Fortunately no harm was done and the children easily recovered from the fright when they found they had ponds of water for themselves, and that on account of near christian armies the foes could not get to them or to n any body in the city and were driven off by attacking Concentinians who supposed that o all sides.All the furniture in the orphan asylums had unexpected washings. But this town or city had little to suffer compared to others for in the town of Gertrude several thousand persons were drowned thousands o of horses were swept away in the flood and hundreds of soldiers sent to rescue those marooned on housetops were drowned also.All kinds of fields were destroyed and the general outlook for that portion of Calverinia was dismal very dismal. The fresh green rice fields of Calverinia had been ruined having become a sea of water and on account of the conditions of the s state of war all Catechumenals and Catholic Schools had to be closed. No doubt there was no silver lining to this war cloud hovering over stricken Calverinia.

To add to the disasterous flood it being winter the water soon froze and five ships on the Mc-Hollester Run iver crowded with eighteen hundred soldiers apeace were caught in ice which was floating in the river and if the fierce temperture did not moderate considerably in a few more days and let the ships free again the only thing will be for them to walk on the fresh ice for a hund hundredsand fifty miles to Pandora and from there by sleighs as snow lay deep since the recent big blizzard which had caught the Vivian Girls unprepared.

Mat Our Lord persuade the sun to shine so hot upon the Mc-Hollester Run River that the ice may speedily melt releasing those five ships with their big numernumber of soldier passengers from their sad predo predicament as frost bound prisoners.

There was also probabil ties of further deportations of christians in Calverinia by the Glandelinians the Glandelinians in Vivian Wickey threatening to deport the Calverinians in its vicinity and those that remained in the city of that centrail portion between Aronburg ad Federal which had suffered so many times just like Norma Catherine and Julo Callio from the cruelty and hatred of the rebels, and which had been the scene of the wars first worse massacres. Only the threat of the highest christian generals of massacring all Glandelinian prisoners if it is carried out were for a time preventing the deportation and it was a question if even the christian generals and aurthorities could continue to ward it off long. The christians in Juo Callio and Norma Catherine still surviving were subjected to all so sorts of persecution and torture.

Even now despite the number of christian victories it seemed as i if the Glandelinianrebels were go n going to be victorious and tha that all of christiandom would be overwhelmed. In the north the Glandelinians Glandelinians after a years seige had conquered Madonna near the Ayssinkilian ad and Calvo inian boundary line and they had overwhemed almost all of that portion of Calverinia and a section of that country called the Levant region, they even hoped to capture Maltaia Sendon which they were besieging and which continuously was underheavy fire. Thr The christin Calverinian states and counties there and even the aurthorities were paralyzed by their losses in pro visions and men and could do nothing. The main armies too far south were contending with the Manleys and other foe generals and their armies.

In the north however one disaster happened to the wicked rebels. They had cp captured the town of St Anns on the northern coast after bombarding it with their fleet but an overwhelming christian fleet mostly Abbisanni an warships met the Glandelnians in the battle of Corinth on e water and though half the number of christian ships were disabled or sunk after a furious battle in which the cannonading could be heard for three hundred miles, the Glandelinian fleet was totally destroyed, the army on land scattered scattered and fored to surrender and the shore batteries silenced.. Another fleet of Glandelinian warships came up the next evening and resumed the tremendous sea battle and though not so many ships as the christians were more biggor and had better guns. Judgeito human standard standards the efforts of the christians to defeat the new fleet seemed doomed to a failure. The cannonading was extremely wild a thousand shots being counted within fifteen minutes but contrary to all expectations the new Glandelinia Glandelinian fleet was scattered and destroyed. And usually prayers like the Rosaries cause christian victories. Roa Rosaries and he efforts of the christians won for them this tremendous battle that shoes that the Rosary which any child can hold in its hand was stron stronger than even all the massive christian ships themselves.And even at this time it had seemedthat the rebell o rebellion would triumph in every portion of Calverinia, when already many of their armies were everywhere on the retreat in the south. And look at the results of Jennie Turmer and it seemed to Hanson that also this marvelous war velious victory pr represented one of the most extraordinary victories of the Rosaries being hardly less signal than the celebrated victories at Sunbeam Creek and of its consequences to Calverinia and the other christian nations no less momentousGeneral Zimmermann Zimmermann had publicly ascribed the defeat of thevGlandelinians at Jennie Turmer to Our Ladys Intervention and this severe staggering blow to the militant rebellion against God and all christianity in the hour of its first greatest success should strengthen the faith of all Rosarians either there or in this world itself in the wonderful wov wonderful power God had placed in everybodys hands by means o of the beads as we all daily or should daily whisper the Pater Noster, Ave Maria, and the Gloria.The latest signal triumph of the Blessed Rosary over the old demon dragon of wicked rebellion against God and all Christianity occured at Jennie Turmer indeed when the vast hordes of the gray army from Southern Calverinia were sweeping like an irrestible tidal wave of floods over all of southwestern Calverinia. Jennie Turmer was nearly surrounded and all of that world saw no hope of its escape. That pat of Calverinia seemed doomed to complete subjugation under the Manleys and his wicked host of graycoated rebels, and the Glandelinian general boasted that within that year the wicked rule of all Glandelinia would triumph everywhere in the path of rebellion. Du ing Zimmermanns advance on Madge Evans to repel Manleys advance on Jennie Turmer the Holy Father of Angelinia spoke to the whole Catholoi World entirely asking that everywhere the Rosary should be recited for the salvation of Jennie Turmer and Calve i Calverinia and the rest of the Abbieannian states and contries from the gray menance of the ''WICKED REBEL(''.

The Hierarchy of all Angelnia and Ca Calverinia and even Abbieanna on the s day or eve of the unexpected battle summoned the Angelinian nation to turn out its peoples in processions and supplicate God through his Blessed Mother to save not only Calverinia but the entire region from the successful invasion of Johnston Jacken Manleys legion of wicked Glandelinian rebels. In one city alone a countless number of people on those two days paraded public; puvlicly in procession through the streets, and ev rywhere not in possession of the enemy processions were on. And wonderful to relate that procession was supposed to continue for six days and even before the third day there was(wonderful to relate() a complete reversal of arms for the power of Manley was temporar ly and completely broken in the west with his bitter and disasterous defat at thevba battle o of Jennie Turmer and the Glandelinian divisions were everywhere in the most stemptedeu retreat ever recorded among defeated Glandelinian armies in the war.

There was also a dreadful horror goi going on in the northwestern part of Calverinia and that it was one of the most terrible famines in Calverinias history was holding the Ca Calverinian people in its cre cruel grasp. Hundreds of thousands of persons were starving for the foe had taken everything and destroyed many farms. There was however one phase of the terrible hunger situation in poor Calverinia that had not yet even been mentioned; it was the condition of the Clergy and Sisterhoods. Quite resently during the falling away southward of some of the beaten Glandelinian armies, a communicatio hsd had been sent out h by Abbots appealing for the Dic D.o diocesan who they said were the worse suffers of all. It was easy to understand why this is. The Calverinian people in their misery always turn to their priests andreligious when christian armies are not within sight. They are and were besieged with appeals. Out of their poverty in ordinary times they gave a share, now they were giving all. Monasteries, convents and rectories were foodless that the l t little ones of the flockwould not suffer so much. Hundreds of priests were trying to live one one ortwo dollars amonth. There were a greater number of sisters---young sisters----- who could walk only with the aid or of crutches or cains to support them, for they were weak w th hunf hunger and their very bones were softened with the lack of proper nourishment. Yet about the doors of these starving ones flocked the mulitude to beg for scraps. All that these poor si Sisters and Priests could give had been given, yet it is nothing. Doctors and surgeons refus reu refused to operate on children injured by the foe and shot, and with legs or arms broken, because the poor little ones had no longer the vitality, so they died slowly of disease. To attempt to save them by surgeory would be to kill them at once. Scores of whole families could be seen pressing their bodies to the floor in a despairing effort to ally the pangs of hunger. And childrens stomaches hadbecome so small that they could not take an ordinary meal when charity offered itEven fooed had to be guarded in transit by volunter volunteer corps to save it from the famished villiagers as it was sent to the more famished dwellers in the Calverinian cities.. What can priests and Sisters do, but give all they have. That what so many of them had done, but these devoted pastors, teachers, and nurses are themselves dying of starvation. Even they did not have enough wheat to make Alter bread and the poor people had to be without the sacrifice Holy Sacrifice and Holy Communion. It seemed incredible. Eyewitnesses told the pitiful tale to every commune untill armies were rushed not northward to do wha what could be done.

Indeed it seemed probable i if Glandelinia should win the wicked rebellion Glandelinia would inundate the whole world with its devastating waves. At Gor Georgia Porg.e in a three days desperate battle over four hundred thousand christians fell and three hundred thousand of them were hastily buried and never will be identified. Here many priests who were military chaplins had established their residence to stand their watch among the dead who fell in h thishorrible battle which had unfortunately been a Glandelinian victory and which side had lost twice that many in killed. Wounded in numbers were not given. Masses devoted priests said several Masses every day for these christ ian soldiers on the spot w ere they fell.. Before this battle the whole region had seemed in danger of being swallowed up by the Glandelinia Glandelinian sea In their success the wicked waves of graycoated humanity had gone far beyond their usual boundaries of victory. Already they had captured town after town announching ruin and destruction. Earthly e help could no longer be expected by the terror stricken inhiba an habitants and they had taken refuge in God the Al mighty Ruler of all, andewith all religious pictures an and statues and other Holy things that were honored with special veneration the inhibatants had been able to flee successfully thus avoiding the foe who could commit a no massacre though they burned the towns. Raging and roaring with their battles the mightybwaves of Glandelinians rolled even nearer and nearer. At the town of El.Santo.Cristo. De. La. Agonia the foe were halted in their advance by a series of mighty christian forces which approached but for a time nothing occured as the foe would not engage such mighty hosts in purple.

Lo at the approach of these christian armies the foe suddenly receded. Still more embolded by this the christian armies pressed on further and further with their religious flags floating in the breeze, and even further and further retires the enemy.

''Miracle, a miracle''Cries the mulitudes of women and children amid tears of gratitude and amazement. The rejoicing of the fugitive inhibatants was incredible, indescriable. All praised and Blessed God their savior. The Name of the town El. Santo. Cristo. De. La Agonia if pronounched pronounced in English would be''The Holy Christ of the Agony. This scene indeed was an extraordinary event and encouraged Calve inia all the more.

But all this time the misery of Calverinias children was awful. Thousands were perishing for want of food and found a premature death. As the days were ; passing by the terrible choleraepidemic which had visited portions of the Northern Calverinian districts had become much greater and owing to the well known nelegect and compelled uncleaniless on account of necessary means needed everything having been taken by the Glandelinians the disease was causing the most appalling losses and it seemed as if all of Calverinia would be effected if something was not dos soon to check it. Even after a few days and even a few hours added by the torture of starvation and thirst the victims thousands of men women andchildren would die. These frequent and sudden deaths filled the population t in that location with wald fear and consternation. Christia christian soldiersand priests did all in their power for the people of the stricken regions and here and there women trip out of their houses with theirsick children in their arms. They approached timidly and by friendly words the sodle soldiers and pries priests cheer them up. The poor mothers relate amid tears the numerous deaths a and the distress reigning in the villiages and in their own households. Then they showod their poor babies and pretty children putting al all their confidence in the Last Sacrements. Here and there everywhere in the villiages could be seen rough clumsy con coffins and people in black mourning dress strolling about. A poor elderly woman is tottering up the road. Her countenance betrays the grief in her heart. She looked ghastly plac, faint and fatigued. At the sight of the Angelinian soldiers a beam of hops seemed to brighten her face. Shewing the soldiers four cases lying in younder field she told them that they were of her husband, son,, brother and his wife. All four had died.Oh what exterrible disease it is. She was sick too and no body could give her a drink of water. She had crept on the ground dragging herself from the bed to nurse them. But all in vain they were dead now. One person lost a mother and brother. Another his wife and two sons. A third his sister and sister in law. The plague seemed to be wiping out everybody in the region. The whole country was cholera stricken.

Every now and then while Hn Hanson had been concentrating his army upon the foe opposite to his a army dispatches had come in be bringing the sad tidings that lag large numbess of Calverinian christians women, and children were being still massacred by the wicked Glandelinian rebels who had not yet been entirely subdued by the armies acting under the murthorities of the Angelinia governments in the west.

The many bands of armed rebels acting under the direction of the authority of the main Glandelinian generals united in the Kantergarten district and raided all the homes in the eastern part of Calverinia carrying off all the contents, setting fire to the houses, and killing all the old men, women and little children, priests, nuns and other religeous who attempted to take to flight. Those among the Calverinians in the east who had managed to escape declared that many persons were buried alive in the burning ruins of their homes, while some five thous children alone were stripped of their clothing and burned alive.

About thirty thousand child slaves were driven away and set b free by Glandelinians when compelled to do so, but without any clothing whatever and they died from exposure to the cold and their naked froze bodies were strewn everywhere where they died. Women and men old and crippled were driven by force into Abyssinkilline after also being strip of their shoes and clothes and provisions. In the town of Georginnia some twenty thousand Calverinians all refugees had gathered from the neighboring districts when the town was attacked and looted by the Gargolian Kurds. After taking possession of the town the Glandelinians stripped the houses, carried off all the males and turned the women an young children adrift into the forested plains and deserts o of snow the treeless plains without any clothes also. Thousands died from cold and exposure.

The town of Charles had also been invaded but the fate of its inhabatants were unknown.

In one villiage six hundredhristian children alone had been taken outside the villiage and tortured in all horrible ways untill they die from sheer terror and from the pains and miseries they suffered.

At another villiage called Saunderine four thousand Calverinian children and Abbiannian madians taken from orphan asylums w were put to death with the greatest ferocity.

The worse Glandelinians to commit the massacren here were mostly Zimmermannians.

In the meantime during the seige of Jullio Callio which was still being made by christian armies there was one general who saved a big christian army from annihilation. It was the fourth and last attempt his to retain the seige before he was withdrawn from command there to p be placed command of other armies and given higher honors for his many deeds of bravery.. At that time the great general filled with constant anxiety and worry over the outcome of the war was ill and his heavy hardships had told heavily upon t him. His health for a time had been failing him. And perhaps no other man in his condition of body and mind would have dreamed of retaining the solid character his besieging division which which with the rest of the other main lin was fairly strangling Norma Catherine and Julo Callo Callio wi with the tightness of the long seige. But he had a spit spirit and courage that never failed him. He knew besides how badly things were going on inside the two cities on opposite sides of the Norma River and so he kept up the bombardment of the enemys positions most relentlessly and fully concentrated the effo t efforts to the Blessed Trinity and ging the Blessings of Father, Son, and Holy Ghost upon the success of the seige.

The seige was indeed a rough and stormy one for both sides, the be sieged and the besiegers. The christian general still an ill man suffe greatly during the long had days, from the din of thousands of cannons and the sight of so many killed and injured. His armies desire with a strong ferocious desire to get possession of the enemy position and save the city from continue horrors already witnessed. Dai During along all those long days since the seige commenced untill now and all the interminable nights the wild cannon battle had raged with very little intermission. Cannon boomed incessantly with earsplitting din from many hidden places of defense, innumerable shells came screaming and crashing in the sky o or over landscapes in thunderous reports worse than head in thunderstorms, and flashes like innumerable lightin flashes and after the explosions many deep pits, shattered walls, countless mangled bodies, wrecked artillery told the sorrowful tale an still it continued. Machine guns by thousands had belched molten streams of lead back and forth and no diligent repa reapers scythe could leave a deadler swath of fallen grain than these dread instrume of siege a and of destruction effected alike among christians and w rebels, who were despite odds against them holding out successfully so long.

The battle cries never ceased ceased the anguished moans of uncounted wounded filled the air, the pain the thirst, the fever, the agony of death the age long waiting for relief being terrible indeed. The end of the first year of the seige had approached and found the christians still laboring against the perilious seas of wicked rebellion against God and Christianity. One day shortly before Christmas the poor general make more ill by the great titan din of such a tremendous unceasing bombardment lay exhausted and wounded on his couch in his headquarters. A storm of shells was continuously exploding far overhead and everywhere as fa far as bombardment extended accompanined with thunder o of explosions that drowned the re roar o of shell bursts and cannons, and with flashes of shell and cannon fire that seemed to set the world on fire. All along his besieging line was commotion and deafening turmoil. Suddenly there broken upon his ears sounds o of a different nature. They were no longer the ordinary shouts and noises of a fight with Glandelinians and the roar of cannons and shell explosions. Wild cries resounded all along the l ine and throughout the valleys and hilltops which told of absolute panic.

Xven exclamanations of unbridled terror and prayers to God for mercy reached his ear in a confusion of sounds that might well appall the scutest of hearts. The general Ill as he was sprang from his couch and made his way on horse to the scene of panic and confusion. Fright and dismay also seized his stalwart heart at the awful spectacle that met his eye. Right in their path of confusion although at some d stance still a monsterous cavarly squadron of the well known "Hooded Terror" berde down upon his apparently doomed center in overwhelming numbers. One who had seen a force of these demons of the wicked Glandelinian hordes can never forget them. True to say they are the fiercest fighters of all Glandelinians. The whole bosom of the ground to the right of the christian ln line seemed to rise in a gigantic heave of white and black clouds at one central point resembling the same s appearance of scene noticed at the sudden outbreak of a great volcanic eruption. Ter There was a report, a crash that was stunning, and shocok the ground as i if with an earthquake. From the sky above sharp u puffs of smoke clouds appeared in confusion of explosions and such explosions of mines is the one danger of seiges before which human sciesnce and human skill is utterly powerless. When such explosions take place absolute annihilation threatens everything before the blast. The bravest heart must quail before such doom as well as the most cowardly. The general felt the afright all sound him, but the mine set off by christian engineers had tore to fruagments the immense squadron of hooded cavarly men and the remainder of the terrific squadron swerved from its course as it seemed as if cast asid by an unseen hand and u rushing to one side it passed his army by and left unharmed and untouched his command and crashed upon the christ ian line belonging to some other commander. The charge struck, was blown and shot asunder and scattered, and the tide of rebels receded swiftly back to their own works of protection. This wonderful event of turning the charge aside by the mine explosion was attested by Calverinian eye witnesses and told to general Hanson Vivian by all war correspondents. The other christian general who had reached recieved the shock as they reported had gave the Gargolians such a reception that they fled leaving their windrows of dead and dying all behind in their wild flight back to their positions a at Julo Callio.

By the way did you know that general Hanson Vivian was a member of the Third Order of St Francis?

Still on was the fearful epidemic sweeping throughout northern Calverinia...The situation produced by the ravages of cholera in that far section of the land was amazing and it seemed apparent that even a good portionof the northeastern portion was going to be also face to face with the terrible epidmemic. Two mon months previously the Holy Sisters and other religious persons in that location had to quit the towns nd villiage hospitals on account of the approch of the enemy and the hospitals were ruined or burned.

Ten physcians were victims of the disease and for more than a month they lingered between life and death.A supretendant e generalof os of the eastern Angelinian armies fell sick and died and many of his soldiers were having it. As a precaution neal nearly all the stores of the town q and cities closed their doors. The Angelinian soldiers suffered less, their camps being more comfortable and their food more abundant naturarally they were better able to resist. But the empe epic epidme epidemic spread m a mong the women and children of the poor Calverinians like a prairie fire. Two hundred and sixty persons died within a day and soldiers who risked their lives for the sick, and een even trained red cross nurses also took sick and died. Persons died by the hundred every every day and the situaion was growning worse.

Hospitals which were reopened were filled with sick women and childr and on account of the plg plague one docto. doctor within six days a had declared that there were sixteen thousand persons died and that he had six thousand orphans on hand also getting ill from the disease.

To make matters worse news came to the generals of the army that his own troops were contracting the disease and when thing were do three hundred soldiers ha had already succ succumbed. The Thirty four others soon died in one tent and nine died in a generals headquarters where they had been placed at his wish. With the help of good doctors and red cross nurses the generals managed to check the plague.which was threae threatening to spread to thousands per day and soon the dangar was partially over. During this time the dreaded epidemic was also raging at St Francis, and St Gertrude l and in St Gertrude more than IO,000 had already died, and seven hundred and eighty others were dying. The population of St Francis was in danger of being wiped out by the terrible plague and here was collected about eighteen thousand one hundred fifty orphans and half the number were sick already and had to be quarinteened.

There were good tents and barracks erected to shelter the nuns whom several Bishops had promished but in a country like Calverinia a good house is nothing with the dreaded approach of the enemies of God.

Re

Reluctantly the morning sun that was rising was now peering over distant distant hills within sight of Hansons chi christian lines. The wall of drak green hills were tinged with a n narrow ribbon of silver a ruddy glow of burnished gold enveloped the lower snow clou on the distant horizon, the higher ones were white and fleecy, floatin cautiously as though they feared to come in contact with their inferio neighbors, not inferior in charming beauties, but in the positions tha occupied in the heavens. Indeed they were more attractive in their unusually dulled splendors even though not completely enchanced by the delicate touches of the ruddy simplicity that the painter of nature had put upon the more loudly decorated powers a and o rovers of the atmosphere.

An ominous calm hung over the landscape, the fume filledair was as undisturbed as the azure directly overhead.. No doubt weeping angels looked down from the thin clouds upon an amazingly repulsive spectacle if indeed any were there to contemplate the cannon encompassed hills, the ri rifted valleys a and the shattered and scatt fragments of humanity. Far awa/ from the main christian line there was an elevated knool n knoll capped by aoluste ring sopse of regularly set trees. I cannot and will not say that the presence of this treeless or leafeless forest I mean in its natural po f perfection at that most particular time and place was any sort of mystery, but that it wa still there wasof sufficient satisfaction to two uniformed men who were hidden among those pine and fir stems. They looked out upon a most disgustingly sad scene that almost chocked their breaths though they were Glandelinians n and ha had been hardened to the various changes of ravishment and destruction and were readily willing to inflict more grev grievously and remorselessly. The horrible vagaries of violence had accomplished much, war alwa/s has and did hane a way of making its devotees see only that and care for only that which spells vc victory for one slef and crushing defeat for ones enemy.

Many a time the captian had been on that tree covee covered hill.He had looked out upon the surrounding coun/ country with immense contentment in all the gor/ glor/ that lay dormantly blazing in the neighborhood. The capt a Captian saw all the scenes and knew its terrors. Several more miles beyond over lowe forest crowned hills and valleys fa far within the main christian lines a rolling bulging hill rose very notably above its neighbor. The slope was vine clad the crest p. pine a and evergreen trees coveredowith snow. In the brightening day it stood out clearing against the gleaming horizon. A soft cold breeze is beginning to blow from the northwest, and the even undua undua undulations of the waving branches and the stately tops made no impression on the observant captian. He was not looking for natures beauties, rythmic motions, poetic charms, and scenic delig delights, his bulsness was of a more serious nature. But yet that a distant copse of magnificent trees captivatingly engages the attention of the wicked Glandelinian captian and h is holding it most undistractedly. His powerful field glasses were trained immovably upon it.

But the bright sk/line wa was at first hindering him in his observation that he was making. But as the sun ascended higher, the lower horizon bec became shaded, and the background of the picture he was watching became less sharp in its high lights. Among the sombre trees on the distant hill a tall object is outlined, now quite distinctly, now more darkly, then again the waving of the branches obscured his clear vision. An approaching squadron of christian cavarly far to the left for a moment attracts his attention but he is not fearsome and keeps to his hiding place unseen as they pass within a few feet of him as they came up.

Again he closely scruntinizes the vexing hill and at last he feels sure of his point.He knew that in that pleasant grove of pine and evergreen trees and far there was a high christian signa signal station. But the sharp gleams of light that ever and anon streamed and flashed from beneath the platform of that signa station tolf told him that not all was as it should be upon that tower which at first had been thought to be aba abandoned.

Wars necessities knows no law, the most savage and barbarious occupation upon earth cannot ne expected to abide by the dictates of civil law and Christian practices to Glandelinians. Pagain ideals and heathen methods have nothing on the Glandelinians that the paths of the slavishly fighting ages had marked out for them, and the Glandelinian said;

"Let the good christian dogs look to their own existance.88

"The enemy is spying from that signal tower and they are seve little girls he muttered to himself.Yet he would not act hurriedly he will observe more and more minutely. To his rear the even humof the wind as it blows stronger becomes audible. Again there is calm.

The wicked Glandelinian captian watches more closely and carefully the higher portions of the signal stations. Now he is convinced; it is an enemys outlook or signal tower.

"Can it be." Says the Glandelinian Masonic captian tohimself" That seven little girls dare to use that signal tower themselves to flag signals to the enemy. It must be the damn Vivian Girls as no child otherwise would dare attempt it."

But his musings are of brief duration, he is ready for immediate action. What foe for bloody work against his own foe will use, must by the foe be quickly shattered. Deep determination lay on every accent of his to. toe tone. The captian turned to his tree telephone to give a report to his keen discovery.

But there was no answer, somewhere there is still a brek break in the wire line, a result of yesterdays terrific cannonading.

The scout on horseback is a hand for just such an emergency and he bears the message over shell plowed roads as hurriedlt as spitting power of naphtha could probably blow him had it done so. Large contingents of rebel troops were moving tward the front on to Norma Run keeping constantly in hiding behind hills and trees and prepa ring for their well formed positions. The rider finds it difficult to follow the impa impassable road and must often take to the miry fields. A fierce attack is being planned upon the christian line and much work is yet to be done before the shining of the evening star. Anon he passes parks of heavy cannon at which sometimes a hundred horses are attatched to each and which motor trucks, and horses and men were savagely tuggi to draw them from the quagmire into which the big guns are threatening! to sink hopelessly, uselessly. But onward he goes with every possible haste for the message that he carries may mean much for the success of the nocturnal undertaking. Three times he is vigorously pursued by fierce Abyssinkillians but he escaped. If the observers in the signal station learned of theirwork, and succeeded in signalling their discovery to the christian lines a counter attack may frustrate the carefully laid plans and minute preparations.

A large battery is concealed on a hill behind an artificial copse of high trees. It has not yet been used since its erection several weeks ago. The huge pieces of metal were shining brightly and clearling in the glowing sunlig sunlight. No powder smoke and acid fumes have yet stained the sleek factory polish. The battery troop of gay young Glandelinian good soldiers are at their post. Thi Their uniforms too are nifty and unsoiled. The only orders they have had since their location there was to be ready for an cannonade any time. The broken telephone wire had served to keep them idle longer than fates of war had decreed.

The battery commander was a young Glandelinian general. His delicate profile bore not the soldiers traits. His piercing eyes were bright clear and of a dull blue hue. His features had all the distinguishing marks of a deep and thorough education. His life preparations were sur not of a nature to fit him for the wicked work now in hand. Yet his intelligent willingness made him able to do accurately and very very consistently any task that might be assigned to him. He was engaged upon some military notes when the hurrying horsemen attracted his attention.

Was it a gleam of joy or a flush of sorrow that glowed upon his face when he saw the messenger making his way tward the battery? He knew that the time had come for one of the mighty guns under his command to speak, to belch forth destruction.

"An order from the scout captian sir." Was all the orderly said as he handed the commanding lieutenant the message, and as the lieutenat brought it to the general the orderly sta started at once upon the retu to his field post.

"The enemy is using the signal station as an obe observation post and are signaling to the christian lines. Was the report. Please destroy it without delay."

Coptial Lavandaer."

In a brief moment he had looked upon the location on his field map. the brave generals soul flinched mon momentarily. "War is war" He muttered to himself. "Its mandates cannot be gained, the captians orders cannot be disobeyed" And he reached for the telephone to give the battery commanders to direct the shots. Then a tumultious thundering roar rent the solemn stillness, an unusual quake rocked the hills, and an immense projectile went screaming over the heads of his intrenched forward comrades.

"Long and north." Came the signal over the wire.

A moment for adjustment and again the giant cannot canon spit forth a flame of lurid smoke as the black wings of a destroying angel angel. The roar shook the clouds.

"Short but direct." The signal reported.

Now he would get the range. The cannon spoke again and again and still again as quickly as the terrible heat would allow, louder and more violently with each succeeding boom. The target was hit, and stone crumbled upon stone, and the whole thing came down. A little variation of the settling shattered trees to the right and to the left, to the front and to the rear of the ruined ruined signal station. What had been a signal station wa was a wrecked heap of wars ruins, the shady grov became a carpet of spl interedwood, the snow covered lawn andstone walks were treacherious shell pits and all vast acres of useless debris. An instrument of hate and power had demolished the signal station but the Vivian Girls had gone before this and were safe.

It is to be stated that indeed the worse Glandelinians for the one to [illegible] is those known as the Condemnecians. The region which was in the hands of these Turmeraniians was in a perilious state, and even small christia forces which undertook the task of marching down the Mo-Hollester faced death at every step of the long journey for these kind of Glandelinians are posted all along the river at this section on both sides. These Glandelinians are peculiar in their fon form of uniform dress though splinded in appearance. Their uniforms almost resemble those of Bell hops in Hotels, and they wear wide brimed hats more like sombreros excepting that the peaks of the hats are not so extensive as the tops are not so high. They were the fiercest of all the Glandelinians known. Any fugitives who had escaped from a town raided by the Glandelinians known as Americannins were captured by the Condemnins near the Mo-Hollester Run after a brief fight with the main and carried off tward the main Glandelinian positions. he prisoners many of them were in a mangle condition. Some had their fligu fingers gnawed off by the Glandelinians as they lay senseless on the ground bleeding from blows of musket butts and they were horribly bruished and gashed.

Their rout with the foe lay along the Mo-Hollester Run to the camp of the main Glandelinian army situated near the Norma Run. After crossing the Mo-Hollester Run over pontoon bridges which took a full day they followed the trail through what was known as Big Bushy Run and finally reached the south portion of the great Norma Run River which pours into the Mo-Hollester Run. It was a ghastly journey for the two thousand prisoners women and children combined and wherever they met a party of Glandelinian cavarly of the same sect of foes they had to run the gauntlet of horsemen and be tortured in the cruelest fashion. Theyhad nothing to eat on the way except the berries or roots they could gather as they went along for strange kind of eatable berries grow in Calverinia in some places even in winter.

They often stumbled and fell under the weight and heavy burdens that were packed upon their backs and as soon as they reached the Glandelinian camp they found the whole horde waiting to receive them with musket butts, sabres, knives, enlidaggers and scourges and clubs and stones as they passed streaming with blood up the long slope of one of the hills between two lines of men who hacked and slashed and stoned and clubbed them at will. On the top of the hill they were all stripped naked women and little girls too distended between trees and then placed on platforms where they were all stabbed and cut repeatedly all ove over the body the vital parts were avoided, not out of concern for their christian victims, but to prolong their agony. One incident in this hadious drama served to show the marvelious courage of one of the very children. A captive child slave was was ordered to cut off one of the childs thumbs with a sharp knife. She was compelled to do so though terribly shocked and when the mulitud mutilated member fell to the ground the child took it up and holding it above her head said;

"Oh my God I offe - offer this to these, that sooner or later this wicked rebellion of the Glandelinians will be crushed forever and all the wicked in the nation justly punished."

At night the prisoners were pinioned to the ground and the Glandelinians amused themselves by sticking knives into them or heap ing firebrands on their quivering flesh. One child was murdered for having made the Sign of the Cross over adead child who had succo succumbed from the torture and his body was thrown into the river.. Many of these prisoners before reaching the foe camp had been made to tramp a hundred and sixty miles with heavy loads on their crippled and mangled shoulders after their savage Glandelinian masters, who delighted to exhibit them wherever they went.

Their naked feet had left bloody tracks on the ice or flints on the roads, their flesh were rotting with disea disease and their wounds were gangrened, and they were often beaten to the earth by fists o or clubbed gus of the savge Glandelinians and the bayonet was frequently threatening their bonom whenever they were found kneeling in prayer before crosses which had been cut on the trees on the forests. The wrte wretched clothing which was allowed some of them was swarming with vermin and they were often a in a condition of semi starvation as they crouched in the corner of the filthy tents and saw the wicked Glandelinians gorging themselves with meat which they could not share and which had really been stolen from unfortunate Calverinians like themselves. Fortunately, for them however once a la large force of christian raiders sudr surprised this part of the Glandelinian camp and rescued them all and slew many of the grayccats refusing to take any prisoners.

At one section of northern Calverinia,,, a short time after the bloody battle of Barbee the Glandelinians were forced the christians to beat a hasty retreat, nu not before the Glandelinians for they were at a very respectable distance from the christian camp but before the sharp and bitter cold of that part of Calverinia which was like a regular North Pole in winter a cold more terrible to them, than famine, plague, or any sect of Glandelinians Glandd ri ans all put together.During the proceeding days while the retreat was continueing the christian officers told their men that they were approaching Hannon where they could get good fire, brand/, and shoes, but in the meantime Angelinian soldiers were perishing in the glaciers, and continually harassed by Glandelinians.

The christian army in their retreat had marched for about three days more without stopping to take breath, for they knew that certain repose would mean certain death. An icy wind blew the drifting snow in the faces of the soldiers, and from time to time they stumbled over the frozen corpse of a comrade. The soldiers neither spoke or sang, even complaints were no l onger heard, and that was a bad signOne of the Angelinian lieutenants marched beside his captian, who was short, strong built andsevere in nature, but brave and true as the blade of his cabre and he was called Captian Serious, for when he once said any thing no matter what it was, it was fixed, for he never would change his opinions.

He had been wounded at Barbee and his usually crimson face was then ghastly pale, while a ragged white handkerchief all stained with blood, was bound around his head, and added to the palle r of his countenance.

All at once the lieutenant saw him stagger on his legs like a drunken man, then fall like a block to the ground.

''Captian, captian''Y The lieutenant said bending over him''You cannot, must not remain here.''

''You see that I can since I do it.''He replied showing his legs.

''captian.''Said the lieutenant''You must not give way''

And the lieutenant lifted him in his own an arms and tried to put him on his feet. He leaned on the brave lieutenant and attempted to walk but in vain, he fell again, dragging the lieu lieutenant with him.

''Francis Jobin.''Said the brave Captian.''All is over with me I'm afraid. Leave me here and rejoin your company as quickly as possible. One word before you go;at the town of Flanders near Voreppe-Grenoble lives a good woman with her three children a boy and two girls who is my wife, and another good woman eighty two years of age--my mother. Go Go and see them, embrace them for me and th tell them that that --tha that --tell her andthem what you willl but give my mother this purse and my cross. It is all I have. Now go my brave and noble friend.''

''Is that all?''Captian.''

''That is all. God bless you. Adieu my friend.''

The lieutenant did not know how it was but he felt two tears roll down his cheeks.

''No Captian.''He cried ''I will not leave you, either you come with me or I will remain with you.''

''I forbid youto remain.''

''You may put me under arrest then if you like dear captian, but at present you must let me do as you please. You are coming with me.''

''You must be an insolent fellowLieutenant.''

''Very good captian, but you must co me with me.''

The captia n bit his lips but said no more. The lieutenant lifted him andcarried him on his shoulders like a sack. You can easily imagine that with such a burden the lieutenant could not keep place with his comrades. In fact he soon lost sight of their columns and could see nothing around him but the whil white and silent plain boarded with trees far far to the southward.

The lieutenant still walked on, when presently appeared a troop of Glandelinians galloping tward him with ful furious gesticulations and with wild cries. The captian was by this time completely insensible, and so the lieutenant resolved no matter what it may cost him not to abandon him. So he laid him down on the ground, and covered him with snow, then he crept beneath a large heap of dead bodies leaving however his eyes at liberty. Presently the Glandelinians came up being Zimmermannians and they began to strike with their lances right and left, while their horses trampled the two brave christian officers under their feet.

One of those beasts at set his foot upon the lieutenants right arm and crushed it. But the lieutenant did not speak, did not stir, and he put his left hand into his mouth to stifle the cry of torture which nearly escaped from him, and in a few mon moments more the fierce Zimmermannians had dispersed. When the last of them had completely disappeared, the lieutenant came from his place of refuge, and proceeded to uncover the captian. Y To his joy he gave some sign of life and the lie lieutenant contrived to carry him with his one arm tward a rock which offered a short of shelter, and then he laid himself by the side of the captian wrapping his cloak around the captian and himself.

The night had closed in, and the snow continuedto fall.The rear guard had long since disappeared, and the only sound that broke the stillness of the night was the whistle of a bullet the screaming of a shell, or the howling of the wolves feasting on the corpses that lay stretched on the ground.. God knows what thoughts passed through his soul during h that dreadful night, which the lieutenant felt sure would be his last upon earth. But he remembered the prayer which his mother had taught him long before, when he was a little child at her knee, and bending at low he repeated w it with fervor.

That did him good and remember always that a sincere and fervent prayer is sure to comfort you as it did him. He felt astonishingly calmed when he returned to his place beside the captian. But the time passed and he had fallen into a state of stupor or half stuper, when he saw a group of Angelinian officers approach. Before he had time to speak to them their chief a little man dressed in a furred overcoat of scarlet hue stepped tward the lieutenant and said;

''what are you doing here lieutenant? Why are youmaway from your regiment?''

''For two good reasons.''Answered the lieutenant pointing first to the captian, and then to his own bleeding arm.

The lieutenant says true youe your excellency''Sa Said one of those who followed him.''I saw him marching in the rear of his regiment s and carrying this officer on his back.''

The general for it was he gave the lieutenant one of those glances that only he or the eagles of the mountians of Abbieamnia could give and said;

''Itbis well. You have done very well.''

Then opening his coat he took the cross which decorated his purple undercoat and gave it to the lieutenant. At that instant the lieutenant did not fell any longer hungry, no longer c ld, he felt no more pain from his arm than if that awkwadr beast had never touched it.

''General Daviouse''Added the chief general addressing the officer who had spoken to him.''See that the good lieutenant and his captian are placed in one of the baggage wagons.Adieu.''And making the lieutenant a motion of the hand he went away. Thus both officers were put carefuly in the baggage wagon, the christian army having reached a lag large Calverinian town where they were shelted and where they were making strong positions.....

To make it brief I wish to give a description as far pa possible of the extreme wickedness of the Glandelinians.It would not be doubted at all that the Sorrowful Mother of God and an number of Holy persons and Saints would deplore the blatany injuct injustice and fiendish depravity whr wherewith the Calverinian inhibatants were treated by the Glandelinians not for cruelty alone but just to defy and insult God.

The Gladelinians boasted from this of their vaunted success of casting the mighty ch christian armies - ignominiously out of the northern e region. To make sure that the christian armies should never return they saw to it that everything was laid in waste, and incessantly abused, disgraced tormented the inhibantants whom they made prisoners and to augment their agony they allowd them nothing with which to clothe themselves. At one camp a numbe number o of nuns, women and and children and even pr priests were led off to one of the high hills to be crucified just as ourLord had been and after three dreadful hours of journey and the wearisome climbing of the hill the condemned victims had been compelled to drag along their own heavy crosses to their grim destination. It was now near them indeed.

A side of the crosses were the c grewsome nails, the hamers, ropes and other instruments to be used in their final martydom. Instead of granting the persons a momentary respite they unceasingly tormted them with the intention of imitating the crucifixion of our lord, and they rudly jerked their clothing from their bodies.

The under-garments which clung to their wounded bodies were gruffly torn away and the entire lacerated bodies of the victims were exposed not even anything allowed around the loinsIt was a dismal horrible sight to see the poor victims panting and gasping for breath, shivering with fever and fear, the children screaming and shrieking, robbed of all their clothes, kicked by their tormentors, and forced down on the different sized crosses.Their arms were savagely pressed to the beams and held there by the ruthless grasp of the miscreants and as the nails were hammered through their hands one by one and through their feet the blood squirted high. Th The extreme tension of their bodies caused streams of blood to flow spasmodically. Language failes me to express the intense pain and torture, the bitter grief and the agonis agonizing anguish of the tortured victims as the crosses were raised and wedged in the ground or in rented o rocks. The burning in the wounds, the shooting pains in the body, the rising fever flashing through the entire system, the utter derliction of their disco, discomlate soul baffled all description. Involuntarily trying to seek relief in shifting the weight of the body meant the same a as tearing and enlarging the wounds in the opposite hand. Trying to rest the body upon the feet was futile for their feet were pierced with nails. So the three hundred children, and four thousand other victims were all writhing in mortal g agony, and all the while their blood was dropping to the ground or running down along the beam of the crosses. Not satisfied with the pain inflicted upon their victims the Glandelinians mocked them , wagged their heads, and insulted them in every possible manner, hurling rocks, mud and everything at them them and even threw hot wa water at them and stifled them with ammonia fumes and more and more blood flowed from the victims in their barbarious crucifixion, when their veins and artiries were rent and broken flowing in torrents from their hands and fe feet.It was a horrible way to die for these victims hanging so long there in lingering agony, but they died for God and so they deer deserved their rewards. The children being unable to stand such torture long were the first to die, and the others were left to lie as as death would take them. To make matters worse the wicked scene of this sort was enacted within full view of one of the nearest christian camps,. As the general was away the christians could not attack the enemy but they had as many prisoners as there had been victims dieln h the cross put to death in the camp in the very same fa fashion.

All this while while he was still concentrating his forces along the Normas Run general Hanson Vivian was was creditably informed that the wicked rebellious forces lying in the southeastern portions of the beautiful portion of Calvei Calverinia were preparing to move northward with the intention to come to the aid of those bese besieged at Norma Catherine and Julo Callio. Their destination at first had not been known and he was advised to be on his guard if he desired his army to escape any disaster on the Norma Run. It was also declaredthat in the south the wicked cause of the Glandelinian patriots was gaining ground. And from other authentic sources he was also informedthat the Glandelinians were drawing their forces forces to the river east to establish them in a well fortified positions position. The late reverses in the south already already reported to him also, and the previous many acres already recorded in the north, and the famines and plague had made the royal christian officers wary. Then too general Purgatorian Bicknell seemed to think that that his armies in the southern part of Calverinia were clearing the christian armies out of the region. Too late will he see his mistake when the advantage of his the faithful christian troops will be so overwhelmingly that all of Gran Manleys forces will not be able to withstand them. Hanson was also informed that the Glandelinian army left at Sunbeam Creek and left leaderless still by the death of their main commander was in a deplorable condition and ready to abandon that post. General Laughayetter of the foe was lying close by near Hansons left flank but was not taking any undue chances and risks wt with his raw new men. In regard to the plans of Whilliamsburger Zimmermann everybody was entirely in the dark. No doubt exultant over his great victory at Jennie Turner he would make the proper movements when the time was ripe, but as to what the movements would be, no one could even hazard a guess. Though affairs now have a better appearance than they did some months ago it was well for all christian generals with their armies to be on theirguard against marauding Turneranmians under general Arnold Saundersburg. He himself for a time would not dare to go far inland with so many christian armies lodged so firmly in Calverinia but his followers would faithfully do the dastardly work which that vile mind concieved and ordered. The Angelinians were still full mindful of the outrageous affiar that was perpetrated at the St Evans plantation not very long since.

Hearing all these circumstances general Hanson grew very suspicious, and knowning how the enemy were in their state of rebellion against Devine Providence he decided to sent out spies to see if any thing unusual was going on anywhere else within the enemys territory. The scouts to do what Hanson ordered them to had to cross over the wide mile like expense of of the great Norma River and there was danger of incurring the fire of the enemys shore battei batteries. But nevertheless the scouts which numbered about ten set off and soon what was expected happened. Cannons boomed, rifles cracked along the shore and the uproar was increasing in force every moment, and the smoke clouds looked black and threatening. Geysers splashed upward in the water produced by exploding shells but silently the scouts continued on their way none of the boats having been hit yet.

The further down the river they got the more the storm of firing increased in violence and a solid shot hit one of the boats with with terrific force, and to this were added the spitting lightning and thunder of bursting shrapnell which rained down showers of deadly missiles all about them. One of the boats the one which was hit was now in a sinking condition and all in his boat protestedaloudly as Hans in one of the surviving boats rowed over to the spot to rescue those who were swimming and floundering in the deep rough wavy waters.

They entreated him not to venture so near to the sunken boat in the face of such a storming fire; it was madness, sucide, let them swim to shore. But neither the black rough waters of the river nor the storm of minnies, balls, and shells had any terrors for him. In his craft there were experienced boatmen present, but Hans would have none of their advice. As he rowed on all in the boat looked at him with grave grave faces but he was determined and none dared dispute him.

"He's a madman."Said one of the soldiers.

"He has grown reckless."Said another"He says he does not care what happens to him."

"He has taken the loss of his wife and children massacred by the enemy too much to heart."Chimed in another.

"He should submit to Gods will"Now observed a lieutenant."We should pray for him that God may soften his heart and not have him so reckless. Those men whose boat has been hit can swim to shore Hans meanwhile made his way through the storming horror to where the half sunken boat was floating. The lightning of exploding shells was flashing incessantly, the thunder of of their explosions reverbrating with deafening salvoes of an uproar among the distant mountian and echooing up and down the river, and so violent were the geysers made in the river from either solid shot or shells exploding in the water that the river at that portion was rolling in great waves twad ward the shore.Seeing that no one was drowned or hurt, undaunted Hans pulled on his way sndwith giant strength urged his boat onward down the river followed by the other remaining boats.

Night had fallen thicker and it was now inky dark and snow clouds were overcasting the sky. Time and againice floating almost like icebergs impeded the boats the whole lake like expanse of the river being wrapped in ink/ darkness, pierced by flashes of rifles and cannon on the opposite shore and save when illumined by the momentary glare of bursting shells.

The thought came to many of those on the boats, was it not the act of a madman to put out in the river in the face of such an enemy who can probably in another minute ones they get the full range blow them all out of the water?which of the men left behind after swimming to the shore after ther their boat had been shot to pieces would venture to do such a thing again. ? Hans face grew set and hard.

"No they would not risk anything again for even their country I presume."He said almost aloud as if reading some of the thoughts of those with him:"Because of those who love them, and who are waiting for them.But I"--and he laughed bitterly"I have no one who cares whether I die or live. Death has taken all from me.I'm bound to carry out my mission for my country and God and I care not what happens. Better death than failure. God help me to pull it through though."

And the man in his desperation rowed on, fighting against all odds but in blind reckless fashion, not caring what happened so long as his mission was accomplished. The firing of the enemy still increased and more gun had been brought to the shore and opened fire, louder roared the explosion of shells, the flashes of shell explosions and cannons grew more blinding and every moment one of the geysers threatened to destroy the little craft crafts or ca cause the waves to engulf them.

The war o of the elements, though usually terrible indeed, and awe-ins firing was nothing to this infernal din of the enemys attempt to blow the boats out of the water. At last there came a sudden flash, more viv than all the others, seeming to light up the sky and lake like explosi of the river with blue flame, followed instantly by a crash if as if it had been a peal of thunder which seemed to split the very mountians.

The soldiers in Hans boat seemed to feel a thril of terror as they sawsasahsa saw two of the rear boats go to splinters and the men in them precipated into the water mangled and sink dead. The men who saw this sight began to tremble.

The damnable enemy had at last found the range and were proving it. Hans himself felt the same thrill of horror but he tried to console himself and made a desperate effort to regain courage and strength, but for a moment it was in vain though now the surviving boats was some distance beyondthe enemys range of fire. For a moment his hands were powerless and could not hold the oars. And then in the presence of imminent death the strong man grew more humble. Hans prayed;

"Help me pull through on my mission or Hn Hansons army will either perish or go to ruin.The cry ran out over the wave tossed waters, rang clear above the dese deafening crash and strife of shell explosion the booming of cannon, and the cracking of rifles, and rose to the Throne of the Eternal God.

Another flash which seemed to evelope whole river and another boat in a mantle of fire. Hans was now kneeling in the boat. For one second he felt as if he was bl blinded and with the shock of the explosion a shell shock probably he fell forward unconscious, while the little craft with the others were captzized by the geysers and all were precip ated into the water and killed----except Hans.

The Clandelinians thinking sure all were annihilated ceas their firing.

When Hans awoke or next opened his eyes he found himself lying on a ro rocky ledge upon which one of the wrecked b ats had been flung and dashed to pieces by the fury of some geyser formed wave. It was morning. The great river ten miles wide lay slumbering as it seemed in the bright winter sunlight as if no angry war forces had ever disturbed its peace. Along the shore was a glistening stretch of thick ice.

Half dazed and stiff with cold and with his uniform frozen to his body Hans sat up with difficulty and looked around. Then as he came to himself he recognized where he was. The waves had flung him on the very spot where soldiers long ago had found the bodies of his dead wife and children. He raised his eyes. He realised he had survived when all the others perished. Afteter getting his blood into circulation he exercised himself, built a roaring fire to get himself warm, and then trudged on toward a house in the distance where upon knocking upon the door he was welcomed by an elderly lady who had inside her house an image of Gods own sweet Mother looking down upon him as it seemed with ineffable compassion and at her feet was the inscription;

"Mary, Mother of Devine peace, pray for us."

With a heart moved to its depths Hans knelt at Marys feet. Yesshe was was the Mother of Devine Peace, and she had obtained peace for his torm red soul. She hadbrought him safely through the dangers of the awful dark night and tears of loving thankfulness streamed from his eyes as bowing to the earth in lowliest humility Hans at last accepted his cr cross with meek resignation to the Devine will. God had taken his dark draling children and wife from him but no breath of sin would ever tars tarnish their resplendent purity, they were safe in the Blessed Mothers keeping. God was God, and all was right and well. Andhe had bore all patiently, a nd and for their sake and Gods had outrode the dreadful peril unflinchingly while the others lost courage and maybe payed their lives for their cowardice, or swam to shore utterly dejected and defeated in their mission, for few were only drowned, while he had pulled through to the end and was safe at last to do his bidding while he stopped there to get his uniform dry he noticed that the woman had a little girl who had gornw up as fair as a lily andas pure. Heaven itself seemed reflected in the depths of her innocent eyes, blue as the for-get-me-not. And so happy in the possession of this peerless little daung dnughter her mother had labored with a light heart content to endure hardships, privation, suffering and anything else if so she might sheild her lovely water-lily as she called her from every rough wind.Happiness despite the wars havoc all around, contentment such as a king might envy dwelt in the womans poor house, and s w the little girls whose name was Anna Pansy was already seven years old. He foe could got to this point for it was fully in possession of the main christian center. Foes to run here to obtain possession of her and her home was like sticking your head in the mouth of hell. After he had discovered important thing on the river and boating with the little girls within plain viewof the christian lines, and b aking on the river for a full day Hans decided to return and give the infor mation he had discovered.The river lay like a burnished morror in the golden rays of the winter sun and the floating ice fields made so many rainbow colors that the scenery was beautiful to behold. But now the evening shaows were falling over the mountian and valley as Hans weary after more than an ordinary busy day rowed slowly tward the cottagefor two whole days Hans had o rowed the river in face of a complication of perils seemingly in a frenzied state, seam scorching seemingly everywhere andhad obtained so much write written information of the intentions of the enemy and news about other foe armies and their purpose that he had to place the papers in a hidden recess of the house untill he could reach the main point of the christian line he desired.He rejected every attempt of the woman or the child who was also brave to bear the messages for him to the christian lines, no per saision availed to induce him to allow them to do so and onde he said even sternly!

"I do not allow women or little children to risk dangers like that when it is my o duty to do it myself. For the love of mike forget it."

At length on the fourth day of hid his stay at the home as the dawn was breaking over the hi ca cannoned drowned mountians, on a rocky shelving strand he while out rowing found a little girl which resembled Anna a good deal lifeless, but larger in size, and a piece of shrapnell in her breast. Surely it was probably she had been killed that night when the boats wr were shelled by the enemy and had lain there il that while. .Rowing silently with bowed head and heart filled with sorrow, while filled with pity at the same time the man clasped the broken frame or body tenderly in his arms and the boys who rowed bore her in the morning sunbeams across the lake l.k like river back to the home, and there in the ground buried her. Anna the little girl weeped at so pitiful a sight but Hns did not. From that hour he was a changed man. The light hearted cheery boatman who had been such a favorite with all soldiers he met, villagers and visitors alike became sullen morose. He shunned every vistage of a Clandelinian uniform with greater hatred than before, and when not engaged in his calling he shut himself up in some hut he would find near the enemys lines, andshot down any grayceat like a dog who came within his rangeHe would listen to no word of consolation or advise, he even rejected the efforts of his venerable pastor who would fain have urged him not to do such a thing so rask though of course he did seek solace for his grief in humble resignation at the foot of the cross. But he would say;

"The Clandelinian rebels have turned away from God, rebelled against him, and all christianity, questioned his Devine decrees and just to insult him murder christians and priests and nuns and children of all sects and nationalities.They were more cruel to destroy the child he had found lying dead, the idolized child of some sorrowful parent, the light of his or her eyes, all that made life worth living. It was his purpose to repay the Clandelinians at any risk and he would do so.

He made out every possible movements and plans of the enemy as far as he was able and at last when he had done everything necessary he made his way back to Hansons lines told him all and of his experiences, and was praised by all officers who learned that he alone had accomplished in do doing what others had failed to do. Hansen had heard the noisy cannonading on the other s of the river but he had not made out what caused it, and this had nevertheless caused hi to order all the christian batteries to be put into pos tion to meet any possible attack that was sure to come.....

MORE ABOUT THE SEIGE OF JULIO CALLIO.....

Where is Julio Calliov it is situated on both sides of the great Norma Catherine river usually called the Norma's Run. Outside of Vivian Wickey it is the leasest city in the Angelinian world and is big enough to swallow up the whole of three Chicagoes, Londons, and New Yorks put together inone. it is however largelty or largely divided by the width of the river which at flowing past or through the city is nearly twelve miles a across. Norma Run River is the widest i river in the world a next to the Mc-Hollester Runl and is so wide at places that it cannot be seen across at all just like the Mc-Hollester into which it runs. The western section of the city is known as Julo Callio, and the Eastern pary part equally in size is called Norma Catherine. Just think what a large army it takes to besiege such a big place surrounded on the land portions by the biggest and strongest fortresses in the world.

It has more fortifications than even Vivian Wickey, and bigger ones, and the whole river teemes with Glandelinian craft and big rams and barges of all sorts, and torpedo boats. The first christian army that had laid seige to the great stronghold of the enemy under Rickson and Purgatorian had moved upon the two land side sections o of the city in a half circular formation and it took the most bloodie fighting and the fiercest di drive in the war to make the seige in a wa that the enemy could not escape. To insure their escape by river also big christian fleets had steamed up both portions of the gigantic Amazon of A Angelinia and Calverinia, and now since the seige was on in full sway it seemed yet a most difficulty to capture it. The fortresses were just like at Mc-whirther and Vivian Wickey built by Abblesnnians and Calverinians but the forts were more imdense. Their formation were the same as at Mc-whirther but they had no so surrounding stockades and no trenches of any kind like those either.

But the positions of the enemy were utterly unapproachable, and the Angeln Angelinins who made the gigantic seige, had to resort most of their time by keeping up a continual bombardment of the positio and to make positions of their own so that incase the enemy would ever counter attack no disaster of defeat would occur.

The seige was personally directed either by the Angelinian and Calverinian governments and by Hanson and it was Hansonspurpose to march to Julo Callio himself and force the Turmerammians there to raise the seige, but on account of his failures at the seige of Evangelinia Crania and other repulses he had not as just accomplished his purpose and all the nearer he was now within the vicinity of one port portion of the besieged city was at the intersection of Norma Run and its mouth and the Mc-Hollester Run River.

Hanson had intended to do all possible to make an immediate concentration upon the enemys positions as soon as he was able to do so, for he believed that he alone could bring for those already besieging it a speedy and complte success. But his purposed purposes had been completely frustrated by Manley. At the time o during the Norma reign of terror Hanson had endeavored to send large armies to strike Purgatorian a blow but had been frustrated by one of the Manleys.

He had at this time seen a good opportunity and now when he was within sight o the spires of the war racked city, he was confron ted by the vast hord of insugents under general Manley.

General Hanson felt sure that all his attempts would be repulsed for Manley though only half his strength had a better position, and was better in arms and equipment of all si sorts, and had more ammon and ammunition.

He was surprised and wonlered exceedingly that the wicked always seemed to have the best of everything. The battle o fildred Herrin did not benifit him anything though it had cost the enemy exceed exceedingly heavy losses, and so waiting for the advance of general Robert Vivians army, Hanson lay inactive onl, glowering a the enemy like a timid bulldog held at bay by a smaller but more vicious dog of a different breed.

He knew it was Manleys intentions to frustrate any vicious attempts of the christian armies upon Julo Callio, and from the spy Hans who had done so much and from the papers he had captured, he had received the word that there were more cities besieged by christians than Julo Callio, and that they were resulting the same way. The city of Vivian a lokey was besieged by big Abbleannian fleets in the bay and in the mouth of the Mc-Hollester Run River, and large christian armies under general Francis Hansonia was besieging it by landi land, and moving more armies to seize the neighboring towns of Gondandon and Lucillas Rickson, and to reestablish a new line in front of Gloriinna along the Aronburgs Run.

Marral Fons was also besieged by christian armies, and continually bombarded, but was holding out. Aronburg and Federal the big Calverinian cities were besieged by enemy armies, and held out against the Glandelinians with the same obstinacy with which the enemy were holding out against the besieging christians at Vivia Wickey and Julo Callio, and Crowley, and the city of Cromer Andrean was also besieged by christian armies, but it had still held out and once the christians had been driven back by a encouraging attack that caused such la losses that it seemed a as if a whi whole nation of men had fallen in that battleCoogan where the christins had recieved a severe and bloody repulse.

The seige of Julo Callio is the most extenside seige of the whole war. The sizes of the christian armies were immense, the biggest armies ever mistered into the field by the Angelinian authorities, and more cannons were in action here during the seige than anywhere else in the war. The christians at the beginning of the seige had built builded fortifications o of their own, and an armed these with the biggest seige guns. In circular formation at each portion of the city east and west the extent of the besieging line was over a hundred miles long and was so thickly populated with soldiers that it would have looked as if the whole population of the world was concentrating upon that one big city. It is hardly wise to say the real strength of the christian army, but nevertheless the enemy army who was holding against the seige was about half a strong in force but had more cannons, and were supplied with provisions by secret underground tunnels which were not known by the christian generals. At Julo Callio Fort Holi was the strongest of the fortifications in the possession of the enemy and others were nearly as strong while the enemy had also protecting them high hills and the river also which wa was swarming with their fleets of destroyers and battleships. At this portion the enemy had on the shore of the great river on both sides the strongest shore batteries ever erected and these made agauntlet for any christian ships what would dare to make the attempt to go down the stream.

The main points at NormaCatherine to be captured were the fortifications of Holi, Vara Krootheilie, Andendon, Ignorance,, Henryson, and Phippen.

The enemy army was in series of columns and were on different positions the main positions around Julio Callio being on portions of the great Normas Run, while the other positions were on Beauties and Bondinia's Lanes. The left grand division of the besieged Glandelinian army was in position in front of a line of fortifications called Sangustopolis, Battruba, Kadula, Anden, Chillie, Ganderlinia, Hollesburg, Google, Varah Roothellie, and Poverty Row. These fortif ications were armed with ohe hundred thousand big cannons.

The center of the Glandelinian position stretched along the north section of the Norma Run and had the works and positions on Batens Lanes, along a creek called Beelzebube which runs into the great River, and a another at Chapoltepek. The left bend of the Glandelinian position where general Purgatorian was in personal command was heart the big fortification Ch Calverine, and stretched on the summit of a hill called Finger mountian from the reason that the hill if seen on a Calverinian map had the form a of a mans finger. General Purgatorians ex treme left extended on Procils Lanes, and along the Jellio Creek running from Finger mountian into the river tward Hendandon, Palm woods, and Angeline Mills. The i right division of the enemys left wing w was situa ted at Meldon and on Duspane hills, and stretched from Nellbury, to Declinia, and from Declinia to Catherlingburg another string of strong fortifications. Nelkingburg was another great fortification strongest of all probably at this section. A Glandelinian battery of titanic strength wa in position on Landing Island in the middle of the great river, and covered with extra batteries the fortifications of Ignorance, Snowline, Chillio, Collon, Henryson, Bonsulu, Padula, Halfscow and Clamdohburg. The fortifications of Clamburg was also situated on the hills known as Pears mountian and fort Aurandico was on the summit of Apple Ridge. The stream of Violet Lansin Run moves into the great Norma River from the southwest and one of the other main sections of the Gladelinian army a and positions were situated here with the covering defens e of the fortifications, of Callio Lansin, another called Padula NO, Two, And Triponolicia. Callios Lane was a stronghornets nest of the Glandelinian position and the flanking town of Violet Paul was also occupied by the enemy and turned into a series of fortifications. Fort Bulla Collon, Flapon, Rendor,, Protestia, Mainsbu Boonia,, Scandia and Clocklin were situated here.

A branch of the enemys line extended along both banks of the One Hundred Fork River, where on each fork was a river position, one of which was situated on Turner Hill, and on a point called Hurricia Hurricanes Blow and Hellbulls Hill. The right section of this wing of the enemy extended also alongboth banks the full length of the small stream called Nellie Galverines Run where was situated the fortifications of Laundale, Babies,, Flamming, Hollice, Powad, Gandonlinia, Callil. Angeline, Gandon, Mouthlingburg, Richerton, Pw Owinie Woonie, Latruva and Nolldale. The remainder of the enemys position was extended along the banks of the streams 1 known as Smilli Mouth Angeline River and Salvoes Run. Close by of Norman Catherine were the great towns of Zanu Custopolin, Appleton, Calmanrinia Junction, Nolldell, Mild Mildred Greenburg, Little Danielnia and St Francis. Atlanta Run wa in possession of the christian line.

Thes enemy indeed hd had enough positions indeedto defy probably the whole of heavens to capture or assault but the christians were just as bad...The left grand division of the besieging lines were in possession of bo h sides of the Catherine Deele Stream which as also runs into the Mc-Hollester Run and also in possession of Gould Run and Catheine Poor. There were other streams known as Antetam-Francenia and Chickamaugamonian, and these were guarded by the strongest of the christian seige batteries at these sections. The small villiages of Blanden, Clamden, Phelan, Everette True, Dargin Corinth, and Flangonia were in possession of the christian troops and these by the Angelinians had been converted into fortresses. A small but deep creek passed the region of Puckamuhonis known as the Blenglglomenean Creek on account of many of those creatures seen swimming in t it and this was also fortified by the christians as all as Puckamuhonia, Dublinihi C-lonia, Candanbunia, Angelinia Collens, Margeret Burns e and Missies Ridge.

Running into the Norma Run was also a stream called Ricamauaca and Chickashaw Run. The small villiages of Sharpsburg, Batenna, Meldorf, Vivian Gouldenia, Nemo, Cumberland and Cumberslumberaland and Virginia were situated here. This consisted of the main christia li line who had also converted these villiages into fortified fortresses. At Snowball mountian was a strong christian battery of seige guns and small smaller rifle cannon covering all the upper approaches to Maries Creek.

Catherine Franklin another villiage but of larg larger size was also fortified by the besieging chri stia s and another town called atherine Stanck was also converted into a fortress. Later during the Seige such asa nguninary battle occured here that it was afterwards known as Catherine Hades'

Mount Catherinia wa also crowned with strong seige batteries and the towns of Beldon Calverine, Frankforter, Tanklin, Hawkerlake, Daveys Ford, though also in possession of the christians were not dev converted into fortifications bu were nevertheless covered and protected by the strongest batteries. Lookout point down the river was also occupied occupied by the christians as well as Run Bull and Bull Run ridge which consisted of the central christian center or grand division

The stronfewt point of the christian center wa was on the bans of the stream called Chickadeemauga. Here the fortified towns of Franklin, Moultee, Julio Soin,, Catherine Bonbon, Chicksono, Pruva-anna, Anna Bandania, Lightning creeklin and Grand Trunk were situated. These were also used as seige fortifications.

then domes Mc-Hollester and Mayflower creeks and Comet run near which were the towns of Belgianna, Doleres Mc-Hollester, Dolores Mc-Hollenin, Marie Mc-Alister, Edith Haldemann, Blandanna bluff, Vivian Deele, Pariase, Flpp Flappendandandon, St Rose, St Camillia, St Ann, St A Ethel, St Catherine, Meldondondon, Flip, Flipingontonia, Babbling Tess, Babbling Bess,, Babbling Brook, Babblington, Hades, Devils Den, Our Lady of Victory, A c Accountants and Meldorf. All these had also fortified by the besieging christians. Resurrection Mountian was a a hills fortified by the christians as well as both sides of Norma Bridge and Normas Creek. Once during the latter part of theseige as stated during the third year of the war all these points seperately in one day had been attacked by the enemy having caused about one hundred battles in one day. All were failures for the enemy who lost a hundred thousand men killed and wounded in each of these one hundred seperated battles.

WHY CITIES AND TOWNS IN CALVERINIA HAVE TWO NAMES.

It must seem strange to the reader I presume, that cities, and towns, and rivers in Calverinia Angelinia, and Abbiesinia have two names.

It may seem a little strange to me at present, but I can easily explain the reason just as I can recite my A.B.and C.....

It is the custom of the people of those nations and countries to give towns and villiages and rivers two names, as it is the custom of to give and recieve two orveven for to five names in a whole line. Most of all places named are usually nm named after important and great St's and in only Glandelinia can it be found where the majority of towns and so on only have one name.

It indeed would seem peculiar because in our own country mostly all towns and cities have only one name, and mostly a l rivers too have but one name. The best f the cities to have two names or even three was the great city of Evangeline St Clare. This city was very large a complete London of Calverinia and Angelinia together and really a portion of the great city of Calverinia, but so far devided from each other side by the great Erminie Run that it was hardly known as Calverine though both sections generally are called all in one, Angeline St Clare.

It took the most desperate battle in the war here to capture the city so long held by the Gladelinians. The usual name I presume is well known everywhere, especially in Uncle Toms Cabin when all read of Dear Little Little Evangeline St Clare the saintly friend of the Negro Saint Uncle Tom. The city was given that name just for her alone, as she was well loved of and known by the Calverinians al all over Calverinia.

I of course will not say she lived or died there, because then would say things too far, but one thing I will say is''That she never seen the city named after her, and never will.

The city of Julo Callio is her nearest neighbor and also has two names. To tell it frankly the greatest and bloodiest seiges of the war were;

1. The seige of Jennie Turner--a duration of two months and three weeks------a christian crushing failure.
2. The seige of Julo Callio.))God alone knows when this bloody siege will end.
3. The seige of Lucillio Nichson.--Just started. Maybe the Christians will capture her and maybe not.
4. The seige of Vivian Wickey, and the enemys fortifications around it.
5. The seige of Mc-Whirther.

These five are already proving to be the greatest of all but Julo Callio is ranking ahead of them all in horror and brutality. For the reign of terror, is well noted recently, and now the fierce ruthless bombardment, and massacre of Glandelinian troops.

It is also probably tha that the seige of Julo Callio will be the most extensive seige of all and will be later noted for many tremendous battles that will rageed all around her. The Main commander h just one of the besieging christians is general Henry Turner Ricksonia.

It is indeed most peculiar about the situation of this great war. In most conflicts the foe armies are vastly inferior to the christian armies, and at times the christian armies are so big that they fairly overwhelm the enemy as a b giant would a baby, and yet the christian armies had suffered severe and shameful repulses, and when it did seem probable that they had the enemy in their power, they were frust rated, and outwitted, and the enemy escapes the net and runs away unbeaten but just repulsed themselves. The christian armies that besieged the city of Jennie Turner was the greatest army that ever besieged a city and under Hanson himself. The army was defeated in the seige and by a force of Glandelinians that were overwhelmed by the christians ten to one.

Another scene was the seige of Evangelinia Crania, which held out for nine months and which was the bloodiest seige of all in some reasons. Hanson also ma made this seige and was baffled by his crushing defeats and repulses. Julo Callio was now besieged by superior Christian armies a and and also Crowley, and they were he holding out successfully, and Hanson felt many times as if the enemy would win the rebellion in the long run or at least go so far in succe that the wa war would grow so fierce and sanguinary that the losses o both sides would appall the whole world.
What he feared soon happened as we will see in other volumes.

Hanson had now on the west banks of the Norma Catherine River a army that was large enough to overwhim both the besieging army at Julo Callio and the besieged, and had good equipment and great cannons and all the provisions and ammunition needed, but he was con- frontei by one of the most dreaded Glandelinian armies of them all, th fiercest fighters of all Glandelinia known as the Mc-Hollestinians, the worse of all the blue uniformed Turmeranniens. A nd they were unde the worse fighter of all and he was the worse of all the Manleys thank to his good name if not character.

Manley felt so determined to defend Julo Callio and to hold off the advance of general Hansons army if he had to go to perdition t get help for his efforts. All of the Manleys were the most desperate fighters of a every Glandelinian genera known at that timebut the one commanding this Glandel..nion army was better, more wiser, clever, more vigorious, and a St Augustine St Clare of his own accord, though a thousand Simon Legrees in nature.

It is or was said that general Whilliamsburger Zimmermann, was one o the most dreaded christian generals of all. He probably was but there was another who was equa equally as severe as himself. We have already read a little about the great general known as Jacksonia Ambrose Evans who from the uniform he wore always was kio nicknamed Colonel Jack Evans. The fierce leader of the Vand Vandals, or even other gre leaders were only a child general compared to him. History records the doings of the great French Emperior, but he was nothing to general Evans. Since he had after the disasterous repulse at the seige of Jennie Turmer got seperated from the main christian armies under Hans and his brother, o general Jacksonia Evans had collected a great army of his own selected his own generals and did wonders. His advance fir sta rted southward. Enemy armies were in his way but they did not dar engage him and made a hasty retreat. He captured within a month stir stirring advance, all the lower towns along the Mc-Hollester Run River and burned them to the ground to prevent the enemy from retaking them again. Nothing could withstand his advance. He advanced southward for months untill without a battle he had cleared the whole region of the enemy, and then wanting something to do he changed his course of advan captured the town od Devine Grace from a large force of enemy troops who fled without acontest, and then laid hold of the city of Maria St Clare capturing a whole army of twenty million Glandelinians whose generals gave up their swords a and surrendered.

Evans not realizing the terror he wa putting into the rebels was gusted tha that the foe would not fight him and he reported to Hanson that he did not believe himself much of ageneral as he could not bring on a genera engagement. Hanson had head of his doings and laughing wa him, stating that he had cleared the region of the enemy and that was why he found himself unopposed.

Evans knowing that Hans Hans on had failed to capture Jennie Turner decided to do it himself, but after he marched to the city after amonths time he found out that it had been captured by Whilliamsburger Z immermann and that it was defended by a strong christian army that was stationed there to prevent its rec ecapture by the enemy. Evans then changed his course of advance, and moved his armies up and down the Erminie River, for the distance of a hundred miles, clearing the region there of Glandelinians and estab lishing a strong base of fortifications and other good points.

It was Evans purpose now to terrifying the enemy as possible, and so knowing of Hansons intentions of besieging Julo Callio, he divided his immense army and placed them in three points of the country in such a way tha no Glandelinian army could come to the aid of the Manley who was confronting Hanson.

At this time Violet and her sisters had seen very little of their friend Ja Jacksonia Evans. They heard all about his heroism and loved him all the more. L tt Little did they dream that on account of him they were to be saved from many a horror. Knowi g him to be a ch a ge great general, not only in deed and bravery but high rank, Violet andher sisters could not understand why he always liked to wea wear a uniform that looked like a colonels. They had not cared to ask him when they did see him for it seemed like butting into his affiars.

Just like a Mexican, he was a heavy cigarette smoker, and a man of fierce disposition if once aroused. He was usually saintly in character, very generous to everybody, and kind under usual conditions to his soldiers and officers, but he would explode like a magazine when excited or angry. He was easily excited to anger, and could usually lost lose his temper. Prudence was the only thing lacking in him.

He was worse than Simon Legree to Glandelinia prisoners if they dared do anything tha would anger him. Evans was not at all hans handsome in looks, but had a bulldog expression on his face, and his head was sheped almost like a bullet. He was a gigantic fellow a six foo ter and a half, and as strong as a prize fighter. He had once been known to have a surly disposition just as his looks betrayed, but expei experience showed that if everything went well he was good natured and kind.

The main thing to angr anger him was cruelty to others, or the wicked actions of Glandelinians, or disobedience, and other things forbidden in the army. He usually wore the Purple uniform of the Angelinian color purple hue and deep bands of yellow color on the sides of his trousers. He wore a sombero almost as high as a Mexicans only that the rim of the hat was broader and the hat was of a black color. He was also a very determined man, and so desperate was he in his intentions that for his bravery and deeds, all who knew him usually called him when he was set upon a purpose to do anything, he did it no matter what the difficulty. If anybody would say to him ''Why e general Evans, that can t be done. It's to difficult,'' Evans would answer abruptly. ''There is no such a thing as can't, and I bet you my whole commission It will be accomplished. And it was.

''GENERAL SUCIDE''.

When he and his armies were making the manuevers to prevent the aid coming to Manley at Norma Run, the whole force of Glandelinians at Julo Callio was terrirized and this made them attack in one day all those points heldby the besiging christians, and which end ended in such desperate repulses. At that time it surely would have been great to state that if Evans had not been wounded while out scoutuing scouting near the villiage of Littleton, he could have marched his series of great armies upon Julo Callio and captured it easily. But while out scouting, some Angelinians had been firing at some ski skulking Glandelinians and one accidentally shot Vans in the tigh and disabled him. Of course it was really and truely an accident, but nevertheless the poor soldier spent two weeks in the guard house on bread and wate water nevertheless, and a discharge from the army afterwards. Evans was such a man that he would not even tolerate an accident or even a blunder from any body. This for once gives an account of how stern a man eneral Jacksonia Evans was. He was sometimes so furious when on a tear that not even his generals would dare enter his headquarters untill he c had cooled down. Peculiar how it is that not one once had he ever scolded Violet and her sisters. And how he loved and e respected them though so much his inferiors as they were to him.

He treated them with better kindness, than their parents or relations, or any other christian generals, and run through perils ad risks which he would do for no body else. Anything they asked he never refused.

Before general Evans made his movements as related, or before Hanson reached the vinicity of the Norma Run there had been many incidents occuring that was indeed very x surprising. The first one was of some explosion that flattened a town of to the ground by its concussion and another was of similar disasters elsewhere, as well as a capture of a whole christian army down the river a little ways, as well as the capture of a whole christian fleet of ships of all sizes and shapes.

The enemy had hardly won many battles, and only repulsed the christians in the battles that they did win, bu nevertheless the enemy were tremendously successful in everything else they did.

Theenemy showed good behaviour in their defense of Julo Callio, Vivian, Wickey, and Crowley holding out against the christians for so long already, ad it was evidently that general Hanson would not make any success on his own part either if he should attax attack the enemy concentrated along the Normas Run.

During Hansons concentration of his armies along the Norma Run a Glandelinian general and his orderly had a trying experience for about four days. Four those four days the Glandelinian general and his orderly had been cut off from their troops, and for four days, so my story goes, they had lain hidden in bushes on the banks of that great river.

They had not been spies, but just two unfortunate Glandelinians in going out scouting for a long distance had become lost on account of a severe snowstorm the day before,(The blizzard Violet and her sisters had been caught in). They were no doubt two officers, but they knew that christians haveno more concern for any Glandelinian officer of any high rank, and would either shoot him down on sight, or make a disgraceful prisoner of them. To be prisoners in the hands of the Angelinians would be like being in hell itself. Angelinians for some reason are very cruel to Glandelinian prisoners, and all prisoners are fortunate to get a cup of muddy water with their scanty meals.

So you see these two Glandelinians were in peril indeed, and these were Hansons troops too, the worse of all the Angelinians. And to these Glandelinians it seemed as if Angelinian troops were everywhere.

No matter where they hide troops appeared, either infantry, or on horseback. Once even once the very Vivian Girls came near one of their hiding places, and if they had been seen by them they surely would has been prisoners because though saintly in character the little girls would nevertheless make them prisoners ay anyway.

For the Glandelinian general and his orderly, no venture could be made by day, even for warmpth and food. To build a fire they dared not. They were within the very christian lines and lost at that. Only at night would they dare to move out of their place of concealment. Three times they had seen Gertrude Gertrdude Angeline approach a clump of bushes behind which they had been hiding, with the Vivian Girls, and a bunch of red coated Abyssinkilians, and the two men had drawn their pistols for it seemed positively as if they had been seen.

But they were not. And now this was the fourth night already paling into day. Cautiously through the dark hours they had incessantly wormed their perilious way.Once a cracking twig had brought a sentrys bullet whizzing over their heads, and again a sneeze from somewhere had brought a volley from a point of the camp, as Angelinian sentries seldom chalenge but shoot on sight at the first and most slightest sound.

Once a soldiers half concealed cough had saved the two Glandelinians from capture---perhaps death.

But they made some progress.Their own lines could not be many miles away, they thought.With daybreak probably would come the noise of a new days battle, then they would know.

But daybreak meant stopping, and stopping or to stop meant time to think of their hunger, and suffering from cold and exposure.

There were very many things for them to avoid at night and day.

Christian sentries whose watchfulness was as strick as Blenglglenean creatures as to say, the prowling of the dangerous Geminie scouts, the airships of the christias, christians, the approach of officers and men every now and then, and the batteries of the christians.

On the early morning as they were hiding in a large bunch of shrubbery.they again saw the Vivian Girls approaching, with Gertrude Angeline, and even Jennie Turner and Angeline. The two Glandelinians did not have any fear of soldiers, but these girls though mere children were too dangerous to cope with and only prudence savd the Glandelinians from being discovered. They saw close by a large snowdrift. Into this they hastily forced their way and just in time for over the bank rode the little girls, Gertrude Angeline, and Jennie Turner first.

It seemed to the ung unfortunate Glandelinian officers that nearly twice an hour these most dangerous of Angelinians would appear. To make a swift dash for freedom would be sucide, for these little girls are quick as a flash with their pistols and at close range they would riddle the two Glandelinians with bullets. One hour more the two waited before they decided to go on. Through the gray heavy fog they grouped their way along. If only they could get ride of their uniforms and they would not fear detection so much. And then as they grouped along they came to a path leading to the river. On it were twenty sentries within the distance of thirty feet. To pass them was as easy as to hide a sin from God. To fight these sentries was like fighting a number of grizzly bears unarmed. Another path led tward a distant farm house. Fate had led them there, but whether for good or ill they knew not.

But this path was also guarded. Only at night could they cross this path with only half the peril. Andwho was in that lonely house. Glandelinians---friends ? A small detatchment of Abbiesnnians. Or was it forsaken. They waited untill night. Three times more they encountered the Vivian Girls, and their companions, and twice general Hanson Vivian and his detatchment of generals rode close to their hiding place.

Would they never get out of the christian lines? But night soon approached and they crept forward only to hear voices and to see a group of officers on horseback standing in the roadway. Dangerously near they hid in the vhe bushes. Andthey waited. Someone was there but a searchlight revealed an Angelinian flag flying over the house.

A thin whisp of smoke drifted lazily from the crude stone house andbrick chimney. Perhaps fate would smol smile on them again---perhapsON the air came the oder of pancakes. That little farmhouse became the most desirable place in the world to the Glandelinian general and his orderly then. They ran to the door opened it, and stood face to face with six of the most amazed and beautiful little girls they had ever seen.

Fortunately for them the little Vivian Girls were without their weapons having left it on the table, and hastily swiping some of the pancakes, the two Glandelinians again beat it, just as as the little girls picked up their guns and opened fire.

But the little girls only fired up into the air and aroused the guards.

The two Glandelinians saw nothing else to do but make their escape across the river. They rushed to the be banks, and crossed, but on the other side t was the christian lines also, and they had to recross on a pontoon bridge to another portion.

They knew the reason of their peril wasthe the christian lines was very extensive, over thirteen miles long and over a mile into the interior, with batteries, and fiel fortifications everywhere.

Violet and her sisters who had been aroused by the two fees had started a pu persuit, but the Glandelinians could not be found, on account of the pic pitchy darkness, but now the whole camp was aroused by telegraph and it was known all over that two Glandelinians were at large within their lines.

The sensation produced by the sudden firing which Violet and her sisters had started had been immediate. Manly of the Angelinians had sprang forward officiously to offer their service, either from the hope of getting the fugitives, or of protecting their friends from prowling Glandelinians, or from the cringing subsurviency which is one of the most baleful effects of the fierce Angelinians. Many of the Angelinians began running this way, and many another, and others q quickly produced flambeaux of pine knots. Others were uncoupling bloodhounds, whose hoarse savage bay added not a little to the anamation of the scene.

The whole bans band of Angelinians with the glare of hundreds of blazing torches, and whoops and shouts, and curses, and many a savage yell of man and beast proceeded through the camp camp in the direction where the two fugitives had gone followed at some distance by a whole swarm of soldiers from curiousity. The hunt was long, animated, and thorough but unsuccessful.

this Gla Glandelinian generl and his orderly were not exactly belonging to the type of Glandelinians who brutilize or murder l. little children but nevertheless they were very dangerous if c cornered by their persuers, but nevertheless these two Glandelinians did not find it necessary to use their pistols on any A ngelinians as they were too far from the region of the searchers, and a dark moonli moonless night a at last enabled the two Glandelinians to find a space in the christian lines through which they could escape without detection ,and taking advantage of the opportunity, they slipped through brushed t past two guardswho did not see them, and was finally free fr the Angelinians.

It was hardly possible that Glandelinians once they got within the christian l lines ever escaped, but on account of the intense darkn and nothing knowing for sure where the two fugitives were the Angelinian had not been able to find them, but fearing that it was was some Glandelinians bent on carrying Violet and her sisters off or assassinated them the little girls were more closely guarded.

thirty two combined, and these were rapidly emptied, and all the children were like hogs before the very eyes of the men and women, their intestines being and thrown at the other prisoners who were soon also massacred.

At other points Shoemans raiders scattered over large territories captured many and large herds of cattle, cut telegraph wires, set fire to fields and grassy burned t owns and villiages, and destroyed trains of baggage wagons. Indeed thousand of Shoemans raiders saw a dull red glow which lined the trees tree tops advanced in that direction, the glow becoming brighter and in a few minutes to the cause. A big powder mill was a mass of seething flames, then all of there was a stupendous roar, and the building was blown to pieces by a explosion, the blazing embers being thrown to a great height, and soon all darkness again. Large munition plants, where war material of every description were blown up by the enemy these great fires making a bright light, and the horizon in thick clouds of smoke. Other landelinian commanders of army also made great raids. Six villiages were laid in waste, cattle by thousands of heads were driven off or captured, railroad bridges were set on or blown up and a number of big farms holding eighty acres were devastated all the buildings on them burned to the ground. These great raids going forward directions simultaneously lasted fully two weeks, many prisoners being red, hundreds of more bridges were blown up or demolished, ammunition factories numbers in big cities captured by the enemy were seized, and set on fire explosions so constant as ti to make a din like the very war of the worlds, the landelinians with their many incendaries started five or six forest fires' mountainous region of the Mc-Pollester Run valley, which burned on for days.

In the meantime general Jack Evans had come up with his army from north and having intended to make a junction with Hanson who was not far away, upon a large villiage called otinia where many women and child refugees had been captured and reserved for slaughter the enemy having left nine million hundred thousand men to guard the villiage, and general Evans learning of it had surrounded the city encompassing all the landelinians. After the seige lightened enough, and on the fourteenth of April Evans ordered general Maurice ostelli who was with him with his command to attack the enemy as their refusal there surrender had been met. He did attack on the fifteenth of April and with fury and desperation the battle lasting all day, the Angelinians making tremendous charges but in each one were repulsed. At last after a lull in evening the enemy made a fierce and driving counter charge, and finally carrie before them capturing ten thousand prisoners, adding soon fifty five thousand and five hundred thousand two hundred twenty three fallen Angelinian soldiers Evans also were captured. Fifty five thousand two hundred and twenty three had been killed in this engagement.

The landelinians lost eight hundred and thirty eight officers of all the frightful melee in killed wounded or captured, and si wi eight hundred forty five thousand five hundred a in killed and wounded. Evans seeing that Costellio was unsuccessful withdrew his army to its own position and strengthened lines. On the morrow the landelinians fearing that if they did not do anything raise the seige, and that the christians would even resume the attack in overwhelming force and succeed and free all the children the landelinians first sacked and burned the buildings, and then their commanders followed up the advantage they had gained by making a desperate general counter assault upon a portion of general Evans main line. It turned out again that there raged one of the bloodiest fights in the war, and general Hanson who was still advancing after his victory at Wisconsin hearing the tremendous roar of battle and having Manley to detach half of the army to continue the persuit, and m made a vigorous push forward to make a junction with Evans, and moving on the town of otinia, reinforced the christians under Evans. At this time a portion of Evans left division had been cut up and thrown into confusion by the violence of the landelinian assault the other two having been repulsed. After Hanson reinforced the third assault was also thrown back but later on stronger forces of the under general Morphine and Opium fearing that the arival of Hanson would crush first assaulting divisions in gray moved forward to make assaults themselves, the battle was soon resumedwith redoubled fury?

assaults were also repulsed and the landelinians were whipped back again once more!

The next day after the battle of otinia and while the seige was still going a squad of boyscouts under iolet and her sisters went out to see how strong besieged enemy was.They were crossing a stream when one of the boyscouts picked bottle which had a piece of paper in it. The other boyscouts had to climb a hill moderate height to view the enemys besieged army.

"It's a large force that is besieged all right, and more than twenty five thousand at once."Said violet. "Hanson better attack them and take their camps by storm before another army comes to the rescue of the besieged."

1886.

The sights of misery and woe on all sides could have moved the hardest of hearts, and general Manson though his own heart had been hardened by the hardships of war had tears in his eyes when he saw through his glasses the scenes in the bombarded cities, but it was necessary in order to force the enemy to abandon them if possible. How painful it would have been to have passed through the streets, which a few days before its capture by the enemy had been lined with happy homes, busisy stores, and workshops. Ruin and dewtruction everywhere, and the streets at every point completely impassable, even on foot on account of the windrows od of debris. All the remaining inhibatants were without a home and fifty one thousand more had been killed in great massacres. The Julo Gallio and Norma Catherine seige seemed to be a great tragedy and disaster at one time, and to add to it all one of the worse bombardments had that had ever raged had broken loose in all its violence, and to add to the plight of the remaining inhibatants the enemy had set fire to the ruins.

CHAPTER TWO.

THE RAID.

Simultaneously to all this horror of the seige of Julo Gallio and Norma Catherine, general Sherman despite the protest of his superior general Calmannia Shermannia, had advanced his own forces up the vally of the McAllester Run, making a score of terrible ruids, and especially made attempts to operate against the christian general Hickmell who was also mi moving forward to help general Manson and Robert Vivian in the Cedervine campaign.

Hickmell was striving to hold him and Shermannia also from making a junction with John Manley. The Glandelinians crossed the Imperial Lanes in three days and seizing orphan asylums found in the country which they set on fire they murdered all the occ occupants strangling the children to death, and ripping open their bodies and cutting out their intestines. Their foraging parties scouted the neighborhood for several days thou throughoutly, tearing up many railroad tracks, and dewtroyi g many villiages, but finding nothing very particua particular, Sherman decided to wreak as many trains as possible, and kill or capture all the passag passengers found on them. Two thousand Glandelinians under general India gweed had also ripped up tracks and then approached the Angeline Railroad at midnight, and these Glandelinians began ripping up the tracks. The general had selected a deep cut as the most likely place to derail any trains, knowing that the high embankment would protect the derailed trains from toppling over and becoming total wrecks. It took half an hour to tear up the strong rails one by one, but when they were finished the raiders hid their horses, and concealed themselves on top, and waited for some train to come into sight.

Shortly after came the whistle of an approaching train and soon from opposite directions two trains came into sight rushing along at the fullest speed. The Glandelinians laid flat upon the ground waiting for the crunch of the wheels into the sand, and the fight that was sure to come. Nearer and nearer came the two trains, thundering and whistling, and every man put out a restraining hand to hold each other down to prevent each other from spring ing up too quick.

There were two flashes of yellow light in the deep cut and with a great roar the two trains entered, but suddenly rushed off the tracks against the sides of the banks where they were brought to a standstill, jangling and groaning. The engineers realising that the rails had been partly removed had thrown their throtti throttel throttles to dead center and volumnes of steam ex escaped from their exhausts filling the air with a qhite cloud out of which hundreds of the graycoats began dropping on the trains from the cut above.

Then they jumped about the banks emmitting bloodcurdling yells, boarded the cars and with leveled muskets howled;

"Surrender you christian dogs. Hand over the children a if there are any in the trains."

Never did children scream as they did now. But it was of no use. One of the Angelinian soldiers at the far end of one of the cars, drew a pistol but was killed before he had a chance o to use it. The two trains had sixteen eighty foot coaches

CHAPTER TEIRTY NINE.

TERRIBLE STORM'S OF WARS DEVASTATIONS, AND DESTRUCTION OF VILLIAGES. TWO BATTLES AT LOTINIA. THE GREAT BATTLE AT JOURNELL. VIOLET AND HER SISTERS ARE TAKEN PRISONERS, BUT ESCAPE BY SETTING FIRE TO THE HOUSE THEY WERE PLACED IN.

ing the same date while the three days battle of Gwendincendia was raging an ...ssedent bombardment from Glandelinian artillery was started within the region of ...gallio which was besieged by the christian armies under general Manson, who ...tained the seige or kept it up since his other recent battles and the violence ...e bombardment of Julo Gallio showed details of fury and force that no pen could ...ly depict, and the din of the thunders of thousands of explosions, and the screaming ...shells made a greater noise than a a hurricane.

...many sections of the town were completely devastated by the Angelinian hordes who ...certain points broke into the town during great attacks, and many of the inhibitants ...had survived the recent massacres in the great Norma Catherine Reign of Terror, ...d been rescued and brought out to the christian lines. All means of communications ...d been swept away by the fierce attackers, and all the common roads beli belonging ...the enemy with all their approaches to the besieged city were made impassable ...raging torrents of water which the Angelinians brought about by blowing breaches ...six gigantic river dams near the besieged cities. Hundreds of large ou churches ...many spacious parish homes and other hourses which were in total ruins were ...Glandelinian hornets nests, and when the christians did breach the enemys front at ...last many were shot down in deadly ambushes in the streets of the cit .

The noise of the dreadful tempest of shells, the dreadful roaring of ...s of hundreds of distant cannons, of the crashing of hundreds of houses ...to pieces by fierce explosions, the noise of the explosions themselves, or the ...shrieks and cries of the Glandelinian wounded seeing themselves without the least ...ther amid all the destroying fury of the bombardment had been appalling.

...alculable destruction had been also wrought in the city of Norma Catherine, as ...house in the city and its immediate vánicity were completely demolished together ...all the furniture, and three of the great Glandelinian fortifications and all the ...dings of the Glandelinian soldiers who occupied them. Hence already nine hundred ...soldiers in short the whole Glandelinian army within the besieged city, was ...without shelter of any kind, and were forced during the bombardment to se seek ...shelter among their main line outside the city in the fortifications and works ...surrounding the big town, and even then many of the soldiers were forced to sleep ...under the tee trees that still remained, u or under such sheds and earthworks as they ...could improvise with the remnants of the general havoc.. Indeed it seemed impossible ...for the Glandelinians to forget the sad spectacle presented by these two dear cities ...from eight o-clock to eleven that last day of the bombardment. In all directions ...officers shrieking commands, were forcing soldiers out of falling houses, in which ...they had been huddled together fighting christian attackers. Through all a the ...rolling fury of the tempest of bombardment were heard in all directions the shrieks ...thousands of shells, moaning of the injured, earsplitting explosions, heart ...rending screams of children, sobs and lamentations of mothers over their sad plight ...and being rescued and in constant danger of being killed by flying dr debris and ...shell fragments, for millions of pieces of timbers, sheets of iron, and whole sections ...of walls were blown in all directions by each terrific explosion, and even hurled ...through the air like dry leaves.

...with these sweetnesses, mingled with a pandemonium ...of fierce yells from both sides, and the fierce front attack was soon stopped, and ...repulsed with appalling loss, but it happened that five hundred thousand Glandelinians ...had far east of them attempting to flank poor Beppo.

...but general Camillia Bradford threw heavy reserves upon those Glandelinian flankers ...and to add to this their lines were swept by streams of shells, and down they went in ...shreds.

The hostile flankers were broken up into fragments, but they had struck the blow, and Beppos lines were retreating in a panic. In quick succession the Angelinians under generals Nelison, Palmer, Geary, and Weil met the other assailants who advanced like a titanic tidal wave, making a strong but successful resistance, their lines being so badly shaken in places that the furious Glandelinians after an hour of desperate attacking was enabled to roll them up with broken lines, but it was a thrilling thing to imagine the tremendous roar of cannon and musketry as Beppos whole second line repelled the assault anddrove the assailants back.

Seeing failure here general Manley then directed desperate efforts to wrest works from the christians under general Germaine Vivian whom they had captured. So general Leggeto with the divisions of Halio and Gils giles charged furiously, and after a four hours inferno of horror swept away the bold Angelinians but with most heavy loss and general Halio was shot from his horse as he reached the works. But this was the last. The Glandelinians though hardly given any show before had finally won back the works from the christians under general Germaine Vivian but all attempts to cut Hanson off from general Robert Vivian and driving him miles away from the field was futile and at last tward night fell the Glandelinians desisted and retired to their works the total losses of Germaine Vivians army alone being 482,276 in killed and wounded. The total losses of the Glandelinians assulting Germaine Vivian was 433,141. The total christian losses wa of the whole three days battle was not estimated but it was reported the enemy lost three times heavier nevertheless.

had lost 299,560 making the total of these divisions combined up to 899,836. The losses of general Hanson and his brother was not estimated.....

during the lull in the engagement that lasted from eleven o-clock in the morning untill ...ing in the afternoon, general Jimmie Vivians shattered division was withdrawn, and ...ius took general Germaine Vivians divisions from his right and placed these o...
...positions formaly held by general Jimmie. At about two thirty at all the Glandelinian ...erals thinking that general Jimmie Vivians shattered forces was still there ...rdered to resume the attack and so at three fifteen the attack came but the ...rprised Glandelinians found a new force stationed there.whom they had not expected ...e see. The Glandelinians who attacked werounder general Judas Cannon. Germaine ...ulsed the first assault with disaster to the enemy, but more divisions came to ...he help help of general Judas who reattacked Germaines line capturing some ...rks and rolling up Germaines right like Wellingtons at Waterloo. General ...Morrise Bel Benligan however came to the support his batteries doing great wonders, ...nd soon Judas's whole line was again rolled up ad even displaced. Black Andersons ...divisions were also brought up and Germaines right wing was succored before the enemy ...ew reinforced, and thus recieving reinforcements Germaine was able to make an ...ttempt himself confident that his superior numbers would insure him success.

When his troops approached to within fifteen yards of Judas 's rallied line, a ...ng sheet of smoke seemed to tear them asunder, there was a deafening roar, and ...he dead and wounded Angelinians lay in countless numbers before the works.

An Angelinian color bearer whose name was Jack Saunders was terribly charg ...ised at the defiant yells of the Glandelinians, and unfurling the flag squng it ...to the breese, and to the complete rage of the enemy rallied the Angelinians, and even ...hen he went down severely wounded other hands grasped the flag, the Angelinians ...gain advancing in deployed brigades, the Angelinians seizing some trenches, and ...riving the Glandelinians out, but judas's main line still holding opened a deadly ...ire which mangled general Custers divisions which were in the lead. A luntee or ...unette holding one hundred and twenty cannon was also captured and soon the main ...ine began to retire, and Germaine captured the entire line of works. Pelvisions ...divisions on germaines right had been crushed and mangled during this struggle ...and Prelsons field corps had been annihilated with the death of their commander, ...his being the heavy toll of the christian success, the entire losses at this point ...being fifty thousand nine hundred sixty six.

General John Manley was apprehended over this outcome and deeming it possible ...to do so decided to strike another blow on general Vivian and cause Germaine to ...be withdrawn from the works he had cart captured.So General John Manley began this ...new attack at four thirty just two hours after the second attack of the foe had ...been horribly repulsed. Large divisions under general Radner Pelvious and ...Prelsion a two great foe generals advanced in long parellel lines, and the ...main part of this heavy attack fell upon general Pete Handons brigades, that general ...having great bravery, for again and again Pelvious and the other divisions under his ...command rushed forward in the face of the merciless storm of mys musketry and cannon ...but the Angelinians so throughoutly manned their works that the Glandelinians met ...a succession of bloody repulses. Pelviouss losses from the trenches in his extreme ...right front, and from an annihilating artillery fire that raked his center was so ...heavy that he refused despite the protest of Manley to make another attack, and though ...general Manley Manlet reported to general John Manley about his refusal, it then ...did not do any good and general Pelvious withdrew.

The fire along the christian line under this occasion had been exceedingly fierce ...and terrific. Manley now pushed forward general Harsh. Legions divisions, who made a ...new attack with indescribable fury but during the desperate two hours assault he ...fell mortially wounded. The Glandelinians were forced to stop but were rallied by general ...Delarive who resumed the vigorous effort with redoubled violence, but he also was ...mortially wounded, and his divisions crushed to fragments. Under this destructive ...fire the survivors fled, and seeing this occurance general Manley flew into a ...rage.

...ant general Giacomo Jenton with fully two million men to assail the christian ...ines, and these terrible number of assailants within two hours more came surging ...on with seemingly preternatural noise and fury and general H.O. Harars divisions ...amazing successfully attacked Beppo Costellidos a Abyssinkilians with devilish ...fury. Hell and all its legions seemed to break out all along his lines, all his ...rifles and cannons being fired with utmost steadiness, mingled with a pandemonium ...of fierce yells from both sides, and the fierce front attack was soon stopped, and ...repulsed with appalling loss, but it happened that five hundred thousand Glandelinians ...went far east of them attempting to flank poor Beppo.

...t general Camillia Bradford threw heavy reserves upon these glandelinian flankers ...ut to add to this their lines were swept by streams of shells, and down they went in ...swiads.

1538.

canister staggering the exultant Glandelinian survivors, while other christian Commanders ran managing to run up some of their own cannon fired these again and again untill all the drivers and artillery men had fallen dead, but the guns were not abandonef fresh artillery men being there to take their places. Big clouds of smoke hung over this bloody scene and the fury of the contest seemed to be at white heat. The Angelinians had nevertheless stuck to their positions like leeches, and soon seventy five pieces of artillery were disabled and became out and hacked by storms of bullits bullets. These guns lying unworked with their muzzles projecting over the trenches were blown up purposely by the Angelinians so that in case the enemy would via the desperate charge they would not succeed in getting the guns. Even other guns with their wheels broken and shattered were used as barricades. The storm of canister sweeping over the ground about the fallen literally cut them to pieces. Several of the divisions of Glandelinians had been forced back from the vinicity of the two lines of works having been compelled to abandon ninty twelve pounders. A large brigade going into action on jimmies right had been reduced to a regiment by the destructive fire of the glandelinians, and ten brigades of glandelinians on Bicknells center had been reduced to fragments in two hours.. Several other christian brigades having been hard at work since the assault commenced were now only in regiments, but the survivors still hammered away. Two christian brigades under general Joseph Heller which had been sent to general Radnors assistance early in the morn had come to the assistance of jimmie Vivian and though his force almost annihilated the assailants along his own front general Radnor had been wounded four times, and then had been finally killed during the main shock of the attack. The second and third corps were mere fragments, and it will thus be seen that though the christians were successful in repulsing the assault their losses was simply dreadful.

The christian losses though they were on the defensive were at this point more appalling than the enemys. Many ranks, crowded, four or five deep, in some places were wiped out by the continuous and rapid fire which was maintained upon the christian lines by the enemy. Major general Kempton who commanded general Joseph Hellers divisions wwas killed by a solid shot, and Heller was also killed, while major general Carl Carlis Liebermann who made an attempt to get his wicked Glandelinians to cross the works was blown to i pieces by the explosion of a gang-gang shell, which wiped out two large sections of men, and tore a a huge crater in the ground.

Very few remained of general Jimmie Vivians divisions except fifteen shattered regiments, and every flag was in tatters and shot away from their posts by the storm of bullets. The fire on both sides had been continuous and exceedingly heavy all along the line and the lower trunks of th ousands upon thousands of trees were cut and t orn so badly that they resembled hickory brooms, even many trees were completely cut off by their converging fire and had fallen with loud crashes killing many on both sides. The whole line of trenches in possession of both the Glandelinians at some p and the Angelinians atothers had already been cleared of the bodies more than seven times and they fairly ran with gore. By this time several more divisions arived for the christians and now the enemy being terribly exhausted became disconcerted. Their seven corps had been crushed to fragments, and all the survivors on both sides had all their lips crusted with powder from biting cartridges, hundreds of the Glandelinians fairly dropping from exhaustion. The divisions under other commanders now came up and opened fire upon the disheartened Glandelinians who were slowly falling back. The great attack was finally repulsed. Thousands upon thousands of dead, wounded and dying Angelinians lay in regular ridges, the dead and wounded Glandelinians themselves laying three or four deep on some parts of the works and with few exceptions were shot at every portion of their bodies.

It was one of the most horrible sights r that the christian officers had ever witnessed, as thousands of fire arms broken and shattered, scores of accountermants, unused amauntition, broken cannons ans and debris of every description was strewn about. Bicknell would not allow his whole division to give way, and now he started fresh forces forward to resume his assault. Menses divisions of the Free-Masons had moved up in a long line with skirmishers well out, but three christian batteries decimated them, pouring storm after storm of shot shell and canister upon them, annihilating the twenty third corps and driving the remainder back. But again the attack was resumed and in the deadly conflict it seemed as if line after line had been mowed down and the air was full of screeching shells and whissing bullets and mingled with high explosives. The enemy however were giving way again, and indeed general Jimmie Vivian had managed to hold his position, but at the cost of the most frightful loss. In other attacks that were made upon the christian troops under generals Oswell, Gannon, and Jennings the christian losses had been 156,222.

Halays intention was to strike a blow again upon Hanson but this time to assault the christian forces under generals Radnor, Shawhill, and Pope fords divisions. So at eight thirty in the morning after all the necessary preparations the first of the heavy attacks fell upon the grand divisions under Radnor, and though the roar of battle was twice as had as before Radnor held. But the division under general Charles.H.West which had been attacked ten minutes later, and threatened with annihilation were forced to give way and retreat before the irrestible advance of the glandelinians, while Shawhills and Pope Fords divisions were also forced back, after terrific slaughter as their center had been almos t annihilated by a withering fireb ..

General Hanson saw this scene and seeing the terrible slaughter of the christians had all his cannons massed upon the glandelinians. But nevertheless the big assulting columns swept all aside and made a heculean dash for the main christian position. Line followed line, one hundred ten thousand strong untill the plain became almost grey with the writhing glandelinian columns. The Angelinian artillery and long line of musketry played with the most cruel effect brn bringing down one third of the first line. Indeed the christian fire became so heavy that there was danger of the christians running out of ammu it ammunition before this desperate attack ceased The survivors of the glandelinians came rushing on as fast as their thousands went down, and a indeed more terrible than ever was the havoc in the gray lines. Alrwady twenty five thousand men lay on the ground before the christian works many of them being killed and wounded, and the very few of these who were not hurt were compelled to either remain among the dead and wounded or surrender as they did not wish to take any chances of proceeding onward in the face of the annihilating fire.

The survivors of the glandelinians soon reached the christian works, the Angelinian artillery being handled all this time with great skill, general Sanguine and Bolshechaw divisions coming to the aid, cooperatingwith the greatest and most frantic energy in strengthening the christian lines, and directing the fire of the guns sweeping the whole front of the Attacking forces to fragments, and hammering the right flank also. The eighteenth corps were decimated and all through this line general Hansonsright grand division had also been attacked in a steady and furious manner, but so far no success had come to the enemy. It had been broken at one point but general Michael Sanguine arived rapidly with his brigades, and the line was restored, the assailants being driven back with frightful loss.. The struggle had certainly been desperately bloody and several divisions of the enemy under general Cannine which had pressed over thechristian works during the desperate hand to hand fight had succeeded in driving the christians under general Beppo Galanis back from the works and poss essed themselves of the long line of trenches but it was of no avail and the foe were finally repulsed.

About two hours later the enemy were thrown once more heavily against general Jimmie vivians lines but here also met with stern resistance. The glandelinians nevertheless though repulsed once again threw themselves upon general Jimmies line with greater impetiousity but again were met with dreadful fury, and the left of Jimmies whole line made the most desperate efforts to keep the glandelinians from springing over the works. Wailens glandelinians who made this assault then retired giving it up, but general Bicknell resumed the attack himself and though repulsed himself resumed another and kept it on with unceasing fury.

Manly of the thousands of assailants which did reach the christian works could not survive the sharp withering tempest of bullets that met them, h tgo glandelinians dropping so fast that they soon lay in thickening windrows. General Jimmies whole left had already lost sixty thousand in the struggle along that point and their gallent sixty fourth brigade had been annihilated. But general Jimmies line had again been swept back right and left with their columns mangled and bleeding. The struggle was desperate and most pertinacious, but regardless of the many volleys which had been in the last assaults mowing down lage sections, Bicknell only kept pushing forward large bodies of troops and general Jimmie Vivian who saw this doubted if his left could hold out much longer, but as brigades under general Sopher were hurrying up to the aid of the left, the Angelinians stuck to the position and met the next assault. Samuel Sopher now arived with six brigades and as the Angelinians redoubled their exertions the smoke become a regular canopy from the discharge of artillery and musketry, but the glandelinians gallently charged up to the very muzzles of the christian guns, and now the other christian commanders alarmed by the din hurried their troops tward jimmies left as fast as men could go.

Awful was the struggle nowalong jimmie Vivians lines.

Both sides made horrible use of their muskets, cannons a and rifles for men on both sides were now going down in thousands. Every one of the artillery horses had been cut down, ninty of jimmies officers had already been killed, seventy were wounded and the rest dismounted. Jimmie Vivian himself had been dismounted seven times. And the whole open ground in front of the christian works during this desperate assault of the foe extending for five miles had been chocked with foe troops but almost o all of them seemed to be melting away and general Brady bringing up five hundred more cannon increased the massacre as he opened fire with double charges of positions. It took half an hour to reform but they did and then the assault was resumed, but general Phillip Stanoks division of Germerannians were crushed to fragments in joining a desperate assault on the left of the position, while general Logan Phillips Angolinian brigades being immediately on the right of the captured works immediately went to the aid of the forces thrown back in confusion, checking the advance of Winefreds left grand division, and throwing it crushed and mangled for the distance of one mile. At the same time general Cannonia Lovechilds divisions failed to cover their whole front, and so was unable to supress the main attack, which was still pressed with greater determination upon Jimmies extreme right.

Phil Deldons brigades on Jen Jimmies Extreme Right were almost annihilared the survivors being drawn out, th e Glandelinians finally sweeping the trenches the full lengt h of their line, but for some reason the enemy did not fill the gap made in the christian line! and though three divisions of the enemy still he/d held a line of christian works a storm of fire from other christian works made them rapidly seek for cover. Nine bria brigades consisting of general Ross a Possias divisions were now ariving to Jimmies support. The enemys line now began to recede, but soon rallying again the Glandelinians made another rush forward and in the midst of the titanic carnage general poss ia fell dead from his horse, just as the enemy swarmed upon the christian works. Two other generals not named were killed, and Jimmie Vivian though painfully wounded remained in the trenches with his men, his right being still hard pressed but the Glandelinians though leader ed and Mc-Cann had come to their aid with heavy brigades had slackened down their attack. There was a regular tumult of flags of both sides waving back and forth, the greater part of the works being still held by Winefreds Glandelinians, the Angelinians being unable to drive them back. Winefreds divisions had also been reinforced by strong forces under general Adle-De-Garbe and now the roar of battle had redoubled one thousand guns having been brought up on both sides, one thousand for general Jimmie Vivian himself and the Angelinians were using every piece that could be unlimbered. Jimmie Vivian had sent in every division that could be spared at that point to restore hiN mangled line as it had become a matter of endr endurance for the christians, the battle having all th ese two hours raged with unceasing fury, all charges on the part of the enemy being repelled with terrific slaughter extending for two miles along the adjacent works.

Jimmie Vivian had sent a messenger to general Hanson Vivian for reinforcements, for general Vivian the day before had had all he could to hold his own positions. Over different portions of the christian works many of the hostile battle flags were waving, for at some points the enemy were still in possession, the soldiers on both sides though fighting with obstinate fury at times exchanged defiant words with each other, daring each other to come on, and even quarreling like kids while fighting.

All along the line for the whole length of this portion of the battle front the very abysses of hell seemed to have opened and letting out clouds of its sulphurious fumes. Scores of diversions had been made during these two hours by the christians to relieve the pressure, and in one furious attack made by the Glandelinians, the divisions under general Zoe Ras Anderson and C.N.Anderson were annihilated, Halliss corps was crushed to fragments, and another good point of the christian line was occupied, these three christian generals being severely wounded.....

General Bedilia Snyder with a part of general Leoinia Radnors forces also moved forward crushing general Poe Posses right wing and carrying all before them, while Winefreds main line still confident of the success of the Glandelinians at another pi point was making, held the positions they had captured firmly, keeping up the bloody fight, and defeating general Yale Posses divisions who were rushing forward to repell with a storming counter charge, Storeys Glandelinians. All along the line the struggle was appalling. At ten oclock that night the attacking forces under general Buford Costellio encountered an annihilating fire of eighteen hundred fresh cannon brought up in the meantime, which dominated all the approaches to the christian line and tore their line down completely, the main line being also cut to pieces, even broken up anew, as they resumed the attack, and then mangled as they tried it again, and were soon driven back before they came well within the range of general Kennine Caseys corps.

Thus ended the battle of the second day. Bicknells main line had not reached the christian front as yet, and when Winefreds shatt ered forces came rushing down in confusion, he did his best to rally them, and then the whole withdrew to wait untill the next day.

On the third day the christian line having held firm at every point was not changed having retained the positions, and Manley desiring to win the battle at no matter what the cost and prevent the starting of the campaign decided to resume the conflict again.

To be contd. Alfred Clive

the Angelinians were driven from their works with the loss of fifteen thousand , and two generals, Julliocanninia Callio,, Jack Bansine, and David porter were wounded. The Glandelinians were pressing on when they met this great column of fresh Angelinian men who now threw itself heavily against the suv successful foe and the slaughter was horrible. The Glandelinians fought like demons but during this struggle the right wing was rallying, and also general Godfrey and Godfrey were hurrying to their support, and the Glanddlinians suffered such severe losses that they were once were obliged to recoil. Gannons center still holding the enemy at bay, the Glandelinians having met a complete bl and bloody repulse.

The other columns still attacking Roswell Buster Johnstons main main line were also driven back torn and bleeding leaving the ground covered with long windrows of their dead and wounded and adying. General Roswell Buster Johnston had held his position all morning or all those six hours, and the Glanddlinian commanders saw by their first desperate efforts had failed.

It was already two thirt y o-clock and the main commander who was finally general John Manley decided to leave general Vivian alone for the rest of the day, and to throw Bicknell upon Hansons strong lines and try to force him back. At four o-clock Bicknells heavy columns came slowly into view, and the Angelinians made a furious onrush against the christian positions held by general Hanson, and soon a pitiless storm of shell, solid shot, and shrapnell mingled with a hurricane of bullets mowed down the firsy first line in gray seven miles long which held on hour, and this caused the survivors of the second line to break inot disorder confusion and retreat.

But an hour later however seemingly countless masses of Omarian-Gurdes again pressed forward with a storm of deafening yells and rushed over the sea of bodies, and through a fire that began to cut them down in thousands. They halted and started to retreat in confusion, but several of the Glandelinian divisions under general Nicholls Johnston reached the christian trenches and attacked the Concentin ans under general John Harrisons. By the terrific impact this line of troops torn and mangled was completely bent backwards entirely from the works, and driven to the second line in confusion, but where they were rallied by their officers, and then again stood their ground manfully and fought so furiously that the graycoats were cut down, shot, and bayonetted as fast as they came. It was one of the b loodiest hand to hand fights ever imagined but there came a fortunate occurance. Featkikes with a dominating artillery fire had cleared the main front of his lines, and withdrawing several divisions he sent these to the aid of the others, and after a fifteen minutes furious march they came upon the flank of the furious assailants, and here they dealt them a staggering blow, driving them out with the loss of many more killed wounded, which were left inside, and outside of their works.

This staggered the enemy and thus caused a lull for an hour but then came just before daylight an attack upon Luckwick Baldwins line which was consisting of remained an attack upon the left wing, the divisions in gray surging up against, and even among the desperately contesting line of purple coats, and general Dallions divisions were hewed and cut to pieces, and swept out of their works with the most stupendous slaughter. The attacking forces despite the play of so many bayonets poured through the breaches. The generals Allon Flynn and general Shanner at this moment however being throw across the front and standing firmly against the appalling onslaught/ slackened the success of the foe somewhat. But after another lull the Glandelinians against the mainchristian line renewed a greater assault with desperation, and determination, but heavy supports were sent to the aid of the christians by Hanson, and the Glandelinians were compelled to give ground once more, and were driven back over the works in disorderly confusion, and driven entirely from the entire range.

There was now a lull untill eight o-clock that evening then general Manley decided to try another attack and this time launch it against the christians under general Hero Vivianis who was on the christian centere So dense columns of Glandelinians under general Winefred Marcus were sent forward to make the attack, having come a up at the time with his own army which had been advancing all day general Jimmie Vivian gensral Robert vivians soon threw his strong line of battle in the way of Vivianias assailants thus saving the latter, and here for two hours all demanation seemed to have broken loose, a regular avalanch of hell seeming to pour through the Glandelinian surge who, str steadily came on though column after column seemed to melt away. Simultaneously Jimmies battalions of artillery were brought into posit position, and when these guns opened fire, the survivors were burst upon the christians, yelling furiously, and then the christian infantry let go a general. The Glandelinians went down in many thousands to that of hundreds of christians, but after dreadful carnage the guns were captured and turned on the christians though it took three desperate assaults to accomplish this.

But it storm of carnage seemed to be everywhere as Jimmies infantry fought with the fercoity of tigers, but they could not check the furious onrush of the foe, who began to overrun the works capturing over five thousand men, and thirty eight pieces of light artillery, besides the other g uns. General Nelligonia fell mortally wounded while the Glandelinians were recovering their reformation and extending their lines across the works on both sides, and then advanced against Jimmies second line of

The front line of the enemy had been withered already, but the survo survivors of the second line pressed the advantage and were soon a abreast of the Angelinian artillery. Indeed the battle along this point raging all day was something terrible. The general was standing by one of his guns with folded arms regardless of the heavy storm of firing and as matters looked very serious for his Angelinianshe had sent a message for reinforcements, and the other to hasten the march of general Maurice Costellio. He then directed the artillery fire at all sections, and then the big divisions appeared in columns being the advance of Maurice Costellioes divisions who were coming in perfect order, their ranks being well closed and there was not a straggler among them. They seemed regardless of the roaring storm of firing and managed to push their steady way onward like a swift avalanch , moving obliquely to the right to meet the left of the attacking Clandelinian columns which were swinging around a in that direction. The head columns of the Angelinians were checked in their sweeping advance and thrown back with the loss of ten to twenty thousand men but more and more were coming to their support, and they also made a stubborn stand.

Kennith Snyder urged by Shoemann had brought his whole force to the attack, and toward evening the struggle became extremely fierce and bloody. Several works had been captured but the main christian line did not give way, though Snyders Clandelinians advanced with apparently irrest less force regardless of numbers and supports the christians may be recieving. For many intense hours there was a terrific crashing of musketry and cannon which sounded as if the whole line of works were blowing up. It was a steady stupendous roar mingled with wild bloodcurdling yells and already twenty five thousand were lying dead in front of the christian works, but Gannons massive lines could not for a time break the force of the Clandelinian assault upon Baldwins center, the carnage indeed being appalling.

VBeme more troops came promptly to General Baldwins aid but while the changes were made general Fredrickson Parson fell severely wounded. The whole gray line was sweeping forward almost simultaneously, and now general Lovefire came up with a large section of Concentinians, these troops rudly recieving the Clandelinians, and holding their own positions amid the most hirr horrible losses. Indeed the Angelinians under general Lovee Lovefriend came were attacked with devilish fury in front and on the right and at last his columns finally gave way into smoke and flame, there appeared whole sections of the assailants melting away, and six of their leading officers were killed and twenty f wounded.

Baldwins main line despite all the horror still held against the Clandelinian assault on account of being supported by general Lovechild, wh who sar,y in the engagement had been shot from his horse and he was severely wounded. The right wing of general Costellio Baldwins line had rolled up the assaulting columns twise, but the christians for their successes lost nine officers in killed, and general Goodwin severely wounded in the thigh.

Thus ended the first battle or the first day of the battle with the foe severely beaten.

[redacted]

THE BATT LE CONTINUES..!...

During the proceeding night general Kindernines forces had been advancing and had come upon the scene of action just to late to take a hand in it. But his forces took up their positions at the right of Swancinscondia and all the christian regiments which had been shatt ered by their losses were speedily reinforced by general Kindernines arival, and general Kindernine also took his place in defense of the christians, and once that night tward eleven o-clock a grea great surge of Clandelinians were hurled upon him, but he crushed two brigades of the foe to pieces in repulsing two attacks, and tore three other divisions which made three more attacks and after this frightful slaugher the Clandelinians were driven back, but soon they rallied and went at it again and again untill exhausted they were compelled to withdraw and a abandon the conflict for the rest of the night.

But on the morrow the Clandelinian commanders revengeful over the arival of Kindernine made at nine o-clock a most desperate attempt to turn general Roswell Buster Johnstins left Johnstons left, the most heavy assaults being kept up without intermission for five hours. Indeed the attacks were so persistent that they were like the storm waves of the sea, but after the fifth hour, and when the foe were going to make a sixth assault general Tony Senguine came up with his forces, and helped to meet the sixth attack, and learning that general James Gannon who had been attacked simultaneously was threatened with s a staggering defeat took a portion of his force over to his support and crushed Gannons assailants and sent them flying in a panic.

Upon general Buster Johnston the Clandelinians however made a seventh assault and pressed on this time like a tidal wave and overlapped the right of Gannons line and for a second time drove it back in confusion. This was some excellant success but for the enemy it cost them sixty officers all generals.

The Angelinians under general Snyder in the meantime had felled many trees in which the Clandelinian desperate assailants were working through, and though exposed to a most terrific fire the survivors were continually making a most bold and desperate rush and were breaking through the lower and first line of works all along the front facing a bristling wall of bayonets, while simultaneously other christian forces were in such a position that they were able to pour upon the enemys flank a murd fire of one hundred cannon of heavy calibre. Within ten minutes over 10,000 Clandelinians were mowed down, but the Angelinians were struck in the first line and thrown into considerable confusion despite the threats and pleads of their commanders and retreated precipitately from the works just as the explosion of the mill brought down ten officers at once.

Yet the remaining part of Snydiers whole main line had held firm and the Clandelinians at that point who rushed fore forward like a wild mob of demons were galled by the Angelinian bayonets, while at the same time three hundred cannon raked their line like a fine tooth comb tearing the line to fraglents. Most of the surviving Clandelinians seeing their comrades shot down at tens of thousands per minute, sought to escape the deadly storm of canister, rushed to the roads and ditches for protection, the Clandelinian on account of the fiercesness of the christian fire not being able to keep up a regular line of battle, and many of the recoiling movement of the Clandelinians were in the shape of long angles with the points toward their line of retreat. Other occu columns were in the shape of birds in flight, but all the nearest groups who rallied melted away. Indeed all along to the gra line many regimental flags were waving and falling, but good numbers dropped and their bearers were shot, but never touched the ground as other brave men were there to sei se the flags. Several divisions of Angelinians who had exausted their ammunition were taking to their bayonets and sabres but there was no need as the foe were flying back to their trenches in utter route.

Along general Elter Jennings front the battle was also fierce. He did his best to encourage his troops, begging them to stand firm and drive back the enemy whose attacking columns rushed to near that the biggest guns could not be sufficiently depressed to reach them and became utterly useless. Hundreds of Angelinian artillery men had been ordered to light the fuses of shells, and this they did with a will, hurling sections of them upon the enemy as if they were grenades, so while all the guns that could not be used were withdrawn in case the enemy won the assault, the machine guns coming up n mow end being the only ones to remain and the front column of the foe was badly shattered by this searching fire. However the Clandelinians had now reached the second line of christian works and almost endless usly the whole line in gray broke over the summit the full length, Miss Jonsin first one capturing a line of works near the headquarters of general Jennings, but suffered terribly from a oblique fire poured upon them by those still holding their works, and who could not under any conditions by any number of assaults be driven from their position. The battle along this point was a maudlin scene of fury and countless numbers fell within four hours.

General Samuel Paltaze with great numbers also took a line of works on Jennings left, but met a deadly fire which galled his main line, and could not get any further through that seething inferno, and though he had captured three hundred cannon which turned them on a force still holding the last line f of works, these christians only not only held but opposed large bodies of the enemy , and successfully held their own untill the divisions under general Jennings and Sniderderia had rallied and reforced, and then made a tremendous counter charge, driving the Clandelinians from every line of works they had captured, and even secured the first line along Jennings front and rolled the entire main assaulting line back from the hard contested field, crushing their main divisions, and routing them in the most horrible manner.

The Attack was equally as violent upon the line held by general Roswell Buster Johnston. The Clandelinians here also strove with herculean fury to drive the christians from their works along this point out of their works.. Snyder Johnsons forces which came up and rushed forward against the foe assailing Roswell Buster Johnston, and thus reinforcing reinforcements they threw themselves against the gray line in full force and the three divisions were restablished. Byt this concentration of christian fire the Clandelinian columns were almost mangled by the terrific fire, and the retreat along this point was soon also rolled back in confusion. At all points along the line the fighting had been very severe and bloody but the enemy had given way at last, the Angelinians havin g held their ground but at dreadful loss. Costellio Baldwin also suffered from steady and determined attacks, and though no support came to this Angelinians they nevertheless clung to their works like leeches, dominating every effort made to dislodge them. The yell of the assailants as they made thirteen separate attacks all day long and the heavy roar of cannon and musketry was appalling. The whole force of the Clandelinians had been attacking Costellio Baldwin all day in a final effort they had already overlapped the christian right, which enemy made all the front they could, but now the fierce stand of Costellioes divisions on the center prevented Baldwins whole line from being rolled up, though one divisions had been driven in disorder across a creek with one of their officers wounded.

Chapter 68

THE BATTLE OF SWANCINCONDIA OPENS ONE OF THE FIEREST AND FIRST BLOODIEST CAMPAIGNS OF THE WAR, CALLED THE CEDARIN STANCKY OR CEDERNINE CAMPAIGN, WHERE SOME OF THE FIRE FIEREST CONFLICTS OF THE WAR, OR THE BLOODIEST AND GHASTLYST CONFLICTS THE WORLD EVER SAW RAGED, TERMINATING AT THE FRIGHTFUL CARNAGE AT RIUKIBON SOME OF THE LAZ LAS FIEROEST CONFLICTS OF THE ENTIRE WAR.

SECOND YEAR OF THE GREAT GLANDCO- ABBIEANNIAN WAR.
FROM MARCH 31TH TO MARCH 31TH 1 1914/

It was on April the twelveth 1913 when general Vivian who had planned a great campaign to capture Cedernine one of the main fortifications of Ha-Whirther had started, when to the startled ears of all when the christians had encamped near Swancondinia came the cry of;

"The enemy is advancing. The enemy is advancing."

To add to all the excitment there had been for four hours after the christian line had concentrated heavy firing had been heard along the christiancfront under general Roswell guster johnston, the battle having also extended with frightful fury along Snieders line and then along general Costellio Baldwin and ten other vaious various commanders untill the uproar became so terrific that general Hanson who had been away for a few hours to general Jensins army came hurrying to the scene just as a volume of fussla fussalading shots seemed to come from everywhere. It was the intending of the enemy to frustrate general Vivians intended advance on Cedernine and so they had come upon general Vivian in a de dreadful onslaught and hand Hansen seeing how violent the onslau h onslaught of the enemy was and yet not knowing whose Glandelinians they were, sped off to order general Nances divisions to the firing lines, having in purpose to force the campaign no matter if his brother brother was frustrated. General Hanson reached Nances tent in a very few minutes.

"Get your forces ready ."He ordered. "The enemy is attacking, Sniedor, Roswell guster johnston and Costellio Baldwin and other commanders like fury attempting to force them out of the region of Swancondinia. Hurry and bring your forces on to the scene. I do not know whose Glandelinians they are, but by the name of Heaven they must be stopped."

In the meantime general Fredrickson Parson having three hundred cannon ran them forward tward general Roselles line and getting the range opened a fearful fire upon the columns of Glandelinians thickly massed against the squirming twisting christian line, decimating their very regiments at every discharge.

Simultaneously large columns of Glandelinians consisting mostly of Omarian Curdes under general Deldon charged furiously through six orchards, and made a most furious attack on general Gannons position, whose men fought with furious desperation, divisions of Concentinians, and the general himself being aroused by the tremendous din which seemed to shake heavy heaven and earth, and so got his other divisions to the defense, and for an hour the most severe fighting continued and hell seemed again to break loose along t alng the opposing lines.

Despite his numbers general Gannon could not make the slightest impression on the des erate Glandelinian assailants who increased the fury of their attack, for three intense hours without abatement, showing the utmost stubbornness, d not disposed to give up even in the face of overwhleming numbers, and one of the bloodiest conflicts he had ever seen in his own service raged along his own lines, and continued and redoubled every now and then with incredible violence. General Gannon was bound to check Deldons Glandelinians at any cost, and he galloped up to general Liebiemann and said;

"Go bring two reserve brigades from the right, and advance your parks of heaviest guns. This attack must be stopped before it annihilates my line."

Liebermann got the two brigades and even the artillery, and massing them upon Gannons assailants he recieved them qit with appalling fury, but so violent was the resumed assault that his line rapidly reduced to fragments could not hold, but while they were retreating in a demorilized condition, Jennings had concentrated the parks of artillery by this time and again and again, and still again he tore the assaulting line to pieces with his storming artillery fire. The disconserted Angelinians under Liebermann despite all this din bec began to rally, just as Jennings light artillery also arived and roared forth, and the whole scene was like a battle inferno once more. It was too much for the Glandelinians and they fled panic stricken to their works as if the demons of hell were after them.

"It don't look as if it was the whole of general So ghoomans force."Exclaimed

"There there about sixteen million six hundred and seventy seven thousand men our [illegible] are besieging and not only that but the city of Lotinia had long ago been [illegible] fortified by the Calverinians, and now as the enemy is in possession it is a very good stronghold."Said Angeline.

"But if Hanson manages to capturi capture this Glandelinian army before the other [illegible] Ghoomans comes to its aid, and makes a good headlong charge he can capture the city and rescue the captured children."Said Jennie.

Suddenly one lieutenant o of the boyscouts came riding up with haste and saluting said;

"One of the boys found this bottle with a note i in it Captian violet. It's the writing of a little child. A little boy."

Jennie herself took the note and this is what she read;

"Whoever the kind man is who will find this note please take it to some christian general. We have just been captured yesterday, but w are worse off than slaves here [illegible] are held to be butchered. We are even now overworked, beaten and even [illegible] clubbed, and sometimes many of the litle boys are chocked even to death for reeling [illegible] and sometimes many of the litle boys are chocked even to death for reeling with faint, and sometimes many of the litle boys are chocked even to death because we are fainting from overwokr. Many of us have been suffocated almost to death because we are unable to do the work on account of bad illness. If you was with us you would know what cruel suffering is. Most of us love work but work here is overpowering, and many [illegible] died from being overworked. Please take this to some christian general and tell him to [illegible] protect the graycoats, and we will pray for you, asking that no harm come toyou whp [illegible] is the reader of this note. We will ask God's blessings on you and will also never [illegible] forget you. I have enclosed my picture in this bottle, and the finder may keep it [illegible] for remembrance..

Your's truely.
Kennith Casey."

"What a beautiful little boy all right."Said Jennie touched at the note."How a [illegible] heartbringing general Hansons left wing up on the run and have a new battle started [illegible] general. We must do something to free the poor little children, and see this little [illegible] boy."

"But the first battle has alreadtbeen a severe fight and general Hanson is soon going to press forward anyway."Said Catherins."And it did seem risky for general [illegible] Evans to tackle the foe with his divisions alone for before the arival of Hansons [illegible] army the Glandelinians overwhelmed him a good deal."

"But hearing the firing general Hanson Vivian will soon bring up large forces to [illegible] the rescue will have its artillery placed into position shortly. We must do something [illegible] to them. We did not like it when we were a prisoners so long in the cities of Andrean [illegible] Cedarina and Condinia."

Her other brave little girls winced at this remark for they knew how they had suffered [illegible] and even then there was frequent rescues for them even though they had been [illegible] in Andrean four weeks and yet here these child captives had to suffer even worse [illegible] for it was in their own power to rescue the poor , little ones before it was too [illegible] late. Evans divisions which were concentrating at the north point of the city was only [illegible] one million seven hundred and fifty thousand strong, and yet the enemy had seemed to [illegible] have captured un assailable positions and fortifications, and could destroy whole [illegible] brigades with their fire.

THE SECOND BATTLE OF LOTINIA. AND THE CAPTURE OF THE CITY AND GLANDELINIAN ARMY.

The little girls went up to where general Hanson whole line had been consentrating and [illegible] Hanson was informed of the number of children held prisoners by the enemy. On April [illegible] 4th the christians directed by Evans advanced to the att ack. Some of the child [illegible] prisoners saw the christians moving forward to make the second attack and a thrill of [illegible] joy ran through them all, when they told the rest. Oh how they prayed for the attack [illegible] to be a success, but Costellio who made the attack was repulsed. Nevertheless the [illegible] little boy who ad a had wrote the note was more hopeful, and continually kept his [illegible] glasses in that direction.

Despite it all violet had not been able to resist the temptation to tell general Hanson of the danger of Evans attacking alone, though she had hesitated at Jennies pleads as the little girl a abhorred so much bloodshed no matter what for. The others were in with Jennie but did nothing as they did not want to provoke a quarrel with their dearest sister, and allowed her to have her own way. They always had their own mysery mysery in their mi minds and yet these children were even in worse places than an earthily hell, and there was no one there to show them any pity while many were merciful to them. Jennie was sad and silent and did not say a word as she and her sisters followed the advancing christian lines all general firing having started anew after Costellices repulse. It was not long before the pemptation overpowered violet and she had a short conversation with her uncle, then half an hour later Jennie without knowing it the troops were advancing against the fortifications and then suddenly Jennie was arouse d by the galloping of horses hi hoo s hoofs and H joine came riding up.

"The troops are on for the fortifications." She cried. "Violet had told Hanson all. Evans is advancing forces to make a general attack and with the help of Hanson he is bound tovsuccesed or die. Hurry down with us if you want to see the fight. And we may be needed."

Jennie was off immediately hapy that her sister had yeilded, for indeed she loved to see the children set free, and she wished to find this brave boy. The christian soldiers advanced against the foe positions in grand array, and violet and her sisters went to the summit of a low hill with three hundred boyscouts to see if any of the generals could place a battery there, and saw that they could. It was dangerous work for they had a very fine chance of being captured or fired upon by the landelinians.

The boyscouts signalled to the christian generals and within twenty minutes a good number of the heaviest cannon were ready to cover the charge of the christians at this point. When the main division arived to the point selected, the christian generals gave the word to the buglers to sound the charge, and as soon as the bugles were heard the Angelinians rushed on to attack the fortified works of the enemy, which extended for eighteen miles. General Bavaria placed nineteen batteries on the hills, and general Didd was ordered to take charge of them, he being a famious cannoneer. After watching the placing of them for a while the little girls dashed down to watch the effect of the charge. The first three hundred thousand Angelinians advanced in a long p parellel line twenty deep like a silent billow of purple, their flags of all colors were waving confusedly as the line pressed on and soon two waves of the enemy hurled themselves upon the christians but were repulsed and retreated, but they reformed their columns and presented their bayonets while some desultory firing began which did litth damage.

The Angelinians continued to advance however and soon the firing grew more heavier along three parsxof the enemys line whos while those presenting bayonets fell back after a severe fight hand to hand. Then suddenly still heavier firing broke out from the right and left simultaneously and then the battle was on in general. One hundred thousand Angelinians under general Rubie neared the most highest fortified works and then as the firing grew worse sections of the Angeli ians swarmed over the works when suddenly the whole line of brastworks seemed to burst into an undulating sheet of flame, the came a frightful bursting roar of an explosion which seemed to tear the earth asunder, and reverba reverbrate among the hil s far and wide, to echoe and reshoe among all the child slave houses, and to shake the city to its foundation and to break windows and crack doors and floors in every house and factory by the concussion. It was the explosion of a gigantic mine gallery set off by the christians themselves but nevertheless it availed little for it did not disconcert the enemy and they recieved the enemy with fierce fury, and now general Rubie fell severely wounded, while a great and wild pandemonuimn broke loose as four hundred christian cannon suddenly broke into action adding to the earsplitting roar of two other explosions and scores of the enemys lines which rushed forward to counter charge were decimated by the christian fire and driven back. Then amid the din general Joe Standard Stantley took Rubies place and waved his sabre as he yelled!

"Forward boys forward. We are supported by general Bavarias artillery now and must win. Forward and give the yelling screeching landelinian devils all the hell they want."

On again the Angelinians went with a rush. Violet and her sisters heedless of the danger dashed on through the blinding smoke realizing already that thirty thousand men had perished. On pressed the Angelinians while the roar of ten more great explosions rose to a pandemonuimn of fury and destruction. Indeed the first line of christians met such descimination that after four hours of it, and having lost over one hundred thousand the survivors wavered and redoiled recoiled, having lost ten thousand men in killed within the space of one ile mile. Yet the christian generals were determined to capture the city and the landelinian army. The din of the firing, the yells of the enemy and the concussion of the titanic explosions had almost made violet and her sisters blind and dizzy, and indeed all the child slaves and captives had been aroused by this sudden terrific uproar that shook the cities windows out, and realized what it meant.

the most horrid noise they had ever heard which swelled far above the shriek and ar of the deafening machinery. Violet and her sisters were ringing with a horrible nchronoscopic film of horrible distorted faces of the fal en Landelinians, all being nacks Gurdies, Mc-Hollestinians, and Zimmermannians, faces that grimaced, and glowered, ered, twisted with horrible laughter at the christian repulse. Amid the din and ful horrible carnage, violet and her sisters and their own boy scouts forgetting themselves tried to t rally the men nearest to them as the first rush swept by with an speed, but the roar of perfect salvoes of terrific explosions from landelinian ther, the booming and banging of thousand of shells, and the crashing earsplitting sh of high explosives disconcerted the Ang elinians and with five of their best generals ad they became panic stricken.

friends, friends." They cried but the words were pushed back to their mouths by terrific hubbub, ad suddenly a shell exploded very near them while simultaneously there was a rat---tat--tat-tat---tat- of shells high above and in a second they had themselves prostrated half buried in fallen earth. However soldiers managed to get them out of their uncomfortable position, and then these rescuers went down crushed and bleeding from the fiery and earthrending blast of a high explosive, which scattered a storm of bullets all around, which though they did not do any harm to violet and her sisters, tore their very clothes in tatters. To rally this line under such a storm of musketry and cannon seemed impossible, but suddenly general Allentines new line of christian artillery began to pound away on the enemys lines, this new discharge of artillery being more deafening, and every one in the city had to flee their houses for fear that the houses would be shaken down about their ears. Indeed if the uproar would increase any more the city would be reduced in a vertible heap of ruins by the concussion which had become almost as severe as an earthquake. Indeed this new sound checked the panic of the Angelinians and in an hour they were all rallied once more, and then withdrawn to the cover of the main line. Now came a lull in which all was as quiet as if nothing happened. During the lull before another assault was made other christian columns had come up. At Eleven O-Clock a second assault was made and maintain ed for several hours with redoubled fury untill one hundred and eleven thousand fell, and then as they were in mere fragments they were withdrawn, another large division tan taking its place, and now assaults were made in endless success ion, while violet and her sisters watched the revolting scenes with eyes dilliated in horror. General Jack Evans seeing that the series of desperate assaults were only repulsed with crushing losses, decided to throw forward one quarter of Hs main division, while he sent several officers to bring on the rest of his main column, and to report to general Hanson and hurry him on. All the Angelinians picked men were ordered to advance in wedge formation in order to make less losses. But when this assault was made the slaughter was more terrific.

The child slaves realised the boys note had brought help, and how they hoped and prayed that the christians would win. The Angelinians were attacking this time with manifold fury and terrible violence, and never for a single moment during this desperate assault did the tremendous cannonading and firing of musketry cease, but increased. However the Angelinians pressed onard and onward, untill the two gigantic opposing lines came together into a hand to hand struggle, now fighting with the utmost fury of desperation, and energy of despair. All of the christian cannons were now massed upon the fortified works and the tremendous roar of cannons of both sides now sounded like a deafening warfare of th ousands of titans. Yet however despite the fury of th e attack the enemy did not yeild and soon the third christian attack was rolled up, and forced all the way back in complete confusion. This sight brought tears to the eyes of violet and her sisters. Oh how they wished that general Hanson would hear the firing and hurry up. Indeed it seemed as if the conflict was lost, yet Evans expecting the other half of his forces decided to try it again, for his officers, and even himself had here these words in their minds;

"If we don't succeed once, try, try, again."

"There was terrible slaughter." Said Hettie as she watched the christian lines withering in a steady backwards flowing, regiments where divisions had been.

"But Evans has got to carry the positions." Said voice.

"I know they would meet with such repulses." Declared violet almost crying. "I'm sure I urged him to make the attack. We ain't going to win. We can see the way we are being slaughtered."

"But think of the child slaves, and captives." Said Jennie pleadingly. "Jack may win yet."

"I wonder what is keeping general Hanson. I I telegraphed to him."

"How about urging general Jack Evans to advance his whole line simultaneously!"

Said Angeline, while Hettis, and her other sisters nodded their approval."

"Who that would do." Said Angeline as the nearest tremendous squalls of musketry rolling grew nearer and louder.

"Who that would give us success." Said Jennie. "General Evans could not retreat now, and the enemy would only crush him, and chance him to the end of the world now."

"I'll try it at any rate." Said violet. "But I myself am going to send a swift messenger to hurry up with a statement that Evans is in danger of failure."

A lieutenant of the boyscouts was summoned and Violet giving him the note said pleadingly
''Please race for general Hanson with this note as fast as you can make your horse go and give him this note as soon as you reach him.....''
He gave a salute and was off.
In the meantime on account of the wind blowing tward the scene of carnage the firing was not heard by either general Kindernine or Hanson Vivian, and this is the reason that neither one of them came though they were both troubled and surprised by the constant tremor of the ground, and wondered what the supposed earthquake came from . General Manley himself was encamped with fresh divisions twenty five miles south of the city and hearing the firing was advancing large troops to general Morphines aid, the reinforcements being under general Id Isadore Stanislaw, while Manley himself was coming with the rest. Violet and her sisters did not know of g the great danger, and violet having told her friend Evans of the danger and of her plan recieved the answer;
''No violet, my losses are too heavy to advance the whole line at once, and only if the other parts come I will otherwise do not mention the subject to me again, for to do so would only cause the annihilation of the whole christian army. I''
It took half an hour before the troops were ready for the fourth attack, and it took two hours before the advan ce was begun. During the concussion of the firing while the second assault had been in progress some of the houses in the city had collapsed unable any longer to endure the concussion. As the new assault was now begun avenues were torn in the christian lines, but when within musket shot range they returned as fierce a fire as they advanced, and nearer and nearer they came, the attack being kept up with unabated fury and now the christian losses was becoming truely awfull -
The entire front line of the christians threatened to melt away entirely. General Jack Evans feared that his assaulting line would be crushed to pieces as all the foe artillery were blazing away, but neverheless the survivors had taken shelter behind all kinds of obstructions, and soon the enemy were swarming forward to appalling numbers to make a counter attack.
The Angelinians attacked with the same indescribable fury as they were wonted to do in other battles, and the whole christian right torn to pieces, and mangled, was rolled up and displaced.This gave th e Angelinians a good chance to pass way beyond the christian rear but they enscountered general Allens batteries, and hundreds went down at every shell, the flankers recoiling in tremendous f confusion, and general jennings having rallied the right wing attacked these flankers placing them between three fires, and capturing three quarters of their u number. The confusion among the rest of the foe turned into a complete panic, and the Angelinians fled precipitately. The othat two wings held their own and rolled back the assailants with frightful loss, the christian artillery pouring a curtain of fire. But all attempts to take the fortified works seemed utterly useless though the sixth division of Evans's army had arived now and was moving forward to make the sixth assault..... Violet and her sisters almost crise a cried as they saw how the battle was turning out but nevertheles for every repulse the christian chain of artillery burst forth in redoubled fury tearing miles and miles of country holding the foe positions into desolation, and ploughing them full of craterswith the horrible storm of shells and high exp exp.explosives. While the sixth assault was crushed to fragments, and while thecsurvivors was coming back, a scouting force came racing up all excited.'
''More of the enemy are coming.''One of the leading boyscouts shouted in alarm.''I believe they are Stanislaws men.'' ''Where are they advancing?''Asked violet with anxiety.
''Through the city at one point having broke th rough our lines there.''Answered the boyscout.
''We must stop them.''Said general Jack Ambroe Evans.
And he was compelled to give the order for the shelling of the city right away as it was now free of non-combatants who had fled on account of the threatening danger, fleeing so quickly a that they had left most of their belongings behind. As Hanson or Evans gave this order violet took her glasses and looking through them saw that hundreds of thousands of grayccoats were advancing through the streets. Fit fifteen minutes passed, then shells and high explosives fell among the surprised grayccoats, by hundreds per minute, and windrows of dead and dying soon covered the streets.....
It happened however that the child slaves had not left the city as Evans supposed, and old women and children screamed, the Angelinian leaders cursed and swore, hu horses reared and plunged, and indescribable confusion took place. The child slaves themselves were terrified by the heavy rain of shells, shrapnell, and high explosives, which tore roofs away, blew houses to fragments, broke in windows, ploughed furrows in the walls and streets, and banged and boomed about inside the factories and plantations killing one or two of the overseers per minute, smashing hundreds of thousands of dollars worth of machinery in two minutes time, and ripping up the planks of the floor and doing all kinds of damage.
The shells even dropped in the streets like hail and the Angelinians went down in whole ranks as it were per second. The children in the factories screamed for further orders as the shrapnell shells crashed and blew up about them as they sheltered themselves among the heavy machinery, but fortunately it was only the overseers and other Angelinians who got killed or hurt as none of the high explosives had come in this vinicity.

...ngerous was the bombardment that within three hours two quarters of general ...Stanislaws Angelinians was completely annihilated and the survivors ...drew in a stampede out of that exploding inferno of hell, but general ...s army following hard in the rear attempted also to pass through the streets of ...besieged city but he lost over five hundred thousand for his pains, and the city ...started to total ruins. The enemy then withdrew and prepared to make another attack ...on christian lines. So Morphine and Opium with their combined forces made a ...vance. The struggle was then resumed and became so fierce now that general ...ndrine could hear it disn distinctly, and fearing for the safty of general ...ny hurried his troops forward, and at the same time warning general ...Vivian. Evans line recieved the attack with all theirmight, but the enemy ...fell outnumbered and soon a portion of their own line was again giving way. ...se in the town was ablaze, and Violet and her sisters fearing for the children ...Evans and Allen to cease firing upon the town, and rake the enemys lines instead. ...mmon fire was then concentrated upon the enemy, but the survivors soon rallied ...ewed the fierce attack and then wavered as avenues was again torn through their ...ve recourse. General Kindernine was now within plain sight of the carnage and ...king a swift runn ing march came upon Stanislaws flank(Stanislaw commanding a new ...plan() and great confusion resulted. Two hours later the Angelinians were again ...ing all before them and finally though the battle was still raging furiously ...city was taken both sides having already lost over I,789,666 in killed and ...ded alone. A good portion of the Angelinian army was forced to surrender ...the rest fled to Manleys army which now retreated northward, while Manley wired ...General Rickson Mc-Allister who commanded the Mc-Whirthian fortifications that ...Angelinian armies were advancing to storm fort Cedornine by land and to be ready ...all opposition could not stop the advance of the christians.
After the battle of Lotinia general Hanson having arived encamped ...the dearly bought field and praised Evans for his good victory, but violet and ...sisters went with the boyscouts and soldiers to help in freeing the child slaves ...with the enemy had abandoned in their hasty retreat.
...Angelinian boyscouts first entered, the Angelinians who were still at the ...ve of the town became alarmed thinking it was Hansons army and they retired with all ...speed heard Manleys retreating army, and which had fallen back without a single blow ...king check by him. All of the children were free tward midnight, but the town had ...ransacked and burned completely by the enemy before they left. The next ...morning general vivian himself arived and violet and her sisters were summoned up ...Vivian.
''Very glad that you had general Jack Evans do this.''He said when they came.''You ...soldiers in having a far superior position attacked and in saving the children with ...boyscouts from a burning town of that size.'' ...were about five thousand child refugees and violet and her sisters recognised ...many among them, and called him t over to them.
...raid you would reward the finder of the note did you not?!''''She asked.
...''Answered the boy rather bashful, and entranched by Violet's beauty.
...he is dead.''She said sadly.''He was killed in this battle just past, in trying ...ally his regiment.''
...that did not count in the favor.''Said the boy.''It relates to who would really ...as as any one was liable to find the note as it was so easy. The question is ...saved us?''
...General Jack Evans made the attack before you got he got the note.''Answered ...truthfully.''We had him to start the second battle after the note came into ...hands, but for a short time there was no success.''
...you little girls are the main heroines just the same''Said the boy.''I always ...opinion that little girls were afraid of every little thing, but you little ...are braver than the soldiers themselves. Can I be one of your boyscouts?''
...Gainly''Answered violet,.
...was admitted and even all the other children who were old enough to understand ...latter were inlisted as boy or girl scouts, and supported by so many spies
...and her sisters indeed felt happy.....
...General Kindernine who was far in advance had been chasing a large force of ...Militians under general Julo Gallio but coming too close to general Manleys army ...not wishing to engage him without Hansons orders gave up the persuit, the retreat ...enemy having laid many farms in devastation, and drove off immense herew herds of ...cattle. That night violet and her sisters after being welcomed by all the chief ...commanderx felt good over the outcome of the success and violet said;
...you so why don't you try to capture the city of Vivian Wickey by land which ...have heard you say had been bombarded so many times by the Abbieannian and ...Gallian warships, and yet without doing any damage. It would open a way to great ...how to wrest Calverinian out of the hands of the enemy.''
...Sir.''Said Joice.''The enemy are laying everything in waste in our path of advance. And ...want to see this cruel war have an end some time.It has already raged a little over ...a whole year.....''

''That I will.''Answered general Vivian.''I'll burn the city of Journall first as though that also is a Calverinian city I will have to burn it to force the enemy back out of my wway so I can continue my own advance.''

He was as good as his word.He knew that there were other Glandelinian armies sent southward from Mc-Whirther, and Vivian Wickey, and still others og organizing to drive him and the others making the capiang back, but he did not care. He was going to make a halt to the enemys storm of devastation, for how could the Angelinian expect to win the war by it. It was a long tedious march up the banks of the Mc-Hollester Run valley however and Manley in his attempts to save Journell placed one third of his force to guard it, while general Vivian was laying plans how to capture it. The Angelinian soldiers took great precautions for though there seemed to be no signs of an enemy to oppose them, there was danger of Manley making a flank movement, or some trick. Violet and her sisters rode like faries on horseback at the head of their force of boyscouts..

''This is certainly turning out to be a great war.''Said Violet.''Maybe we did not go through so much suffering as during the early part of the war.''''

''But think of the reign of Terror at Orma Catherine, Julo Callio, and Pullaway we we went through, some of the worse horrors there, and surely there was none worse than what in Calverine or Andrean when the war went on.''

Angeline shuddered at these remarks.

''I can remember those slaughter houses yet.''She said.''At Andrean at and Calverine.''

''But those Glandelinians do it worse now.''Said Jennie.''They even do it more faster to make sure of it.''

''The war is liable to cost the lives of all us us some day if we don't look out for ourselves.''Said Hettie.''We come near losing Hettie and Daisy at the ''Reign of Terror'' at Orma Catherine and pretty nigh going ourselves at the same place only general Jack Evans saved us.''

''I guess we will have to go through a whole lot before this war is over.''Said Catherine..

''We had horrible experiences during the Calverinian reign of terror and may see a regular inferno of experiences, experiences that may cause our destruction if we don't look out. Those Glandelinians are not to be trifled with for they mean buisness.''

-CHAPTER II.

THE BATTLE BATTLE OF JOURNELL. APRIL 20TH.

Suddenly a messenger rode up to them and saluted;

''General Vivian has reached Journell and has captured it after a struggle costing the lives of one million, but general Indernine in trying to capture the Glandelinian works has been repulsed, crushed to fragments despite his overwhelming numbers and is besieged at Gleanor valley by a strong force. General Vivian sent me to ask you to try to see that Hanson knows of the peril and requests him to make an assault upon the Glandelinians under general Gablier towns, and flank general Indernines enemies....''

''All right.''Said Violet.''I'll go and see general Hanson right now.''

She did tell him and soon the battle was in full sway, Hanson having within four hours managed to throw a whole immense division to the assault. General Toney Senguines con combined force after two hours marching in a downpour of rain reached the location of the enemys position which was strongly fortified, but fortunately left unguarded. At once the Angelinians dashed into the works to the consternation of the Glandelinians who fled panic stricken. At night all the christian forces under general Senguine was occupying the captured works, and Violet and her sisters were with im Violet saying to Joice;

''I'm curious to see the situation of the beis besiegers and of their strength. So I'm goin to send some of my boyscouts as spies to examine their batteries, while I myself am going to get to general Indernine through the enemys lines.''

''Let us all go with you.''Pleaded Joice who feared that something would happen h if she went alone.''

''All right.''Declared Violet.''But we got to be careful as this is a fragment of general Federals army, and his men know us well. There are plenty of trees to hide us from the enemys strong searchlights, and we could select the thinnest part of the enemys line to get through.''

''But we will have to keep on the watch nevertheless for there are many sentries on guard all along the line.''Said Daisy as they were putting on their disguises.''We will have to creep from tree to tree to keep ourselves from being discovered.''

The little girls were now ready and they started off.After an hours traveling, they came to a point of the enemys lines where a number of guards were walking up and down.

''Be careful.''Whispered Violet.''It is very diffu difficult to pass these guards, because there are so many, and they are as watchful as cats.''

''But there is high grass here.''Said Jennie.''Maybe we can crawl past.''

''I will try it, but it is a very dangerous undertaking.''Said Violet.

They made very little noise as they crawled past, and every time they heard a foot fall they paused. They seemed to crawl as slow as snails and the guards did not detect them. The little girls knew that even the slightest noise would arouse the guards, and if the little girls were once detected they would be goners, for the Glandelinians would raise such a hue and cry that they would be caught.. In fifteen minutes they had at last passed beyond the sentries and then they slowly arose and moved from tree to tree, and soon reached a regular line of breastworks. On every side of the works there were thousands of Glandelinians lying down asleep but there were many others far beyond on the outlook in case the christians would advance to make an attack. Some of the breastworks were additionally guarded by a line of low palasades, with banks of earth and stone on one side and these were armed with big machine guns about fifty in number. Violet and her sisters wondered how they were going to get any further, without being detected. These Glandelinians would recognise them easily as they were well known.

''I hear someone coming.''Said Jennie.

''Where can we hide?''Asked Violet.

''Behind these bushes quick.''Answered Jennie and they did so, just as a number of Glandelinian generals with their staff and orderlies appeared. They passed dangerously near to the bushes and again Violet and her sisters feared they would be detected. But they were not, and as soon as the men were out of sight they emerged from their hiding place.

''We have successfully passed the guards all right.''Said Violet. ''But how are we going to get through the lines!''

''Maybe we will soon succeed .''Was Joice's answer.

Violet did not make the attempt as she saw it was utterly impossible to pass through the enemys lines without destruction, so they went back again, escaping the watchful eyes of the guards.

The next morning large d forces of christians were sent to try and scale the palasade works.

''These works are strong and well guarded but they got to be carried.''Said the Christian officers to one of the other generals.At

At five o-clock there was sound of the heaviest firing which continued unabatedly for two hours. But the Angelinians did not succeed and there was frightful bloodshed even almost wholesale slaughter. The survivors came back with thousands of dead and the generals reported it was impossible to scale those palasades with eight divisions.''

''The Free Masons are strong in numbers.''One of them said.''I tried one attack after another, then made a general onset, but met with frightful decimation.''

''Well those works have got to be carried.''Said the main leader with a glance of fury at Violet.''We have got to save Indernine.I'll lead an attack myself.''

The main leader prepared one hundred and fifty thousand men for the coming contest while another division was making a series of attacks at another point he decided to storm the heavily armed breastworks..

''I can only get to general Indernine by carrying those works.''He said.''Indernine is in danger. Otherwise the mission of thede little girls is useless. We got to clear a way for them.''

The divisions were now sent to the attack and now it seemed as if the seried armies of hell were at war with each other. At ten th irty general Gus Maurice Costellio saw the main leader advanced his divisions tward the breastworks very cautiously. Violet and her sisters knowing of the easiest approach had told it to him, and also of the weakest point of attack, but the advance of the christians was discovered, and firing at once ensued. The Angelinians however moved on slowly, spreading out so as to overlap the works. There was intense excitement among the enemy and their front line now began to dart tongues of flame. Swarms of purple coats went down, but the others pressed on undaunted, while the Glandelinians worked hard to get the big machine guns to add to the fire of the field pieces. Every rank now darted flame and soon the whole line stormed with fire and again the slaughter became terrific.Yet the survivors pressed on, but the enemys lines were strong and impregnable, and for the space of four hours and a half withstood the attacks of the Angelinians, and soon ended the fierce assault with renewed wholesale slaughter.Indeed the onslaughts continued for a whole day, and sudden disasters and storms of carnage resulted. Tempets of assaults breaking upon their lines had raged and rolled away amid frightful revolting massacres of soldiers on both sides, leaving them as impregnable as before. After this dreadful carnage general Vivian, who was still engaging the enemy south og Journell learned of the failure of general Senguine, and hearing that he was also wounded was aroused, and also hearing through means of telegraph that Costello had done his best with the help of Maurice Costello, and with the direction of Violet and her sisters and yet failed all was excited. and he did not know what to do.''If he would take his whole force to general Indernines rescue, then the enemy would recapture Journell which of course was all Ablaze. Yet rescue must come or general Indernine would have to surrender which would be a disgrace to the British army and also the loss of general Indernines army would make a terrible disaster and probably cause him to lost the war altogether.. His whole army was aroused beyond endurance and Maurice Costellio begged permission of Evans to take his whole command to go to Kindernines rescue at once. Maurice Costellio had a force of over six million and he getting permission marched with all haste to help Kindernine, general Henry Aronburg advancing from a different direction united and learning that Senguines divisions were noe also now also in the same trap as Kindernine, and that Violet and her sisters were in great danger, made a furious advance. New divisions were also brought up and these also advaned advanced to the aid of Kindernine, and general Manley finding this out sent reinforcements to the aid of Federal and so again the Angelinians were advancing to attack a new force of Landelinians. Though combined against Federal, general Costellio discovered through scouts that his own division was twice the size of the enemys, but still he hesitated about making an attack, and appealed to general Vivian for Baldwins divisions.

In the meantime Violet and her sisters hadsucceededin getting out of the trp trap, while all of Senguines forces being outnumbered were forced to retreat, Violet and her sisters themselves being persued clear within sight of Maurice Costellio. Seeing that the Landelinians were gaining on the little fugitives general Aronburg went with his whole force to check the foe which again resulted in a titanic struggle, and which brought more fresh divisions of the enemy up, and who attacked with fierce determination, and for fully an hout the carnage raged, and increas increased with unabated fury, the Angelinians seeming to be worsted despite the support of their parks of artillery, which tore down the enemys lines, and fairly cut their divisions to pocces. General Walter Jennings brought his own forces into action and held his own ground against twenty fierce attacks and then general Maurice Costellio came to his aid. The terrific fire of Jennings field pieces checked the advance of the fiers assailants, ad as other divisions were soon coming to te their aid they were soon persuing the enemy, but in the face of a hot fire from the main batteries of the besiegers, and general Frank Gabble on the christian side was wounded. When the Agelinians made a fir fiercer attack on the breastowkrs and the stu struggle became more fearful. Assault after assault was rolled back in great confusion, and even other forces were coming to the aid of the enemy.

general Germaine Vivian and his brother now went to Costel lios aid with the help also of general Gannon but in the frightful carnage general Maurice Costellio recieved a wound in the left lung that almost proved to be mortal. His whole command of two million survivors broke into a panic, and almost one hundred and ten thousand went down in mangled and bleeding withinma few minutes, the whole column which was retreating having lost fully I,III,I55 in killed and wounded in this disasterous assault.

Jimmie Vivian himself being on general Evans right then came up to stop the rout, and cover the retrw retreat but was also wounded by a solid shot, and general Gannon and Aronburg were severely wounded. Senguine lost over two hundred th ousand more of his five hundred thousand during the first days attack, and Senguine had recieved a second wound and was borne off from the field.

A second assault had met a frushing crushing repulse, and gannons line had been dissilusioned, cut to fragments, by overwhelming numbers, and placed between two fires. The main christian divisions remained in the neighborhood of general Gabble owned Landelinians whose positions were being shelled. The battle line at Journell was fourty miles long. Jennings decided to wait untill general Baldwin came before making another assault. But unexpectedly general Federal recieved more heavy reinforcements w i which swelled his army considerably, and two hours later he himself made a desperate assault upon Jennings line and in all the maelstrome of carnage for Jennings was surrounded, scouting parties detexcted the enemys advance guard of the remaining force at least creeping around Jennings only outlet, and reported the matter to Violet and her sisters, who begged one of the christian generals to go to Kindernines and Jennings aid and stop the flankers before he was also so surrounded like Kindernine was. Later during the fiery storm of carnage and destruction extending all at once for seventeen miles Baldwin came up with his main army and these preparedefor the coming struggle of the next hour, and then learning that Jennings was trapped, Baldwin hastily changed his mind about a foolish wait and came down upon the Landelinians under general Federal like a thunderbolt crushing their main line and driving them back in the utter confusion and with hundreds of thousands of their slain dotting the burning fields for miles.

''General Federal is certainly a fierce man in war.''Said Violet.

''He certainly is.''was the answef answer of one of the officers.

At four thirty the next morning Violet and her sisters went out with a large scout ing party to examine general Federals batteries which were steadily shelling Kindernines works killing scoresxof men every hour. She took about five minutes to look through her glasses. The batteries by the many puffs of smoke were distinctly seen on the hills of both sides and on a high rise of grounf to the left, and also on the right. Violet and her sisters co could not ascertain how many guns Federal had, but they judged it to be one thousand eight hundred cannon. Their line itxself was on good ground in the valley were more unassailable than the batteries, and one of the little girls suddenly hit u upon an idea.

either general Jack Evans, or Hanson ought to attack those batteries.''Said thought Or declared that they had thought of the same thing. General told of this by Violet and soon large forces were moving up the flanks of the hills. It indeed seemed foolish to Jennings who was sent forward by Hanson attack such batteries, and also rash, as he feared it would only bring ruin and ilation. As the attacking forces were in motion Violet and her sisters sent of their boyscouts to examine the enemys positi ons, but to their unexpected they never returned. Signal stations were erected and though they the fire of the enemy they were not abandoned. Many men lost their lives, and x signalling within sight of the enemy went down in scores. The ians starting up the sides of the hills were seen by the enemy however, and the fire seemed to sweep all before it. Jimmie vivian badly wounded as he was of the divisions, and ha an eop experience that he never forge forgot. his getting within range were ge greeted with a rain of shot shell and canister. third of his whole division was killed or wounded, before they wavered and Jimmie was wounded again..

''That may save Kindernine.

other divisions made fierce and bloody assaults on the enemys breastworks, engaging left and center but recieved successive repulses. For a whole day the Angelinians storming f Federals batteries, Baldwins divisions making a herculean assault, the fight was sumpreemly fierce and bloody. It raged four hours but the Angelinians repeal repulsed at all points, both sides having fought with frightful fury. Jennings with his Angelinians literal y hewed his way through the desperate columns but nevertheless nevertheless he fell wounded, and his men losing courage wavered. The other Angelinian assailants were also driven back with the loss of one and fifty thousand, and a terrible gannon fire tearing up their lines com the panic of the Angelinians who retired in the utmost confusion. The survivors a storm of broadsides carried general Jennings out of danger, and when they they began to pour a hell storm of fire upon the Landelinians Landelinians, but at this moment general Abner Manning on the christian right fell mortally Violet and her sisters heard of the terrible incident and learning that their brother was also wounded begged general Hanson to send many columns of troops to it, and now the dead and wounded coming strea ing to the rear numbered many per hour. Jimmie vivian had been dangerously wounded, and had to be right away, while his chief aid general Cornsce Blake died in the ambulance been severely mangled by a canister v olley. Indeed the sides of the two ridges extending for the distance of three miles were purple with the dead and branch was in the christian lines, and two attempts were made to fill it, but with terrible slaughter. General Gannons troops succeeded in filling it but great loss and he was with even Kindernine in the hospital tent both dangerously

''It is terrible ''Said Voice sadly.''It is even dangerous to go a few feet into and fifty thousand more had been killed, and two hundred and seventy five wounded in the attack on the batteries and works which lasted fully only hours, those assaulting the hills having lost totally over five hundred killed and wounded. Another division had lost over two hundred thousand, it add to eight hundred thousand. Violet and her sisters with a heavy heart, to see general Baldwin and heard the whole story. A strong attack was still kept the enemys lines, but these christian assailants were of do different and Violet and her sisters did not have any hopes that they would be successful even portions of general Vivians right wing g near Journell was threatening to give way before sledge hammer attacks of general himself, and reinforcements had to be sent there by general Hanson. Many parties were out during the sad day, and many a poor boyscout at their work rallying to the Angelinians were brought back dead or wounded by the score. christian line all day was under heavy fire from millions of Landelinian shooters, and several brigades were annihilated, the battle being on now in general, Landelinings were crafty and general Vivian knew that someti something must be done general Kindernine, but just now he could not think of sparing a man, as his entire line right and left and center were sustaining many general onslaughts of the enemy, it being one of the bloodiest engagements of the battle so far. When night was coming on general Baldwin had withdrawn his shattered commands, while large divisions of Hansons army was moving forward to resume the desperate assaults on those thundering batteries on the hills. The christian commanders had intention of flanking the enemy as their greatest desires were to try and capture batteries and open them on the enemy, as it seemed the only way to save general Kindernines army from annihilation.

The christians captured general Starring and his Landelinian division, and then continued their attack upon the main line while the shells tore up hundreds of tons of dirt and debris all around them and almost deafened them by their earsplitting reports.....

The christian commanders knew that the hills were defended by the most destructive batteries, and by over seventeen millllion infantry men. Yet these christian commanders were bound to tak take these batteries at a'' all costs. Violet and her sisters were puzzled as to the real nature of the situation as they realized for the Angelinians to attack the works again was useless. Other forces at the pleading of general Hanson had decided to reinforce general Baldwin and have him go ahead again, and as they did so, Baldwin made preparations to join in the advance. The first column one hundred thousand strong moved across a large open grassy field and scores of shells began to drop among them, but nevertheless they made straight for Alician hills. The other divisions were also advancing but to their left a very heavy and relentless firing told them that general Baldwin was having a very hot time. In about an hour the whole christian column was in motion tward the ridges, and it now looked like a whole nation advancing to their annihilation, so severe was the fire of the enemy.
The christians rushed forward in long straight lines and the sights of all the flags was wonderful even to the enemy and general Federal was known to have made the remakr remark;
''Those christian dogds have the appr appearance of moving lines of purple and red hemlocks tinted with all other brilliant flowers.....''
The christians were dropping faster now b t the survivors continued onward in the same grand array. A large force of grayscoats was discovered at general Baldwins right and he commanding in person, halted several of the divisions for the purpose of changing their course, then reported the matter to hid a his aiding generals, and they decided it was best to show the enemy a regular fury of firing. These divisions then formed into a long line of battle and while the fight was raging desperately, and while hammering onslaughts was made by the christians one after another, several scouting parties through the he lp of field ga glasses found that the enemy having their main line crushed to fragments by the christian assaults was falling back. At once the divisions pressed forward, but the christian generals fearing that they would rush into the jaws of death death ordered them to some back.
''They might run into an ambuscade.''General Baldwin said.''I'll take a number of scouts before dark and investigate.'' Violet and her sisters knew it was dangerous and that he himself might run into the ambuscade and probably be killed, and so she went herself as she knew she could do this without dragging the men into the trap or her sisters either, for she would not let them go. These Glandelinians knew her and her sisters well so she thought it useless to disguise herself, but nevertels nevertheless she was determined to be careful because the Glandelinians were crafty, and if she would get caught she would die as a spy sure. She knew it was a portion of Federals army but she was in just as great a dan danger as if it had been Manleys army because federal was cruel as well.
She knew it to be a ticklish job to scout on the enemy while a desperate battle was raging but she believed she could get away with it al alright so as to save the divisions from running into the jaws of death. The whole christian line at the order of their commanders had halted but was like a long fussure eruption so fierce was their storming fire of musketry and artillery. The cannons on the hills were roaring like volsanoes and they could hear the terrible yell of the rest of Baldwins men who no doubts were already rushing up to the summit of the two hills.
Aft er going quite a distance Violet and over one thousand of the boyscouts came upon the field where they had seen the glandelinian columns receding, but they could not find a trace of the grayscoats any where as yet.
''Maybe they are further off beyond.'' he thought to herself.''I see no wisked Glandelinians here. I might as well investigate however before I go any further. I must be cautious for if I and my boys are surprised it will be very serious.....''
At last she came upon several wounded landelinians but they would not tell where the force had gone saying that they knew nothing about it. A throughout investigation was made of the place but the enemy could not be found. Violet hesitated about advancing any further especially over such a sea of dead and wounded. Yet she became more determined and soon went forward again, but the warning look of several of the wounded Glandelinians made her suspicious. And yet she finally discovered them. They were making formation or reformation of the level portion of the ridges, and being careful that not even a twig snapped she watched them closely. There was a group of officers within hearing and violet heard one of them say;
''Those christian- bloodhounds that we have encountered are a portion or perhaps the whole of general Baldwins forces of dogs. We were sent to flank general Hanson, and they had to come and stop us. And oh those Vivian Girls are regular tigers in boldness and daring. ''
''Indeed.''Said one of the other generals with a sneer.''Those little girls can discover anything, but because they try to make themselves off as spies the most famious of christian spies though they would deney it untill their faces are as ba black as coal.''
''Ys and they have proven to be very difficult to catch, and impossible to hold when they are caught.''Said another.
''If we could only catch them we could make general Andernine surrender mighty quick. I respect the Vivian Girls but if they spy on us it is our duty to at least take them prisoners.''..''

Yet those Angelinian children are desperate little girls, helpless as they seem to be in appearance and form and they could shoot five or six men down at every volley from their pistols. I hate but yet at the same time admire them ,I do.''
''Well let's make an advance and resume the attack on those christians.''Said one of the others.
As we say the Glandelinian generals were talking of Violet and her sisters made her blush because it was the first praise she had ever heard from a Glandelinian officer.
Suddenly a big gang-gang shell came roaring tward the Glandelinian officers, crushing bushes, and twigs in its path and making a great screeching noise. The Glandelinians saw the deadly projectile and also Violet and a number of her boy scouts and with a curse dashed pell-mell in many directions to escape the death dealing bomb. Down it crashed over the path where it h they had stood carrying wreckage with it. It then exploded with a frightful detonation but no one was injured though the cloud of dirt, wreckage and smoke the explosion shot upwards m de made it as dark as night for a few moments. Violet realising that she had been discovered scampered away giving orders for her boys to follow but one of the generals yelled;
''There goes a spy.''
And a number of the privates dashed forward yelling to Violet to stop. Violet saw the grayscoats coming furiously and dashed down the slope as fast as she could, the grayscoats close after her on horseback. The firing had suddenly grown louder, and Violet fearing for her sisters was determined not to be caught at all. Her boyscouts fired a volley at her persuers but did not stop them though they brought a whole rank and file down. She herself drew one of her pistols and prepared to shoot any of the grayscoats who should gain on her.
These Glandelinians who had some real humanity about them loathed to fire at Violet for they had not known who the prowler was at first, for they now saw that she was only a child. But they did some wild firing nevertheless but up in the air with the intention to only s scare her as they did not aim at her at all. But reaching the base and a small bridge Violet saw a number of brutal looking Glandelinians coming from another way and these opened a fussilade the bullets whistling dangerously close to her, the human soldiers having given up the chan chase. Violet did not respond but dashed across the bridge as her swarms of boyscouts answered their fire which bringing down ten score of Glandelinians at three volleys, but the survivors committed havoc among the boyscouts, while the party that were on horseback dashed after Violet at full speed. several of the Glandelinians were gaining on Violet when they were brought down by the boyscouts, and three others who caught up to her Violet herself brought them down horses and all with well aimed shots. Then dashing again she left the bridge which was soon swarming with the dashing horsemen, and rushed through a thorn hedge in her haste to get away sustaining torn clothes, and scratched and bleeding hands. Not seeing the high hedge in their mad haste, some of the nearest persuers dashed directly among it, two of them fairly sprawling among the sharp thorns. The Glandelinians stormed with imprecations and blasphemies, as they fir furiously drw drew their horses ouy being unable to penetrate it as Violet did. The other two had badly scratched faces and hands, and the gursing and swearing they set up was something fearful to hear. The rest of the Glandelinians now came dashing upyand these cut their way through the hedge while several xquads of others fired at Violet who was several hundred yards ahead by this time. The Glandelinians then fired another volley and dashed after her again, but now she reached her swarm of boyscouts, and the grayscoats not as wishing to encounter these fierce boys cursed and sore swore roudly as they gave it up. All the while that Violet had her experiences with the enemy Baldwins divisions which had repelled the new force sent to flank general Hanson was again repelling a fierce and most determined attack. Violet went straight to Boise and said amid the dreadful din and ranging far out of range of the firing;
''The only way to keep general Hanson from being flanked is to keep these men engaged with the enemy. Maybe if those christian columns retreated the Glandelinian forces would persue and I know a good place where their officers could reform the men, and give the enemy a hot reception.''
''Yes it would be easy to carry it out.''A Sad Said Boise Boise.''But the question is will their commanders listen to our advise.' These officers offi cers are not like the others.''
However the officers did listen to their advise and tward nightvfall the Angelinians were retiring, and the Glandelinians now confident of victory followed, rolling like demons. Violet saw indeed that the plan was working and the officers were rallying the men on the top of a long low ridge, and in half an hour all were ready for the enemys second attack. However nothing happened untill the next morning, and then a perfect wave of the Glandelinians swarmed like a plague of locusts up the sides of the ridge and made a fierce and bloody assault, and soon carried the ridge but at a awful loss.
The Glandelinians persued the christians and it seemed as if the Angelinian defense was broken at all points.

For four hours that bloody morning the divisions at this point of Waldwins line had fought with the most frightful fury and now retiring as they were they were not disconcerted though the Glandelinians literally cut their way through the desperate Angelinian columns, but the left flank or wing not engaged yet poured in a terrible flanking fire, and the Glandelinians recoiled, but a large portions of them got around the flank of the left wing causing a complete panic, and the whole of these combined divisions retreated hastily, having lost thirty five thousand men in killed in four hours, and as they retreated the enemys batteries added to the carnage. Simultaneously general Roswell Custer Johnston arived and finally stemmed the advance of the Glandelinians, and repulsed all their furious onslaughts. Desultory but destructive firing ensued for a while along other points of the line, and then the enemy made another furious onslaught with his combined force. The foe this time struck the christian line with terrific violence carrying all before them along the right. Divisions along their pat path of charge were shattered to pieces, and thousands were mowed down so continuously and in so short a time that the enemy became appalled. But they dast not stop unless their leaders ordered them to do so.

Big divisions of christians were rolled up and displaced, and never before during the onstinate battle had Violet and her sisters heard such firing. The explosions of hundreds of tons of nirt nitroglycerins could not outdoe the terrific uproar of that struggle. The enemy also along the center kept up the attack with the same terrible violence untill the ground was covered with their fallen comrades to a depth of two feet. It seemed as if the whole world was turning into carnage, the enemys line however finally wavering and falling back. The attack made by Baldwin the evening before had a second time met a crushing and bloody repulse. It indeed was awful.

While this had been ensueing general Jennings divisions fell back in panic before an advancing host of Glandelinians under general Federal. Baldwin now became alarmed for not only was Kindernines army was at stake but his own army was threatened with defeat so fierce was the counter charges of the Glandelinians uder general Federal and Calmann Shoemann. Baldwin at eight thirty whi e the conflict was still raging and even increasing in fury, sent a messenger with this note;

"Your excellency general Robert Angelic. Vivian!
In the name ofheaven kindly send new forces if you can to general Kindernines aid. Maurice Costellio is severely and probably mortally wounded, Jennings, Gannon, and Aronburg are wounded, and their shattered divisions are without leaders. For god's sake send us help through general Jack Evans for general Hanson himself is hard pressed and cannot lend us aid just now. We are ourselves almost helpless, for the enemy are continueing their assaults like fury and are breaking our line at all points and making a great massacre of soldiers and officers combined.

Yours truely.
supretendant general
Luckwick Baldwin....."

The envoy was detained by Glandelinian scouting parties but nevertheless got away within half an hour giving them full satisfaction that he was no spy. The brave general Phelannia who held Gabblies works with nine hundred thousand men was also in danger of being shut in, and Violet herself sent a frantic appeal to her father to send aid stating that if he did not the battle would be lost. All of Angelinia had heard of this news, and galverinia also, and both countries held their breath in fear, while eager with hope. Gannon, Jennings, Roswell Custer Johnston and the other generals also pleaded for aid stating that another christian general called Edithins Haldemann had been killed, and general Lake Johnston was severely wounded. All eyes were turn to general Vivian for should general Kindernine have to surrender the whole christian army would be driven from Tournell and maybe suffer a serious downfall for the enemy may be enabled to win the war right then and there. Every minute while the carnage was in general fury all along the line messengers arived at general Vivians headquarters inploring for aid, and then at this moment general Cap. Carpentine, and blacklin Manning were brought in from the field severely wounded.

General Roswell Custer Johnston had about two million seven hundred thousand men and these indeed made some barrier before the assault os t of the enemy his army in all the carnag being a mg magnificent spectacle for as far as eye could reach, the clouds of smoke, the gleam of bayonets trusting back and forth into the air or glistened on the light of the sun, while the flags waving back and forth made an awe inspiring scene while the booi boomn booming of the terrible cannonading was enough to make ones nerves shake from the concussion.

Fresh new long lines of extra artillery was being placed into position, and though whole big divisions of Abyssinkilians were dispersed in their unusual confusion by the violence and pressure of the enemys onset, other divisions would come up to fill the gap and so for a long while the whole christian line held without being broken at any point.

Despite all the other assaults of the enemy general vivian saw new divisions of Glandelinian forces descending one of the hills and spread out upon one of the plains and then surge forward like a tidal wave, and he was forced to send a large force of Abyssinkilians who had been held in reserve to repell their attack. The struggle was re raging all along the line now with the most frightful fury, the furious Glandelinians being bound to win. General Baldwin who had repulsed sixteen desperate onslaughts with the loss of a hundred thousand each time to the enemy, soon discovered suspicious movements among the main body of the enemy, and so redoubling the strength of lines lines renewed his heavy artillery fire and during the tremendous ascending which seemed to pound the very life out of nature with the thousands of terrific explosions going on in bewildering confusion Violet came riding up and said;

"A force of Glandelinians equal to your numbers is advancing to make a fierce converging attack and that their own positions were unassailable and impossible to approach without risk of annihilation."

A harder struggle was now ensueing but general Roswell Custer Johnstons lines held their ground stubbornly, the enemy charging again and again in heavy columns, only to be rolled back with the most tremendous losses their waves if assaults being fairly torn in pieces. The air for the distance of fifty miles was clouded with black powder smoke and the battle was now raging so furiously that to general Vivian it threatened to make itself the bloodiest of the entire war, for now the slaughter on both sides was something terrb terrible, and the assaults of the enemy almost intolerable. General Phelan suffering the annihilation of two of his Gmarian divisions was compelled to withdraw the remainder under better cover, while hundreds of thousands of Glandelinians at one objective point with a most terrific yell sounding more appalling than the roar of cannon and musketry which was fairly earsplitting were rushing forward, and striking against the christian line with the most tremendous fury. But the Angelinians under general Custer Johnston had gathered up all their strength for the mostvfierce effort to worse the enemy, and repulsing the first assails by tearing whole lines of the enemy to pieces, made a furious counter charge, crushing th ose three t hundred thousand Glandelinians so badly that when the Glandelinians retreated there was only litt le over ninty thousand left. All along general Roswell Custer Johnstons lines the struggle was still more fearful the dis mantled Glandelinians drawing back with their smaller divisions torn and bleeding, leaving their dead and wounded companions piled in long windrows where they had fallen this terrific slaughter having lasted fully half an hour. The whole line of war and the ground around for many miles was crimson with gore and so thickly covered with the dead and wounded Glandelinians alone that they looked like a big sea of satin.

The red and purple coats themselves lay in won windrows and the trenches were completely filled with dead and wounded, but only a hundred thousand of them had been down. The woods in front of the battle lines all along the front was severely cut and torn by sections of shells and every tree was pierced by thousands of minnie balls a great scene of desolation and wreckage caussd by this serious contest being exposed to view. At the same time matters was looking very serious for general Baldwins men. They were under a dreadful fire from sixteen batteries and assailed all along the line by the Glandelinians, and though the whole assaulting line in gray would be rolled up cut to pieces and in confusion, more lines would be added to the assault and then reforming the glandelinians would only go at tit again with redoubled vigorous.

Yet all in spite of all that was done no rescue was coming and so Jennie and violet decided to find out the reason for they realized that the main action of the battle was fully on, and that it would be decided that very day. Jennies small division of regulars was northeast of the scene of the mighty conflict, and fearing that the enemy would decend upon general Baldwins flank, while she and violet were gone managed to persuade the officers of the rear and ad advised them pleadingly that they would be supported by three hundred cannon of the heaviest make and by one th ousand gathling guns if they could be gotten. At ten thirty o-cl clock while the roar of the conflict seemed to be expanding and even growing louder and making a regular tempest of sound, violet and Jennie set off on their horses.

"We must be careful as wel we will have to pasx pass three of the enemys lines." said Violet who was in disguise, and Jennie also. "If we are recognized they will fire upon us probably with their cannons."

As two little girls went along a certain road, hemlock trees growing on either side. They believed they were sheilded by these tall trees, but they realized that shells and shrapnell were exploding around here quite frequently. They had ridden for a short distance when they saw a long line of green coated Glandelinians approaching ar at a run while the shells rained all about. They were already too near these Gmarian-Curdes to have escaped, but the little girls played a clever trick. They quickly pretended to drop from their horses and a shell exploding close made the general of this force they the think they were killed, and let them lay but th took the horse. It was nearly fifteen minutes after before the long line passed and after they were gone hundreds were lying killed and wounded.

"My but that was a narrow escape."said violet getting to her feet, and then making a face at the glandelinians and sticking her tongue at them from behind their backs."We rode into those fierce urdes who would have cut us all to pices pieces if they had believed we were still alive. I'm glad they did not pick up up us up anyway."

Suddenly they heard the sound of tramping feet and another line of grayscoats this time came rushing into view. In the midst of a dreadful hail of shells violet and Jennie were bewildered but hiding in the hollow of a tree they escaped detection.

Far beyond the approaching line they saw a wall of continuous puffs of white smoke. The line passed, there was a horrible roar, thousands fell, but Violet and Jennie were soon creeping from the tree and looking cautiously around. The ground was strewn with the fallen, many of the wounded among them, but she and Jennie went forward and saw other divisions coming up. Then in a minute they came rushing past their hiding place a shell striking the tree but not injuring the little girls. After this line passed violet and her little sister again went forward cautiously, and saw five guards posted on the road, two on either side, and one standing on the road.

Violet knew that she and Jennie could not pass them, but realizing they were the only soldiers in that direction, they decided to pass them anyhow. They made across a meadow where they saw only one centry marching up and down, and coming nearer they dropped out of sight, and waited untill he passed.

"He is quite a slow polk and seems to be looking in all directions as he paces up and down."Said Jennie."How are we going to pass him without geting shot down?"

"We can do it easily."Said violet."But us two will have to be quik quick so that he does not make an outcry or let his gun go off. This attempt is desperate, but I am bound to pasch pass him even if it does cost our lives."

The two little girls waited untill he came closer, and little girls though they were they were exceedingly strong for their age and size, and sprang at him simultaneously one landing on his shoulder like a cat, and another landing against the back of his head with her feet and down he went with them on top of him. He grasped Jennie by the throat and strangled her hard but violet managed to grab his gun after a struggle in which he seemed to be getting the best of them, and struck him over the head rendering him senseless. Then the little girls bound him hand and foot, gagged him, and dragged him in some bushes.

Then they cont imued on their way but were met and questioned by many of the glandelinian boyscouts who were also aporoaching, and though most of the enemy boys were good looking, violet and Jennie saw a wicked glean in their eyes and held fast to the butts of their pistols ready to use them in a moments noi notice. Passing a certain tree violet saw a small roll of paper lying there and picking it up she glanced over it, and this is what they both rw read!!!!!!

"YOUR EXCELLENCY GENERAL STANIBLAW:

The best time to flank Baldwin and general oswell uster johnston is at twelve thirty this afternoon. You could deven decend upon the flank of these two divisions in great force and rout them, and probably capture one of the generals. But be cautious as their flank is well protected and are supplied well with boyscouts, and signal stations. And look out for the famious spies known as the vivian Girls, for they are as slippert slippery as ells, and are as dangerous as little demon imps and would shoot any one on sight. I bid you look out for them as they are sharpshooters and quick at it too, and see that they don't get hold of this paper. As to my plan I mean to say, I mean to say, we must get around Trecias Den by the east ban k and decend upon oswells rear, and rout him, and rout, him and rout him, and rout him. The noise of the firing, the noise of the firing, the noise of the firing,, will arouse him, will arouse him, will arouse him, of course , of course, but a simultaneous attack on the christian flank will accomplish, will acop accomplish, will accomplish all. We also could get upon the flank of the division under baldwin, surround it, and capture them all, and capture them all, and capture them all. It is a dangerous task, and they are very watchful, very watchful, very watchful,, and are, and are, and are, all ferocious warrorg, and ought to be put out of the way, out of the way, out of the way, or other wise indornine will be rescued, will be rescued. We have got to keap the seried christian armies from advancing on vivian Wickey by land, and shall, and shall, and shall. But be careful of the vivian, girls, be careful of the vivian Girls, but be careful of the vivian Girls, as they are tigers, and when those little girls, little girls, little girls, little girls, are cornered they will fight, they will fight, they will fight, like enraged mice. what ever their nature is a flank attack will decide the battle, will decide the battle. So be careful ,and s do as I say, as I say, s as I say."

Your chief Director.
General Carden.G.C.S.C.E.U.R.T.E.G.A.L.C

Violet laughing folded the slip and put it inside her wrist as she remarked;
"What general Cardon is some writer. It's a wonder he did not write every sentence in stead instead of one at every interval."
"Why he certainly did make a queer note of it."Cried Jennie.
While the little girls had just started off when several of the boys came riding up, followed by a squadron of glandelinian cavarly, the men proving to be Spanian Curdon.
"I say those two little girls are spies."The little girls heard one of the boys sho t to the other. "Give chase double quick. They picked up a sheet of paper and were reading it.
"I say there."
Violet brought two of the glandelininns down with well aimed shots,, and thenshe and her sister ran as fast as they could. Through the row of trees the glandelinian horsemen behind pellmell, shouting and yelling to the little girls to stop in the name of the law of glandelinia. In the meantime violet and Jennie passed under a line of weeping willow trees and reaching a meadow saw that the glandelinian horsemen were coming at breakneck speed yelling like demons and firing. They would have ridden the little girls down had they not jumped out of the way of the horses, bringing down several glandelinians amid a fussilade, and in the confusion jumped on two of the still running still running little girls as they were, and dashed off firing again, and bringing one of the officers down. A Score more of the glandelinians and even the boyscouts dashed in three directions.
"Stop little girls."One of the boyscouts shouted at the top of his voice."We are bound to get you. Stop I say."
At he himself was brought down by a shell exploding under his horse,the , little girls themselves firing again.
"After them yelled""Yelled a sweet faced boy."Head them off, they must not escape."
A score of the boys themselves came at a thunderous gallop across the meadow, yelling while the Glandelinians riding in another direction were firing for further orders.
Jennie recieved two painful wounds, one on the wrist and another on the forearm of the same arm, but she managed to keep her sea seat. The brave boyscouts proved to be better riders than the grayscoats themselves, and they stendily gained on the fugitives.
"My they are worse than the men."Said violet in alarm."I never knew their true nature before. We are in for it now, but we must get away for if we are caught, those blood thirsty gurdes will kill us right where they catch us."
A large party of the boys now lined themselves up in front but violet and Jennie dashed through striking right and left with their pistols and again getting away.
"To that old house over there quick."Said violet."It's our only chance for there we can make a stand."
In a few minutes they were inside the house where they discovered two other little girls and a boy tied firmly to three beds. A pail of red sulphur set in the middle of the rooms on fire, and the children were gasping in their suffocation. The little children were striving desperately to undoe the knots but it was in vain. The room was filled with the suffocating smoke, and they themselves gasped for air. Jennie kept the glandelinians at by by steady firing and violet at last managed to work the rope of one of the children loose, and flining in the remains in the pail strove to free the other little girl and boy the latter having died.
In doing so she upset the pail and the licking flames caught the bed which the little girl was tied, but violet quickly untied the knots, and half choked by the blinding smoke cut the remainder of the bonds, and then hurled a chair crashing against the window smashing it out pane and all. The smoke filled the room in thick volumes, but violet gasping for air dragged the little girl off the smouldering bed, the little girl sinking to the floor overcome by the smoke.
Quickly Jennie seized her and both managed to lift her over the sill and to the ground where she sank gasping and coughing. Then the other little girl was pulled out, and then violet and Jennie go gasping for air themselves sprang out. For fifteen minutes they lay there obscured by high piles of lumber and it was fortunately for many of the boyscouts seeing clouds of smoke pouring our of the windows and soon realized that the little girls had set the house i on fire in their means of escape..
Most of the boys had set the house on fire or saw it , mean and at last broke in the door with a battering ram and then rushed into the smoke filled fou filled house.
Some six made for the room where they knew violet and Jennie had went into, and seeing the gleam of flames burst down the door. The room was like a furnace. The whole floor and ceiling and even the walls were a mass of flames, and not being able to stand the fierce heat the boys edged away.
"Well if those firebugs are not clever I'll eat my hat and shoes."
"Not one of them."They have escaped while we besieged the house, and even freed tow of the children whom some other men men had tied to beds intending to smother them with the smoke of sulph r. Go several of you boys and search them up."
The fire was spreading along the ceiling of the corridor, and was also spreading between the walls.
"The blaze is beyond our control."Said one of the other boys. "Let's get out.
This is no place for us. See the smoke is coming up through the cracks in the floor."

fifteen minutes after the boys had left the hall, it became a roaring inferno. Violet and Jennie had recovered their breath, and saw tongues of parching flames reaching out of the the window igniting the lumber and getting the other two little girls to their feet the four soon dashed away. Their hearts beat fast as they saw masses of the boyscouts looking in all directions for them.

"We will have to be careful that they do not see us." Said violet.

but two of the boys did see them, and gave a yell;

"There goes the vivian Girls. They are escaping. They must not escape. After them. Arouse the Curdes who are on horses. They will catch them as the little girls are now on foot."

The boys bounded after them immediately yelling to them to stop.

Jennie suffered on account of the wound on her arm, and seeing that her arm was bleading badly B violet had put a clean handkerchief around the wound, and tightening it with a ben belt. Bullets whistled about them while a perfect swarm of boyscouts were racing after them in all their fury. But violet and Jennie did not give up hope and continued onward with the two frightened children they had rescued.

The boyscouts were gaining rapidly on them however, and the little girls were forced to cut across another meadow, and make for a blazing cornfield. Suddenly far ahead Violet and Jennie saw a larfe body of purple coats coming on at a run, and shouted with all their might to attract their atr attention. The Angelinians came up with a great shout, and the boyscouts scattered but fired a fierce roo rolling volley; with their revolvers which brought down just as many Angelinians as there were boys, the slaughter being terrible for a swarm of boyscouts to commit.

The Angelinians who survived the fire from the boy scouts advanced onward, and with great fury, the christian horsemen trying to ride down the bold assailants, but recieved another volley, every lad, hundreds of them at that, hitting their mark, and general Henry Stanck was shot down also. The boyscouts being outnumbered however continued to retreat but fired volley after volley bring down the purple coats by the hundred score. Then their fire became very continuous, and then a large division of the persuing landelinians came into view, and seeing the plight of the boyscouts charged the christians with the fury of demons. A fierce fight ensued hand to hand, carbines were used as clun clubs; sabres crossed themselves, and over the sound of the incessant clash broughtmore on the gallop, the Angelinians beginning to give way inch by inch before overwhelming numbers.

The advancing landelinians seemed torn by flashes, and now the Angelinians fell in ranks. Fifteen minutes passed, and then a number of cannon aimed by the boyscouts poured shells and double charges of canister upon the christians. But general Hanson Phelan the leader of the Angelinians a nother one was killed amid the dreadful carnage and though the cavarly forces on both sides charged together into a melee of fury several times the christians had to at last give it up, and they retreated in confusion.

But they had saved the vivian girls nevertheless, and saftly reached the christian lines.

CHAPTER [redacted]. 76

THE CONCLUSION OF THE BATTLE OF JOURNELL.
ANOTHER WARSTORM OF DEVASTATION. A FOREST FIRE. THE FURY OF THE BATTLE OF GLORINIA EVANGELISTIA, AND THE REIGN OF TERROR AT PHELANTOMBURG.

hed twelve o-clock Hansons whole army had arived to his assistance and each half of ew divisions were appointed to fill the thinned lines, and help repell the fierce ights of the landelinians. General Hanson was bound to hold his ground even if it his his life. His greatest divisions advanced toward the main point od danger, general Baldwin recieved also heavy reinforcements and made another storming ges for the Alician ridge. Baldwins new advance was discovered by general ral and all his own artillery was again made ready in short time. A great losoh seemed to shake the very an air. General vivian himself having been long before formed by violet and her sisters of indermines danger, had reinforced general ldwin with all the reserves he could spare, and soon almost ten million christians re sweeping forward with indescribable fury, and made the first attac upon the sagopalisade like breastworks where the struggle being renewed became again more rful. Another great explosion then occured which made a din like a hundred usand cannon being discharged simultaneously as a mine went off. In the first charge the landelinian fire tore two divisions of christians to pieces in a few hours. General ell uster Johnston men was also in the advance fo moving forward in heavy lumns and in all this intolerable carnage which now extended for ten miles at this point there swelled above the roar a series of terrific yells, and all of Baldwins divisions were again seen to be rushing forward with the same almost preternatural fury. Endeavoring for a most fierce and final effort, Baldwins men had again gathered up all theit strength, and was now resuming the attack on the enemy. Other large divisions in the meantime were advancing up the sides of the ridges. The ids of stanislawa Angelinians had been going down in hundreds, their main line was ken tattered, and mangled, and seeing their comrades going down in heaps also the landelinians themselves became disconcerted, and in the tremendous confusion a big rush was made, through which the assailants poured.

The Glandelinians as they were foughtwith stubborn fury and desperate courage, but as the works and th e ground became thickly covered with the dead and wounded the gray columns retired but smote the christian line to pieces as they did so and slew twenty eight generals: All the trenches were again filled with the dea d and wounded of both sides, and yet the seige was not broken but only tighter, the christians winning the ridge but being badly and crushingly defeated just the same. Every tree within this portion of the battle field also was shattered by thecostors of shell fire. General Stanislaw was one of the twenty killed in trying to rally his christian division which was utterly cut down and routed, while general James

Hubbard and Blueberry were wounded and their Abyssinkilians totally scatt ered over the field in a racing rout the Glandelinians at this point carrying all before them like a driving tornado: Wreckage was strewn everywhere, and even the whole war in Europe could not make a scene so horrible at this one little point of the disasterous battle of Journeil: The enemy who had been driven had rallied and crushed the remainder of the christian attackers, and sent them flying like leaves before the hurricane:The same scene had been almost presented as witnessed at Camondonson only the christians were the ones who recieved its go horribly and disasteriously beaten as they were Baldwin decided to hurl his divisions once more to the assault: This assault was soon made and tens of thousands of Angelinians were cut to pieces and every deadly volley ploughed gaps by th e hundredDespite their line being again torn in fragments the christians continued to advance while those under Baldwin and other dammi commanders moving through the fields seemed to rush into the very jaws of death:

But despite the steady artillery fire the Angelinians were soon pressing up the ridge their step being i not in the least effected, though their front lines were torn again and again to mere she shreds by this raving fire which devastated the slopes of this hill like the fury of some raging typhoon: The yells of the christian assailants ventvfar above the din of the battle: On up the sides pressed the christians under Baldwin and Roswell Custer Johnston the destruction all around being wild and heartrending: The nearest divisions of the Angelinians about one hundred and seventy five thousand in number being torn to fragments by the deadly fire of the enemy recoiled in confusion: The main line bended to their left however, and moved up the slopes very swiftly, Sanguines divisions being already half way up, directly in front of general Minoques Free Masons: The massive line of ing infantry in gray stood waiting behind a long line of smoking artillery, and when the christians under Sanguine were near enough the entire gray line p poured forth a most destructive fire all alo alcng the works, tearing and mangling Sanguines whole line, and now the surviving columns tottered and blending scattered and retreated back down the hill their dead and wounded laying in the most frightful numbers: The sides of the hill was fairly dominated by the cannon fire and general Dammillin fell mortally wounded, the remainder of Sanguines shattered divisions breaking into a wild panic, and Sanguine himself attempted to rally them but fell wounded:

All the tops of the ridges were ablaze as if a forest fire was burning and now the other in ense divisions under Baldwin moved straight upon the army of Glandelinians on the center and offi cers on both sides dropped by the score: t The infantry along the center now opened a series of destructive volleys: The whole struggle now became general, as the main divisions came up: At the same time an annihilating fire was poured upon Roswell Custer Johnstons divisions and t his whole front line melted away, the whole of his main divisions being badly shatt ered and torn, and threatened with annihilation, by the tremendous fire that fell upon them all at once: Roswell Custer Johnstons men broke into utter confusion, and the brave general was wounded badly, but he strove bravely to rally his men:

In spite of the artillery fire that was moving them down in columns the main line continued to rush bravely on being now close to the summit and hundreds of breaches appeared in their once solid line: Several of the Glandelinian columns under general Wickey Vivian yeilded and over pushed the Angelinians and turning the guns around they mowed the Glandelinians down like grass:

The summit of the ridge was soon v covered ahew with the dead and wounded of both sides, and the struggle was at it s extreme worse at this point now: Baldwin strove to drive back the brave defenders, and overwhelmed the Glandelinians finally gave way and retreated in confusion down the sides of the ridge: In the three days of the battle the total christian losses is not known but over 2,395,777 were killed and wounded during the last two desperate assaults on the ridge:

After being saved Violet and her sisters did not stay to watch the resumunation of the great battle but had again hid near the enemys lines: Then they had been discovered and persued for miles until they had been captured and brought within one of the buildings within the enemys lines:

ing escaped little girls are to have need of weapons it is us: "Whispered Violet the sound of the heavy surrounding broke upon their ears:
ing for to search it will be a perilious undertaking." Said Jennie:
and those who hesitate are lost." Added Violet:
Another moment Violet and her sisters crept stealthily to the door of a guard and Violet pressed it open enough to do discover a score of Glandelinian arian guards in sound slumber: The weapons of the guards were held by a rack at the far side of the room: To admit their little bodies Violet and Jennie pushed the door open a trifle wider and as they did so the hinges gave a resentful groan, and the little girls thought their chances jeopardised, their little hearts standing still several of the sleeping Glandelinians stirred: Fearing that there was nothing for it but to see the adventure through, Violet and Jennie made a spring as swift and noiseless noiseless as two cats, and landed beside the two guardsmen who had caused them: They drew their daggers and waited for the moment that the men should open their eyes: It seemed an iternity to their overwrought nerves as they remained poised over the graycoats turned upon their sides, and resumed the even respiration of the deepest slumber:

Between and over the soldiers the little girls carefully picked their way, and soon reached the racks at the furthest end of the room: They then turned to survey the sleeping Glandelinians: All was quiet except the roar of the deepest noise of battle:
Hungrily Violet drew a small cutlass from the nearest rack, but the scabbard scraped against its holder with the sound of cast iron being filed against a giant reap, and Violet and Jennie, their hearts beating loudly and wildly, expected to see the room filled with alarmed and attacking guardsmen: But not a man had stirred: Four calibre revolvers she drew noiselessly, but as Jennie her herself drew another cutlass it clanked in its scabbard with a frightful deafening din: The two little girls dreaded that itsurely must have awakened some of the men and were really on the point of forstalling their attack by a charge for the doorway, but again to their surprise not a graycoat had stirred:

"Either they are wonderous sleepers or else the noise is much less to them than it is to us." said Violet: "I surely expected an attack."

All of a sudden another door opened and in a moment looking them full in the face stood the great general Beldonia, who evidently took in the situation at one glance and appreciati appreciated the gravity of it as quic iquickly as Violets Their revolvers came up simultaneously, and the two deafening reports sounded as one as they pulled their triggers: His bullet whizzed past her ears, and as she felt the heat of it, she saw him c crumple to the floor with blood spurting from his shoulder: The sounds of the two shots, ten times louder than the combined noise they had made with the swords aroused aroused the guardsmen, but she and Jennie sprang through the window in a jiffy, as a number of confused shots, and yells of "Spring ye fools or we will kill you" rang outs

The little girls dashed for a cornfilled cornfield as an alarm gun bellowed from the guard housetop its deep boom reverbrating in deep tones: The whole distant woods seemed with Glandelinians, and shell and rifle fire was opened tward the cornfield, while men came dashing forward by the hundreds, yelling like demons: The pandemonium that broke out was certainly deafening: Hundreds of rifles cracked, scores of cannons boomed and roared, officers shouted shouted orders, men shouted directions, and cavalry galloped here and there, while the little girls rushing through the corn fell case upon a large force of infantry without warning: The little girls saw that they were outnumbered and that they would have to fight with great desperation to get away:

They killed several of the Glandelinians:

What happened was the work of an instant, for the only reply the Glandelinians recieved were several shots from the pistols of the little girls: Three of the Glandelinians went sprawling, while a sergeant caught a bullet in the left shoulder, who had fired at Jennie whose gun had cracked simultaneously and the sergeant fell from his horse like a bundle: A major hit also by a shot from Violets pistol reeled with a groan of anger and dismay: In another moment a general, a fierce looking man broke forward tward Violet and Jennie who were with excitement fired wildly: The general had his gun in his hand but violet firing a second shot sent him flying: With savage outstretched hands he lunged forward tward the little girls, but shocked at his recklessness Violet fired again but the gun only grazed his forehead:

He uttered an obscene oath and gave forth a bruthi brutish roar: His eyes protruded in passion and fury as his hands caught her, but even as they did so a shot rang out:
The savage hands fell back from violets shoulders in a convulsive manner and the huge body of the general jerked sideways and the next instant he lay mortally wounded and lifeless at her feet: Yet the other graycoats maddened by the outcome came rushing on: But poor Violet and Jennie with the fury of demons: The Glandelinians were too many to contend with as Violet and Jennie realized, and so they dashed away again, but were persued by the Glandelinians who fired confusedly the but bullets whistling about the two little girls but did not hit them as most of the Glandelinians were poor marksmens

"If we must escape we will have to run down th at steep incline." Said violet.
"Come." Answered John Jennie.
Off they dashed outdistancing the Free Masons who commenced a ringing rattling fussilade. Just at that moment a large force of glandelinian cavarly under colonel Hansonia Aronburg came dashing up along a turnpike, and discovering the fugitives quickly spread out to intercept them, many of them dashing up the slope on foot. laced between two fires violet and Jennie became bewildered. Yet there was a high ledge of boulders on two sides of them and knowing that it was instant death to be captured, the little girls determined to make another desperate stand against the Free Masons. Besides the pistols and cut lasses, they were armed with automatic co ts colts, and so violet and Jennie drew off their belts and waited for the grayscoats to come within range, and then fired continuously. Five of the grayscoats rolled down the side of the ridge wounded, the survivors cursing and swearing. Nearer and nearer the glandelinians came and down they went one by one. Some prowler prowled on their hands and knees and got close to the ledge. In a few minutes the glandelinian infantry outdistanced by them before were now upon them, and the little girls finding themselves surrounded on all sides fired away with all their weapons as fast as they could reload them, but unfortunately they ran out of ammunition. Scores of the glandelinians then leaped over and the little girls were seized and disarmed in short order. They were bound hand and foot and searched, but the plan had been put in a secret place and could not be found. The little girls were tied to a tree, one on each side, and a big keg of power powder was laid in front of them and the long fuse lighted.
"Now you infernal Striplings die." hissed colonel Aronburg. "You two little girls shall pay for your rashness. Off men before that keg of powder explodes."
The glandelinians dashed off full speed, the infantry following close behind. Violet and Jennie in terror struggled at the bonds. If that big keg ever exploded they would be blown to pieces and they knew it. The little girls struggled so hard that one of the kn knots came loose. This increased their desperate attempt, the little girls realising that if they did not loosen their bonds in less than a minutes time, it would then be too late. The fuse seven inches long before was only two now. At last violet was completely free but Jennie did not succeed as the glandelinians had tied her too tightly and even now thev fuse was almost completely burned to the last point. Violet indeed saw she must make haste as the flame was already half an inch to the hole. The glandelinians at a safe distance saw them getting free and the colonel uttered an imprecation.. In another moment Jennie was free, and quickly they dashed off and had gone a few score of feet when there was a report like a giant cannon shot off and a great cocoum of smoke shot a hundred feet into the air. At once there was a hue and cry as the tree crashed to the ground, and the glandelinians were again in persuit..

"Well if you ever see the like." Exclaimed the colonel. "They must be death proof. Can't even kill e'm."
"My but they are slippery." They heard another officer say. "It's impossible to hold them, even when you do get them."
The glandelinians came d- dashing after violet and Jennie at a furious gallop, cursing and swearing, and yel i yelling to them to stop. The two brave little girls did not pay any heed to their commands but ran across a wheatfield, and dashed over a fence, the infantry opening a fussilade. After them dashed the cavalry men shouting and firing bris, briskly. Their steeds being fence jumpers, sprang clear over, and surely now they began to overtake violet and Jennie. Reaching a barn violet went in, Jennie following, and securing two horses, they jumped on them, and dashed off chased and cursed at y by the glandelinian farmer. Reaching a cabbage field already covered with it they suddenly came within sight of a low row of puffing clouds of smoke in the far distance. They however kept their horses going on at a good rate, then suddenly the little girls saw countless numbers of glandelinians swarming toward them from another direction. Violet gave a startled cry.
"We have galloped right into the eneays positions....."
Hundreds of the grayscoats armed to the teeth came swarming forward and a stentorian voice cried out "surrender you little dogs or we will shoot you down. surrender....."
Violet and Jennie realized it was rashness to give themselves up for the furious glandelinians would slay them anyway, so they wheeled their horse in a flo f a flahs flash and galloped upon the men in the way, knocking them down, and causing considerable confusion. As the little girls dashed ofv in another direction, the glandelinians began firing so fiercely that the many rifle reports was incessant. Hindreds of bullets whistled about violet and Jennie, making rips in their clothes, and carrying awau away their bonnets, and Jennie was unhorsed with a slight wound in her shoulder as a bargian. But violet quickly aided her and the two rode away on the one horse.
"They must possess charms, confound them little brats." Cried one of the leaders, as nearly one thousand men swept on in persuit. "Can't catch them, can't hold them, and can't hit or kill them. Wouldn't that get your goat?!"?!..)( glandelinian horses made the dust fly with their furious galloping as they continued after the little girls, but to their amazement the little girls urged their horses over fence, after fence, and such exclamanntions as was heard among the grayscoats could not be described as they expressed their utter astonishemtn astonishment.....

It was certainly a stirring time. Suddenly far ahead violet and Jennie saw moving objects and soon burst into sight of a large force of red coats. The yelling and firing, and the thunderous gallop of the glandelinians a had aroused them, and forming into line they were already starting a fussilade.
"Forward to the rescue." They heard someone say. "Quick men. Two children are pursued....."
But as the glandelinians were about to overtake violet and her sister the redcoats halted forward opening a heavier fussilade, and bringing down many scores of the glandelinians. The survivors among the glandelinians were confused and now overwhelmed the grayscoats wheeled about and retreated precipitately.....
The battle of Journell was a complete christisn victory, glindernines army was saved and general Manley started to retreat northward once more..

During hisretreat general Manley ordered Shoeman to stem the advance of general Bicknells christians and Shoeman tried it by committing all kinds of destruction in his efforts to r try and check general Bicknell who was also advancing to make a junction with general Vivian, and the rascal even laid waste to many towns, and wrecked many trains. Plians full of tall grass was set on fire, and all children taken out of captured orphan asylumes were put to death in a most shocking manner. The survivors of the burning towns fled but all those who were glandelinian residents in Calverinia stayed with safty, by showing their flags. Nearn nearly every house was filled with the murdered christians, and the streets were covered with them to a depth of four or five feet. Even the glandelinian inhibatants joined the mobs of raiders like a roit storm and woe be to christians found in the towns. All these horrors lasted from April 21th till nearly the middle of May. Thousands of christian women and children were quicklt put to the knife. The entire pu population of the towns fled before the ruthless raiders and wept pitecusly when they saw their last homes in flames. Never was there such a scene before and Gertrude Angeline who had been going through the region in disguise as a boyscout of the enemy in hor efforts to reach general Zimmermanns army saw how the towns were smoked and burned.
The glandelinians set fire to every grassy plain, they came a across, started another forest fire, and caused wholesale devastation to thirteen big farms. Despite all the havoc of his army Shoemanns army in its retreat was very swift because he was determined that Bicknell should never be able to catchhi catch him if possible.
"This rebellion against god and all christianity must be won if I have to lay waste all the whole Calverinian country." Was his words.
Should the whole world was shocked at this when the nations hearthe news. When would this cruel war end? Would they annihio ate each other before it was ended? Or would it be necessary to make an intervention against glandelinia who was seeming bent to rage a vertible war of the worlds?
These were the questions of the other nations, time and again. They had sent many of these squadrons squadrons of ships to take all refugees off lest they also be butchered, but all the seaports captured by the foe were strongly guarded by the glandelinian fleets of warships, and shore batteries, and nothing could be done, it being evident that the glandelinians were seeing to it that no christians would escape to the other nations by the sea. The nations had never expected such a supreme war of almost unnatural war fury. Why in the first place did the Angelinian nation start the quarrel with glandelinia? And whose fault was it? glandelinia originied the evil slave slavery in the countries not belonging to her and in curred the ill feelings of her sister State Angelinia and the anger of her mother country Abbiesnnia. Abbiesnnia had repented of sparing glandelinia after she won her war in olden times and felt sorry for Angelinia, and had wrote to the glandelinian aurthorities several times that her butcheries of children must cease, and that her rebellion must be stopped or there would be a speedy repression by Abbiesnnia herself.

The Angelinian governments had also demanded fair atonement under pain of complete destruction should the rebellion be overthrown.
"Atone, atone, yes atone." Was the bitter cry. "Ye w vipers lest yo be wiped off the face of the earth by your increasing number of enemies. Cease th ese butcher ies last Angelinia and Abbiesnnia punish you like she did Condonsinia in the year of 1911. Atone, atone, before it is too late."
But glandelinia did not and was in curring the hatred a of all the nations Shoemans series of devastations was the first ever made in this section during the war. He operated toward the town of Golivar where other glandelinian divisions were preparing for raids. More orphan asylums were inthe path of the retreating glandelinians, and the whole neighborhood was in the greatest terror and panic, for the Glandelinians were laying waste to everything in their path. The poor children in these homes had not realized what horror was and knowing that the Glandelinians were cruel ruthless foes and would massacre the children, the orphan asylums were abandoned, and burned, the Glandelinians persueing, however and setting fire to more buildings and still still continueing their devastation of farms, destroying railroad tracks, wrecking trains, destroying bridges, making thousands of big fires, and sent large columns after the fleeing fugitives from the many towns abandoned. The Glandelinians even sacked public buildings, schools, and also captured many prisoners, and fairly ate up everything within their sight. For many more miles they laid waste to every thing in their path of retreat, attacking many cowboy ranches, and all those who got away told of the terrible scenes they witnessed. For many days this Glandelinian army had kept on in their retreat, capturing large herds of cattle, eating up pigs and chickens, capturing horses, and anything they could lay their hands uppon, and burning what ever they could not carry away. Countless skirmishes occured between the Glandelinians and cowboys, but the Glandelinians from their terrible numbers were always victorious, and captured prisoners by the thousand.

In the month of May Violet and Jennie had been out spying again on the foe who had halted after a long retreat near the town of Glorinia Evangelistia and had been gone for three days and then being persued by the enemy after escaping had been rescued by the Angelinians under general Snieden and the little girls had been brought before the general who was in his tent.

"Who are you two children?" Asked the general. "You seem to be celestial children from your beauty and innocence."

"We are the daughters of his excellency general Robert Vivian." Answered Violet. "Whose men are you?"

"Why we are a part of general Jennings command." Said the general. "I at first failed to recognized you little girls as your disguise puzzled us. You had gone longer than general Hanson Vivian expected, and he has sent a large force to scour the whole territory for you. The men have been searching since you disappeared, and even your sisters are worried over your long absense. You must have had a thrilling time."

"We certainly did have a thrilling time." Said Violet. "We had a narrow escape from death, having been caught three times and three times got away."

Suddenly the sound of galloping horses broke out upon the air and general Francis Bandeko was seen coming up with his force of cavarly.

"We have encountered a big force of graycoats, and they are advancing for general Hansons rear like an army of demons.. I wondered what it was, and discovered through my own boyscouts that the egemy are going to make a flank movement. We had a fierce confli t conflict with the Glandelinian cavarly, but we were unable to check them."

"Something must be done." Said general Snieden. "Let's get our forces on the double quick and encounter them ourselves."

General Snieden rode directly to his main divisions, and reaching them ordered them to advance across a plains known as White Rose plain. So general Hansons flank was saved after a desperate srruggle struggle but nevertheless general Vivian had recieved the most violent part of the foe assault as he had concentrated his army to force the enemy from Glorinia and by the pressure of the enemys series of desperate onl onslaughts his line had been badly smitten. General Shoemanns army had also halted on the extreme right of Manleys left grand division and took possession of Calton Oak swamp bridge ten miles north of Evangelinistia. On the morrow of May the second twelveth I mean the Glandelinians hu l hurled a succession of assaults upon general Hansons line and made some success securing nine of Hansons biggest guns, twenty caissons, and one battery wagon in addition to a part of a pontoon bridge train, and many scores of thousands of prisoners.

THE RESULTS OF THE BATTLE OF CALTON OAK SWAMP BRIDGE!

South of this point general Vivians right wing was bended across the region of a stream called White Rose creek or Glorinia Run and was now attacked heavily, and also badly smitten and rolled up, the enemy having made a continuous onset as to cause the christians to continually fall back. But fortunately the next day May the thirteenth general Icknell arived with his troops and the new attack of fierce indescribability was repelled first by a part of general Aldons command, while during the same moment, Callen attacked Cellans Angelinians but after five hours of titanic fighting was repulsed with the loss of eighty thousand thousand accounterments and indew indescriable numbers of men. During the same time general Shield attacked Picknells Angelinians on the left and after a hot contest the christians finally routed the assailants, who lost eighty pieces of artillery.

passing through a great number of retreating and disordered divisions general Hoodlin Sc hloeder came within range of the christian fire who concealed in an open road and protected by high breastworks poured a destructive fire for the length of fourteen miles into his advancing lines under which countless brave men and hundreds of brave officers of all rank fell. Dashing on with unfaltering steps in the face of these murderous discharges of canister and musketry, general Hank Hoodlin and Melonia Lockjaw at the head of their main divisions rushed to the charge with a yell. Moving down a precipitice ravine, leaping ditches, and ststreams, clambering up a difficult ascent, and exposed to a deadly and incessant from the intrenchments these brave and determined men pressed forward driving the christians from their well selected and fortified position.

In this charge in which upwards of fourty thousand fell killed and one hundred thousand wounded every five minutes before the face of the christians and in which three hundred and thirympisces of artillery and twen twelve regiments were captured, general Meldorfs divisions were the first to pierce these strongholds and seize the guns that the christians had not managed to drag away in time.

The shouts of triumph which rose from the brave Glandelinians as they smiled by artillery had stormed this citadel of their strength, were promptly carried from line to line and the victoro victorious issue of this assault, with the well directed fire of the Glandelinian batteries, and the successful charge of generals Calton Turner and Windor Handon j upon the christian right division determined the fortunes of the struggle at this point of Icknells army. By this time large portions of Picknells main army had come up, and the conflict within another hour was so determined and terrific that the plains and cornfields through which the soldiers fought were reaped close by the storm of bullets. It was a regular baptism of fire.

Mighty masses of Shoemans army hundreds of thousands strong each time surged forward like angry waves of the sea against Icknells whole line, which held fast like an immovable rock despite the terrific series of onslaughts, and each hundreds of then a thousands of assailants broke back like the heavy seas broken and cut to pieces by a strong breakwater breakwater. Oh the sublimity of that bloody scene, the shouting of the millions of the combatants, the thunder of scores of thousands of cannon that shook the earth.

The very positions held by Icknell to cover general Hansons reformation, and the reformation of general Vivians routed wing was crowned with artillery, which never their hurled their storm of death dealing missles to the very foot, but never theless how gallently the assailants had advanced. The air had been alive with the whistling of the shot and shell which the Glandelinian gunners sent as precurrors to the infantry infantry charge. The Glandelinians faced the wildest fire along the christian army ever imagined. They faltered and reeled, and staggered, with columns by the score torn to fragments, they rallied, again, and broke, and rallied again and again and swept wildly to the charge like a surge of insane men but in vain. Death and blood could not stand it and they retired routed and confused. Picknell in the last two hours of the conflict lost I59,I23 killed, while 345,555 were wounded. The Glandelinians lost in making the attack I52,666 in killed and 453,000 in wounded. The total losses on both sides were still more dreadful and was not given by the generals.

THE FIERCE CARNAGE ALONG THE MAIN CHRISTIAN LINE AT GLORINIA EVANGELISTIA, OR SECOND BATTLE OF CALTON OAK SWAMP BRIDGE. AND THE FOREST FIRES.

It was already night time since the battle had ceased, and Violet moving out of a large box where she had been sleeping having been aroused by a strange fiery light was startled when she saw an ominious red glow in the sky tward the southwestern forested valleys of the Mc-Hollester Run, the trees seeming to be outlined in fire, the flames so bright. In the distance could be heard the thunderi ng sounds of explosions, and at times something like hundreds of thousands of rockets seemed to be in the sky at once, and the dull red glow covered the whole half of the sky.

"It must be a forest fire." Thought violet glac glancing at the glow closely. "And it must be a big one to make a glow so bright."

Violet quickly went back to the box where her sisters lay.

"Jodie wake up." She cried. "The enemy is trying to force general Vivian back, for it seems as if they had started a great forest fire upon general Vivians rear. The glow is awfully bright, and it looks as if a whole pine forest is burning."

Jodie quickly arouse and came out. She could not see the actual fires that were burning but she realized that it was a big one alright. And rising from the horizon line was a great extensive formaidable pillar of cloud of crimson clo colar, and a queer smell was in the air. For a time they wwatched it fascinited, awed to the quick.

"It's a fearful sight." Said Joice in despair. "It must be stopped somehow."
The little girls saw men women and children rushing around helplessly from a distant town many attempting to save something in a buioding that was not yet on fire. In the meantime while asking her sisters Joice chances to glance tward the eastern horizon and uttered a cry of alarm. Far along the horizon in the northwest itself extended a dull glaring yellow streak which increased in volume and brightness. Violet at once knew what was on. It was the distant warning of the ap r approach of two of the most dreaded fors forestvfires peculiar in those regions and when sweeping the Calvorinian forests burn all before it. Their speed and fury asa as already predicted in recent fire stories was terrible and it was seldom that the strongest t rees ever stood before the blast of the fire hurricane. Higher and higher into the sky crept that dull unearthly red glow seeming to fill the air with an oppressive radience of red color, while tremendous pillars of smoke rolled up clear to the zenith.

The fire burned for two weeks, but did not go tward the christian lines. In the month of June general Hanson decided to force his way through the region of Glorinia Evangelinia or Evangelistia and so again the whole christian army contended against the Clandelinians. All this while the forest fire was still burning and suddenly violet who was racing to give warning to general Hanson that now a portion of the conflargration was moving tward hs his line felt a sharp whiff of hot scourching wind which smote like the blast of a furnace upon her cheeks, while the distant roar of battle was now making the ground tremble. As she drew nearer to the christian lines with her sisters, the roar of the distant battle grew louder, while again came the sharp puffs of hot wind which succeeded each other in endless succession, while a seried rank of black and white clouds of smoke appeared below the black mass stretching way across the sky overhead a signal of the fast approaching forest fire. Fifteen minutes passed and the clouds of smoke was reddened by the glow of the fire which caused the christians to notice it themselves. Overhead the cloud had become a frightful black pall, but amid the ominous whistling hum of bullets from somewhere violet and her six sisters continued on. Then a strange snarling roar unlike any sound ever heard in battles or windstorms swelledabove the roar of th e conflict, which also grew louder and louder, but nevertheless general Hanson had seen the terrible fiery menance, and he was bound to stand untill he won, for itvwas no use to ret reat, as the only safty was to force his army forward tward the enemys line. In another moment a screaming tempest of canister and shells tore through whole sections of the enemy and never before did violet and her sisters hear such an uproar of battle as they comtinued on de drawing nearer to the christian lines. By exploding xhells giant trees were literally torn up by the roots, and several monsterous pine trees were flung several hundred feet, and two of them thrown against a sloping bank by the force of the explosion of a gang-gang-shell with every vestage of branches and leaves completely blown away, a d and the barks of the tree trunks skinned.
The Angelinians who were repelling the torn and shattered Clandelinian columns howled and screamed like millions of demons and wolves. All about the little girls branches and twigs poured down in torrents at every shell burst among the tree tops and the ground was strewn with the wreckage of shatt ered trees. Regular clouds of sticks leaves and branches were blown about by the terrific explosions like a snowstorm the fury of the explosionsxseeming to tear everything to pieces, and so dangerously dangerous was it of proceeding any further that violet and her sisters halted, not knowing what to do. Half an hour passed and still the battle raged with appalling fury.
As violet and her sisters were looking for a small re ravine for protection there was suddenly a good distance before them a bright red arch of light whichvflared which flared before violet and her sisterd turning simultaneously into a white dazzling sheet of flashing which illumined the whole surface of the ground, and insta ntaneously there was a great explosive roar seeming to split the earth, or which sounded like the world blowing to pieces, and violet and her sisters found themselves outstretched on the ground, their horses rolling over and over having been thrown down by the concussion of the bursting high explosive. When the little girls who had been dazed recovered themselves to they could tell by the sounds that the distant battle was raging with redoubled fury and worse yet the battle showed no signs of abating only increasing in fury, the distant yelling of the combatants being louder than the noise of distant firing and the very noise of the battle itself at times sounded as if it was going to tear the whole world to pieces.

By the great explosion of the gang-gang-shell which had thrown violet and her sisters and th eir horses to the ground trees of all kinds had been splintered into wreckage thousands of th e stoutest pines and hemlock trees in the distance having been stripped ov of every leaf and branch and the uproar of it all had been bewildering to violet and her sisters. And at every explosion of a shell it seemed as if some great force was trying to split the earth on the inside, and w every time trees by the score some where was hurled to the ground by with a mighty crash. Still the distant combatants screamed, yelled, and shouted so loudly and wildly, that it seemed as if legions of demons were bent on the destruction of the world.

hundreds of ammunition wagons, artillery and machine guns struck by shells within sight of violet and her sisters blew up adding to the din. Panic and confusion was everywhere now everything seeming to be blown down by the shell storm from the enemys batteries, trees still standing were shatt ered and shivered in the twinkling of an eye, and havoc of every description was on. General Hanson vivian did his utmost to stem the panic and then was knocked down on his face by a falling tree, but escaped any injury. Everything was totally wrecked with within the battlefield. Scores of thousands of trees had been blown down by shells, and smashed farm houses, and all the ammunition wagons, and long lines of provision trains were turned topsy turvy, and hundreds of wagons were without wheels. General Baldwinson who was tri ing to rally his own confused columns was blown on top of a pile of wreckage by the explosion of a shell and sent sprawling head over heels into fragments of wreckage, receiving many severe injuries. General Henry Jrnnings was internally injured, when a shell tore his headquarters completely open letting out all its interior, and general Joe Gannon was mortally wounded when thrown two hundred and fifty feet by the concussion of a high explosive though it exploded at the distance of a thousand yards from him.

The shells were tearing away every kind of shelter from the christian lines, from their trenches were covered with windrows of heavy wreckage, and millions had fal fallen at this point Heddas Clandelinians had been finally overwhelmed at this section of the battle line by general Hansons desperate fighters so general Jasinia was hastened to the scene to help the Clandelinians with four hundred thousand men, but five hundred thousand Angelinians were concentrated upon him by general Hanson, the christians being under general godfred, and indeed the struggle was now more dreadful. Meanwhile general Mc-Candier with nine hundred thousand men came up and were bloodier became the st struggle, general Mc-Cander with five hundred and fifty five thousand men falling heavily upon Shoemans left grand division under general Henry Leighee and a most cruel sangu nary co flict conflict raged along this point also. General vivian himself seeing large bodies of Clandelinians advancing tward White rose creek hurried heavy reinforcements to Picknell, and the christians having mined the creek before let them go and the explosions sounded like a thousand volcanic eruptions.
The struggle for White rose creek was terrific and exceedingly bloody but general Vivians Angelinians held it firmly against the most fierce herculean assaults.
From across the plains heavy divisions were thrown against general Lichees lines with awful force, and whole brigades during the marvelious conflict were crushed to ajors. For over sixteen hours the battle raged with unabated fury and fi nally the landelinians all along general vivians front were thrown back wit with the most stupendous losses.
Along the right and center g of general Hansons army where Shoeman and other Clandelinian generals were attacking the deadliest part of the battle still raged. Against these christians Augustine and Lichee advanced with great vigor and during a fearful struggle which raged for one more hour without one moments abatement, and the losses appalling, the Clandelinians succeeded a in pe e penetrating and holding for several minutes against a merciless assault the position on the extreme right of general Hansons command, but the concentration of so many reinforcements, from the now inactive line of general vivians command finally drove the Clandelinians out of Hansons lines, and some good distance back. Thus ended the second desperate battle of Evangelinia or Glorinia Evangelistia where both sides had fought with the most stubborn fury for one whole day. The whoce christian loss was four million, one hundred and fifty nine thousand, and ninty three. The losses of the Clandelinians exceeded that being 5,I95,299. General Hanleys whole army by the eighteenth of May retreated slowly though general Picknell had threatened to throw his whole force once against the christian army under Baldwin who had followed him closely, while the others in the rear were coming on behind.

THE BATTLE OF CARNAVAL.

Hoys rear guard however soon halted at the town of Carnaval and after a few days Six hundreds of th ousands of th e Clandelinians crawled against the long ranged storm of bullets, and dug their way from trench to trench against the terrific hail of shell fire, and carried the length of the battle line after four hours desperate fighting. Whole corps were massacred despite the brainwork of the Clandelinian generals, but against storms of bullets, that carried five miles and a half, and the terrible fire of the christian fi field guns no Clandelinian dared charge as men charged at Os mondonson, for here the christian fire was more terrific and exhilarating.
The advance had to be made inch by inch, n and trench by trench. Guns by the thousand were galloping into position, gunners and horses were killed by militudes, caissions exploded in hundreds, and a battery commander perfering death to the loss of his guns, fired a final broadside with his own men against the overwhelming charge of the enemy, then he too fell.

Thirty hundred gang-gang-shells and high explosives within an hours time macert macerated this charge however, without the help of infantry, and it made Picket and Carnaval hills so untenable that four hundred thousand Angelinian infantry had nothing to do but march out and take possession, the foe once more resuming their a retreat. ? Manley retreated tward the city of Phelantob Phelantontonburg wherg another Clandelinian army marcu marched down from the north from Mc-Whirther, and the Clandelinians in capturing the town seized the entire child population of the c city, drove off the old men and women, and slew the religious of all orders, and learning of the progressive victories of the christians in the Cedernine cap campaign going on now in general, general Manley for revenge, as soon as his army broken up and shattered reached the town immediatelybon the first day of June sent forward a decree, declaring that all christian children captured, no matter who they be, or no matter who they belonged to, or what nationalty they were, were to be put to death, and also any of his soldiers and subjects who would be loyal to Angelinia or step out of the rebellion from cowardice.

All the while now during the battle of Carnaval a reg reign of terror had went on in the city of Phelantonburg. Even the streets of every small town captured in its immediate vinicity were filld with dead children and now the massacres were threatening to spread throughout the whole western portion of the country in the hands of the enemy. General Vivian who was adven advancing on the city was shocked when he heard of this whole sale butchery of children, which of course did not as yet reach the full of Huebaum Manleys and Johnston Jackson Jacekn Manleys armies who were coming to reinforce John Manley. It was one of the greatest and most shocking massacre that had ever occured thus far. The horrors were indescribable. The children seized from their frantic mothers were killed in all ways imaginable. Many were burned to death at the stake, and others were cut to pisces and left lying where they had been thrown, and many children looked as if they had gone through the meat chopper. Even little girls from the ages of nine, eight and younger were tied down stark naked, and a spade full of red hot live coals would be laid on their bellies. Many of the children had been chocked to death with as it seemed iron hands for the looks in their faces were horried. Naked opened bodies were seen lying around in the streets by the thousand. Indeed the screams and pleads of the victims could not be described and thousands of mothers went literal lly insane over the scene or even committed sucide.Even one Clandelinian soldier told his commissioned officer that he still carried a child heart in his coat pocket, and produced it to give proof.About nearly 56,789 children were literally cut up like a butcher does a calf after being strn strangled or slain in all ways, and indeed the sights of the bloody windrows with their intestines exposed or gushing out was a sight that no one could be bear to witness without losing their reason. Hearts of children were hung by strings to the walls of houses. So many of the bleeding bodies had been cut up that i they looked as if they had gone through a machine of knives, and one street was covered with a sea of dead childrens bodies and mangled fragments of every vit l vital describable. In the curbing of the streets and at some points along the sidewalks blood lay like water after a thunderstorm .

71

CHAPTER [illegible].

THE BATTLE OF MT SLADER, OR PHELANTONBURG.
FRIGHTFUL SLAUGHTERS ON THE FIRST OF JUNE, AND TERRIFIC CARNAGE IN THE DARGUN LANES.....

e city of Phelantonburg wz was over fourty miles away from the city of rwell right close to the great Mc-Hollester Run River and it had taken many rs for the christian armies which had been heavily reinforced by other divisions reach the point. General Bicknell took possession of a long range of high precipies lls called the Slader ridge and here he was confronted by a part of Manleys army nder general Robert Shoeman one of the generals who had reinforced Manley at helantonburg. General Bicknell was eager to revenge the terrible blow struck by the ndelinians in the city of Phelantonburg where not a single child had been left live. General Vivians main army took possession of the Grahams Lanes, and Hanson llowed his in front of the town of Ricksonia, called by the enemy Cheese Chesse wn. Three days had passed after the concentration of the christian armies, and ks on the fourth while cannons were being run into position along general Hansons ines a scout came galloping up, and the christian officers pausedc an instant, wonder g that his excitement was all shout. There was the sound of most heavy firing the distance in the direction of general Vivians lines which was 23,456,000 rong and which was increasing and drawing nearer. There was a startled look in e scouts face as she cried out;

"General Shoeman is attacking general O' Hara's Manleys right wing on General rians main left grand division, and his whole right is also advancing to attack neral Vivians main center. Hundreds of thousands of Clandelinians have seized our ecupied works and fortifications before we knew it."

These christian generals listened d for only an instant, and what ever they d been doing they stopped, and jumping on their horses galloped tward the main lines to sound the alarm.

"Quick general Bicknell." Cried general Charles Brown, as he galloped off to er his troops Forward.....

e went quickly reached general Bicknells headquarters, and two generals being nt ran tward the stairs stair case swiftly decending to the room below, to the excited scout. Fast as they were they were barely ahead of six others, and the who dashed up from the lower stairway shouted for Bicknell. Angelinian generals ind every mean moment and aroused by the excitement, and the terrific firing in the ision of general Vivians lines general Bicknell came rushing out of his room, telephones were ringing like mad.

"What is the matter!" "Demanded general Bicknell." "what is all this noise and citement!"

"Shoeman has made a fierce attack." Cried the scout. Twenty seven thousand of our men ve been taken prisoners and general O' Hara's divisions are being overwhelmed by e assailants. Someboy somebody must warn general Vivian who is with Hanson in his adquarters."

In the meantime the Slader Ridge formed a strategic point in the christian line, a occupation meaning that the Angelinians would have to evacuate their main sitions on either side and reform their lines of battle at a disadvantage to the ole plan of offense and defense. The main christian infantry under Bicknell s a position along the crest supported by five hundred mitrailleusdes that fired hundred shots a mimute for oneg gun. Shoeman could not send human flesh against hatchest of lead no matter how many he sent forward. Supporting the infantry was large regiment of heavy guns and these held down the fire of the Clandelinian batteries-while the other pi pumped a storm of gang-gagnshells a hindred per minute o the Clandelinian positions making such a hell of smoke and death that the delinian riflemen could not fire. Despite this however the Clandelinian infantry ring that general Vivian was engaged with the rest of their Comrades, gradually ed forward in a long extensive wave sixteen deep, but the christian columns under neral Charles Brown quickly came to reinforce general Bicknell and the battle at e became general without even a skirmish.. When the charge was near the guns neither side dared to fire for fear of injuring their own men. Under the canopy dissipating smoke the issue was settled with bayonets. The Clandelinians swarming ward like a sea of gray ants seemed to get the ridge, but no. In the midst the triumph, under crashes, and thunder, and flashes of shell explosions broke ong the victors. The christian gun fire was suddenly reinforced. It concentrated e crest. Machine guns and Mitrailleuses posted back where the christian infantry rallying and reforming played their stream of death and destruction. The Clandelinia delinians on account of so much smoke could not see to fire back, they dropped in multitudes as they tried to intrench, and soon they had to go for the christian gun fire made the ridge untenable. The attack was desperately repulsed, and now Bicknell decided to press his advn advantage by crushing Shoemann before he could renwe the attack. So one division after another of the Angelinians advanced tward the retiring columns and after cutting them to pieces, and scattering them pressed on but nearing the enemys works came upon a large solid line of graycoats under general Robert Killroy. The fighting was unspeakably terrific but the Angelinians overwhelming in numbers continued to press on and the gray line began to suffer such tremendous losses that the left grand division gave way and retreated in the most amazing confusion. A heavier artillery fire broke from the supporting christian batteries under general Phillip Rinn which increased the tumult tumult the cannon fire killing and maiming sections of the retreating Glandelinians and scattering them like chaff before the wind. The main gray line still held firm but like living tempest tossed waves the Angelinians hurled assault upon assault and soon the landelinians in the front of the main line recoiled, and then the main line being also badly thinned wavered.

1865.

While this was going on general Charles Brown was sent with five hundred thousand men to attack the other portion of general Killroys Glandelinian division. It was the purpose of general Bicknell to surround Killroy and force him and his army into a surrender.

Already after the battle had raged for four hours, i the whole line of the enemys heavy fire extended for thirty miles with a furious tumultious uproar which sounded like the exploding of ten thousand cannon incessantly neither swaying either to the right or left and the havoc of the most frightful description galled the right of the attacking christian line. General Browns line was gall,s galled, and wounded general Charles Brown had to keep undershelter ordering his men to cease advancing, but to halt and concentrate.

"This fire of the Glandelinians is dreadful." He said. "Our troops cannot sweep across this exposed series of wheatfuelds without heavier forces. I It is only like sucide."

Whole columns of Browns men seemed to be melting away rapidly, and now explosions occured like volcanic eruptions, and the vibration of the cannons of both sides, and the th ousands of explosions were carried to towns with unusual force. Dishes were set rattling in all the houses, and even thrown from cubbards and pantries, water leaders were ko knocked from the roofs of several cottages, and windows were shattered and doors flung i open and shut with a banging at each vibration, while beds, chairs and furniture of every description were made to leap and dance around the rooms of the houses, and no one in the houses could keep their feet. The projectiles were plainly seen ricochoting in the sky miles and miles away from the battle field. The uproar was most deafening.

Charles Browns divisions had halted but the others unde under general Maldn Maldonia still pressed on very slowly, this general having over six hundred thousand men who advanced in parellel lines, and general Bicknells heart seemed to stop beating as he watched this brilliant charge. One of the main divisions moved on heading straight for the strong line of graycoats posted on the advanced part of the main Glandelinian position. Shoeman amazed and alarmed over this great advance stood rooted to the spot.

He wondered if he could hold the position and repulse the assailants. All his inactive infantry were hurried up and one third was placed on the right. On came the Angelinians in shoemans front, and Bicknell was thrilled with horror at the expectation of what was to come.

Now the enemys lines let loos loose a fire that disolved the front christian line within a half an hour but as the survivors continued to press onward, Bicknell himself decided to pour hell upon the Glandelinians gunners to stop their fire if he could. With piercing heartrending and even bloodcurdling yells the massive survivors continued the attack with indescribable fury, and Bicknell had hopes now that the enemys l position would be carried. Bicknells batteries were now massed upon the foe positions but Shoeman had enough guns to reply with and he did so and if he was not shaking the stars out of heaven with the din he was at least trying to make the attempt, the whole line of battle being in fierce graduer the frightful roar reverbrating like the frightful storm of explosions itself from shells which shook the very ground at Bicknells feet, and almost throwing him to the ground and for a minute or two nothing could hardly be seen so thick was the smoke of shell explosions and active chian of cannons. The Glandelinian guns were also massed upon the right of the christian assailants which destroyed vast crowds of multitudes of Angelinians and now it seemed apparent that millions of dollars damage was done in many towns along the river front which felt the viberations most keenly, the damage being among window panes, dishes, by the wrecking of houses, and hundreds of thousands were driven out of their homes for fear the houses would cave in on them, children screamed, and there was a general uorpar in those towns also.

long wave of christians being cut to pieces by the Glandelinian cannon and infantry began to waver and then fall back in haste, the army of Free Masons pressing after them. Bicknell never saw such a scene of confusion and flight as was now witnessed. whole line of christians who had surged forward having been crushed to fragments, All back swiftly whole columns under different commanders rushing forward like a mass river panic stricken, and completely demorilized. To increase the tremendous confusion the human waves in gray were pressing after them. General Bicknell at once threw heavy forces forward to cover the retreat and in making a violent assault that carried all before it once more the Glandelinians nevertheless paid dearly for their success for six of their best generals Meldonia Blake, Henry Cain Maldinia Phillip, Calsoe Constonia, and Frank Bloocy were killed, and general Meldonia Franklin the main Glandelinian commander next to Shoeman was wounded mortally.

The scene all along the line was now fearful for despite it all general Maldonia was the only one whose divisions were trying to rally, and despite desperate efforts of the Glandelinians to force themselves through Maldonias line was in vain, for the panic stricken Angelinians at other points, made an indescribable confusion of a mixup, and the Glandelinians though still advans advancing was now getting the worse of it, expecially in losses, and gave good signs that their success would be short lived. The Angelinians who were in panic retreated like chaff, and general Bicknell saw indeed that the attack had been repulsed. Nothing, but disconcertment, demorilization, and confusion was witnessed. At that moment general Herdrude came up to Bicknell all exoited.

"The advancing Host of Glandelinians seem to be like the very swords of the destroying angels." He cried.

"Yes they are sweeping unchecked." Said general Bicknell. "How am I going to stop them."

Already the lower fields seemed to be overflowing with the persueing Glandelinians though Bicknell had concentrated so heavy an artillery fire that the explosions so numerous stripped the sides of every tree, but nevertheless despite the terrible destruction of lives and property the furious Glandelinians could not be checked, the Angelinians fleeing across the upper portions of the fields like sheep. It was one o-clock by this time the battle having started at eleven o-clock, and general Bicknell saw that the rapidly advancing Glandelinians were spreading out, and several of the Glandelinian columns advancing from an opposite direction to head them off were almost hidden in the smoke balls from his terrible rain of sh shrapnell shells poured upon them. General Bicknell was indeed appalled at this terrible disaster. He had done his best to concentrate all his heaviest guns upon the assailants but all the parks of artillery did not enou encourage general Bicknell.

"What shall I do? What shall I do?" He moaned pitsously. "Herdrude tell me. We have got to check the infuriated Glandelinians some way some way and press them back to the panic stricken line can reform. Herdrude my savior tell me what am I to do."

Other columns of Glandelinians that had appeared caused a scene more appalling than ever. Hotly persued by the armies in the rear, and the advancing army of death on the opposite side the Angelinians in their desperate attempt to retreat in another direction began to trod upon one another, and for many miles the air was filled with shrieks, and horrid outcries, mingled with the wicked curses of the Glandelinians. Cries of pain, rage and terror could be heard from where general Bicknell st ood. The distant cannon fire which had filled the air with an awe inspiring roar had ceased now and all was quiet.

"Let me take my divisions to their aid .": Pleaded Herdrude. "I have enough men to hold them at bay untill general Maldonia reforms his only remaining divisions."

"It is too dangerous." Answered general Bicknell with tears in his eyes. "You might get killed."

"I'll take care of myself." Answered Herdrude. "Somebody must check thes, and my men can do it. Let me go please general. You know my ability."

"Would it not be better to sent your men under some other general." Asked Bicknell with emotion. "You are more dear to me than the others, and I hate to see you get killed."

"But they trust only me." Declared Hert Herdrude. "Hurry give your permission before it is too late."

"All right go." Said Bicknell. "I'll pray for you and wish yu good luck."

At half past one general Herdrudes divisions arived to the aid of Maldonia. His own division consisting of five hundred thousand men formed a long line at the left angle of the larg e wheatfields and poured a sudden fire that cut a thousand gaps in the enemys lines. This checked their impetious advance, the Glandelinians were then thrown back by a furious counter charge in double line, and Maldonia was rescued, but the other retreating christian columns could not be rescued or rallied and they had to be withdrawn to the rear. After all was reformed, the army not daring to assail Gladers ridge retired to remain on the defensive.

There was a lull for fully an hour and then general Bicknell having reformed the shattered divisions which had made s suffered such a disasterous repulse decided to try again and throw one whole quarter of his division forward and assail Shoemans position. His staff officers did not agree to this declaration, as they believed from the recent disaster that Shoemans position was unassailable. But they could not dispute him, he was bound to do it, and they were told to keep their mouths shut and say not a word. If Herdrude had not agreed then Bicknell would have refrained from the assault but Herdrude was revengeful of over his own losses and desired to see the enemy thrashed. At two thirty the second assault was started.. The Landelinians were still intrenched behind their breastworks, and now the Angelinians rushed against them in more massive lines than before yelling with the fury and noise of a thousand cyclones, but the whole gray line let go with the terrifying roar of hell storms, and the first first christian surge over ten miles long was riven through and through and torn and shattered into huge gaps. This portion recoiled in confusion, but the remainder rallied them with might and main and then regathering, again advanced in parellel lines presenting a sublime sight. Furious and stupendous was this great advance, and Shoeman could not hardly believe it to be real. The line was again cut to pieces, but the remainder which continued the attacked appeared like a regular moving nation of multitudes in jagged line, and this line extended for thirteen miles, and a third time it was cut to pieces. But on rushed the survivors, the other parellel line consisting of two million three hundred thousand men advancing swiftly toward Shoemans right, while the remainder of the surges which were kind of bended, tore like a screaming typhoon toward Shoemans center.

Every man was yelling like a demons and such a volume of sound could not be described.. They advanced as steadily as a steam roller or seemingly like the charge of St Michael's army against Satens host.

One of Shoemans staff rushed up to him and said;

"They are advancing like a screeching wave of demons.We had better do something to check them for they are stronger in force this time, and it seems as if one quarter of Bicknells whole force is attacking."

Six regiments of Shoemans cannon all Mitrailleuses were trained upon the nearest surge and a perfect sheet of canister was added to the stream of shot and shell all this spreading like water from a fire hose which was poured also among the second surge , and then adding to this gang-gangshells were poured upon them and bursting their fragments with hornets of bullets that they carried made according to caliber from one hundred to two hundred little projectiles also spread like water from a hois hose with such a scream in their thier high veli velocity that it rasped the spinal column of the survivors, macerating the first two long ten mile surges and almost wiping them out. Being mowed down in tens of thousands the survivors of these two surges wavered, but the other sections having come nearer continued to advance with the fury of savages and the firing along the Free Mason line now became so fierce and deadly that the Angelinians were appalling and a pz part of the right of the line of assault recoiled. The whole massive l christian line was torn asunder, and then to fragments by the annihilating fire, but the others amid the dreadful carnage pushed on giving the other three torn and mangled lines time to reform or to cover their retreat.The Angelinians were half suffocated in the thick smoke caused by the barrg barrage, but nevertheless they continued on and reached the works catching thousands of the desperate defenders by their throats and strangling them.

Amid all the tumult the works along the right of Shoemans line was now carried after a fierce hand to hand fight all along the line. Along Shoemans left the battle was something awful. Ten thousand infantry men advancing on foot and on horseback had been completely annihilated, all the horses downed also, and one of the main line of assault two miles long was torn to fragments and the ground was paved with hundreds of thousands of dead and wounded. This line w wavered, but the remainder at another section continued the desperate assault, and general Reeses line subjected to the full force of the enemys fire entirely disappeared. Along general Edwin Gunters gray lines and also of that under general Lewis Reeves a million shi shots per minute were poured upon the advancing christians and their line was shaken by the uproar.

Like an avalanch of gray dso demons general Luminaris reinforced Reeves line and all hopes for the christians to win the assault seemed nil; nil. The other four torn waves were being rallied but they did not dare to advance any further against such a fire for the whole region was in a tumut tumultious uproar. The assault was a failure. All this was unaccountable, fearful. The battle of Mt Glader had raged with indescribable fury along a line of twenty miles, and nine hundred and fifty unamed generals had fallen killed or wounded. Five of the broken and shattered lines were retiring in haste, but nevertheless, the last two were still keeping up theattack though more than two thousand cannon seemed to be in action along Shoemans lines now from the din of the cannon alone. But at last these two surges also wavered and came back in confusion.

"It can't be done." moaned Bicknell."It can't be done.The battle is lost."

But then general Herdrude came riding up and hearing what he said was filled with fear. He saw the retreating lines, and the sea of dead and wounded. The awful carnage was slackening, and all thesurvivors were coming back to declare themselves beaten. Bicknell had not as yet thrown in his whole force and Herdrude know it. It was already after three o-clock and Bicknell decided to try it again. He had declared war to Herdrude but this time Herdrude was not of the opinion as he feared the same result, for Shoeman had a good position and regiments of artillery.

"Why not try their left rear?"Asked Herdrude."We cannot hope to succeed by frontal attacks on so strong a position. We ought to make a left flank movement."

"It would be of no use."said Bicknell."I might not as well attack at all as I only fear the same result. Its better to remain where I am as it is also impossible for the enemy to oust me out of my strong position."

"It's wiser."said Herdrude."But why not provoke Shoeman to make another attack? He then can d no doubt sent an extra force to take his position while he is attacking the ridge. If not now why not do so to morrow and let the other forces have a rest for a day."

But Bicknell did notbelieve that Shoeman would attack. He knew better and declared that the first day of the battle was lost. He had lost in those assaults seven hundred and fifty five thousand five hundred and fourty three in killed while six hun dred million seven hundred and fifty five thousand, five hundred and fourty three were either severely, slightly, or mortally woulded, or disabled for life. The Landelinians lost nine million, five hundred seventy nine thousand, nine hundred and eighty nine in killed and wounded. The loss of prisoners was few as well as on the christian side.

"Was not that day a terrible one."Asked Violet the next morning when she arouse from her cot in the tent."We have seen large forces make two great assaults upon Shoemans position yesterday from where we were posted and they had been repulsed."

"Yes but we should worry."Said Joice."The battle has not as yet started if we say this. It was only a squabble. General Hanson has been advancing yesterday and had arrived last night with his forces whose cavarly took general Reeve Scanlons Landelinian position.

"Yes but he will get repulsed if he attacks to day despite h his numbers"said Angeline."And yesterday you know he general Brown got severely wounded in the first attack on shoemans position."

"Nevertheless general Hanson will have to do some of his own action or all is lost we won't capture Phelantob Phelantonburg or Manleys army whom we are again trying to surround."Said Angeline.

"You are right."Declared Catherine. "General Vivian our father tried to wrest the enemy positions out of the grahams lanes yesterday morning but also failed to do it. If the enemy attack Boswell Hanson ought to have some force ready to restorm repulls attackers."

THE BATTLE AT DARGINS LI LANES.

JUNE THE FIRST.

At about nine o-clock that morning general Kindernine seeing the enemy taking up a new position on the Logan plains sougsouth of Dargin Lanes rushed his forces forward to renew the battle, but the enemy was already extending his lines toward general Galt Sith C Richards line. The attack of Kindernines troops was as desperate as an attack could be made, and the battle again fearful, but reports came in to Kindernine that daring to repell a counter charge of the enemy which Kindernine did not believe would come, general Robert Bicknell Francis on his own right had been severely wounded, probably mortally, and that his whole wing had been thrown into confusion, and that the arival of one of general Robert Grahams divisions was the only means of preventing a disaster, and that general Boswell Buster Johnston who had come up to the rescue had lost two quarters of his command, and was he himself wounded.....At this conjuncture general Zoe Hedda Zimmermann, was ordered forward with his Angelinians who moved through a Peach Orchart but encountered a Landelinian artillery posited there by the foe general called Francis Callions and his whole common command caught in a trap was threatened with annihilation. General Kindernine then advanced a whole of his first grand division General Kindernine forming these columns into one solid line, which soon rolled upon the enemy like a tidal wave, but nevertheless could not drive the foe back, and two other christian generals were wounded.....

1569.

General Cose Costellio Johnston at this moment rushed up a regiment of artillery which was unlimbered and these checked general Kindernines charge. But during the inferno of slaughter this Clandelinian general was shot dead from his horse and general later took his place. Kindernines, force was ripped i open, and then shattered, and the survivors began to waver. Zoe Hedda Zimmermann was killed and his men withdrew in a panic.

So fierce was the conflict at this point that it seemed as if the whole world was on a rampage. Kindernines whole line had reformed and made a second charge but was cut to pieces and again way ered and fell back, but a third time they rallied and went to it with redoubled fury. General Custer Hellers line had also rallied and stormed with the fury of their own assault. General Maurice Costellio saw indeed that it was going to be a difficult matter to check the enemy or drive them back from their position on the Dargins lanes the struggle along this porp portion of the christian line being in full sway and increasing with fearful ferocity, and now general Stanislaw coming up with his own regiment of artillery joined in the desperate assault but fell severely wounded as he cut up the enemys lines. Busters line was again wavering, but nevertheless the Clandelinians still had the other christian columns to contend with. Then to make matters worse general Joseph Pickey arived with a battery of machine guns, and now as the christian fire was bginning to tell and had almost mowed down the whole front line in the advance, the Clandelinians began to waver themselves, and general Stanislaw on their side tried to rally them. The These Clandelinians however fell back while vast numbers of Clandelinian dead and wounded were left where they fell.

Recieving still more reinforcements under generals Jennings, and Snydier the Angelinians pressed after the retiring enemy the Angelinians capturing the cannon and massing them upon the Clandelinians as they fled.. The Clandelinians in retreating seemed to change into one vast mulitude, the Angelinians spreading out and forming one vast line.

There was a lull for about an hour after this christian success, and then Kindernine ordered the forces forward to carry the enemys second line of positions..

So when the attack was resumed several of the Clandelinian divisions became ppanic stricken and retreated in confusion, shouting and yelling like madmen. Nevertheless reinforcements was being quickly rushed to general Stanislaw and the other christian forces ab and being too heavily rumbered the Clandelinians fell back still further. One of the Clandelinian columns made a stand to cover the retreat, but the christians continued to advance, the Clandelni landelinians being pressed back. The christian advance was indeed irrestible the enemy being, driven back for over a mile several of their columns being scattered abroad. The ravaging carnage had been fearful.

General Reeses christian force also pressed on successful but Reese was killed and general Easumindia also and to the enemy reinforcements came up under general Limberger Cheese and the Clandelinians now rallied and showed more desperate resistance. But still the Angelinians pressed on. On the left of the line of advance the Clandelinians became demorilized from the pressure of the assault and fled like panic stricken sheep, the Angelinians along this point carrying all before them. General Limbergers center was attacked with con contempetious fury and also was hurled back and the main Clandelinian batteries under general Rout Pu Roulettes was captured.. Kindernine was successful at all points a second time however for again the Clandelinians had to withdraw and this indeed had been a regular charge of death for general Kindernine had lost ninty thousand men within the space of one quarter of an hour.

There was now another lull which lasted two hours, and then Hanson ordered general Kindernine to throw his whole entire division if possible against the Masonic lines under general Manley, and assail his right wing.. The Clandelinians under at this point was under general Herst. Kindernine threw the attack upon the enemy but for a time the christian assault was partly broken by the fire of the enemy, but Limbergers division which had rallied at this point was in danger of being hemmed in by the Angelinians, reinforced as they were, and so their line broken and shattered at all points Limbergers Clandelinians hastily retired leac ing their long line of trenches full of dead and wounded, and over the works the christians swarmed pressing on in overwhelming numbers after the retiring Clandelinians.

But unfortunately ag the fortunes of war goes their success was not to last. A stupendous force of Clandelinians advanced to Limbergers aid, and after a fiercer conflict general Kindernines advance was staggered. These Clandelinians who came up were under general Cornsce Bicknell whose line extended for over seventeen miles, and advanced upon the christians in brilliant array. Even reaching out in three seperate wings Bicknells entire force of over five million men successfully advanced against the ten million Angelinians, sweeping through and across the Dargins lanes, for a terrible wide extent.

General Kindernine saw this advance of the foe and ordered general Maurice Costellio, and Costellio Benligan to go thto the aid of those beaten.

1569

Allen Shoeman on the christian side had covered the retreat of the main christian line, but now he was pressed back by Bicknells Clandelinians but division after division was sent to the aid of the hard pressed christian troops, and all these columns being concentrated against the enemy soon held the Clandelinians at bay, though a whole- sale massacre now seemed to ensue. The whole front line of the christian force was still completely shattered, and continued to retire, the battle on the second day now having reached its fullest fury, the Clandelinians now advancing against general Benly Benligan and Costellio, Bicknells line forming into a wave across the whole battle field, and as the Angelinians still continued to repell the counter attack general Strabrook west and Allen Shoeman were dangerously wounded. Never theless the whole-christian line held and soon such a concentration of christians was started that Bicknells line slowly gave way, and the Angelinians finally drove Bicknell entirely from the region cutting his Clandelinian division to pieces, and sending his whole divisions flying like frightened sheep. So as it goes, general Kindernine was able to lick a bigger force and capture a stronger position, that the Bicknell on the christian side failed to do on the first day of the battle.

In the evening while the batt le was still go n going on with Bicknell retreating Violet and her sisters were at general Robert Vivians headquarters, whose line that day was inactive.

"Even though we repulsed general Bicknells last attack, and carried his two positions we did not make as much success as we wouglh ought to on this line." He said to general Hanson who came in at that moment to talk over the matter, and with the report that the christians had assailed the enemy like a storming tornado.." General Bicknell failed to carry the enemys works below the fields fronting Mt Glader, and unless these are carried, or the Grahams Lanes taken the battle will never be won."

"Yes and you ought to imagine what we met with." Contradicted general Vivian his brother. "It was worse than I thought...."

"I have a mind to have general Manleys center stormed to morrow, or as soon as I can get the sufficient number to do it." Said geberal Hanson Vivian. "Here is the largest portions of Dargins lanes and if we can obtain it the enemys whole position at that point will be ours to morrow night."

"But the center is the strongest of the enemys line." Protested general Vivian. "We ought to continue the attack on the left, and if possible, assault the Center simultaneously, and not wait a moment as soon as daylight breaks."

General Hanson knitted his brow in perplexity. General Robert Vivian was his abled army leader and his chief adviser, but to have that massacre continue along the left flank seemed foolish, but then it seemed as he declared, the only means of success. Hanson followed out his own instructions and not heeded his brothers at this point the battle would not have turned out as id it did. General Vivian saw that he was perplexed, and said;

"Why not make a change of forces.! Our center is bulging in front and rear with too many men, and could support the lines so hard pressed with the enemys tremendous counter assaults, should they make any. If you do this the left can stand the test. Or maybe we could flank general Bicknell Bicknell out of his third strong position, and then get out blows in at Manley, and if victorious sweep upon Manley and crush him."

"I know what is the best thing to do." said another general. "Send the Vivian girls with a large regiment of boyscouts to watch the movements of either wing. They can discover the best place to att ack."

Violet's eyes sparkled.

"I guess I will "Said general Vivian. "It is already coming on tward late evening and though day is saft safer to do this than night, concerning the way these furious Clandelinians have, it is not yet dark and they can accomplish it before dark."

He called them over and said;

"Now I would like you to go and scout on these two wings, but be supremely f careful, that you are not discovered by the enemy. When you find out write down on this slip of paper I'm handing you what you discover and hasten back, or send a man or boy to start with it if you are delayed by something. If you succeed I'll place you little girls under the greatest honor....."

"I'll do my best, and so will my sisters." Said Violet with a happy smile. "I shall go inside the enemys lines!"

"No indeed you shall not, and I will not have you to do this, and get killed by those blood thirsty butchers. Do the easiest part as I have told you, and trust in God and he will help you. But do not even go too near."

After being fondled and kissed good be bye Violet and her sisters started off under an escort of boys, and pas sed though through the christian lines. It took them about two hours to get within sight of the enemys lines, and hiding beh n behind a thick clump of trees saw something suspicious going on. Aroeplains were whizzing and a force of Clandelinian soldiers commanded by a sweet boyish faced Clandelinian general was marching toward their hiding place.

quickly they climbed up into the tree top, and soon some of the men, officers and the generalchalted right under it as to say while in the distance many of the men began to throw up breastworks, while the rest stacked muskets, and pitched tents or erected their tabours. The sweet faced general seven feet ten inches tall leaned against the tree, and now violet and her sisters wondered how they were going to get away without being caught. The officer looked gentle mannered, but nw nevertheless had a look of danger in his eyes. suddenly a loud noise startled them, and they heard the officer say;

"Drag those cannon u up here. I want them placed behind these works so as to be in such a position as to sweep every approach to my lines. Hurry up. I want no delay."

The drivers obeyed and in a short time ten were already placed. Thousands of tents and hundreds of tabours were being put up and a very large one was erected near the tree.....In a few minutes more a number of other landelinian generals approached toward the tree and one who looked like general manley dismounted.....

"I'm going to place my main batteries, battalions, and infantry under general Silverhair at this point of the field general Godfrey." Said the great commander. "I'll have my cavarly forces advance across silverbell creek immediately, and take possession of general Bicknells right on pargins lanes. To morrow with your guns you can cover their attack."

violet saw another tree close by with a branch shredded in leaves reaching out toward them. They surveyed the enemys lines which seemed to have no end, then got on the branch without difficulty but caused a great shower of leaves to fall among the landelinians. The graycoats looked up, but sawi saw nothing but the branch swai swaying.

"It's strange." They heard general manlest say. "And there's no wind either."

"Maybe there is a wildcat in that branch." said the sweet faced general.

"We ought not to pay anything to a mere shower of leaves." said another officer.

"Be careful that the landelinians dow not discover us." whispered violet. "There is an advance guard of a cavarly force approaching, and we are in a dangerous situation so lets be carsful."

They moved s slowly sm along the branch but after going several feet they caused it to sway threateningly.

"My look at that branch." cried a graycoat. "I'til come down upon us yet."

"It is certainly acting queerly "Retored general Manlet knitting his brows. "I never knew of a branch like that swaying of its own accord."

nd he examined it with his glasses.....

"I cann't see anything on it." He remarked at last as a cavarly force v came galloping yp brandishing their sabres in grand array. "but I'm puzzled at the way it swayed..."

In the meantime violet and her sisters realized that the swaying of the branch was causing excitement, and decided to be extremely careful, or they would pay the penalty with their lives. but they had left the branch by this time, and even slipped away by the time the landelinians investiaged the incident. An hour after they reached general vivians lines, and he by their information decided to attack the enemy left and center. But general Hansons plan was that general vivian was to have Kindernine resume the attack on bicknell, while other forces was to assail the enemys center.

The advance was began at ten thirty on the third day, but the first attack of the christians under indernine to the surprise of the generals had been stopped and a division of fifty thousand Angelinians advancing to the charge had been almost mowed mowed down in a quarter of an hour, the survivors only one thousand in number retreating in a panic.

However general gannon was hurled upon general bicknells center and for a time these troops attacked with the most irrestible energy and the landelinians opposing his troops was swept away their whole line of retreat being split into gigantic gaps. The success would have went further, but at the height of success general James Gannon fell severely wounded, and the general who took his place had to withdraw his shattered troops which had broken into confusion.

An attack was also made on general Manlets center and here the enemy were having a hard time of it for the landelinian columns here was shattered to pieces and for a time recoiled to cover. In the meantime general indernines big divisions being reinforced by general vivian managed to attack general bicknells army, crushed his first grand division, and drove in his center, causing bicknells line to give way slowly before the attack of the Angelinians, who now advanced with ungovernable fury. The storm of carnage was widespread, and the remainder of bicknells line which still held poured in a fire that general costellio Banligans men could not stand, and more surprising yet heavy reinforcements were driving for general bicknell, and being struck on the flank the christian assailants was again compelled to retreat back to their own position. simultaneously a good part of his retreating forces reached silverbell creek and these columns reinforced by kindernine were halted and rallied the Angelinians here taking post behind rocks and boulders of the creeks bank and maintaining a terrific fire upon the landelinians who were rushing forward in mid a counter charge. general indernine riding up to the scene drew his sword and said to several of his officers;

"Your troops must hold their ground here at all hazards, for it will be bad for you if you do not check those devilish Free-masons."

On came the graycoats though their lines of march already caused the ground to be covered with dead and wounded. The assault was as desperate as any assault could ever be made, it was like the assault of a whole world of devils and so fierce was the fire, and the yell of the enemy and the firing, that only those in heaven could bare to look at without horror. however general Kinderninen troops held like a stone wall. General Jemaine vivian and walter Jennings were sent to support those at silverbell creek; and the foe were kept back back steadily, though after an hour they resumed their assault and mains maintained their attacks with unabated fury, many of the columns almost cutting through the christian lines, only to be shot to pieces, and all this time general bicknell. These landelinians were soon repulsed and sent flying back for shelter.

At the same time w fearful was the struggle along the landelinian center where like a mad army of demons the Angelinians surged against the landelinian lines soon swarming with the christians, and now all along the line both sides fought with the utmost desperation for the possession of the works. The landelinians under general Wilton was pressed hard by the christians and he was compelled to send word for aid. This caused the landelinians at this point to be also reinforced, but still the christians continued to press forward, the landelinians again being threatened with defeat as they had thrown the last of their reserves and there was no more men to be had. Whole divisions of the landelinians were hurled back pell-mell and fight again coming on the landelinians had to retreat and so the third day of the battle ceased with the same advantage as on the second day. General indernine reported the success to general hanson and his brother who planned to again resume the attack on the fourth day and with heavier forces while another portion of the army was to march around Phelantonburg and see that no other landelinian army comes to the aid of general Manlet. And worse still for the landelinian army which was badly smitten now large reinforcements under general Lord vivania had advanced through the city recently abandoned by the landelinians and general icknells army under general Francis Starring was besieged by vivianias whole army, and during the night had him compelled to surrender. General Vivian heard of this success of his aiding general and this gave him more courage and he reported the fact to his brother.

In the next morning at daybreak, large forces were again sent to attack the landelinians and the fourth day of the battle was on. Over the plains, across the fields and lawns, and meadows rushed the big forces of Angelinian soldiers, and concentinians and the attack began with greater fury than the other three days. At the first outset general Starring on the christian side was wounded, but still the christians though going down in column after column as it seemed reached the enemys position. A great extensive inferno seemed to have broken out, the Angelinians outflanking in overwhelming forces, and the landelinians being struck a terrible blow wavered, general Hannadeling, and anote another by the name of vonnia having their divisions cover their retreat, but these two generals fell mortally wounded. The struggle was more terrible than on the previous day. Hedious gaps were torn in the whole stretch of the christinn line which moving onward threatened to sweep all before them. Bicknells line was attacked at the same time and his whole grand division was swept back from the region of silverbell creek, and plains, with lines being buckled, bended and shattered, men going down in tens of thousands, bicknell appealed to Manlet for help. Gannon Saunders troops and general jamis vivian advanced across the silverbell creek and it was a wonder how a any number of his men survived under the annihilating storm of landelinian fire which mowed them in half an hour for the stretch of five miles three hundred thousand men. Nevertheless at one -o-clock the enemys position in the region of the creek was worried at the loss of four hundred thousand in one full hour at least. Gannon, walker, and jimmie vivian had fallen wounded at the height of the death struggle, and fourteen ou other generals with names not given were killed though general Bandsley was another of the wounded. At Shredden creek a similar scene of horror had come with the complete repulse of general germaine and indernines assault, and Germainen men being crushed to fragments managed after hard sanguinary fighting to break through the enemys lines but could not carry the position, and was beaten back, and retreated in confusion. Portions of general Clintons Angelinian to troops which made the next assault found refuge in a small burn which was filled with smoke but a gang-gagn gang-gang shell falling there killed them all. The meadows were changed into frightful slaughter pens, and a big plain a mile wide looked a regular sea of dead and wounded.

Thus was the result of the assault that kindernines and cermaines big divisions made. Recieving reinforcements from General vivian general indernine again daringly swept the troops to the attack after a two hours lull in which most of the wounded had been picked up, and now it seemed impossible for general Leo cesellios landelinians to check the mighty attack a second time. Immense waves of Angelinians poured across the still body strewn plains and fields, and meadows though going down again in vast multitudes redoubling the numbers already lying there. Nevertheless the landelinians despite their most energitic efforts col could not check the christian attack, and ov overlapped they finally gave way being in danger of annihilation frok general Highlions batteries which blew all before it like a million cyclones.

In the meantime the landelinian center seemed to vent its rage and revenge on earth and nautre itself. Columns of christians by the score went down, and general Vivian himself sent extra forces to check the fleeing christians, and drive back the desperately persuesing Glandelinians. General costellio Benligan was seriously wounded, in the raging hell raging hell of desc destruction, and cermaine also with general Joseph John tanley. General tony Senguine with all his forces swept up to repell the landelinians and so fierce became the conflict that it termined into one of the bloodiest battles of the war and so fierce was the firing of musketry on both sides that all the surrounding forests in the battle field were literally set on fire. The landelinian onslaught was terrific but the whole gray line was shot to pieces and driven back to its own lines. The landelinians again rallied and general xpiatoise ariving with his own men formed his columns into a long line one wave deep and opened such a dreadful fire and with such intense annihilating fury that though the christian attack seemed unmanageable to icknell, general Expiatoise held them at bay though his own lines suffered a bath of destruction that disolved whole divisions and down twenty of his generals who were slain. Expiatoise advanced now himself through that seething inferno, but the Ang elinians crushed his whole left to atoms within an hour of cruel fighting, and then as his center was driven back he tried to rally the troops was and was killed by a bursting shell. This ended th e fiery damanation here. Overwhelmed despite reinforcements the whole of icknells front line was annihilated, and the remainder shattered and mangled gave way in the wildest confusion and retreated like stampeded cattle while the christian artillery pounded their columns to pieces allthe way back to their own position.

eneral Manleyt Man Manlet hearing of this ordered six million three hundred thousand men to ickelless icknells aid and these arived at eight o-clock and the enemy now started forward to make a assault to revenge the bloody blow struck against them. he six million men formed into a long line and advanced furiously the battle raging again along this point with redoubled fury but without success, as icknell failed to force kindernines position. It was dreadful but nevertheless all was unavailable and the six million was reduced to eight hundred thousand by th e christian fire. It was a dreadful loss for general icknell and he gave it up just as darkness began to settle.

During the night new formations were made on the enemys side.

At five thirty on the fifth day of the battle general indernine had massed his Abyssinkilians and the enemy advanced direct for the Abyssinkilians with the intention of assuming the offensive themselves this time, and after three hours the roar of the conflict grew so terrible that it could not be described. Violet and her sisters who were hiding in a tree far out of reach f of the enemys firing line saw this great herculean attack, large portion of this wave moving for indernines v front, kindernine getting ready to meet the attack. General Herdrude quickly galloped up to where iolet and her sisters were standing having descended from the tree, and said

"If us generals fail to check the landelinians the enemy will get the best of us christians, and then Manlet will escape our grasp.. Those landelinians are advancing in appallin lo numbers and I wl will myself have to withdraw anyway, or kindernines army will be overthrown. I have my intentions of making a stand in Shepeards woods, and I advise you little girls to go to a safer spot for there may be some terrible firing going on before long."

An earsplitting roar of sudden muskets startled them all as Herdrudes lines were recoiling tward the woods mentioned and Jennie said;

"General Herdrude will have to hold those woods even at the cost of his life now for if he fails general vivians army will suffer an awful defeat, and Manlet will get away. I'll go for reinforcements."

"We had better send for reinforcements." Said Catherine. "It is too dangerous for you to go for them. At least Herdrude has got to do something to prevent his army from being hard pressed. I'll send for....."

A furious galloping of horses interupted her and general Nance and pane came galloping up followed by a large force.

"Well catch it if general ichardson Halsted does not reinforce us with his troops." Said general Jackson Pane. "You little girls had better get out of these woods if you know what is good for you, for the enemy are going to rain high explosives here in a very few minutes. We were sent with th our ne heaviest regiment of guns to check the enemy if poss ible. Yet we will be pressed back anyw anyhow if general Richardson does not come. Two divisions have already b been annihilated. 88"

the roar of firi firearms in the far distance had swelled so fiercely that it seemed as if the heavens were at war with each other and with the ppanets planets, and violet looking through her field galsses saw that truely that the christian divisions were a prd deal safer elsewhere than in the Shepards woods. But it was even too late to retreat from here and they must have heavy reinforcements or a complete overthrown would follow as the foe added continually by fresh troops sent by Manlet almost out of the addsived Herdrudes at least , and now the landelinians were rushing across the pargin lanes with tremendous alercity. Through her glasses Violet indeed saw her danger.

General costellio geddas divisions had been overlapped by the attacking landelinians and Senguines being overthrown was retiring in haste.. After looking for a few minutes she gave a gray of alarm.

"We are all partly surrounded." she cried. And a look of distrers overspread her face. "The Angelinian forces who were retiring ran bodily into a trap."

The very christian forces under general James Archeonfraternity to the right of Shepards woods had managed to check the wall of Free Masons along his front with his terrible chain of field pieces, but he was suffering horrible losses in both privates and general officers.

In the meantime general vivian recieved the alarming news that all the christian divisions under generals, Herdrude, Pane, and Nance were trapped, though not yet assulted by the landelinians forces and he ordered kindernine to concentrate heavily and meet the assailants. General kindernine was on his horse in a moment and raced for general ontileys headquarters.

"Go to the aid of the christian divisoje divisions with your combined forces, and with all your artillery as quick as possible." He shouted. Herdrude, and four other christian generals with their commands are in danger of being surrounded. The enemys lines have not attacked yet, and I want you to get there before they do. Hurry please."

Instantly sent the order in a flash and soon all his force with all the artillery were pushing like power racers for the threatened woods. Ba Baldwins batteries under general Aur Ruevertancrainia was in the lead and was the first to be trained upon the landelinians advancing upon Herdrudes lines and soon all the christian artillery along the whole strength of woods, with the infantry con combined made the whole woods a roaring inferno. Violet and her sisters amid all the confusion of millions of deafening reports wr were forced to lie down behind some boulders to escape the unlimited quantities of whistling bullets from the enemys lines also. Crushed to fragments within half an hour general Archeonfraternity was seen forced to give way two of his generals being killed early in the fight, and as his lines gave way fresh forces sent to relieve them were curtained suddenly by a storm of shells which made din so terrific that for a time iolet and her sisters their hearing had been destroyed. On came the landelinians throwing themselves forward with indescribable fury and then general Allentonia on the christian side was no mortally wounded, and his troops was also compelled to fall back his divisions being cut up and thrown into the greatest confusion, another of their generals Mc-Hollester ohnstonia being killed by a bursting storm of shells that wiped out fourteen regiments.

On pressed the assailants attacking with terrible violence. General Gennons forces went into action on the right meeting the landelinians full tilt. Though the enemy swept upon his massive line, his troops did not give way, while the wooded region was filled with a series upon series of pandemonium of sounds, and all this was added by the deep yells of the enemy whole divisions of yelling and cure landelinians again and again throwing themselves upon the christians, but for every charge a whole line was withered, gape gaps appeared through the whole main body every time and oh how the landelinians went down. The second surge of men recoiling to the distance of fifteen miles soon resumed the assault but was only like a mighty wave shattered against a rocky shore. Even the most enormous masses that managed to swarm over the works had melted away, and the gray line at this point was finally cut to pieces a second time wavered atlat, last and amid all the wild confusion general Rossbine fell mortally wounded on the christian side and general Rossbine on the foe side fell simultaneously as he tried to rally his landelinians. General Nance had a bullet wound in his shoulder, and his chief general Aid Frank lten was killed.

General indernine and Robert ivian saw all this scene of terrible slaughter through their glasses w and were shocked. They saw the larve columns of the enemy rushing across the Dargins lanes now against indernines whole front of previous Abyssinkilians, and indeed he was more horrified, for all the while there was an incessant earsplitting uproar which continued still without intermiss ion and again hell indeed seemed to have broken loose with all its horror along the whole line and the whole wooded region was like a regular forest fire from the appearance smoke at times hid everything from general ivians eyes, but he imagined the horrible slaughter al right from the dreadful din.

As could general indernine hold against such heavy numbers equal to his own, while his other comrade Generals in the woods were overwhelmed in a roaring smoky whirlpool? to his questions.

so fierce indeed was the assault of the foe that whole divisions of the fierce Abyssinkilians was torn and mangled n and onnimmense line of marian curdes under general Gerard Shepard redoubled the fury of their attack and to general Kindernine it seemed as if his position would be forced, but he threatened death to all his under officers if they allowed their men to yeild an inch without his own orders. Like an avalanch the landelinians fell upon kindernines divisions attacking his three wings almost simultaneously, and the whole torn and bleeding landelinian surge extending for seventeen miles met a horrible reception. Kindernines whole force of Abyssinkilians, and other christians occupied the other portion of the Shepards Woods and met the fierce onset of the landelinians with the most indescribable fury, sweeping away whole briaf brigades that tried desperately to surmount the works. The enemy seemed to go down in whole lines, and general Gerard Shepard was killed amid the terrific volcano of flame and din, and even overlapping the right wing of the assailants was finally cut and rolled up and driven across the fields, the rest of the line retiring in confusion leaving a serious break in the half circle which almost surrounded Kindernines five friends.

There was then a lull which lasted three hours in which the christian forces that had been badly shattered were withdrawn, and those under the five other generals placed into a better position. General Montly took position on the right. About Twl Twelve o-clock the landelinians having rested soon resumed the attack, the first blow falling upon Montlys divisions, and the landelinians attacking him yelled and roared with fury and rage. Many regiments were crushed in Montly front but the main line held firm and the landelinians were bathed in a furnace of slaughter and compelled to withdraw . However the landelinians soon rallied and made another attack precipitating themselves once more upon the wall of purple coats where they plunged again into a death struggle. Again they were repulsed. A little later general Henry Fabolia threw his landelinians upon general Herdrude and during the assault his landelinians were drawn all to the center, and having contracted their flanks made a tremendous charge in double line and forced their way through the surge of Abyssinkilians with the vehemence of a human avalanch but the rest of the christians threw themselves bol bodily upon the solid wave of graycoats breaking through the line at every point, and their own swift counter dash overwhelmed the assailants, and going down in tens of thousands on all sides the foe line wavered and recoiled from the big gap they made, the fury of the savage christian counter charge breaking the whole of Fabolias line into mere fragments and the landelinian general was run through with a bayonet by an Abyssik Abyssinkilian with long flowing hair, and killed. The survivors recoiled in a panic before these wild red coated christian fiends, the Angelinians and Abyssinkilians their faces contorted fiendishly throwing themselves madly upon the panic stricken hordes, scattering them like chaff. For several minutes there was a mixup of both enemies in a pandemonium that could not be described a regular conglomeration of confusion a thousand times, and the fighting hand to hand was so desperate that both columns literally cut their way through each other. But overwhelmed on all sides the landelinians recoiled anew now being without a single general their chief general having been kil e j killed. General Maurice Mansin with the head of general Richardson Halsteds divisions now arived to the aid of the christians fighting so fiercely in Shepards woods but at this time were hardly needed the enemys line having been cut all to pieces. The Angelinians did not persue very far the enemy retreating tward their main line.

This desperate contest had raged along this part of the line for four hours, and though the losses were extremely heavy on both sides the enemy had lost twice as many as the christians. At half past eleven that morning, another fierce attack just as determined was made upon general Germaine Vivians lines.

The long surge of assailants attacking Germaines christian force was almost fifty Men deep and in their fullest frenzy the landelinians attacked in an unbroken surge, and the right grand division came in contact with Germaines left, and though their furious onset was cut down and checked for a few minutes the main portions soon c soon came on and during the second attack the Angelinians were thrown back in confusion across a small portion of the wooded region. With exceedingly great fury the assailants pressed on and after an hour of fiercer fighting the whole of Germaines line gave way a number of divisions being fairly crushed in a ver very few minutes and the scene became more terrific. Thus the christian line at this point was at last pressed out of its position. But there was a necessary reformation needed in the enemys lines and thus caused another lull which gave general Gannons line under general Reddin to form a new battle line out of those driven back and then as the big columns of graycoats again rushed up the collision was the most terrific ever met with by Gannons men but also in a very short time gannon was also forced to fall back before the enemys s terrific advance.

general Vivian saw the successful advance of the foe and now sent division after division to repell them. The furious onrush of general Logans menon the right of the main landelinian surge at this critical moment struck against general Jimmis Vivianstroops and then general Hr Hampton Thomas arived and tried to hold the enemy at bay but general Hampton and Logan fell mortally wounded.

General Princetonia also arived with his own divisions and met the furious onset of the landelinians, the multitudes of assailants continuing their attack, writhing like like a stream of gray demons their line extending to a stupendous length, and general Princetonia was also driven back. At this moment general Baldwins batteries were massed upon the assailants but the landelinians could not be checked the christians continuing to fall back before their advance.

however as they got within close range of Baldwins batteries the landelinians met with such frightful losses that their leaders became appalled, and were going to give a withdrawel when general Convention and general Frank Pankhurst with the divisions belonging to the "Terrible General Raymond Richardson Federal" came dashing toward those batteries from another quarter of the line of assault. The attack was violent and insadious and wishing to reach those cannonading batteries generals Thomas. J. Phelan, and Th omas.J.P Fallen hurir hurried five mill ion troops forward and for three hours the attack raged in a success ion of most desperate assault and for every time the ground was littered with bodies the firing making a regular tremendasal orgry of sound all the different guns roaring in millions of different accents, roaring rattle and thunder while above all this dominated the yell of the landelinian assailants who fought with such indescribable courage.....

Baldwin indeed saw and felt that the batteries could not be his for long.

General Kindernine and Vivian saw this and though Baldwin withdrew and a heavy concentration was massed upon his assailants that the landelinians with new and general Morgans-christians swept forward making a counter assault and carried all before them.General Morgan having heavy forces at the same time concentrated all his artillery upon th e other portion of the landelinian surge which had been making such success against Jimmie and Germaine the enemy being at this point in huge extravangant stretch of writhing yelling surges of human beings that continued the attack with the most appalling fury a portion falling heavily upon Morgans line and one of the huge columns under general Gall Gross broke a part of Morgans left grand division, and the whole battle line was b bathed in blood. Ten of Morgans divisions fell back appalled at the frightful numbers of their fallen, and Morgan was compelled to send all the reserves to fill the gap before all the immense columns of landelinians rushed through it. Indeed as he could see general Vivian realized that Morgans whole line would be threatened with destruction if they held until the hand to hand encounter would come, and so general Richardson Halsted and Richardson Parson who was on Kindernines center with their whole commands were ordered by Kindernine and sent to Morgans aid.

These two combined forces arriving in time crushed back a portion of the foe surge but general Malcolm Jennings was partly hemmed in by heavy columns of the foe under general John Pell Peel Malcolm and he was forced to withdraw leaving another gap in the christian line. General Fredrickson saw this and he hurled a new force into the gap, a but at most points were ever they had been driven back the e en many had rallied and the next onslaught of the enemy was so terrific that Morgans line was cut up and thrown back in co confusion, the enemy capturing one thousand guns, and general Morgan almost succeeding in rallying his troops fell severely wounded, and fresh confusion brok broke out, and the retiring Angelinians were so seriously handicapped that they broke into demorilization.

At another point of the great landelinian surge one million nine hundred thousand landelinians under general Fred Galtonia swept upon general Richardson Halsteds columns, but he had placed his line of artillery into position to sweep the furious advance of the enemy before him, n and amid hundreds of thousands of explosive puffs, terrible numbers of dead and wounded in gray were revealed, the ceaseless keeping up marve, v marvelious activity which extending along the line in general firing increased to a terrible slaughtering fire but the stupendous numbers of asurviving Glandelinians could not be checked, the Glandelinians cont inueing to advance with indescribable fury and soon Fred and Halsted's divisions were also driven back their artillery laso being captured and amid the hell of carnage Fred was killed and Richarson Halsted severely wounded. In one thousand immense columns the Glandelinians swarmed against Fredrickson Pasons artil e artillery line which roared in a series of violent detonations at one thousand, three hundred and sixty five shots per second second, and multitudes after multitdes in gray dissolved. But the survivors undaunted by the appalling cannonading advanced with hodeful rushes, only to plung recklessly to their deaths. Like monsterious pacts of gray demons the Glandelinians swarmed onward but went down in terribly big columns the wholesale carnage becoming appalling and General vivian observing the whole battle line with his field glasses could not readily tell how the battle was turning out at all for all he did see was a great sea of smoke and burning foliage and the terrible streams of flashing guns.

The whi whole Christian line i ung under General Jennings had also p met the fierce impact, and though it shuddered violently it did for a while stand firm, but soon his whole line was riven to fragments by the irrestible pressure of the Glandelinians and the dead and wounded soon piled in immense heaps. Indeed it seemed as if Jennings line was going to be annihilated for they were dissolving fast though both sides gave a forth a perfect hell of fire.
column after column being hurled against his lines only to melt away.

It was awful. Jennings was painfully wounded but he said nothing to his men, for fear of their wavering. Indeed all along his lines an a valanche of fire was poured, but his lines heavy wit with the weight and pressure of the assaulting Glandelinians soon threatened to give way as the assailants amid the infernal crash and roar went headleng against them with healg headlong sleg sledge hammer force. The headlong se sweep of the enemy also crushed General Leices lines but General Leice was heavily reinforced in the nick nick of time and these ariving reinforcements flung themselves vicously aga against the assailants but of no avail whole regiments ofand divisions being moweddown and the counter assailants being totally routed the Glandelinians carrying all before them.
The whole Christian line was jarred wildly and Glandelinian columns sweping down upon them caught themon the right flank driving them in andone half ofJennings force was also t struck in t the rear and thewh? whole christian line under these commanders were borne before the Glandelinians as if before an avalanche. Then general Janini Jennings was wounded a second time and his horse being kil he was thrown and then all was confusion amonghis lines and it was evident to all that the batle was entirely lost for the enemy were too strictong in numbers.

In the meantime General Gal Calleninia ermerged from the woods making a clean sweep of the whole christian flank, occupying the Dargins lanes and moving in strong line of battle once more upon the christians in the shepardis woods crushing all he christian divisions there after another four hours stuggle w which in the full description as follows was horrible;

T Seeing this terrible condition General Vivian seeing where the next heavy ar assault was driving at ordered all the reinforcements he could gather to go to the woof woods ah and held windernine repell the assailants.
The first attack of the enemy at this point was shatteredagainst the christian line and general Calleninia went down mangled and be bleeding as he tied to get his men to cross the christian works. The surviving lines pushed forward and rushed clean up to the endge of the flaming woods only b meet a terrific annihilating fire
, the Glandelinian columns three million t strong strong being like a ship ran against and this whole line shattered to pieces withdrew with Calleninia killed and his aid Resurrection severely wounded. Leese l also had hid man main force rushing forward the frenzied sweep of the Glandelinians crushing the h christians under Herdrude to break into a panic, every regiment of chris Glandelinians swpp swooping down upon the christians breaking the whole of Herdurd Herdrues lines to pe pieces , and heavy columns of green coats moving forward like avalanches were ap reaching toward thetrucks where Violet and her sisters were in hiding from the terrible storm of shells and it was under General Leese Ricknell. Thousands of Glandelinian batteries were roaring in themost terrific cannonading thunders ever heard since the battle began theponderous volleys of shells exploding with earsplitting detonations among the woods downing thousands of trees and killing tens of thousands of Angelinians and making frightful slaughter. Leese Ricknell's lines were in wedge formation and every where for the whole stretch of batle there was a thunderous tumult the din being double to that of a few minutes before, the earth and woods and heavens semed on fire, there was a storm of horrible explosions, the woods seemed to be torn to fragments then all was flame smoke and damanation and then came the shock followed by a roar like a thrillion cannon all alenq the line at once. Line after line of the assailants crushed themselves against t e the christian lines amid a cannon fire of a thousand shots per volley which ripped and tore everything to pieces in their path, the screaming of the shel s sounding like the scream of a f r furious deafening uproar of an elemental storm storm and officers and men on both sides went down in intolerable numbers.

1878 General vivian hearing the tremendous clamor at his headquarters as plainly as if he had been on the battle line rushed to the scene of action in alarm and indeed saw the new assault and its fury and did not know what to make of it. A cannon fire of the most terrible violence filled the air with flame and smoke it being as if a million hurricanes, a hundred thousand typhoons, and a hundred million thunderstorms sweeping with deafening uproar beyond description of the elements had tore through these woods and so terribly shattered was the frontal surge of the Glandelinian division that general vivian believed the only means to check and drive back the assailants and stop this horrible destruction to nature itself was to make a desperate counter charge, but then he at once realised by the fury of the enemys charge that it was like sucide and defiance to god himself to try it, and already all of Jennins line was forced back upon Herdrudes broken and shivered command, and Herdrude was severely wounded, Jennings recieving a third wound, Lee Leese Icknell was mortially wounded, and generals Violetint, Jenninian, Joidinian, Angelinlacia, Catherinnia and Hettleingtokon on the side of the christians were all killed, and Valeraine himself with ontly ,and even general Baldwin, and Aronburg were severely wounded, and twenty other generals with names withheld were slain.

Fortunately this horrible slaughter had given an idea to general vivian that even in the rebellion against god the Glandelinians were not to be conquered without desperate and even foul means. That is the only way and no other. Glandelinia is a state not to be beaten under any conditions whtever whatever by any foe if she really does not want to be beaten, and it is truthfully believed she could have even licked Abbisannia right now if she wanted to and would at that if better means to overthrown overthrow the rebellion is not thought up. Even at this battle the Glandelinians were bound to win and that is the reason the battle at the last day ended so fata lly for general Jennings and vivian.

The christian losses now was ten times heavier than the enemys and not a Glandelinian general named or not named had fallen, while on the christianside generals named had fallen by the score, and those not named by fifties. General vivian riding up and down the inferno lashed lines frantically y met everywhere and on all sidew sides disordered troops and tried with fury to beat back their retreat and general Meldonia was filled with excitement over this outcome and ordered the forces he led in person on more, and general vivian finding violet and her sisters hiding behind the trees in this damnHating hell storm ordered them from the woods but the little girls who feared no battlenow matter how horrible it was refused to go saying that they could not leave unless the enemy did. Forwith general vivian had soldiers come up and the little girls were taken by main force.

Then the little girls were brought before him.
"Well if you little girls ain't the like 88 "He said when they were before him.
"If it was not for your bravery I'd give you literal cain for your rashness. You little girls are better than than men and I only curse the day you were born t girls and not boys. But nevertheless you were foolish to stay in that flaming hades of war and that is the reason you were compelled to come out of it. Windernine is worsted with every other general and I'm almost beaten myself as it were and you ordered to leave. Next time you act like that to Abbisannia you go."

"But papa we don't deserve this defeat, and did not wish to leave unless the enemy came and that was all there was to it."Cried violet."It was our duty to stay there, as the others do in vain."

"Well you little girls cannot stay that is all there is to it."Said general vivian furiously."And if you do and this battle is lost you will meet a terrible death for those Glandelinians are drunke fools drunken fools i inflamed with victory and which makes them so irrestible in their advance that if any see you they will cut you to pieces."

But before either of the little girls could utter a single word he dashed away leaving them gasping. For the first time they felt afraid but they decided to be careful and stay remained outside the danger zone. The thunder of battle at this moment was having all records of any series of wars ever witnessed or rw read of before.

Despite it all general vivian and Hanson now feared the battle would be lost, for they realised that their lines reinforced as they were could not hold without stronger support of artillery. It was now four o-clock and general Hanson at this moment came up to violet and her sisters who were standing where general vivian had left them and he said I'm fully determined to hold these woods and even take the Virgin lanes, and can if I have enough artillery. You little girls have told your father that you did not wish to leave the dangerous section of these woods to matter what the cost unless we won the fight, and this we can i do if you will aid me. Go to General Baldwin and ask him to drag up all his artillery to these woods. He is in his headquarters lying wounded in his bed, but when he knows it is you little girls it will be all right. "

"There is only one of us who will go, and it is the one who chooses"Said violet her eyes flashing."But we fear ourselves that the cannon that could be brought up will not hold them at bay."

"I will go "Said Catherine and off she started.

Th is was all that general Hanson wanted and satisfied he rode off sending Aronburgs force under Jenson to reinforce a part of indermines shattered army. General Hanson expected Catherine to reach general Baldwins headquarters at half past four but she arived at four fifteen. Baldwin heard of her coming through the signal corps and had her cheered by the men as she came but he did not know her purpose. All this while the desperate fight to drive the assailants back continued without intermission, the Slandelinians still hammering the christian line under indermine, Smith Richardson Halsted, and Fredrickson person the latter which having made their stand here after being driven back from their other position.

It was at this moment that five generals on the side of the landelinians side were killed in succession they being Hoffmann, Kauffmannia Henning, Henry Hammonia, James Sanderingtionia, and supretendant general Henry Dargerinia, while ten others generals Joseph phelan, Phellinia, attackington, Henry Geslesington, Jos Johnstonia Jennings, John Bates, Henry Hendersonia, Richardson Weldonia, and Hanson James Donaldsonia were wounded, while two other generals Franko Franklin Stanely and Joseph Stanley Mannington were mortally wounded all these falling inside the christian line.

general Icknell was exultant over the success that his men were making against the christian line and said to several officer who came riding up to where he was;

"Yes storm their lines good. Their capture will win the battle for us."

The ass attackers were assaulting in long lines and the signal stations notified the landelinian officers that large chains of artillery, these being new batteries were being trained by the christians upon his lines.

"It was one of those little vivian Girl heroines who did this I,ll be bound." said general Icknell. It will be a tough job to win but I'll win or die....."

Icknell was kind of melancholic because he realized where the other vivian girls had been hiding and he wondered if he should fall back or hold on to his furious assault. General Baldwin himself had given up his guns but reluctantly for he knew that the landelinian assault against the overwhelming numbers of christians in that woods was being successful, and yet there was no more reinforcements that could be spared by general vivian, and if there were they were so far back that they would not be able to come in time. However general Icknell had three strong parks of artillery and these had been brought up but which took fully an hour to be fully placed into action, but the fire of these guns failed to check the foe attack. Violet had with her a flag with the pictures of the Crucix Crucifix on one side, and of the Sacred Heart of Jesus on the other, and she bravely stood up and swung it to the breeze screaming shrilly at the same time;

"Hold your ground boys. Reinforcements is coming."

However her voice could not be heard in the roar of the conf ict conflict, but many of the men s; saw the waving flag and took up the excitement and every division of landelinians they rushed upon the christian line was repulsed. When the smoke cleared somewhat several of the Angelinians saw violet lying on her face, and these rushed toward her expecting her to be dead, but she staggered to her feet and cried;

"It's all right soldiers. I only tripped on a rock. It's all right."

It seemed that the landelinians were attacking with a fury that could sweep through any obstacle and though one long line was torn to fragments the rest still rushed on though Icknell had to sent an appeal by telegraph for aid asking for his other columns to come and help in the assault. declaring that the Angelinians were concentrating overwhelming numbers of artillery against his landelinians and cutting them down like the leaves of a forest in a hurricane.

General Hanson vivian watched the desperate assault of the enemy from his point of observation and saw indeed that all the cannons brought up were unavailing. The whole wooded region was storming with fire and smoke and already three of the most immense christian brigades had already completely melted away, their lines having disolved fast before the fire of the landelinians. One million landelinians under general Zoe has neared the christian works under general Icknell, the landelinians under general Edmar Mulwick managing to pour over the works in writhing torret torrents of human beings. The solid christian line at this point tried to make itself as inivable as a wall of rocks but could not drive back the assailants, there being all at once a terrible mix mixup hand to hand, bayonets, clashing together or being crossed, pikes being used with murderous fury, and pistols and muskets werefired at point blank. Even the stubborn christian cannoneers tried to plow the Slandelinians all down but in vain for they fell as fast as rain in a thunderstorm, and soon the seemingly inovable wall of christians were like a reed before the tornao tornado and made a feeble barrier the whole of Icknells line being crushed and mangled giving way the Slandelinians carrying all before them forcing back the whole line in the shape i of an angle and this sight awed and amazed Hanson. At this moment generals Edwin Mc-gunter, Hanson Mc-gunter and general Icknell Johnstonia were killed on the landelinian side, and general Meldonia Convention, G Henry Purgatorian and general James Stanley Icknell met a horrible death by being torn open by a shell burst.

General vivian himself saw this startle startling sight and almost dropped from Establishment, just as Icknell the greater christian general went down severely wounded General Hanson himself saw indeed that he would have to render help somewhere, for overwhelming numbers of landelinians under general James Convento Convention the great general Conventions brother was assaulting at another point their leader having been killed early in the attack. Violet and her sisters were dismayed when they heard the result of the battle along Icknells lines, and of the success of the massive columns in gray. As far as eye could reach the main line in gray under general Convention extended, but shifted and wavered in their prodigeous advance with every movement the landelinian columns looking frightfully ominous but nevertheless the Angelinians were not daunted and would not give way as long as Hanson or indermine and still held their ground.

The Conventions columns struck against general Germaines line of christians rushing even through the Angelinians with the fury of a frenzied mulitude and again there was a terrible tumult of bayonets and other arms as they fought hand to hand. The Landelinians at all points surged on like a fierce tidal wave giving forth high Infernal yells and in their mad rush the Slandelinians acted like a mulitude creating into a panic for in their recklessness they trampled over the fallen.

Even over a part of Maurice Costellioes works the mulitudes of fury stricken Slandelinians no vomited itself and Costellioes whole line was forced, and he fell severely wounded.

Violet and her sisters feared indeed that this mad frenzied advance of the enemy would mean disaster if not checked, for the enemy were coming on like a great avalanch, despite the severe fire they met. Amid all the uproar of the ghastly carnage could be heard the cries of the frenzied christian officers;

"I'll shoot every one who retreats without orders."

"I'll shoot any who tried to retreat....."

And they even placed all the wounded who were still able to fight behind the firing line to

"They'll not beat us back back no matter how many they got." Was the fierce words of these officers. "Keep your lines solid men. Maybe more reinforcements will come to our aid. I heard that general Francis Hanshin was advancing to the scene as quickly as possible, so keep up your spirits....."

General Hanson vivian, and his staff knowing the nature of this dangerous charge from the attacking foe should they overlap Kindernines troops decided to throw half of Parsonias force to his aid as soon as he came, for indernines whole command was being cut to pieces. The rush of Lieutenant general Wallens landelinians was mowed down, and summoning his lieutenant general Jacob Baldwin general Hanson said;

"It must intervene or indernines army despite the serious resistance t his troops will be annihilated. We must intervene before they overlaps Kindernines whole command. Hark yon crashing batteries along the enemys lines of artillery. Not a moment is to be lost."

In twenty minutes general Jacob Baldwins columns were advancing swiftly. The broken Slandelinian columns crossing the pargins plains was already threatened with annihilation, and general Lenahan was killed as he neared the christian works. Hanshins heavy columns hurried onward as already the attack of the enemy had become so furious that he feared for general indernines commands. Indeed for the christians the battle seemed to become a sad catastrophis the fury of the battle on the fifth day being extremely general all along the line and it was an awful time indeed. But Baldwin had now arived and placing his biggest guns in the rear of the goods which the landelinians down in mulitudes. General Coors Slandelinians fell fully upon the powerful Estrabrooks divisions on general vivians extreme right, this great Slandelinian columns pouring and mingling with Estrabrooks Angelinians in a tremendous hand to hand death struggle. The dead and wounded in gray already concealed the grass, the battle having raged already nearly a day with this terrific fury, and the divisions of landelinians passing general Kindernines extreme left encountered a raging fire which was poured into their very dense faces by Baldwins batteries, a terrible scene ensueing many columns of the whole front line being annihilated, and where shattered, and also recieving a murderous hail of shells from a part of the artillery they went down again in many mulitudes. The overlapping columns of Landelinians shrank back despite the attempt of their generals to rally them, and general Hank Digger, George presented, and Hander association were killed by shells from the christian guns, and general Cincinnattis and Henderson Boobcoranf were wounded with other officers who also fell by scores. The whole of indernines command reinforced by general Jacob Baldwins men again let loose like the demons upon the front line of Slandelinian troops extendeing for ten miles being fairly covered the dead and wounded again being heaped up rapidly and general Zoe Has Sir Mannington was killed at the head of his charging men, with general Johnston whose head was shot off by a cannoj ball. The rest of Baldwins columns were now arriving the Slandelinians a still attoking with the energy of despair the Slandelinians trying in vain to carry indernines position, but they held firm, and the whole line of attackers became terribly thin, their whole divisions were crushed to fragments and whole brigades shattered and cut into flying pieces, and the dead and wounded mounted into very mountians.

Baldwins arival was quick but he recieved the fiercest attack of his life and though the whole line of assailants had crushed itself against the christi n christians the landelinians could not be driven back even though the main general convention was severely wounded. General Vivian himself had already lost over ten thousand officers in generals and other staff and indeed it seemed to him that the concentration of all the reinforcements and reserves to Hindernines aid could not drive the assailants from those roaring woodlands and had own batteries out of ammunition had been compelled to withdraw. even he could see that Joknell had advanced nine million against Hansons main positions in those terrible woods, and general vivian indeed doubted if he would succeed in winning the terrible terrible battle for the woods was his own main center, and if that was forced all would be lost. Thirty batteries of cannon, consisting of one thousand each had been within nine hours all concentrated upon th ose ten miles of woods doing awful havoc indeed and all this while the fierce onslaught of the enemy had cont inued without being checked. All along the entire main line in gray gaps were continually torn and where one column charged they had been hidden in smoke and when this cleared away it could be seen that only a few retreating knots of men were left. he Landelinians had attacked like the army of terror and death, the dead and wounded having been laid down within the space of ten miles after only an hours fighting and general ivian was even dismayed at the losses of the enemy. General Vivian fearing that nothing in the line of cannon would be able to stop the foe and having recieved many appeals for help had sent many forces which he could still spare to obstruct the foes path. Already Gannons divisions had become terribly thinned and columns of men had been mangled to death by the foes fire. Germaines immense line of one million five hundred thousand men had also repelled a sullent sullen and fierce attack without apparent attack success if any, and even to increase he frightful carnage general Manlet had thrown forward one million seven hundred thousand Landelinians across Phelantonburg plain and several large parks of artillery in a large orchard but the whole force with all these guns had been b, blown into eternity by thousands of mines set there by christian troops and these fiery outbursts of explosions had been heard in their reverbrating crashes plainly for four hundred miles. Another great division more than a million strong had also reached this death dealing plains just in time to escape the terrible earsplitting storm of explosions, and disconcerted by a most terrific cannon fire from Baldwins batteries and by the sudden disaster they had just escaped, they fell back but encountered more of the Landelinian columns hurrying to their left grand division and these also were compelled to retreat quickly.

The Landelinians still pressing on were without the protection of the wooded plains and indeed all the elements of heaven and civilisation seemed to be broken up. A A new rush of hundreds of t housands in red swept by Hindernines left and at times they could hardly be seen so thick was th e smoke. Many of the recoiling defeated Angelinians had been cont inually retreating before the Landelinians under genera general Joe Hedda Zimmermann and Samuel Paltzeine, Wearied, dispondent and bewildered, and realing realising the danger general Hanson himself decided to make a complete concentraion of all his own artillery one one single line and this was done taking a full hour however and soon it seemed as if the christian guns were trying to blow all the earth in the sky and now all was one vast x seething roaring inferno of fire and smoke for the length of thirty miles looking like some vast conflargration filled with hundreds of thousands of terrific explosions going f off continuously.

General Robert Vivian himself knowing the meaning of the assault of the Landelinians had ordered all the reserve forces not in the struggle yet to save their ammunition for the greatest ermergency. The enemy had been repulsed along his lines after all this horror but there was sure danger of another great attack, and so general Vivian had spread his lines out further. The enemy along Hansons front were also giving way before the terrific fire along the christian line and at the first sign of a receding fire the Angelinian columns under general Hindernine never thinking a line of one thousand gathling guns broke loose, large divisions of christians on the left of the advancing columns was completely annihilated and several other divisions being shattered the survivors recoiled, but rallied and again rushed after the retiring enemy. The Angelinians did not advance any further however but fell back to their own positio position.

In the meantime the Angelinians under Baldwin still was attacked but held their ground all this while.

"We must hold the l position at all hazards" Declared general Baldwin amid the inferno infernal uproar. "We got to——" Ping. A musket ball struck him in the breast and he was instantly killed. A large part of the front line of Hansons command as long as the stretch of woods itself was tr torn and gapped but the reserves filled the terrible gaps and the scene retained its appalling fury.

Hanson was b appalled indeed and begged general Vivian to send him as much aid as he x could spare. The two monsterous armies were Indeed contending like titans!

All of Manlets batteries were in e general action and now the christian line under general Gannon threatened to waver and Gannon rallied them them and continued the fierce defense, and surprised and terrified by the bold attack general Jacob Baldwin was again compelled to send for aid. more artillery had been brought up and general Hamilton Hellerton fel severely wounded.

At about eight o-clock a whole new surge of Landelinians under generals Snyder Gannon, Henry Hinderninia, Germaine Yielding and Jimmie Black ing and Miss James Lakeine rushed upon general Vivians lines and the wall of gra graycoats withstanding as far as eye could reach wavered to and fro with the mas massive line of christians who amid the vehement struggle which lasted another hour was soon crushed and mangled the survivors being sent flying in disordered groups toward the rear, and most of the Angelinians who attempted to stand ground to cover the retreat retreat of the main body had to slacken their fire for fear of hitting the other christian soldiers. the Landelingan general Snyder Gannon was killed, and Germaine Yielding and Jimmie Lakeine and Henry Hinderninia was mortally wounded. however the Landelinians continued to press on even as Hinderninia was seen to fall and now as the last of the retreating columns passed to the rear the whole of Hansons force witnessing the scene far to their left but did not waver. the whole of Hindernines force also was shattered, again and wavered but the ten millions behind pressed them to continue the stand and now the battle in the woods was at its highest fury, but yet the iss ue was uncertain. the whole gray line with the fury of the most frightful avalanches crashed upon the still remaining solid christian lines, but still they held..

The courage of Manlets men was beautiful to behold behold and indeed fate seemed to favor them for their daring. Jendins division of Landelinians broke through a portion of Hansons purple line and the gray line under general Canton Canteen also drove their way through another portion of the same christian line which soon gave way in a panic. Already over fourty thousand cannon were in action.. he Landelinians now wavered, and Hansons whole left was rolled up and driven clean from the woods unable to stand before the attack of the enemy any longer.

The Landelinians now spread over the works capturing many hundreds of guns on Hansons left and turning them upon the retreating christians and though driven out ten times by Baldwins cannon fire they managed to cut down many of the christians, but it was too much for them to face Baldwins annihilating fire and the Landelinians who had forced Hansons left were compelled to flee precipitately, the dumping forms of hundreds of th ousands of cut up bodies making a more heart rending sight than ever seen among th e dead children slaughtered at Phelantonburg. This bloody repulse of the Landelinians gave the left wing time to rally, and within fifteen minutes they were again poure pouring through those woods after the retiring army. Indeed the whole battle field was now littered with countless dead and wounded and driven unaccountable numbers of the wounded of both sides were awed and breathless and Landelinian wounded pleaded in vain for aid. Indeed the whole of Hansons force had finally repulsed the desperate onslaught and even restored order in the other divisions which had been driven back, and now the question was about the right center and left wings of Hindernines command which had been crushed untill there was only three quarters left. The enemy had failed to drive Hindernines center from its position, but a disaster had threatened for the left had been rolled up for two hours before the onslaught was also repulsed, and the question was!

"What would happen if the enemy would make a third onset, and will they do it despite the coming of night? And would it be wise or foolishness and sucide to remain in this spot and argue and repell the third attack! All the officers del declared it was like madness to resist another assault at this location, and general Hanson asked general Hindernine to advise about it. General Vivian adivsed a withdrawel from the woods and this was complied with all the troops being drawn back to their former positions they held in the days before. During the sanguinary struggle in the woods Violet and her sisters had again refused to leave the region and had been taken prisoners by the army but as it happened the Landelinians were in such fear of Hansons army that they did no harm to the little girls.. Even one of the Landelinians who captured them said with a sneer!

"If you little girls had not been such fools to stay here this would not have happened. but we have suspected you as spies, and have to do it, but if you manage to get away you may do you at your deadly peril."

However Violet and her sisters had managed to secure some disguises and at ten o-clock that night they set out and reached the main line of Landelinian camps and positions at ten thirty, and they saw that to get away they had to asce d ascend a ridge called Paddings mount.

"There is dangerous work ahead of us." said Violet bitterly. "but we must do it."

It took them three hours in the darkness to ascend the high ridge and when they came to the treeless summit they were grw greatly exhausted. They went into an old deserted barn and hid in a hayloft just as a big force of Hurmeramina cavarly was riding up headed by general Raymond Richardson federal and his bloodthirsty staff.

One of the generals lit a lanthren and placed it on a table, Federal and the rest sitting down, the chief commander laying a plan on the table. They talked in such low tones that violet and her sisters could not hear what was said. If they could only get that plan. That was the main thing.

"I have a small grenade in my pocket."Said Jennie."One of the Angelinians gave it to me this evening."I could make them go out by lighting it and throwing it outside."

"Yes do"Said violet. Here is a match but be careful of the hay or we will be the ones to mosey out and not the grayscoats. And be careful that the grayscoats do not see the l light."

Jennie instantly lighted the fuse and threw the shell out of a small window. It exploded before reaching the ground making a noise like earsplitting thunder.

"What was that gasped general Federal arising."Go out some of you men and infostigate."

Instantly the generals were outside but a soldier sa stayed in the stable on guard, n and he was a strong man at that. violet quickly went down the ladden, crept up stealithly behind his back and knocked him out with the g blow she struck him with a large block of wood she had taken down with her. Then snatching the plans she glided up the ladder like a monkey and again hid with her sisters among the hay. Ten minutes pass then icknell and the other generals came back.

"It's funny they heard general Federal remark."It sounded like the explosion of a bomb-shell."

"It may have been a random shell from the christian lines and ----These plans are gone."

Bicknell went to the table and gave the exemane exclamanation.

"Search the hayloft and set the hay on fire to root the spies out if necessary for they must be caught."said Federal with a fierce look."

The hayloft was searched closely, the hay even being prodded with bayonets and sabres but no trace of a spy could they find, and the men did not want to set the hay on fire for fear of burning the barn.

"Maybe he escaped ."Said icknell."Go and aroused the men."

"Maybe he escaped?"Laughed Federal."Why there is no he's about it.They were those pretty vivian girls, for here is one of their ribbons."

Indeed it must have been those ivian irls"Said icknell examaning the ribbon cls closely."Federal you go and look them up. They are in that haylof hayloft and that is all there is to it. You told your men to burn them out, and they didnot do it. hey must be caught."

"but the men a said"

"No buts about it."cared icknell."I tell you they are in that hayloft. o and get them."

"What is the difference"Said Federal."I do not as yet wish to have the blood of those vivian girls on my hands. I butcher children but terrible is the conswqi consequence if we butcher them. It was a false plan anyway if and if general Hanson sees it he will only run his forces into complete an ihilation. My real plan is to attack him again t morrow."

Federal would not have the haylo ft searched again for he knew anyway that they were gone, and it was so for if they had been there the bayonets would have periced them.

How ever general Hanson had no purpose of attackling, for general indernines army was too badly smitten to be left without support now, much to the disgust of his officers who declared that he was letting an opportunity go by, but he declared that if he threw his forces forward general indernine would be left behind, and probably be attacked by another force of the enemy just as he was unsupported.

Tward five o-clock in the next morning, the sixth day icknell with Federal, and many other commanders swept forward to again storm the christian lines. icknells pierced the christian line on Kindernines crippled left, but many of the landelinian divisions were again shivered and broken to pieces, and started to waver, but though they reelad back, they went to it again and hundreds of thousands of fresh mangled rolled and writhed upon the ground, the whole field afresh being littered with the dead and wounded and many of the prostr te bodies were officers. T In fifteen minutes the remainder of the landelinian surge reached the christian line at another quarter this part of the christian line being under general ostellioe which could not stand before the comin coming avalanch under general Fredrickson obertson and became panic stricken. Like gray surges the landolinians swept through this gao gap, and terrified and p panic stricken with ostellio severely wounded, the Angelinians along this portion of the line fled, but at this moment on the foe side general Fredrickson obertson fell mortally wounded. This was one of the fiercest attacks of the battle the landelinians despite the fall of their leader again threatening to gain the mastery though general Jendons forces of grayscoats was shot to pieces and he himself himself killed. Nevertheless a part of the christian line began to recoil.. long ostellio Benligans works the landelinians also began to swarm and his Angelinians also retreated in haste, but for their success the landelinians again paid dearly for generals Adele-De-garderner and james ibbons fell mortally wounded.

eneral Angelonia Jensins landelinian columns also came rushing forward like dness upon indernines main right wing and it looked as if all the nations were fighting a battle at the one particular point. The first three main lines of attackers eceived the full force of the christian cannon fire along indernines left wing, ed the surviving landelinians came on pouring forth like an immense overflwoing rrent. General Fairy Dinins landelinian column was crushed to pieces or shivered ito glass they being about three hundred thousand in number, but nevertheless four hundred thousand of Tony Senguines christians were thrown back by the fury of this onset , but finally rallied and crushed the landelinian assailing lines to fragments.

At another portion the landelinian attack was arrested for a time, but the ain columns soon came up and they again attacked with such furious energy the enemy ding on with a tremendous overwhelming rush and several more of the christian divisions coming alarmed by the fuy fury of the onset became panic stricken and gave way in confusion, Garderners divisions of eleven million five hundred thousand under ninteen generals assaulting the whole of indernines position but his force was facing an verw helming number of muskets and ninty thousand cannon of all calibre but never theless general Louise Foots Turmerandians propagated the effects of their own almost flawless supernatural onslaught for fifteen miles crushing the christian line back. ourty eight large regiments of landelinians rushing against the christian line were particially destroyed and the whole front line of the assailants finally driven back at all points were furrowed with gaps. Nevertheless a proportionate number of christian columns had been annihilated, and though some of the landelinian divisions under generals Callen , ganition, and Malaonia had already carried the works along their front from the christian concentration against them was too much and they were rolled back from the battle field entirely, and general Garderner had his left wing annihilated by the Baldwinson batteries.

This lulled the battle for a while, and during the lull the landelinian forces under general James Loganine, Jesipi Jesipine, Jesipih, and Frank geanlon had been rushed up and thus being reinforced general Garderner after reforming his line again rushed forward to the charge. The battle was now wilder than before.. Again both sides resembled an awful spectacle like a struggle of all nations of this world At that one point, or in a one long general battle line, the Angelinians however fought thrown back making a fierce counter attack, and pressing the counter attack like a home run, and with such violence that general Franks Neldons landelinian division was crushed to atoms and driven back a fourth mile, the progress of the counter attacking christians being furious, and filling the gap made by the foe assault, they committed the most horrible slaughter with firearms a d and other weapons at close quarters, and again broke general Garderners line to pieces a second time, and even the landelinian divisions under general Dingbat inda coming up to Garderners support could not hold, though at certain points a stream of gathling fire had prevented the christians from making any further penetration. But at last the christians along this point also pressed on again and carried all before them, three large division of landelinians being captured. The width of the battle field this time was many miles Camillias landelinians also being driven back the landelinian wave having met such decimation that the whole force broke into a wild conglomeration of panic and confusion. General Heldon tried to rally his own shattered lines but amid the dreadful carnage fell mortally wounded. The fury of the christian advance was frightful, all the overwhelming columns attacking with the most extraordinary rapidity. The whole gray line was swiftly giving way,the Angelinians pressing after them with the ferocity of a hurricane having mowed down a line of grayscoats four miles long.

But unfortunately at five thirty an err had been made along the christian line and thu this enabled Manlet to execute a flanking movement with great success and the christians were thrown back to their pow own positions, though general Bellegnia on the glandelinian side had been killed by a bursting shell.

All the while these two despisrate assaults had been going on general Robert Vivians lines were still inactive held a counsil his officers declaring that the battle must be lost for those terrible woods could never be captured again as they were soon to be dominated by fourty batteries of landelinian artillery.

After the repulse of the christian counter assault there was a lull, in which time general indernines army was again reinforced and reformed, and the broken artillery replaced by fresh guns and then general Fairy De Deninia haved again to make a th the third assault himself his forces rushing across the whole stretch of the Grahams plains storming the christian line again with the fury of a wild hurricane, that portion of this landelinian surge came upon the apparently successful christians had been reformed in the section of the Turmerann woods, and back they were thrown by the sledge hammer onslaught of the landelinians.

General Hanson ivian realised that it would take many more divisions to repulse this third landelinian assault and hold the position, but where could he get the necessary numbers without exposing his own lines, in case they were attacked. And he wondered what the reason wasthat the enemy always took general indernines eye for the target and never assaulted general Hansons or his brothers lines. o with the divisions from his own right and left might weaken his lines so badly that Manlet and Leonia or Meldon Bicknell might take the advantage to strike a telling blow, and then the battle would surely be lost.

1585.

General Vivian was puzzled over the situntion because there was so much smoke from the firing all the time that he could not see the battle lines. He knew that the onslaught of the enemy was now so terrible and could easily be repulsed despite the lack of numbers, but it was the terrible situation caused by the batteries of the enemy shelling the woods, and he wondered what he should do. The strength of the enemy it was true was three times less than that of the christians, and even seventeen thousand cannon under general Herknessanian had been maintained upon the christian positions, and a portion of Hansons line was also shelled by general Manlets batteries. Along general Kindernines right grand division as general Vivian and Hanson had heard eight hundred and eighty thousand Angelinians had been slain, the advance of the enemy all along the line being furious, the Glandelinians again attacking in vast mulitudes, and even now many christian divisions had agian again been withdrawn on account of running out of ammunition.

General Picknells s men were thrown forward upon Kindernines center in large columns divisions being cut up and rallying only to reform and go at it again, reel back once more with their dead and wounded lying in ridges, and then to go at it again with redoubled violence. It was at this moment general Vivian hit upon an idea. Why not get the disengaged divisions on the other side of Hansons army to move upon the enemys vl flank. He decided to do this sending a telegram to general Zoe . Rae. Stanck with the order to assault the flank;

''General Stanck;

The Glandelinians ha have weakened themselves by moving too obliquely to their own left front by attacking my center under general Kindernine, with too great a violence too keep their main line together and it is my wish that you move your unengaged forces forward and strike general Federal on the flank and roll it upon Hanson Vivians main line and cause it to be placed between two fires. Do this and the Battle is won.

His Excellency General
Robert Vivian.....''

At nearly quarter to six in the morning general Stanck recieved the message and reading it's contents was surprised.

''I'll take the chance before it is too late''He said to one of his staff.''Order the troops to advance right away.''

Se Surveying the situation with his powerful glasses general Stanck saw that the enemys assault along Kindernines front was in ernest and he feared that if he was not quick enough the Angelinians hard pressed by heavy numbers would be forced from their position and by evening or night fallben be in full retreat and then all would be lost.

Violet and her sisters were in stancks command and one of the most thrilling times in their lives occured. Stanck started his advance tward Cheesetown it being his intentions to seize the town and there make a great turning movement where he could roll the Glandelinian assailants upon the great christian commander, and so do as general Vivian wanted. It was a very shordistance to the city of Cheesetown the weather being oppressively hot. Violet and her sisters were in his army and with their signal scouts general Stanck depended upon them to do all they could for their countrys sake, and God's. The little girls were riding on their beautiful white horses at the head of general Stancks charger. The little girls had on their best uniforms their air being loose and fluttering at times in the gale like long beautiful golden ripples.

''This battle of Grahams Lanes or Phelant onburg is certainly a terrible one indeed.''Said Stanck to one of his officers.''And what is more I really fear that what general Vivian wants me to do is not going to be done.''

''T hat is just what I fear.''Declared Violet. with a shudder.''These Glandelinians are worse than anything I have even believed of and I never saw such Si htsights as was witnessed in the few streets of Phelantonburg.''

''But the horror of this battle is more greater.''Said Angeline.''Even every battle seems to get worse.I never though t that the war would ever be so bloody. I wish it was over.''

''So do I.''Said Joice.''General Vivian has even to day issued a decree that all the armies are to ruin everything the Glandelinians can sus subsist upon, and to dpa spr spare nothing under any conditions.''

''Well it has got to be done''Said Catherine''I for one would di do it if I spoted something to seize, so the Glandelinians would not grasp it themselves. Those Glandelinians have got to be overpowered some way and their rebellion against Christianity and god overthrown...''''

Just at this moment there was a sudden burst-of firing and Violet and her sisters saw that they had reached a farm where many Glandelinian soldiers with farm hands were shooting the chief farm hands as they had found afterwards being Whillism Robert T. O'neil, John Fox, Mr James West, and Fra nk Allenberger every one of the laborers being armed to the teeth.

1585.

''charge them, and make a raid for firing upon us.''Said general Stanck.''Go for the corn boys and spare nothing.''

John Allenberger saw the christians coming at a charge and shouted an alarm. In fifteen minutes all were running forward and one of the farm hands whose name was Peter Flynn formed them into line. The field was protected by a barned wire fence, charged with ten th ousand volts, but the Angelinians despite the storm of lead from the farm hands and Glandelinians swarmed tward it breaking it down and rushing among the corn. The Glandelinians, farmahands, and even the boys opened a general fussilade ving down scores of the Angelinians the farm hands and others being very strong in force ving about ten thousand. The Angelinians were too many however and soon the farm nds had to beat it for safty, the Angelinians swarming among the corn, uprooting e stalks and carrying it off besides raiding the beet fields and causing terrible ruction everywhere. They even swarmed in every direction advancing tward the Pandora nd Mc-Pollester Lines. Many of the officers directed the raiders swarming about the railroad tracks.

''Rip up the ties or burn them.''Ordered the officers.

